4. The assumption that disembodied spirits cannot communicate with persons still in the flesh, is opposed to the whole tenor, not merely of Hebrew and Christian, but also of Pagan History. The possibility of such intercourse—may the fact that it has occurred, has always been believed by the great mass of mankind. The assumption of the moral impossibility of communication between those we call the dead, and individuals still in the body, is fatal to the existence of Christianity as a divinely originated faith, and cannot be entertained by any believers, however lax in the inspiration of the Scriptures.
5. The phenomena known as Spiritual Manifestations are really caused by the spirits of the departed, but not by the spirits of the living.

It is essentially one with the demoniac possession whereof the Gospels often speak—that is, by the control and use of the bodily organs of living human beings by disembodied human spirits, incorrectly termed "devils" in our English version of the scriptures.

6. The fact of the evil character of these modern spirits is demonstrated by their general denial of the inspiration of the Bible, of the great fundamentals of Evangelical Christianity, their disinclination towards vital piety, &c., &c. We have in the Bible an infallible test of spiritual pretensions, and whatever contradicts any portion of that book, or denied it the authority and obedience due to the revealed Word of God, is thereby proved false and diabolical.

INDIAN ELOQUENCE.

The Toronto Watchman contains an earnest appeal from the Indians of Rice Lake to the whites, begging them to stay the plague of intemperance, which has been communicated by them to the children of the forest. Some passages in the appeal are exceedingly eloquent and touching. It says:—

The five villages, Ahwick, Rice Lake, Mud Lake, Scoogog and Credit, are all that is left of the Mississagan Indians. Save us! Our white brethren, save us!

Long ago you came to us and asked us for a place to build your wigwams; we gave you a country; say, was it not worth giving? We now ask you for deliverance from an enemy we ourselves cannot overcome; like everything else of the white man, it is too strong for us. We love our homes, and we do fight this invader of their purity and being; but our ranks are getting thinner and weaker; our deadly foe is marching onward, wasting, destroying, crushing—a victor to the West.

My white brethren, could the souls of the dead Chippewas and Mohawks, killed by Fire-water, come from the Land of Shades, and camp by the door of the whiskey trader, from the city of Rock, to the head waters of the Big Lake, town and city would be crowded by the Pale Outcast; Red no more, scorched pale by the blue flame! Warriors no more, the Totems of their fathers lost; Helpless! The track of a canoe cannot be seen upon the waters, nor the trail of an eagle in the clouds; so dies the poor drunken Indian! His canoe shoots down the stream, struck by the poison the white man brought, his spirit flies into a dark cloud—he is gone! Who cares? In a few winters so will our race pass away! Scattered, weak, dumb, hopeless; who cares? Give us back our woods and the deer! Give us back our bark wigwams and our Fathers' virtue! Save us, our White Brothers, save us! A dying race implores you! Put out the Blue Flame that is consuming us! Ye can?

CINCINNATI DOLLAR WEEKLY TIMES.

This old established weekly paper, since its enlargement, appears to meet with more favor than ever at the hands of the business men of the West and South, who are subscribing to it by hundreds. It is now, without doubt, the handsomest, cheapest and best Weekly paper published in the west, and the price is so low that it is in the reach of all, leaving no one an excuse for being without a paper for the home circle. One of its prominent—and one that renders it highly acceptable to Farmers, and Business men, is its Commercial Department, which each week contains a complete and correct Review of the Commercial Market, and the price current, besides an ably written money article, in which are noticed, the financial movements in the leading cities of the Union.

We notice in this week's paper is commenced a deeply interesting story written expressly for it, by one of our favorite western authors, entitled "SPECULATION, OR THE MERCHANTS OF RAG COTTON." From a hasty glance at it, we feel confident that it will be particularly acceptable to the mercantile community, for its masterly expose of the "tricks of the trade," and the many ways in which the unsuspecting merchant is liable to be fleeced by the sharper. Besides, its editor is engaged in a bold defense of the Common School system from the Jesuitical attacks of the Catholic Clergy, which he conceives to be a preconcerted and carefully arranged warfare, to be carried even to the ballot-box. As an American citizen, who has the welfare of his country at heart, we say he ought to be sustained against their efforts to put down his paper.

There Mr. Starbuck, haven't we puffed your DOLLAR according to order? We believe this corresponds word for word and letter for letter with the stereotype you sent us. So we are entitled either to be puffed in turn or to finger the pecunia as we shall choose. Since you publish the best paper in the North West and have the largest circulation, we shall prefer the puff.

As your editor has all the extra work he can do in riding that overloaded hobby the School question, we will save him the labor of writing out a puff for us, by sending him one already written, and exactly true in all things. If it succeeds well we shall get up a first rate puff of the Islander; get that stereotyped and send it around.

N. B. We are quite satisfied that the DOLLAR is on the liberal and undemocratic side in the School question; and therefore endorse only its boldness, not its sentiments and it is only the wicked effects to break down his paper that we desire to see confounded. As for that puff let about a thousand editors and ten thousand preachers get off his back if they wish to spare his life.

Send on your dollar, for a year's subscription to C. W. STARBUCK, Publisher, Cincinnati, Ohio.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The 4th General Assembly of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints will be held at St. James, commencing on the 8th of July next. A sacrifice to the Most High God will be offered on the morning of the 8th.

New illustrated [stereotyped] edition of Fox's Book of Martyrs, being a complete history of the lives, suffering and triumphant death of the Primitive, as well as the Protestant Martyrs; from the commencement of Christianity to the latest period of pagan and popish persecutions, to which is added an Account of the Inquisition. The Bartholomew Massacre; The Massacre in France; and general Persecutions under Lewis XIV.; Massacre of the Irish Rebellion in the recent persecution of the Protestants in the south of France; by the Rev. John Fox, A. M., with an illustrated title page, 1 vol., 12 mo. 566 pp. Price $2.25.

Few books are better known, or have been more read, than Fox's Martyrology. The original work was very voluminous, and has never been re-printed in this country, and perhaps not in England within the last hundred years. We have however, had numerous abridgements and this is one of the few instances in which, an abridgement is better than the original. The work would not be read at all at this day, as it came from the author. We have it to the snug volume before us. An epitomized view of the horrible tragedies which have so deeply disgraced religion. No reader can have patience to dwell long on such fiendish cruelties. But the facts are too well attested to admit of a doubt, and they must be given to the world as the strongest possible proof that man is depraved, and needs regenerating.—These persecutions were not the effect of religion, but of bigotry and fanaticism.—Christian Advocate.

Buds and Blossoms from our own Garden; by T. S. Arthur and F. G. Wadsworth beautifully embellished with numerous illustrations; 1 vol., 12 mo., 210 pages. Price 75 cents.

The above authors are popular writers and favorably known in the market, and whose works are read with interest.

NEW AND POPULAR BOOKS.

Recently published by Alden, Beardsley & Co., Auburn N. Y.

The second edition, in thirty days, of the Book of the Ocean and Life on the Sea, containing thrilling narratives and adventures of Ocean Life, in all countries from the earliest period to the present time, with 60 illustrations, 1 vol. 672 pages, cloth, gilt, $1.50.

Second Edition of Young People's Book A miscellany, comprising Instructive Stories, Popular Anecdotes, Glimpses of ancient and Modern history, Wonders of Nature and art, Biographies, Poetry, &c., by F. C. Woodworth, another of Uncle Frank's Home Stories about animals, Stories about Birds, &c., 386 pp., 8 vol. cloth, $1.50 library sheep, $1.50.

Second Edition of Woodworth's Fireside Museum. An exhibitor of some things amusing and many things instructive, with copious and elegant engravings, by F. C. Woodworth, 356 pp., 8 vol. cloth 1.50 library sheep, 1.50.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Watson's Mental Arithmetic, upon the inductive plan; designed for schools and academies; by Wm Watson, (upon the method of Colburn's improved.) 18 mo. 60 pp. Price 25 cents.

Third Book on Popular Anatomy and Physiology. Adapted to the use of Schools by T. S. Lambert, M. D. elegantly illustrated by 150 wood engravings, and colored lithographic anatomical plates, Substantially bound. 1 vol. large 12 mo. Over 450 closely printed pages, with questions separate, 1.25.

Landing and coming forth from the Ark, Birth of Christ, Christ in the Manger, and Christ and his Disciples in the Corn Field, &c. Bound in a substantial and exceedingly neat style of embossed sides, gilt back and marble edge—clear large type, and printed on white paper. Price retail, $2.50, sheep, plain, $1.50. A large discount will be made to those who will engage in the sale. The attention of agents and colporteurs is particularly invited; five hundred can find employment. For further particulars, address, post-paid, ALDEN BEARDSLEY & Co., Publishers, Auburn, N. Y.

Communications will receive prompt attention giving terms, &c.

Also, recently published, a Miniature Toy Bible illustrated with numerous engravings, new and appropriate designs.

Recently published an 8 mo. School Testament, designed for the use of Sunday Schools, and reading classes in common schools, in large clear and open type, in cheap form. Price, 15 cents, $1.50 per dozen.

New—10th—edition of the Pacific and Dead Sea Expedition, most valuable book for Libraries and general reading.

ALDEN BEARDSLEY & Co.

MOSES CHASE, MANUFACTURER OF COMMON AND IMPROVED SINGLE, DOUBLE AND TRIPLE COMPLEX, RE-ACTING, GALVANO, ELECTRO, MAGNETIC TORPEDO MACHINES, For the Medical Faculty and the Scientific Saint James, Beaver Island, Lake Mich. March 6th, 1851. 41f.

BOARDING HOUSE BY L. F. WAIT, (Near the Steamboat Landing,) MACKINAC, MICHIGAN. BOARD, $0.75 per day. 14f.

1852. FOREST HOUSE, 1852. BY F. HOYT. Mackinac, Michigan, at the right of the Docks, on Water Street. Board, five shillings per day. Mackinac, Mich., Oct. 12, 1852. 36f.

NEW STORE. ROSWELL PACKARD has just opened a general assortment of Dry Goods. Hardware, Groceries, &c., one door south of the Printing Office, and will sell goods as reasonable as they can be afforded here, for ready pay only; but will receive in exchange wood, fish, grain, and almost all kinds of produce raised on the Island, and cash not refused. R. PACKARD. St. James, Sept. 8, 1852. 21—4w.

TAILORING. GENTLEMEN'S Garments of all descriptions made to order expressly, and warranted to fit. Cutting done on the shortest notice, and warranted to fit, if properly made up. E. H. DERBY. Saint James, Sept. 8, 1852. 21f.

F. JOHNSON & Co., AT the West Pier, offer for sale an assortment of Dry Goods & Groceries, at moderate rates. Builders Materials, ass'd Nails, &c. Fishermen's stores, Salt, &c. Salt and Barrels furnished to fill. Disposed to accommodate all on best terms. St. James, Sept. 15, 1852. 29f.

HURRAH FOR ELECTION. THE utmost excitement is prevailing in all parties, but the great thing for the people is, where can I get my Dry Goods and Groceries cheap? Well, echo says that J. M. WAIT has just returned with a large assortment in the line, which he is selling cheaper than the cheapest, for cash or ready pay. Beaver Island, Oct. 27, 1852. 28—4w.

THANKFUL to our numerous customers for their past patronage, we would respectfully say we have removed three doors north of the Printing Office, where we shall be happy to accommodate you all, and endeavor to wait upon you with all the politeness we have been accustomed to. MILLS & CO. Beaver Island, Sept. 22, 1850.

WOOL. FOR sale a quantity of wool, of an excellent quality, for hosiery, one door south of the Tabernacle. Beaver Island, July 28, 1852. 15f.

NAILS. Supply of Nails constantly on hand and very cheap for cash, next door south of the Tabernacle. St. James, June 23d, 1852. 10f.

MRS. PHILMOT. NEXT Door East of the Mission School House, will give lessons daily in the use of the PIANO and MELODEON. She will also (if sufficient encouragement is given) take a class in the GERMAN LANGUAGE. St. James, June 23d, 1852. 10f.

HYMN BOOKS. JUST Received and for sale at this Office St. James, Sept. 15, 1852. 29f.

WHAT OUR ENEMIES SAY OF US.

FROM A NEW HISTORY OF MORMONISM, BY AN ENGLISH AUTHOR. AUBURN: DERBY AND MILLER. 1852.
(Concluded.)

The first companies of Mormons commenced crossing the Mississippi on the 3d of February, 1846. They amounted to 1,600 men, women and children and passed the river on the ice. They continued to leave in detachments, or companies of similar magnitude, until July and August, traveling by ox-teams towards California, then almost unknown, and quite unpeopled by the Anglo-Saxon race.

The anti-Mormons asserted that the intention of the Saints was to excite the Indians against the commonwealth, and that they would return at the head of a multitude of the Red Skins to take vengeance upon the white people for the indignities they had suffered. Nothing appears to have been further from the intentions of the Mormons.— Their sole object was to plant their Church in some fertile and hitherto undiscovered spot, where they might worship God in their own fashion, unmolested by any other sect of Christians.

But faith was not kept with the Mormons who remained in Nauvoo. Although they had agreed to leave in detachments, they were not allowed the necessary time to dispose of their property; and, in September, 1846, the city was besieged by their enemies, upon the pretence, that they did not intend to fulfill the stipulations made with the people and authorities of Illinois. After a three days' bombardment, the last remnant was finally driven out by fire and sword. The details will be found in the following chapter.

The following narrative of Col. Kane, who accompanied the Mormons from Nauvoo to the Salt Lake, has all the interest of a romance. It was originally delivered as a lecture before the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, and is here reproduced from the American edition.

A few years ago (said Colonel Kane), ascending the Upper Mississippi in the autumn when its waters were low, I was compelled to travel by land past the region of the Rapids. My road lay through the Half-Breed Tract, a fine section of Iowa, which the unsettled state of its land titles had appropriated as a sanctuary for coiners, horse-thieves, and other outlaws. I had left my steamer at Keokuk, at the foot of the Lower Fall, to hire a carriage, and to contend for some fragments of a dirty meal with the swarming flies, the only scavengers of the locality. From this place to where the deep water of the river returns, my eye wandered to see everywhere sordid, vagabond and idle settlers; and a country marred, without being improved, by their careless hands.

I was descending the last hill-side upon my journey, when a land-scape in delightful contrast broke upon my view. Half encircled by a bend of the river, a beautiful city lay glittering in the fresh morning sun; its bright new dwellings, seen in cool, green gardens, ranging up around a stately domeshaped hill, which was crowned by a noble marble edifice, whose high, tapering spire was radiant with white and gold. The city appeared the cover several miles; and beyond it, in the background, there rolled off a fair country, chequered by the careful lines of fruitful husbandry. The unmistakable marks of industry, enterprise, and educated wealth everywhere, made the scene one of singular and most striking beauty.

It was a natural impulse to visit this inviting region. I procured a skiff, and rowing across the river, landed at the chief wharf of the city. No one met me there. I looked, and saw no one. I could hear no one move; though the quiet everywhere was such that I heard the flies buzz, and the water-ripples break against the shallow of the beach. I walked through the solitary streets. The town lay as in a dream, under some deadning spell of loneliness, from which I almost feared to wake it; for plainly it had not slept long.— There was no growing up in the paved ways; rains had not entirely washed away the prints of dusty footsteps.

Yet I went about unchecked. I went into empty work-shops, rope-walks, and smiths. The spinner's wheel was idle; the carpenter had gone from his work-bench and shavings, his unfinished sash and casing. Fresh bark was in the tanner's vat, and the fresh-chopped lightwood stood piled against the baker's oven.— The blacksmith's shop was cold; but his coal heap, and ladling pool, and crooked water horn, were all there, as if he had just gone off for a holiday. No work-people anywhere looked to know my errand. If I went into the gardens, clinking the wicket-latch loudly after me, to pull the marygolds, heart's-ease, and lady slippers, and draw a drink with the water sodden well-bucket and its noisy chain; or, knocking off with my stick the tall heavy-headed dahiahs and sun-flowers, hunted over the beds for cucumbers and loveapples—no one called out to me from any opened window, or dog sprang forward to bark and alarm. I could have supposed the people hidden in the houses, but the doors were unfastened; and when at last I timidly entered them, I found dead ashes white upon the hearths, and had to tread a-tiptoe, as if walking down the aisle of a country church, to avoid rousing irreverent echoes from the naked floors.

On the outskirts of the city graveyard; but there was no record of plague there, nor did it in anywise differ much from other Protestant American cemeteries. Some of the mounds were not long sodded; some of the stones were newly set, their dates recent, and their black inscriptions glossy in the mason's hardly dried lettering ink. Beyond the graveyard, out in the fields, I saw, in one spot hard by where fruited boughs of a young orchard had been roughly torn down, the still smouldering remains of a barbecue fire, that had been constructed of rails from the fencing round it. It was the latest sign of life there. Fields upon fields of heavyheaded yellow grain lay rotting ungathered upon the ground. No one was at hand to take in their rich harvest. As far as the eye could reach, they stretched away—they sleeping too in the hazy air of autumn.

Only two portions of the city seemed to suggest the import of this mysterious solitude.

On the southern suburb, the houses looking out upon the country showed, by their splintered wood-work, and walls battered to the foundation, that they had lately been the mark of a destructive cannonade. And in and around the splendid Temple, which had been the chief object of my admiration, armed men were barracked, surrounded by their stacks of musketry and pieces of heavy ordnance.— These challenged me to render an account of myself, and why I had had the temerity to cross the water without a written permit from a leader of their band.

Though these men were generally more or less under the influence of ardent spirits, after I had explained myself as a passing stranger, they seemed anxious to gain my good opinion. They told the story of the Dead City: that it had been a notable manufacturing and commercial mart, sheltering over 20,000 persons; that they had waged war with its inhabitants for several years and had been finally successful only a few days before my visit, in an action fought in front of the ruined suburb; after which, they had driven them forth at the point of the sword. The defence, they said, had been obstinate, but gave way on the third day's bombardment.

They boasted greatly of their prowess, especially in this battle as they called it; but I discovered they were not of one mind as to certain of the exploits that had distinguished it; one of which, as I remember, was, that they had slain a father and his son, a boy of fifteen, not long residents of the fated city, whom they admitted to have borne character without reproach.

They also conducted me inside the massive sculptured walls of the curious Temple, in which they said the banished inhabitants were accustomed to celebrate the mystic rites of an unhallowed worship. They particularly pointed out to me certain features of the building, which, having been the peculiar objects of a former superstitious regard, they had, as matter of duty, sedulously defiled and defaced. The reputed sites of certain shrines they had thus particularly noticed; and various sheltered chambers, in one of which was a deep well, constructed, they believed, with a dreadful design.

Beside these, they led me to see a large and deep chiselled marble vase or basin, supported upon twelve oxen, also of marble, and of the size of life, of which they told some romantic stories. They said the deluded persons, most of whom were emigrants from a great distance, believed their Deity countenanced their reception here of a baptism of regeneration, as proxies for whomsoever they held in warm affection in the countries from which they had come. That here parents "went into the water" for their lost children, children for their parents, widows for their spouse, and young persons for their lovers; that thus the Great Vase came to be for them associated with all dear and distant memories, and was therefore the object, of all others in the building, to which they attached the greatest degree of idolatrous affection. On this account, the victors had so diligently desecrated it, as to render the apartment in which it was contained too noisome to abide in.

They permitted me also to ascend into the steeple, to see where it had been lightning-struck on the Sabbath before; and to look out, east and south, on wasted farms like those I had seen near the city, extending till they were lost in the distance. Here, in the face of the pure day, close to the scar of the Divine wrath left by the thunderbolt, were fragments of food, cruises of liquor, and broken drinking vessels, with a brass drum and a steam-boat signal bell, of which I afterwards learned the use with pain.

It was after nightfall, when I was ready to cross the river on my return. The wind had freshened since the sunset, and the water beating roughly into my little boat, I hedged higher up the stream than the point I had left in the morning, and landed where a faint glimmering light invited me to steer.

Here, among the dock and rushes, sheltered only by the darkness, without roof between them and sky, I came upon a crowd of several hundred human creatures, whom my movements roused from uneasy slumber upon the ground.

Passing these on my way to the light, I found it came from a tallow candle in a paper funnel shade, such as is used by street vendors of apples and pea-nuts, and which, flaming and guttering away in the bleak air off the water, shone flickeringly on the emaciated features of a man in the last stage of a bilious remittent fever. They had done their best for him. Over his head was something like a tent, made of a sheet or two, and he rested on a but partially ripped open old straw mattress, with a hair sofa-cushion under his head for a pillow.

His gaping jaw and glazing eye told how short a time he would monopolize these luxuries; though a seemingly bewildered and excited person, who might have been his wife, seemed to find hope in occasionally forcing him to swallow awkwardly sips of the tepid river water, from a burned and battered bitter-smelling tin coffee-pot. Those who knew better had furnished the apothecary he needed; a toothless old bald-head, whose manner had the repulsive dulness of a man familiar with death scenes. He, so long as I remained, mumbled in his patient's ear a monotonous and melancholy prayer, between the passes of which I heard the hiccup and sobbing of two little girls, who were sitting upon a piece of drift-wood outside.

Dreadful, indeed, was the suffering of those forsaken beings; bowed and cramped by cold and sunburn, alternating as each weary day and night dragged on, they were, almost all of them, the crippled victims of disease. They were there because they had no homes, nor hospital, nor poor-house, nor friends to offer them any. They could not satisfy the feeble cravings of their sick: they had not bread to quiet the fractious hunger-cries of their children. Mothers and babes, daughters and grand-parents, all of them alike, were bivouacked in tatters, waiting even covering to comfort those whom the sick shiver of fever was searching to the marrow.

These were Mormons, in Lee County, Iowa, in the fourth week of the month of September, in the year of our Lord 1846. The city—it was Nauvoo, Illinois.— The Mormons were the owners of that city, and the smiling country around. And those who had stopped their ploughs, who had silenced their hammers, their axes, their shutters, and their workshop wheels; those who had eaten their food, spoiled their orchards, and trampled under foot their thousands of acres of unharvested bread; these were the keepers of their dwellings, the carousers in their temple, whose drunken riot insulted the ears of the dying.

I think it was as I turned from the wretched nightwatch of which I have spoken, that I first listened to the sounds of revel of a party of the guard within the city.— Above the distant hum of the voices of many, occasionally rose distinct the loud oath-tainted exclamation, and the falsely intimated scrap of vulgar song: but lest this requiem should go unheeded, every now and then, when their boisterous orgies strove to attain a sort of ecstatic climax, a cruel spirit of insulting frolic carried some of them up into the high belfry of the Temple steeple, and there, with the wicked childishness of inebriates, they whooped, and shrieked, and beat the drum that I had seen, and rang in charivariic unison their loud-tongued steamboat bell.

They were, all told, not more than six hundred and forty persons who were thus lying on the river flats. But the Mormons in Nauvoo and its dependencies had been numbered the year before at over twenty thousand.— Where were they? They had last been seen, carrying in mournful train their sick and wounded, halt and blind, to disappear behind the western horizon, pursuing the phantom of another home.

A CONTRAST.—Good-nature, like a bee, collects honey from every herb. Ill-nature, like a spider, sucks poison from the sweetest flower.

Grief murmurs, Anger roars, Impatience frets; but Happiness, like a calm river, flows on in a quiet sunlight, without a ripple or a fall to mark the rushings on of Time towards Eternity.

One of the most important female qualities is sweetness of temper. Heaven did not give to woman insinuation and persuasion for her to be imperious; it did not give her a sweet voice, to be employed in scolding.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. III.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1853.

NO. 3.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

at St. James, Beaver Island,

Lake Michigan, by

COOPER & CHIDESTER.

Terms:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to Cooper & Chidester, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

Gen. Geo. Miller was recently at the Collector's office in Mackinac, and was there informed that the keeper of the Light house at south Manitou Island had lodged a complaint that the Mormons had been with the "Three Master" (schooner Emmelin) to South Manitou in the month of May and stolen a large amount of property including the government boat. It was not pretended that any individual Mormons were identified, but, it was known to be Mormons, because the "Three Master" was used, a vessel of peculiar rig and easily recognized.

This is all plain and a thing easily come at and understood.

Our reply is—The "Three Master" (Schooner Emmelin) was hauled up here at St. James in December last, and has been lying on the stocks here from that time until the 22nd of June inst., and is at this writing (26th) lying here in the Harbour, her sails not having yet been bent on.

For the truth of this statement we refer all persons interested to the officers of the steam Packets, Lady of the Lake, Ogdensburg, Michigan; and Wisconsin, of the Ogdensburg line, the Bucephalus, Gen. Taylor and Sciota of the Buffalo and Chicago line, the Morton, Michigan, & Hendrick Hudson of the Green Bay and Buffalo line, the Columbia of Green Bay and Mackinac, all of whom have stopped here regularly during the season; and very few of whom could have failed to observe the Three Master on the stocks every time they have been in.

A fellow by the name of Smith, not the regular keeper of the Lighthouse at Beaver, but the person in whose possession it was left last winter, made complaint that he had been threatened and shot at, by the Mormons and did not dare remain at Beaver.

Of course there has no man been standing by night and day to contradict this lie; but we believe we can as conclusively show its falsehood as though a thousand had stood by every hour of his residence here.

Smith resided here last winter in a lonely out of the way place, several miles from the nearest neighbor;—seventeen hundred Mormons and not a dozen Gentiles residing on the Island. Had they had any design against him they could not have failed of using that occasion; and if their designs extended to life, they would have put an effectual end to all such complaints.

We will add further, that during last winter a committee was appointed to look after the wants of those who had not a supply of provisions, to both obtain for them what they lacked, and employment by which they could pay for it, and,—on the records of the proceedings of this committee we find the name of this same "Gentile Smith," provisioned and employed by Ludlow Hill Esquire of Galilee.

If the reader enquires why a keeper of a Lighthouse could not buy in his own provisions; we reply. Smith was not keeper, but Henry Van Allen was. Van Allen was detected in stealing twenty nets from B. G. Wright; arrested gave bail and ran away, and on his route drew his pay as keeper and left Smith in charge without provisions or means of any kind, late in November.

The keeper of the Isle Le Galet Light could not be silent with such company. So he has lodged his complaint that the Mormons called on him and demanded of him "to pay tithing." Possibly some man may be found fool enough to believe the Mormons as big fools as himself; and therefore, that they would demand of a United States officer to pay tithing to support their church. But so believing should be a passport to the Asylum for Idiots.

J. T. Pierce duly appointed by the Board of Supervisors, assessor of the unorganized territory of the county of Emmet, in pursuance of the provisions of Sec. 162 of the "Act to provide for assessing property at its true value and for levying and collecting taxes thereon," passed Feb. 14th 1853, (Ses. Laws 1853 P. 168) was returning from the east shore, where he had been engaged in his official duties, and in consequence of unfavorable weather stopped at Isle Le Galet to stay overnight. Mr. Burke, the keeper, ordered him off and set his dogs on him. Not one word was said on any other subject, except that Pierce asked him if he had any taxable property? a very ordinary question for an assessor to ask. And this is the sole and only foundation for the allegation that tithing was demanded. Except these, not a Mormon has visited Isle Le Galet this year. If the officers of the law levy taxes for county and state purposes, they are accused of demanding tithing. This is the head and front of our offending.—The reader will inquire. What is the inducement to these falsehoods?—

We answer. The present incumbents are whigs, holding over, and as long as they can keep up a controversy on the subject, they stand a chance of keeping their places. But the main spring is, there are a set of small politicians in Mackinac hungry as leeches for a nibble at the public pay, who wish to get these appointments, and come and live with these dangerous people at three or four hundred dollars a year.

But the county of Emmet did the Democratic party good service last fall, having cast her entire vote for the Democratic ticket, and it was naturally expected that the few small offices located in that county would be disposed of among the faithful. The only hope of Mackinac in securing this portion of the five loaves and two small fishes which make up her seven cardinal principles, is in the success of this outcry against the Mormons,—we hope they will be rewarded according to their works.

MACKINAC MOB ADMINISTRATION.

MACKINAC, May 20, 1853.
TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREE PRESS:

You will greatly oblige the people of this community by inserting the communication and proceedings enclosed. Yours, truly,
JOHN W. McMATH.
For the Detroit Free Press.

MORMONISM.
Much excitement has prevailed of late in the village of Mackinac, arising from the frequent and daily recurring instances of robberies, burglaries, and other depredations, committed by the Mormons of Beaver Island upon the fishermen along the shores and upon the waters of Lake Michigan. It appears that the Mormons are becoming more daring than formerly. Heretofore, they were satisfied with robbing the poor fishermen of their boats, nets and fish, stealthily, doing every thing possible to avoid detection; but now, seeing the almost utter impossibility of being brought to justice they carry on their piratical trade with scarcely any regard to concealment. This, of course, arises from the fact that now all offences committed upon the shores and waters of Lake Michigan, between the line running from Point St. Ignace across the Straits to old Mackinac, and a line running from the south side of Grand Traverse Bay to the mouth of the Menominee river, are exclusively in Emmet county; and the offenders—those who cannot escape to the township of Drummond, a Mormon dependency just to the east of the county of Michilimackinac—must be tried on Beaver Island, by Mormon tribunals, with good Mormons for witnesses and jurymen.

Early in the spring, six or eight small houses on Birch Point in which were stored some two hundred barrels of fish, were burnt to the ground, the fish stolen—a large number of barrels of salt lying out on the beach were broken open and their contents thrown into the water.—The value of the property destroyed was upwards of two thousand dollars. There is almost indubitable proof that this was done by a gang of men from Beaver Island. On the 8th instant, about five hundred dollars worth of property, consisting of boats, nets, cloths, money and provisions, was stolen from various persons on Gull Island. The same tricks have been frequently played upon those of Pine River and Grand Traverse.

Many of the people of Mackinac are deeply interested in these fisheries, and nearly all who have gone out this spring have suffered more or less from the ruthless depredations of these "Latter-day Saints." There are quite a number of fishermen here now ready to commence business, each with a stock worth from four to six hundred dollars, who dare not go to the fishing grounds for fear of the Mormons. The nature of their business is such that it is nearly impossible to keep any thing like a guard over their property. Their nets when set for fish, are often eight or ten miles from their dwellings, with buoys attached which can be seen only a mile or two off.—The Mormons soon learn the locality of these nets, and when the wind is fair, sail out to them in their small boats which move very rapidly, take them up, then shifting their sails, are soon far away on the water, leaving no trace by which to be detected. In the night they make their descent upon the land, steal, rob and burn what they can find, then with oars and sail they glide away upon the watery element, and the fisherman wakes up in the morning but to find his boat, nets and perhaps all the property he has in the world stolen or destroyed. The only reason that can be assigned for these acts is (as they have openly declared) that they intend to monopolize these fishing grounds, and appropriate the same to the service of the Lord and His "Saints."

Last Monday morning the following was found posted in all the most conspicuous places in the village of Mackinac.

NOTICE!!!

The citizens of Mackinac county and all others interested in the matter are requested to meet at the Court House to-morrow (Tuesday) evening at the closing of the bell, to deliberate upon means of protecting themselves against the felonious depredations of the Mormons. (Signed.)

J. P. KING, Supervisor,
J. D. IRVINE Dist. Att'y.
WM. N. McLEOD,
JAMES H. COOK,
J. W. McMATH,
LEVI GRAY,

Justices of The Peace

Dated Mackinac, May 16, 1853.

In obedience to the above call, a large number of people collected at the Court House at an early hour. The meeting was called to order by appointing J. D. Irvine, District Attorney of the Upper Peninsula, Chairman, and J. W. McMath, Esq., Secretary. After some eloquent and spirited remarks from the Hon. Wm. N. McLeod, the following resolutions were proposed and unanimously adopted.

Resolved, That we, the citizens of Mackinac county, heartily sympathize with the fishermen on Gull Island and the north shore of Lake Michigan, and will co-operate with them to our utmost ability to prevent a recurrence of similar misfortunes in future.

Resolved, That the high handed pretensions and immoral courses of the people called Mormons are inimical to our republican institutions, subversive of the good order of society, and destructive of all security to person and property.

Resolved, That in the recent outrages perpetrated on our fishing grounds, consisting of arson, larcenies and other felonies, we recognize a spirit, which if not quelled by the strong arm of the law, must eventually lead to the most determined resistance, and possibly terminate in bloodshed.

Resolved, That while we revere the institutions of our country and pledge ourselves to support the law, we at the same time bind ourselves to resist to the last, extremity any and every attempt to commit depredations upon the persons and property of our citizens, whether committed by open violence or under the pretended sanction of legal authority.

Resolved, That the boundaries of Emmet county, and the organization of the township of Drummond, as established by the last legislature, taken in connection with the avowed determination of the Mormons to make forcible arrests under color of law, is highly dangerous to the rights and interests of the citizens of Mackinac.

Resolved, That a committee of five, to be denominated the committee of safety, be appointed by the chair, whose duty it shall be to memorialize the President of the United States and the governor of this State—to call public meetings of the citizens where the exigency may require it; and generally to take such measures as may seem conducive to the public safety.

The chair then read some resolutions sent down by the Dehermen of Pine River and Gull Island, the purport of which was that if the law was not put in force they would take the matter in their own hands. These resolutions were signed by seventy resolute men who know the importance of the step they have taken. The meeting was then addressed by J. W. McMath and Mr. Thero. On motion of Henry Selby, it was

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be published in the Detroit papers.

The chair announced the names of the committee of safety, after which the meeting adjourned.

JOHN D. IRVINE, Pres't
J. W. McMath, Sec'y.

Above we reprint entire the proceedings of the Mackinac meeting and the manifesto issued by the people of that place giving the reasons for the hostility of Mackinac to Emmet county.—We propose now to show from these documents and those to which they refer and a few well known facts, that this paper war of Mackinac is not against Mormonism but against the sovereignty of Michigan; that the only question at issue is whether the laws of the state shall be duly enforced, or trampled under foot, and that on this issue the officers of Emmet county are conscientiously doing their duties in accordance with their oaths of office, and the officers of Mackinac engaged in open hostility to the law, and unblushing violation of their official oaths.

It will be observed that the call for the meeting has an air of official sanction. It is signed by a Supervisor, a District Attorney and four Justices of the Peace. Now this call is for a meeting of the citizens of Mackinac county. Either John D. Irvine, elected Attorney for the Judicial District of the Upper Peninsula, and John P. King supervisor, and Wm. N. McLeod J. H. Cook, J. W. McMath and Levi Gray elected by the township of Holmes really believe that they are officers of the county, and that as such they have authority to call meetings with power to repeal laws and to levy war, or this official signing of the call was merely designed to gull the uneducated Frenchmen and illiterate Irish with the idea that in any mob which they should succeed in getting up they were acting under official sanction.—We will award ignorance to all the rest if they make that excuse; but Wm. N. McLeod does know that a popular meeting, called by a Justice of the Peace has neither the power to repeal statutes or to levy war against a neighbouring county.

As much knowledge of law as that would be convenient to a District Attorney, but it is not an indispensable qualification, as the Upper Peninsula determined when they elected theirs. An M. D. who reads dumb, and knows less as he reads, answers their purpose. When his indictments fail, he does not fail to prescribe bloodletting as an infallible remedy.

And this notice so signed,—how was it published? As notices of insurrections, and assemblies for deeds of violence are in foreign countries. "Last Monday morning the following notice was found posted in all the most conspicuous places in the village of Mackinac." No body did it. It did itself. It was found, posted. It sprung up, a mushroom of one night's growth, from the prolific soil of Mackinac, without planting or culture, and was taken in the immediate care of each of the candidates for the District Attorneyship, & will smell about as sweet, against the September election, as a mushroom in a hot afternoon. It should be served up as a feast of fat things, to the successful party when election is over.

And where posted? Why, in the village of Mackinac. The little patch of ground consisting of a street and a half under the bluff of an Island two miles by three, still believes itself the whole of a county 90 miles long by 30 broad.

The fifth resolution discloses the difficulty, to be this; "the avowed determination of the Mormons to make forcible arrests under color of law, is highly dangerous to the rights and interests of Mackinac."

Now, the only avowal ever made by the Mormons, of a design to make forcible arrests is contained in the following notice, published in the Islander of May 12th, four days previous to the date of the notice, and five previous to the meeting at Mackinac.

"There is a prevalent practice of sending out trading vessels on the fishing grounds with a supply of liquors. We wish it understood that authority to sell intoxicating liquors in Mackinac does not carry with it the right to sell on Lake Michigan. From old Mackinac to the west line of the State, and south to Grand Traverse light, the Lake and all the Bays are exclusively in Emmet County.

If the trade is persisted in, the Sheriff will go out with sufficient force and make arrests in all such cases. The law will be enforced whatever the cost. He is a fool who at this day thinks he can defeat it by crying pirates, robbers. That cry has been raised once too much."

And what is the law, the enforcement of which is so dangerous to the rights and interests of Mackinac?

"Sec. 1. Any person who shall sell any spirituous liquors, mixed or unmixed, in a less quantity than twenty-eight gallons at any one time, or permit the same to be done in or about any premises occupied by him, either as a tavern keeper or common victualer, or otherwise, without having first given the bond hereafter provided, shall forfeit and pay for each offence a sum not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, at the discretion of the court." Sess. Laws, 1851, P. 306.

"Sec. 15. Every tavern keeper, common victualer, or other person, who shall give, sell or dispose of any spirituous liquors, wine, or mixed liquor, or other intoxicating drink, to any male or female Indian, or to any common drunkard, shall forfeit for each offence the sum of twenty dollars. do. P. 3010.

Prosecutions for violations of this law pertain to the jurisdiction of Justices of the peace.—By the Revised Statutes it is the especial duty of the Supervisor to prosecute, and of the District Attorney to conduct the prosecution in the superior courts. Yet as if not at rest, till deep and damning perjury was added to the menace of violence, bloodshed, and civil war,—of all the citizens of Mackinac, the six men who have sworn a solemn oath, by the Great God, to enforce this law, are chosen as the men to sign the edict of war, bloodshed, and extermination, against a neighboring county for enforcing it. Had fiends from Hell sought to put unmistakable marks of ownership on their servants they could not have done the work more perfectly than these men have earmarked themselves as Satan's own. John P. King once a Senator and a Judge, John D. Irvine, once Representative and now District Attorney, and Wm. N. McLeod once Representative and member of the Constitutional convention, signing their names to a deed of perjury in themselves, and bloodshed and murder against those who will not equally corrupt their souls.

For the former two, as well as their three inferior associates,—no doubt their sin will be winked at. To McLeod alone we attach moral turpitude.

The same resolution (5th) complains of the "boundaries of Emmet county as established by the last Legislature." Now it should be in mind that the boundary between Emmet and Mackinac was not established by the last Legislature, but by that of 1843, of which Wm. N. McLeod was a member, and that the bill establishing that boundary was drawn by himself. Since that time John P. King has been in the Senate and John D. Irvine in the house; and Mackinac has never been without a representative. Yet no bill was ever introduced in either house to change it, until it was done by James J. Strang, member from Emmet last winter. He introduced a bill to make the division line through the middle of the Straits, instead of along the north shore, as McLeod's bill established it, but it failed for want of time.

The boundary of Emmet county was extended six miles east, but that only encroached on Cheboygan, which was enlarged by extending 24 miles south, and did not effect Mackinac at all. And the harbour of Mackinac and the channel between Mackinac and point St. Ignace are now in Cheboygan county, not because Cheboygan ever sought any jurisdiction over them, but because a Mackinac member, heedlessly or ignorantly, so drew the act establishing the boundary between them. With as able a representative as Wm. N. McLeod, it is not to be expected that members from distant parts of the State, will supervise his local business and correct his blunders.

If there is an inconvenience and an impropriety in having the south line of Mackinac "along the margin of the Lake" upon the north shore instead of through the centre of the Lake and Straits, the fault is with Wm. N. McLeod who drew the bill and the responsibility with the Legislature of 1843 which passed it; and not with the Legislature of 1853 which did nothing in the premises. The Legislature of 1853 organized the counties of Emmet and Cheboygan out of the territory known as the unorganized counties of Charlevoix, Emmet, Cheboygan and Wyandot, which had formerly been attached to Mackinac. But the boundaries of Mackinac county proper were established ten years ago by an act drawn up and supported by Wm. N. McLeod, member from Mackinac. There being no other representative from that section of country, the only conclusion is, that the people of Mackinac got in their county just what territory they wanted. In the intervening ten years the people of Mackinac have never petitioned for a change of their boundary, and, though never without a representative in the State Legislature, their representative has never introduced a bill for the purpose. Certainly they were either satisfied with it as it was, or they did not know the boundaries of their own county. They are quite welcome to choose horns in this dilemma.

The same resolution takes exceptions to the organization of the Township of Drummond as "dangerous to the rights and interests of the citizens of Mackinac."

How does the organization of the Township of Drummond offend Mackinac? Had the Township been organized in 1828 when the British Fortress and Town on Drummond Island were delivered up to the United States in pursuance of the convention establishing the rational boundary in that quarter, Mackinac might have suffered in her rights and interests severely, by being restrained by lawful authority from dismantling the fort and tearing down the houses and carrying off the lumber and brick to build up Mackinac with. Then instead of the white chimneys which the voyager to Sault Ste Marys gazes on with wonder and interest—the only remaining monument of civilization, and the arts which flourished there, there would have been a rich commercial town sending forward to market the products of extensive agricultural, lumbering and fishing regions, reduced to desolation by Mackinac Piracy. Or if done previous to the war with Great Britain, Mackinac would have had no millionaire made rich on British Gold, the price of an American fortress and American blood. But these are things of the past. There is nothing to plunder there now; no fortress to dismantle; no town to raze to the ground for the lumber; no market for the blood of fellow countrymen; no paymasters for traitors, or purchasers of American Garrisons.—Not a dollar would be paid this day for piloting a British and Indian flotilla from there to the backside of Mackinac Island, and furnishing oxen to haul their cannon to the hill above the fort.—What interest can Mackinac have in preventing the extension of the laws of the State over that portion of her territory?

The Township of Drummond is not in Mackinac county, but in Chippewa. The Island of Drummond was included in the county of Chippewa by McLeod's bill, passed in 1843. Twenty four small Islands lying in the channel between Drummond and St. Joseph, and about the same number lying around the shore of Drummond, either were in no county, and therefore beyond the jurisdiction of all legal authority, or were included by remote implication in some distant county in the Lower Peninsula. Certainly, they were not included in any one of the counties of the Upper Peninsula, for by the most certain and well defined boundaries, they were left out of them all.

The effect of the "act to organize the Township of Drummond" is to include all these islands in Chippewa county, and to extend the laws of the State and the jurisdiction of the courts of Chippewa county over them.—Can Mackinac county bear no sister near her throne? Is Chippewa county so far passed into the hands of the Mormons that Mackinac dreads her enterprise and envies her future growth? Would not Mackinac like to blot Sault Ste Marie off from the map of the State, stop work on the canal and obliterate the route of travel to Lake Superior?

All causes arising in Drummond township are in the jurisdiction, either by original process or by appeal, of the District court of the Upper Peninsula held at Sault Ste Marie, of which the Hon. Daniel Goodwin is Judge. Not one Mormon is named on the jury pannel of that court. So, conceding any supposable amount of depravity to the Mormons, the injury to the "rights and interests of Mackinac" effected by the act organizing that township is not to be effected by any act of the Mormons, but by the ordinary course of Judicial proceedings in the courts of Chippewa county.

How are the citizens of Mackinac injured by a legal administration, and a judicial authority in that part of the State? Only by being there subjected to the law; by being liable to be punished for crimes and misdemeanors.—To particularize, the very spot where the shoe pinches nearly all Mackinac is this: Now their property in that region can be taxed for State county and Township purposes, and they can be punished for selling liquor without giving bonds. Such of them as have an interest in committing other crimes: such as claim the right to violate by force Indian women or commit other offences, find this act opposed to their rights and interests in that respect also. It is the tread of civilization on the "rights and interests" of ruffianism and debauchery that Mackinac has unblushingly arrayed herself against. We rejoice to see her sailing under her true colours.

We have not overlooked the fact that these documents charge the Mormons, in general terms, with various crimes and misdemeanors; but particular specifications are also contained in the same documents; and we propose to review these specifications, and see how far they are sustained.

The manifesto states that "the Mormons are becoming more daring than formerly;—seeing the almost utter impossibility of being brought to justice, they carry on their piratical trade with scarcely any regard to concealment. This of course arises from the fact that now all offences committed upon the Shores and waters of Lake Michigan between a line running from Point Saint Ignace across the straits to old Mackinac and a line running from the south side of Grand Traverse Bay to the mouth of Menominee River are exclusively in Emmet county and the offenders must be tried on Beaver Island by Mormon tribunals with good Mormons for witnesses and jurymen."

In the next line following is this specification: "Early in the spring six or eight small houses on Birch Point, in which were stored some two hundred barrels of fish, were burnt to the ground, the fish stolen, a large number of barrels of salt lying on the beach were broken open and their contents thrown into the water. The value of property destroyed was upwards of two thousand dollars. There is almost indubitable proof that this was done by a gang of men from Beaver Island."

This Birch point is not in Emmet county; nor within the bounds above specified; but is in the present limits of Mackinac county; and crimes committed there are triable exclusively in Mackinac county by Mackinac tribunals, with good Mackinac men for witnesses and Jurymen. So that if there is indubitable or any kind of proof that the act was done by a gang of men from Beaver or any where else they have only to proceed in their own courts against the criminals. The fact that they did not do so at the June term of the District Court, is "indubitable evidence"

Mackinac
nity in Only by the law;
ished mors.—
y spot nearly their an be Town-can be with-f them mitting in the Indian fences, their respect vilizaerests” ry that ly ar-rejoice r true d the charge terms, misdespecifiin the e procifica-ey are t “the more seeing ity of they e with ncealarises offen-Shores
an be-Point its to nning Grand of Menders island good jury-ng is n the ouses were bar-
the arge ng on and the erty two al-this from Em-
the t is inac tted in inac nac men. or act rom hey their als.
so rict
ce”

that they have no such evidence. But a further fact proving the ignorance or duplicity of those authors of this manifesto is this, that no one county has exclusive jurisdiction of crimes and misdemeanors committed on the waters of Lake Michigan. Process issued out of any county contiguous to Lake Michigan may be executed on any part of the Lake, within the State, and all the counties contiguous to the Lake have concurrent jurisdiction of offences committed on the waters within the State. If the Mormons affect secrecy no longer, fill the courts of the Lake counties with prosecutions, but not the newspapers with lies.

We would not accuse the people of Mackinac of being hostile to the laws of the land, if they had not themselves furnished the evidence of hostility. But since they have so done we propose to show what interests and pretended rights Mackinac has hostile to the laws, which are jeopardized by the actions of the citizens of Emmet county.

The village of Mackinac has a larger proportion of its population engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors, particularly in retailing it than any village of the same population in the State. And in the trade which Mackinac carries on upon the fishing grounds, more profits are made upon the liquors probably than upon all other articles together. But of the ruin and moral desolation which this trade carries with it on the fisheries, no man can form any conception but he who has seen it.

Much of the misery and degradation which the liquor trade produces in the village of Mackinac is concealed from the eye of strangers. Yet enough has been seen to make the name of the place a byword among moral men. But at Mackinac merchants and traders reside with their families, men have wives and sons and daughters to restrain their irregularities, and to suffer the ignominy of their own disgrace. The restraining influence of the family circle, and of numerous respectable visitors from abroad keeps up a certain degree of self-respect, a regard to personal character, and some degree of order in society. On the fishing grounds all these are lost. The family circle; woman, with her soothing influence, are not known there.—Here men go,—aside from the better influences of society,—leaving their characters at home to take care of themselves; either to give a loose rein to unrestrained licentiousness, or for the sole purpose of making money.

Man must see, in order to form any idea of the state of human society, where a multitude of Indians and halfbreeds; men, women, and children; are cast afloat under the influence of a little handful of whites, with all the enterprise and energy of the American character, governed by no law; restrained by no moral principle, held in check by no sense of common respect;—all moved by but two passions,—lust and avarice.

And this has been the state of society on the fisheries ever since the fish of this region became an extensive article of trade. Individuals have been found in the trade who have continually set their faces against the ruinous practices which have prevailed, and have of late years become general. But while an adulterated article called Indian whiskey, more intoxicating than pure liquor can be manufactured for less than six cents per gallon, and four gallons of it will purchase a barrel of fish, it is vain for a handful of men to discard the traffic. They but leave a wider space for men of less integrity to operate in. The trade gradually and surely passes into the hands of those who are governed by the worst motives. Making many hundred per cent upon liquors, the article sold most extensively, they can by competition drive off any man who deals in an honest way; even tho' to do so, during the short time, that the competition continues, they furnish their customers with articles really needed, at a loss.

While all the counties down to Saginaw Bay were attached to Mackinac, as well as nearly all the South shore of the Upper Peninsula, and the officers for the entire region elected by the village of Mackinac, any law against the rights and interests of that place need be simply let alone severely, and it became a nullity. Since this jurisdiction is passed away, and new communities have sprang up, deeply interested in the due enforcement of the law and the good order of society, Mackinac finds its right to violate the law by trafficking in liquors trampled upon; and its interest in making money at the expense of the moral desolation and final utter extermination of the Indians endangered.

We observe that the only offence that is specifically charged to the Mormons, is that of plundering at Birch Point, which is in Mackinac county. It is alleged that property has been stolen at Gull Island and Pine River, in Emmet county, and there is a sweeping assertion, that the fishermen generally have suffered by the hands of these “Latter Day Saints.” We reply, “specify your cases, and we will show your specifications as false as those you have already made, have proved to be.”

The fishermen at Pine River make a business of coming over to the fisheries at the head of Beaver, and stealing nets from the Mormons engaged in fishing there. They have been detected in the act more than once, and in one instance the stolen property has been found in their possession; and if they do not step out they will have a chance of trying the strength of their vaunted resistance to “forcible arrests under colour of law,” Mackinac will make quite as pretty a figure in fighting for the right to steal, as the right to sell intoxicating liquors in Emmet county, without giving bonds.

But Gull Island and Pine River as well as Mackinac, have certain “rights and interests” opposed to the due administration of the law, to wit: the “right and interest to pay no tax for county and state purposes, and the famous Pine River resolutions sent up to Mackinac were passed the eve of the same day that Galen B. Cole, Supervisor of Charlevoix took the assessment there. “Felonious depredations” is an after thought.

These facts will, of course, be left out of the correspondence of the unnamed “committee of safety,” with the Governor and President. But so plain are the earmarks of villainy in all these Mackinac proceedings, that we have not the slightest fear of such men as they bring misled in the matter.

Why is it that the temperance men throughout the State,—with here and there an individual exception, join in this crusade of a liquor selling people, against the only municipality in the State where the liquor law is enforced; against the only county in the State in which no liquor is sold; in the endeavour by bloodshed and civil war to force the trade upon us? Why is it that they are first among men, to pick up a rumour, not only idle of itself, but carrying on its face the evidence of its falsity, as an excuse for deeds of violence, against those who are more successful than themselves, in a common cause? Is religious prejudice so deep that men of a different faith cannot be allowed to do good?

Sensitively as we feel this hostility in such quarters, we ask no aid in this warfare. Our reply to Mackinac and her allies is, “let words cease and deeds begin.” We prefer peace; but if war must come, let it be upon us and not upon our children. We shall not yield a step to the threats, and are ready today for the blow.

TERRITORY OF UTAH.—PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR.

Whereas it is made known to me by reliable information, from affidavits and various other sources, that there is in this territory a horde of Mexicans, or outlandish men who are infesting the settlements, stirring up the Indians to make war upon the inhabitants, and who are also furnishing the Indians with guns, ammunition, &c., contrary to the laws of this territory and of the United States.

And whereas, it is evident that it is the intention of these Mexicans or foreigners to break the laws of this territory and of the United States, utterly regardless of every restriction, furnishing the Indians with guns and powder, whenever and wherever it suits their designs, convenience, or purpose.

Therefore, I, Brigham Young, Governor, and Superintendent of Indian Affairs, for the Territory of Utah, in order to preserve peace, quell the Indians, and secure the lives and property of the citizens of this territory, hereby order and direct as follows.

1st.—That a small detachment, consisting of thirty men, under the charge of Captain Wall, proceed South through the entire extent of the settlement, reconnoitering the country, and directing the inhabitants to be on their guard against any sudden surprise.

2d.—That said reconnoitering officer communicate with the expedition now traveling South, as often as any information of importance is obtained, that I may be kept advised of every transaction.

3d.—The officers and party sent upon this service, are hereby authorized and directed to arrest, and keep in close custody, every strolling Mexican party, those associating with them and all other suspicious persons or parties that they may encounter, and leave them safely guarded at the different points of settlement to await further orders, as circumstances shall transpire, and the law directs.

4th.—The militia of this Territory are hereby required to be in readiness to any point to which they may be directed, at a moment's notice.

5th.—All Mexicans now in the Territory are required to remain quiet in the settlements and not attempt to leave, under any consideration, until further advised, and the officers of the territory are hereby directed to keep them in safe custody, treating them with kindness, and supplying their necessary wants.

6th.—While all the people should be on their constant guard, they are also requested to remain quiet and orderly, pursuing their various avocations, until such time as they may be called upon to act in their own defence.

7th.—The officer in command of the reconnoitering detachment is hereby directed to move with caution, that he may not be taken in ambush nor surprised; to preserve his men and animals, and still be as expeditious in his movements as possible; and the people of the various settlements are hereby required to furnish them with such aid and assistance as may be necessary.

[L. S.] Done at the city of Provo, in the county of Utah, this twenty-third day of April, A. D. 1853.

By the Governor,

BRIGHAM YOUNG.

BENJ. G. FERRIS, Secy.

NEW AND VALUABLE BOOKS!
JUST ISSUED FROM THE PRESS OF ALDEN, BEARDSLEY & Co.,
AUBURN, N. Y.

“STEPHEN'S BOOK OF THE FARM.”
Detailing the labors of the Farmer, Steward, Plowman, Hedger, Cattle Man, Field Worker, and Dairy Maid, with notes, &c., by John S. Skinner, editor of the Farmer's Library.—A substantial and beautifully bound volume embossed morocco, full gilt back, marble edge, containing 1088 pages. Price $4.00. (Sold exclusively by Agents and publishers.)

Mirror of the soul, or spiritual things discerned, by a Christian lady, (known as a popular writer in the Methodist Society,) with an Introduction by the Rev. David Holmes, A. M., author of Pure Gold, Wesley Offering, etc, etc, a neatly bound volume, price 63c—a valuable book for ministers, colporteurs, and traveling agents for religious societies, &c., &c., to whom a large discount will be made from the retail price.

Also, just issued from the press, a beautiful edition of THE LIVES OF THE REV. JOHN AND CHARLES WESLEY, M. A., collected from their private papers, journals, and printed works, and written at the request of their executors, to which is prefixed some account of their ancestors and relations. The whole forming a History of Methodism in which are embodied the principles and economy of the Methodist Denomination.

In labors more abundant—A workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.—Paul.

By John Whitehead, D. D., author of the Discourse delivered at Mr. Wesley's funeral—complete in one volume, (with portraits, 12mo., 572 pages—muslin. Price $1.25.

New illustrated [stereotyped] edition of Fox's Book of Martyrs, being a complete history of the lives, suffering and triumphant death of the Primitive, as well as the Protestant Martyrs; from the commencement of Christianity to the latest period of pagan and popish persecutions, to which is added an Account of the Inquisition. The Bartholomew Massacre; The Massacre in France; and general Persecutions under Lewis XIX.; Massacre of the Irish Rebellion in the recent persecution of the Protestants in the south of France; by the Rev. John Fox, A. M., with an illustrated title page, 1 vol., 12 mo. 566 pp. Price $2.25.

Few books are better known, or have been more read, than Fox's Martyrology. The original work was very voluminous, and has never been re-printed in this country, and perhaps not in England within the last hundred years. We have however, had numerous abridgements and this is one of the few instances in which, an abridgement is better than the original. The work would not be read at all at this day, as it came from the author. We have it to the snug volume before us. An epitomized view of the horrible tragedies which have so deeply disgraced religion. No reader can have patience to dwell long on such fiendish cruelties. But the facts are too well attested to admit of a doubt, and they must be given to the world as the strongest possible proof that man is depraved, and needs regenerating.—These persecutions were not the effect of religion, but of bigotry and fanaticism.—Christian Advocate.

Buds and Blossoms from our own Garden; by T. S. Arthur and F. G. Wadsworth beautifully embellished with numerous illustrations; 1 vol., 12 mo., 210 pages. Price 75 cents.

The above authors are popular writers and favorably known in the market, and whose works are read with interest.

NEW AND POPULAR WORKS.

Recently published by Alden, Beardsley & Co., Auburn, N. Y.

The second edition, in thirty days, of the Book of the Ocean and life on the Sea, containing thrilling narratives and adventures of Ocean Life, in all countries from the earliest period to the present time, with 60 illustrations, 1 vol. 672 pages, cloth, gilt, $1.50.

Second Edition of Young People's Book A miscellany, comprising Instructive Stories, Popular Anecdotes, Glances of ancient and Modern history, Wonders of Nature and art, Biographies, Poetry, &c., by F. C. Woodworth, another of Uncle Frank's Home Stories about animals, Stories about Birds, &c., 386 pp., 8 vol. cloth, $1.50 library sheep, $1.50.

Second Edition of Woodworth's Fireside Museum. An exhibitor of some things amusing and many things instructive, with copious and elegant engravings, by F. C. Woodworth, 386 pp. 8 vol. cloth 1.50 library sheep, 1.50.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Watson's Mental Arithmetic, upon the inductive plan; designed for schools and academies; by Wm Watson, (upon the method of Colburn's improved.) 18 mo. 60 pp. Price 25 cents.

Third Book on Popular Anatomy and Physiology. Adapted to the use of schools, by T. S. Lambert, M. D. Elegantly illustrated by one hundred and fifty wood engravings, and five colored lithographic anatomical plates.—Substantially bound. 1 vol. large 12 mo.—Over 450 closely printed pages, (with questions separate) $1.25.

To Book Agents, Colporteurs, and Peddlers. Alden Beardsley & Co., have contemplated the publication of the 23d thousand of a large Family Quarto Bible, containing the Apocrypha. Family Records, (on good paper) Index Marginal notes, References and a complete Concordance. Also, will be added to part of each edition Psalms in Metre, 10 beautiful plates, entirely new designs, namely: The Landing and coming forth from the Ark, Birth of Christ, Christ in the Manger, and christ and his Disciples in the Corn Field, &c. Bound in a substantial and exceedingly neat style of embossed sides gilt back and marble edge—clear large type, and printed on white paper. Price retail, $2.50, sheep, plain, $1.50. A large discount will be made to those who will engage in the sale. The attention of agents and colporteurs is particularly invited; five hundred can find employment. For further particulars, address, post-paid, ALDEN BEARDSLEY & Co., Publishers, Auburn, N. Y. Communications will receive prompt attention giving terms, &c.

Also, recently published, a Miniature Toy Bible illustrated with numerous engravings, new and appropriate designs.

Recently published an 8mo School Testament, designed for the use of Sunday Schools, and reading classes in common schools, in large clear and open type, in cheap form. Price, 15 cents, $1.50 per dozen.

New—10th—edition of the Pacific and Dead Sea Expedition, most valuable book for Libraries and general reading.

500 Converting Agents Wanted!!

SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS.

Alden Beardsley & Co., Publishers Auburn, N. Y. have just received from the Press, and offer the following popular and valuable publications to the public through Agents:

“Stevens' Book of the Farm.”

Detailing the labors of the Farmer, Plowman, Hedger, Cattle-Man, Shepherd, Field-Worker and Dairy-Maid, with notes &c. by John S. Skinner, Editor of Farmers Library.

A substantial and beautifully bound volume, Embossed Morocco, Full Gilt Back, Marble Edge, containing 1088 pages, with 450 illustrations, 10 Steel, and numerous Tinted Plates. Price $4.00.

“Pacific and Dead Sea Expeditions.”

Containing Voyages of the U. S. Exploring Squadron, commanded by Capt. Charles Wilkes, also, Explorations and Discoveries made by Admiral D'Urville, Capt. Ross, and an account of the Expedition to the Dead Sea, under Lieut. Lynch. By John S. Jenkins, author of “Life of Silas Wright,” “History of the War in Mexico,” etc etc.

A substantial and richly bound volume, embossed morocco, full gilt back, marble edge, containing 517 pages, with numerous illustrations, by John S. Jenkins, author of the “Life of J. C. Calhoun,” &c. Price, $3.25.

The following are part of the commendations of the press, on this valuable work.

“The Heroines of History.”

Will be published on the 1st of August, and sold by subscription through Agents, The Heroines of History, by John S. Jenkins. Embracing the Histories and Biographies of the following celebrated characters: Cleopatra, Isabella of Spain, Joan of Arc, Maria Theresa, Josephine, Elizabeth of England, Mary of Scotland, Catharine of Russia, Marie Antoinette, Madam Roland.

Thou hast a charm cup, O Fame.

A draught that mantles high.

And seems to lift this earthly frame,

Above mortality.—Mrs. Hemans.

1 Octavo Vol., containing 500 pages, and embellished with six elegant Steel Portraits from Correct Likenesses.

Embossed Muslin, gilt back, Retail price, $2.00 do Morocco, “and Marbled edge, price, $2.25.

Publishers of Newspapers in the United States publishing the above advertisements—Five weekly insertions, and sending us a copy of their paper, post paid—shall be entitled to a copy each, of the above books sent to them, by Express or otherwise, as directed.

ALDEN, BEARDSLEY & Co.,
Publishers, Auburn, N. Y.

MOSES CHASE,

MANUFACTURER OF COMMON AND IMPROVED SINGLE, DOUBLE AND TRIPLE COMPLEX, RE-ACTING, GALVANO, ELECTRO, MAGNETIC TORPEDO MACHINES, For the Medical Faculty and the Scientific Saint James, Beaver Island, Lake Mich. March 6th, 1851. 4tf.

F. JOHNSON & Co.,

At the West Pier, offer for sale an assortment of Dry Goods & Groceries, at moderate rates. Builders Materials, ass'd Nails, &c. Fishermen's stores, Salt, &c. Salt and Barrels furnished to fill. Disposed to accommodate all on best terms.

St. James, Sept. 15, 1852. 22tf.

HURRAH FOR ELECTION.

THE utmost excitement is prevailing in all parties, but the great thing for the people is, where can I get my Dry Goods and Groceries cheap? Well, echo says that J. M. WAIT has just returned with a large assortment in that line, which he is selling cheaper than the cheapest, for cash or ready pay. Beaver Island, Oct. 27, 1852. 28-4w.

HYMN BOOKS,

JUST Received and for sale at this Office
St. James, Sept. 18, 1852. 29w.

STRANG THE MORMON.—Turned up Again.—Last week, when the steamer Morton landed at Mackinac, it was ascertained that the noted King Strang was on board. Judge Goodwin at once issued his warrant for his arrest, when the deputy Sheriff went on board to arrest him. While searching for the villain, who was non-inventus, the boat left. It seems that his majesty had locked himself up in his state-room, and was regularly served with his meals, although no one on board could tell where he was. On tracing him out, the officer called on the passengers to assist him; but on bursting the door, Strang threatened to shoot the first man who entered, which sent them all about, except the officer. Not being able to obtain entrance, the Sheriff nailed up the door, vainly supposing that he had him safe and sound. Reaching St. Clair River, the Morton landed on the Canada shore to wood, contrary to the entreaties of the officer; Strang, ascertaining which from a confederate Mormon, named Pierce, burst open the door of his room, and attempted to escape. The officer, however, was on the watch, and seized him by the collar as he was springing over the rail, when Pierce stepping up, presented a revolver, and ordered him to release his hold or he would shoot him. The officer at once drew his pistol, and presenting it toward the breast of Pierce, pulled the trigger, but it unfortunately missed fire. Strang, taking advantage of the melee, and jerking himself loose from the grasp of the Sheriff, sprang ashore, and was soon lost among the wilds of Canada. The officer at once came to this city, and has made all necessary arrangements for the capture of the rascal, should he make his appearance here. Pierce also succeeded in making his escape by "following the footsteps of his illustrious predecessor"—Detroit Tribune 19th ultimo.

That will do. "Judge Goodwin at once issued a warrant." Judge Goodwin was not within four hundred miles of Mackinac, and the warrant was an old one on which King Strang had been arrested a long time since and discharged by due course of law; and the order of discharge endorsed on the back of the warrant was readable, though it had fresh pen lines drawn over it. "The Deputy Sheriff went on board to arrest him." Ben Rice, Deputy to J. S. Childs, who is not Sheriff, went on board to kidnap him, in his own language to "serve him as they did old Joe."

"Strang threatened to shoot the first man who entered which sent them all about except the officer." Brave officer; courageous Deputy Sheriff. Great man, this Strang, who can send all the passengers of a steam boat running about, by a threat; a word—a breath of his nostrils. Wouldn't the United States like to hire him to flog the Holy Alliance when she adopts the Kossuth intervention doctrine and gets into a war with all Europe?

"And the officer drew his pistol which unfortunately missed fire." How many a brave Fallstaff has had a good job spoiled by missing fire. The poor cowardly fool had buck fever and forgot to cock his pistol. It was only the thumping of his heart which he took for the bursting of a cap.

"Not able to obtain entrance" into a stateroom,—a piece of pine panel work a half inch thick with glass doors.—Is Strang so popular, or the law so powerless, that with fifty passengers on a steam boat and the village of Mackinac to turn out as a posse committatus, a Sheriff can't take one man out of such a place? Does the more of the Tribune think its readers gullable enough to swallow such a tale?

The reason he could get into the state room was that he knew his precept was no warrant, and that he was no officer, and consequently that his arrest was only an act of kidnapping, and resistance lawful. When the state room door stood wide open this redoubtable Deputy Sheriff Ben Rice, instead of going in and taking his man, ordered the by-standers to go in and take him, giving as a reason, "he has got a pistol, I see it, and he says he will shoot the first man that comes in."

DEPREDAATION AT SOUTH MANITOU.

A short time since a report was current at Chicago that the Mormons had been over to South Manitou and taken a large cargo of plunder, loading down the schooner Emmlin, (three Master,) of this place taking off a Light House boat &c. and the people at Manitou stoutly assert that the Emmlin was seen there for two or three days previous to the night the plundering was done laying behind the Island. Capt. Rossman of the Prop. Lady of the Lake heard the report spoken of warmly at Chicago, and coming from there directly here, found the Emmlin on the stocks where she has been all the spring, and seen by him and all his officers on every trip he has made up and down this season, undergoing extensive repairs, which were still very far from complete.

So there that tale ends. The same men who have been gulled with it will believe the next similar falsehood. They deserve more compassion for their folly than their loss.

We do not doubt the plundering of the South Manitou, and probably the robbers acted boldly in the confidence that the Mormons would be their scape goats. Most likely the men who pretend to have seen the Emmlin on the back side of the Island know where the spoil went too and are laughing at the ease with which they have turned all suspicion in the wrong direction.

If it was ever just to punish men for their follies, then has justice been meted out to those men who charge impossibilities to the Mormons, instead of looking for the criminals where any reasonable man would expect to find them.

A desperate effort has been made at Mackinac this spring to get up a new prosecution of the Mormons of this place; and since the brief suspension of the publication of the Islander they have filled the newspapers with falsehoods concerning us. In consequence we have devoted a large portion of this No. to that subject and print an unusual number for general circulation.

We are happy to say that as far as our knowledge extends, the effort has proved a failure. The most that the redoubtable men of Mackinac, Gull Island and Pine River have accomplished beyond giving general currency to their falsehoods is the descending upon the coasts of Beaver and stealing a few nets belonging to Mormon fishermen.

COMPLEMENTARY.

There is a sheet published in this city the name of which we now for the first time mention in our editorial columns. We mean the Tribune. In its inception, it vegetated under the nursing care of a man notorious only for his moral shortcomings and black-mail proclivities. In its advanced childhood, its tutelage was confided to a graduate of one of the penitentiaries of a neighboring State. And now, in its more mature age, it has fallen into the hands of a man whose real name is a mystery to the people where the paper circulates—he sails under an alias. The propensities of the paper are in keeping with the reputation of the men who have controlled it. Its gross attacks upon private character have given it a notoriety which fastens only to the vile traducer and atrocious calumniator. The facility with which it has lent itself severally to diverse schemes and opposing interests, attests how constantly it is in the market, and how readily it falls into the hands of the highest bidder. Its disgraceful career is marked with the revelation of no sense of shame; and its sensibilities seem blunted to all considerations of propriety.

Why its chief editor is here under an abridged name we know not, unless it be that he is a fugitive from justice. The turpitude of his conduct, and some intimations that have come to our ears, confirm the suspicion that he retreated from his former residence so suddenly as in his haste to have left behind him the name of his paternal ancestor.—If it be true that he is a fugitive, we suggest to the authorities whence he fled that there are laws in Michigan by which, upon the requisition of the Executive of the State claiming him for trial, it is provided that he shall be delivered up.—Detroit Free Press.

A man's wealth depends more upon his wife than his income. Some will cause their husbands to become rich on five hundred a year; others can scarcely keep out of jail on five thousand. Saving has made more fortunes than getting one. If married men are poor, in nine cases out of ten it is their wives' fault.

Police Society.—A place where manners pass for too much, and morals for too little.

Idle Visits.—The idle levy a heavy tax upon the industrious, when by frivolous visitations they rob them of their time. Such persons beg their daily happiness in going from house to house, and from door to door, as beggars beg their daily bread.

MORMONS.—The Keokuk (Iowa) Dispatch says that two hundred Mormons, all natives of England and France, arrived in that city lately, on their way to Salt Lake, and immediately went into camp. They form a part of a train of two thousand, the remainder of whom are shortly expected.—Free Press.

THE CHINESE REBELLION.

The North China Herald, of the 19th of March, speaks of the rebellion as having become a subject of deep interest to foreigners—trade being at a stand, in consequence of the alarm among the Chinese merchants. The progress of the rebellion, the Herald remarks, has been gradual and sure in its progress northwards, till, as was generally believed, Nankin was either in the hands of the insurgents or on the eve of being captured by them; and it is pretty clear that the prestige of the Tartar dynasty is totally dissipated, and that the government no longer possesses the means of checking and subduing the rising of the Chinese against a usurpation now more than two hundred years old.

In respect to the causes of the rebellion, and the change which seems most likely to be effected in the government, the North China Herald remarks that corruption is the prominent feature of the present government and its officials, the mandarins; that there is no justice, law, nor protection, except by chance; and that it is in fact a matter of wonder that a nation so industrious and intelligent should have held together so long as it has under such a lax rule. The ostensible object of the rebel chief, or king, as he styles himself, is to redress existing evils; and the general belief among the Chinese is that the war is in reality with the officials, the mandarins. The people, therefore, are not in dread of the rebel army, and are easily led to co-operate with it, passively, if not actively. The alarm among the merchants and bankers is partly owing to this circumstance, and partly to the fact that they are still at the mercy of the mandarins.

The following remarkable proclamation of the Chinese insurgent chiefs is extracted from the North China Herald, published at Shanghai.

"Yang, entitled the Eastern King, and General-in-chief with Seen entitled the Western King and General-in-chief of Thaping, by divine appointment Emperor of Then-ko, the celestial dynasty, unitedly issue this proclamation, to announce that they have received the commands of heaven to slay the impious and save the people. According to the Old Testament, the Great God (Shang-te) our Heavenly Father in six days created the heavens and earth, the land and sea, man and things. The Great God is a spiritual Father, a ghostly Father, omniscient, omnipotent, and omnipresent; all nations under Heaven are acquainted with his great power. In tracing up the records of bygone ages, we find that since the time of the creation of the world the Great God has frequently manifested his displeasure, and how can it be that you people of the world are still ignorant of it? The Great God in the first instance displayed his anger, and sent down a great rain, during forty days and forty nights, by which means the flood was produced.

On a second occasion the Great God manifested his displeasure, and came down to save Israel out of the land of Egypt. On a third occasion he displayed his awful majesty, when the Savior of the world, the Lord Jesus, became incarnate in the land of Judea, and suffered for the redemption of mankind. In later ages he has again manifested his indignation, and in the Ting-yow year (A. D. 1837) the Great God sent a celestial messenger, who was commissioned by the Lord of Heaven, when he ascended on high, to put to death the fiendish band. Again he sent the Celestial King to take the lead of the empire and save the people—from the Mowshin to the Sinchua year (A. D. 1843-51); the Great God's compassionate calamities of the people, who have been entangled in the meshes of the devil's net; on third moon of the latter year the exalted Lord and Great Emperor appeared; and in the ninth moon, Jesus, the Savior of the world, manifested himself, exerting innumerable acts of power, and slaughtering a great number of impious fiends in several pitched battles. For how can impious fiends expect to resist the majesty of Heaven? And how, we would ask can the Great God fail to be displeased with men for worshipping corrupt spirits, and performing corrupt acts, by which means they grievously offend against the commands of heaven? Why do you inhabitants of the world awake? Having been born in the present day, when you are permitted to witness the glory of God, how fortunate may you esteem yourselves! Happening upon such a time as this, when you experienced the great tranquility of the days of Heaven, it is time for you to awake and arouse. Those who comply with the will of Heaven, will be preserved, and those who disobey the celestial dictates will be destroyed.

At the present time this Tartar fiend, Heenfung, originally a Manchou slave, is the perpetual enemy of our Chinese race. Moreover, he has induced men to assume the form of fiends, to worship the corrupt, while they disobey the true spirit, and thereby rebel against the Great God, on which account heaven will not endure, and men are determined to destroy him. Alas! your assemblage of valiant men, you do not seem to know that every tree has its roots, and every stream its fountain; while you appear willing to invert the order of things, creating the smallest advantages, you turn round and serve your foes; and having been deluged in the machinations of the evil one, you ungratefully rebel against your true Lord. You do not seem to remember that you are the virtuous scholars of the Middle Kingdom, and honest subjects of the Celestial dynasty, and thus you easily bend your steps in the road to ruin, without compassating your own selves. Moreover, you valiant men are, most of you, adherents of the Third Society, and have entered into a bloody compact that you will exert your united strength and talents to exterminate the Tartar dynasty. Whoever heard of men joining in a solemn covenant, and then turning their backs upon their foes. Now, throughout the different provinces there must be a variety of determined men, numbers of famous scholars, and of valiant heroes not a few; we desire, therefore, that you may severally elevate the lofty standard, and announce that you are determined not to live under the same heaven with the Tartars, while you earn for yourselves some merit in the service of our new King; this is what we, his Generals, most fervently desire. Our army, wishing to carry out the virtuous feelings with which the Great God loves to foster human life, and receives men into his compassionate embrace, has set forward on its march of benevolence, embracing all in its charitable folds.

At the same time we lead forward our Generals and troops, carrying to the utmost our fidelity in recompensing our country, in which we cannot refrain from displaying the same spirit to the end. These, our views, are now communicated to you all. You ought to know that since Heaven has sent forth the true sovereign to rule over the people, it is yours to aid the monarch in establishing his dominion. Although the devilish fiends should amount to thousands, and their artful schemes to thousands, yet how could they withstand Heaven? To kill without warning would not be agreeable to our feelings, and to sit still without saving the people is not what a benevolent person would do; we therefore earnestly issue this proclamation, urging you people early to repent and vigorously to awake. Worship the true spirit, and reject corrupt spirits; become men once more, and be no longer fiends; when perhaps you may attain longevity here and the happiness of Heaven hereafter. But if you persevere in your obstinate stupidity, both gems and stones will be alike denuded; and when you come to gnaw your own navels, it will be too late to repent. A special proclamation."

AMUSING SCENE.

The Steamer Franklin left the wharf at this place the morning of the 27th, a man of the name of Smith was seen walking uneasily back and forth on the wharf till the boat was 10 or 12 feet from the wharf when he drew a bundle and sprang suddenly over the side gap and clambered aboard. When the boat was a sufficient distance away he made a polite bow saying "good by gentlemen."

All this will seem natural enough to those who really believe that the Mormons have got some hundred here under restraint, staying here because they cannot get away and that when one becomes too restless they kill and eat him. To us it was laughable and amusing.

Franklin Johnson gives us this explanation. "On the last trip up of the Michigan, one of the hands left his coat on the wharf. Returning he inquired for his coat, and Johnson pointed it out to him hanging on a pile of wood where he left it. As he returned to the boat elated he remarked, 'well the Mormons are honest any way. There are few places that a fellow could leave his coat on a wharf and ever find it again.' Just at that moment he put his hand in his pocket and said, 'what my handkerchief is gone' and running his other hand in the opposite pocket, 'and cap too.' His under lip dropped down, and two or three passengers seemed to chuckle as though they delighted in human depravity.

Johnson suspected this Smith and bored him on the subject. He professed innocence and indignation that he was suspected. Johnson told him he had to bring the handkerchief and cap back or he should institute legal proceedings. The next morning the cap and handkerchief were laying at Johnsons door, and Smith is gone.

Of course he will go off telling what a wicked people we are, and some pious persons will take him in and make quite a Lion of him.

We will not complain of this. He will sufficiently punish them in the end. Time makes all things even.

MARINE.

The evening of June 26th six large sails from Buffalo to Chicago, and the Steam Tug Franklin made this harbor in a severe storm, and left in the morning.

The Capt. of the Denmark reports the new Propeller Challenge gone to pieces in Lake Huron about 40 miles above the River St. Clair. The wreck was strewn about the Lake from five to ten miles off shore for fifteen miles north and south.

An unusually severe storm passed over this lake the 23d inst; the seas running so high that a Steamboat when in the troughs was lost to sight.

During the storm a small boat from Fox Island with two persons aboard was carried out several miles, and after a narrow escape from being run down, was picked up by the Steamer Sultana.

HORACE MANN ON HEALING.—A young man having asked of Horace Mann counsel to guide him in his legal professions, that gentleman tells him, that he first needs health, and that the spirit of health is one of the most reprehensible. He says: "Health has a good deal to do with what the world calls talent. Take a lawyer's life through, and high health is at least equal to fifty per cent. of brain." We think Mr. Mann is quite right here. A sound body is as essential to success in life as a sound mind.

SAINT JAMES THURSDAY JULY 14, 1853.

MURDEROUS ASSAULT—ATTACK ON SHERIFF MILLER—SIX MEN WOUNDED!

Yesterday morning Sheriff Miller left Galilee for Pine River to summon Jurors for the Circuit Court to be held at this place next week. When he left here the evening previous he was accompanied by only a boats crew of five men. But at Galilee learning that new threats had been given out at Pine River of killing any man who should attempt to serve any kind of process there he took another boat and crew and went over unarmed, believing that the presence of that number of witnesses would prevent any act of violence until his business was explained, when he reasonably believed no objection would be made.

The Sheriff arrived at 2 o'clock P. M. and within twenty-five minutes performed his duty and got into his boats with his party to return; when they were immediately fired upon by a party of armed men some fifty in number, and the firing continued until they had shoved off and rowed beyond the range of their guns.

The Pine River people immediately manned three boats and gave chase. The leading boat in chase contained twenty-five men. There was a light wind at the time, and while it lasted the Sheriff and his party kept out of reach of the guns, but when the wind died down, about ten miles out, it rapidly approached and renewed the firing, which continued for five miles when the Sheriff and his party made the Bark Morgan, Capt. Stone, and the pursuers hauled off and returned. The two other boats in pursuit were nearly a mile behind.

In this murderous assault more than two hundred guns were fired, all within short range, yet not a man was killed, and only six wounded.

As the Sheriff approached the landing, numerous armed men were seen running about and guns were fired apparently as signals for a general rally. As some trifling depredations had recently been committed by two or three men from Pine River at Galilee, it was supposed that this rally was to prevent an arrest of the offenders. And having no process for the arrest of any person and no business except the summoning of Jurors, no uneasiness was felt on account of it.

The party landed upon a narrow beach under a bluff, covered with a dense growth of timber and bushes. Several men came around with menacing words and manner, but appeared partially satisfied on learning the Sheriff's business. Armed men were constantly gathering on the bluff above, and as the party were ready to embark and return a body of thirty filed down a narrow path, with guns in their hands and formed in a row on the beach by the boats. In the intervening time three men had been down to the boats, and as they returned one of them was heard to say "they have no guns."

The boats were but just shoved off, and the last man climbing in, when the firing commenced, within thirty feet. A considerable surf was breaking on the shore, and it was difficult to get the boats off. The men had to stand up in full view and shove off using their oars for setting poles. The raking fire of thirty men on the beach, and a plunging fire from probably an equal number on the bluff, sent the balls like hailstones about them until they got beyond the range. All the wounds were received here. Isaac Pierce kept his feet, working with a setting pole with one hand, the other arm swinging about with both bones broken, until he sank down with the loss of blood, and A. J. Porter, kept his seat and steered the boat for miles after a ball entered back of the hip joint and passing lengthwise of the limb lodged in the hollow of the knee,

That they were not all slain: that a single one escaped alive is an extraordinary instance of the care of God for his creatures. The men on shore knew from the beginning that there was nothing to oppose them; that they had only to shoot the Sheriff's party down like sheep in a yard, and therefore took deliberate aim. Nothing but the power of the Almighty could have saved them from utter destruction. The intention evidently was to murder them all, there on the beach, and the pursuit was kept up so great a distance, undoubtedly, that there might be no witnesses to testify of the crime.

WOUNDED.—Isaac Pierce, left arm shot through below the elbow, breaking both bones. It is now doing well and there is every prospect that the arm will become sound.

A. J. Porter, severe flesh wound, a large ball passed lengthwise the thigh nearly to the knee. Doing well, but will be laid up several weeks.

Andrew J. Hale, shot through under the shoulder joint cutting the main artery. He was near bleeding to death, but is now able to walk about.

J. T. Pierce has a rifle ball flattened against the hip bone.

Alexander Wentworth and Lewis Briggs have each a shot hole through the flesh of the left arm.

The following escaped uninjured:—

Joshua L. Miller, Sheriff, Franklin Johnson, Lorenzo Tubbs, Orlando P. Briggs, L. D. Hickey, David Finch, Egbert Carpenter, Christopher Scott, and F. W. Longfield.

The whole party returned to Galilee the night of the same day they set out, and early the morning Dr. H. D. McCulloch reached them and dressed their wounds.

The Indians at Pine River took no part in the attack. On the other hand they informed Sheriff Miller that the men there intended to kill him;—advised him not to go up from the beach, but to re-embark immediately, because the men were gathering, and they were too many for him, and determined to kill him.

Neither the Sheriff or his men were armed. There were only four guns with them, and those only such as are commonly used for fowling. To avoid any show of hostility, before reaching Pine River these were laid in the bottom of one of the boats and covered with the men's coats. They were not taken up nor seen by any one while at Pine River. Cable and two others residing at Pine River went down to the boats and reported to their comrades, "they have no guns," and it was not till this report that a company of sixty men having a bluff and timber for shelter ventured to attack fifteen, standing in open view, unarmed.

We know not where to look for a parallel to an act so cowardly, so cold blooded and murderous, and which accomplished so little with its means.

A large number of the attacking party were recognized, and measures are being taken to bring them to justice. There would be no difficulty in fitting out a party from here who would make Pine River settlement as bare as the palm of a man's hand; but the moral effect of sending a half dozen to State Prison is worth more than the death of them all. Legal remedies are better than violent ones.

We know that those who forever seek some occasion against the Mormons, and are anxious to justify every wrong done them, will imagine some excuse for this. But when it is considered that there are seventy-five men at Pine River of known and avowed hostility to the Mormons, and the Sheriff's party consisted of but fourteen all told, and more than twenty-five miles from the nearest Mormon settlement, and therefore could not have sought a collision; and that the approach was six miles in sight, and the landing made in the midst of the Pine River settlement, in open daylight at two o'clock P. M. and that the Sheriff had no business but to summon Jurors, it will be impossible for the most prejudiced to imagine any excuse for this murderous attack.

It has already been said that knowing the hostile feelings of the people at Pine River, the Sheriff ought not to have gone there to summon Jurors. But in this matter he has no choice. He does not select the Jurors. They are drawn by the County Clerk from lists prepared by the Township officers long previous.

The fact that the Township officers in making out the Jury lists put on a due proportion of names of persons not Mormons, is an evidence that their duties were faithfully done, and that they are seeking no undue advantage to themselves, for a single Jurymen can defeat a verdict. Those names being on the lists the Clerk could not prevent their being drawn, unless by corruption in office. Having been drawn it was the duty of the Sheriff to summon them. Had he neglected to do it, it would have indicated an intention to corrupt the fountains of Justice, by refusing to certain classes of citizens any place in the Jury-box. A murderous attack of this kind could not be anticipated, and therefore could be no excuse for neglecting to summon the Jurors.

SAINT JAMES THURSDAY JULY 14, 1853.

MURDEROUS ASSAULT—ATTACK ON SHERIFF MILLER—SIX MEN WOUNDED!

Yesterday morning Sheriff Miller left Galilee for Pine River to summon Jurors for the Circuit Court to be held at this place next week. When he left here the evening previous he was accompanied by only a boats crew of five men. But at Galilee learning that new threats had been given out at Pine River of killing any man who should attempt to serve any kind of process there he took another boat and crew and went over unarmed, believing that the presence of that number of witnesses would prevent any act of violence until his business was explained, when he reasonably believed no objection would be made.

The Sheriff arrived at 2 o'clock P. M. and within twenty-five minutes performed his duty and got into his boats with his party to return; when they were immediately fired upon by a party of armed men some fifty in number, and the firing continued until they had shoved off and rowed beyond the range of their guns.

The Pine River people immediately manned three boats and gave chase. The leading boat in chase contained twenty-five men. There was a light wind at the time, and while it lasted the Sheriff and his party kept out of reach of the guns, but when the wind died down, about ten miles out, it rapidly approached and renewed the firing, which continued for five miles when the Sheriff and his party made the Bark Morgan, Capt. Stone, and the pursuers hauled off and returned. The two other boats in pursuit were nearly a mile behind.

In this murderous assault more than two hundred guns were fired, all within short range, yet not a man was killed, and only six wounded.

As the Sheriff approached the landing, numerous armed men were seen running about and guns were fired apparently as signals for a general rally. As some trifling depredations had recently been committed by two or three men from Pine River at Galilee, it was supposed that this rally was to prevent an arrest of the offenders. And having no process for the arrest of any person and no business except the summoning of Jurors no uneasiness was felt on account of it.

The party landed upon a narrow beach under a bluff, covered with a dense growth of timber and bushes. Several men came around with menacing words and manner, but appeared partially satisfied on learning the Sheriff's business. Armed men were constantly gathering on the bluff above, and as the party were ready to embark and return a body of thirty filed down a narrow path, with guns in their hands and formed in a row on the beach by the boats. In the intervening time three men had been down to the boats, and as they returned one of them was heard to say "they have no guns."

The boats were but just shoved off, and the last man climbing in, when the firing commenced within thirty feet. A considerable surf was breaking on the shore, and it was difficult to get the boats off. The men had to stand up in full view and shove off using their oars for setting sail. The raking fire of thirty men on the bank and a plunging fire from probably an equal number on the bluff, sent the balls like hailstones about them until they got beyond the range. All the wounds were received here.

working with a setting the other arm swinging broken, until he sank and, and A. J. Porter, the boat for miles after point and passing in the hollow of that a single instance of The men or that there they had o

e sheet

WOUNDED.—Isaac Pierce, left arm shot through below the elbow, breaking both bones. It is now doing well and there is every prospect that the arm will become sound.

A. J. Porter, severe flesh wound, a large ball passed lengthwise the thigh nearly to the knee. Doing well, but will be laid up several weeks.

Andrew J. Hale, shot through under the shoulder joint cutting the main artery. He was near bleeding to death, but is now able to walk about.

J. T. Pierce has a rifle ball flattened against the hip bone.

Alexander Wentworth and Lewis Briggs have each a shot hole through the flesh of the left arm.

The following escaped uninjured;—
Joshua L. Miller, Sheriff, Franklin Johnson, Lorenzo Tubbs, Orlando P. Briggs, L. D. Hickey, David Finch, Egbert Carpenter, Christopher Scott, and F. W. Longfield.

The whole party returned to Galilee the night of the same day they set out, and early this morning Dr. H. D. McCulloch reached there and dressed their wounds.

The Indians at Pine River took no part in the attack. On the other hand they informed Sheriff Miller that the men there intended to kill him;—advised him not to go up from the beach, but to re-embark immediately, because the men were gathering, and they were too many for him, and determined to kill him.

Neither the Sheriff or his men were armed. There were only four guns with them, and those only such as are commonly used for fowling. To avoid any show of hostility, before reaching Pine River these were laid in the bottom of one of the boats and covered with the men's coats. They were not taken up nor seen by any one while at Pine River. Cable and two others residing at Pine River went down to the boats and reported to their comrades, "they have no guns," and it was not till this report that a company of sixty men having a bluff and timber for shelter ventured to attack fifteen, standing in open view, unarmed.

We know not where to look for a parallel to an act so cowardly, so cold blooded and murderous, and which accomplished so little with its means.

A large number of the attacking party were recognized, and measures are being taken to bring them to justice. There would be no difficulty in fitting out a party from here who would make Pine River settlement as bare as the palm of a man's hand; but the moral effect of sending a half dozen to State Prison is worth more than the death of them all. Legal remedies are better than violent ones.

We know that those who forever seek some occasion against the Mormons, and are anxious to justify every wrong done them, will imagine some excuse for this. But when it is considered that there are seventy-five men at Pine River of known and avowed hostility to the Mormons, and the Sheriff's party consisted of but fourteen all told, and more than twenty-five miles from the nearest Mormon settlement, and therefore could not have sought a collision; and that the approach was six miles in sight, and the landing made in the midst of the Pine River settlement, in open daylight at two o'clock P. M., and that the Sheriff had no business but to summon Jurors, it will be impossible for the most prejudiced to imagine any excuse for this murderous attack.

It has already been said that knowing the hostile feelings of the people at Pine River, the Sheriff ought not to have gone there to summon Jurors. But in this matter he has no choice. He does not select the Jurors. They are drawn by the County Clerk from lists prepared by the Township officers long previous.

The fact that the Township officers in drawing out the Jury lists put out the names of those who are not Mormons, and that their names are not on the list, is a fact that they are seeking to prevent, for a Those names not prevent ion in offic duty of the

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 2.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, FEB. 2, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 49.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

Terms:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

BEAVER ISLANDS AND EMMET COUNTY.

(Continued from last No.)

PROTESTANT MISSION.

A Protestant Mission was established at Mackinac a few years after the war, at which the children of the traders and other residents of Mackinac and a few Indian children were educated. Religious services were had at the chapel of the Mission, and the reports of the Missionaries indicated some progress in religion. But the Indian boys educated there were not received in the society of the whites as equals, and wanted the capital to establish in business; and among the Indians they were so ignorant of the modes of procuring subsistence, and so effeminate as to be dependent and despised.

They fell into menial employments and dissipation, and soon died. The girls, unable to obtain respectable civilized husbands, and unfit for wives to the savages, were reduced to the necessity of becoming mistresses to white adventurers, by whom they were soon cast off to the chance of promiscuous prostitution or starvation. Disease and destitution rapidly carried them off. The Mission was long since abandoned. The chapel, an indifferently wooden building, has survived all its converts; and the better constructed Mission residence, is now a popular boarding house.

The civilization of the Protestant Mission, gave the Indians all the white man's wants, with none of his means of gratifying them.—It brought before them every temptation of vice, with none of the means of resisting it. It cast upon the mere child of the Forest all the responsibilities of the highest order of civilized society, with none of its experience.

THE FISHERIES.

The fisheries of Michilimackinac were, to some extent, a source of subsistence to the Indians, before the country was visited by Europeans. The Indians only fished on the shores, in the streams, and in the shallow inland lakes. The first Frenchmen in this country introduced the French modes of fishing, by which the fish were pursued to the deep waters, and thus a supply was obtained all the year.

As early as 1824, small quantities of Whitefish and Trout began to be sent to Buffalo for market. In the space of thirty years this branch of trade has increased from two thousand barrels to two hundred and fifty thousand, of which it is supposed one half are taken in what were formerly known as the Mackinac fisheries, extending from Death's Door to Middle Channel. Formerly these were all taken to Mackinac, where they were repacked and sent to market. The merchants at Mackinac furnished the fishermen, and purchased all their fish, and the entire profits of the business accrued to them.

The fishermen, until within a few years, were all Indian and Frenchmen, who lived in a state of barbarism and misery, and were almost, and in some instances quite slaves to the traders. Their summers were spent in wigwags of the worst kind on the Lake shores, nearly destitute of clothing, and not unfrequently reduced to subsist on fish alone for weeks. The traders so conducted their business that the fishermen were generally in debt. But if by any means, one had a continual run of good success, and got a little capital at command, he was induced to lay it out in whiskey, and return to the fishing grounds, where, with all his companions, he remained drunk till the supply was gone.

Gradually a few Americans and Irish went on to the fisheries. Some of these took with them small stocks for trade, and divided their time between trading and fishing. As these received their outfits from and sold their fish at Mackinac, it did not materially change the course of trade. But, taking the supply of intoxicating liquors more among the Indians, made their use more common and fatal. But these were men bred to civilization, who had gone among savages to get beyond the restraints of the law. They were the worst class of men, scattered among the most inoffensive and defenceless—and it is needless to say they let slip no opportunity of plundering them.

Numbers of them are known who boast of the amounts they have made by taking fish out of the open barrels of the Indians from night to night, and placing them in their own. On a fishery where a dozen Indians were engaged, they were often plundered in this way to the amount of one hundred barrels in a season. Since the Sauk and Fox war the Indians did not dare resent these or greater outrages, when discovered.

As a natural consequence, a set of outlaws and felons were scattered through the country, and found on all the fisheries, hated and feared, and living in security on plunder. The control of the fishing business gradually fell into the hands of this class of men, the merchants of Mackinac being their factors. These intermediaries were no less formidable by their crimes than their numbers, and their intimate connection with the Indians and mixed French and Indian. Over them they obtained all the influence of dependence and fear, strengthened by intimate association. In the hands of such men, the most productive inland fisheries in the world afforded only a miserable and uncertain subsistence to the fishermen, even through the summer.

In winter the Indian fishermen retired to the various Indian towns, and the French to Mackinac. The Indians obtained a precarious subsistence by hunting, and the French did such labor as they could get to do for their board. That failing, they took what fish they could for food through the ice, and when reduced to starvation, as more or less were every winter, they fell back on the traders for support, who furnished them on credit. On these debts they were frequently sold, of which mention is made hereafter.

Since 1843 merchants and traders have established themselves at other stations, more convenient to the fisheries than Mackinac.—Most of the fishermen had their outfits of provisions, barrels and salt, and many were in debt also for boats, nets and the balances on their winter's support at Mackinac. But the interlopers or traders at other stations, who made them no advances, carried on a trade ruinous to the Mackinac merchants, by purchasing the fish put up in their barrels and salt, and caught by men provisioned and furnished by them. Such were the habits of dissipation prevailing on the fishing grounds, that these frauds left the fishermen worse off at the close of every season; for they were destitute of credit, and dare not return to Mackinac.

This threw them more into the hands of the felons and outlaws, who infested the region. The losses incurred by these means have ruined several wealthy traders at Mackinac. With these losses, fishing trade is passing to other places, fast growing up, more convenient to the fisheries.

The new class of fishermen are persons of limited means, temperate habits, good morals, and persevering industry, from the best sections of the Northern States and Canada, who have come into the country to make it a permanent residence. They either make farms, or establish mechanic shops, in which they engage in productive labors, when not employed in fishing, and conduct their business as in the best regulated civilized societies.—Their fishing is resorted to, not from necessity, but as a resource of profit, and only pursued while more productive than other business.

Traders cannot make as much profit off this class of customers, but they take more fish with less labor, and, husbanding their means, are accumulating property, and rapidly improving the country. By these means more than half the trade of Mackinac has been transferred to Washington Harbor, Saint James, Saint John, Saint Helena, Duncan, Detour, and divers other places; and as every part of the fisheries is more accessible to some of these places than to Mackinac, the trade of Mackinac in fish must soon cease.

SLAVERY AND PEONAGE.

During the French occupation of the country, prisoners of war in the hands of the Indians were occasionally purchased by them, and detained as bondsmen. This was practiced to but a very limited extent, and never grew into a system.

After the country fell into the hands of the English, a very few Africans were brought from Albany for house servants. But it is doubtful whether their detention in slavery was justified by law. Some of the Ojibwa Indians have unmistakable marks of African blood. They may be descended either from these slaves, or from Spanish negroes, who came among them while they lived near the Gulf of Mexico.

While this country was governed as a part of the North West Territory, there was a law for selling into a bondage all vagrants and persons guilty of petty crimes, by which there existed a kind of slavery similar to the Peonage in Mexico. By a very liberal construction of the law, by the authorities of Mackinac, all poor debtors were held to be vagrants, and sold for the payment of their debts. And to avoid increasing the debt by the addition of costs, creditors frequently seized them without the interposition of Justice or Constable, and sold them at auction to the person who would take them for the least period of time and pay the debt.

Sales of this kind continued until 1836.—Though never sanctioned by law, it is doubtful whether the subjects of them could have obtained redress or escaped the bondage.—There were no persons who knew anything about law, or held any judicial authority within many hundred miles of them, except those who were interested in keeping up the system.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

The administration of justice in such a place as Mackinac, could not but be lax and irregular. Not tracing its history, the following incidents will show its character:—

Charles O'Malley, not the Irish Dragoon, but the Irish Justice, was hearing a cause, in which Michael Dousman was defendant.—Dousman, a little litigious, but shrewd, prudent and persevering, prided himself on his ability to conduct a suit with success. But in O'Malley's Court it was well understood that defendants stood no chance. Dousman's dissatisfaction got the better of him for a moment, and he dropped some remark which O'Malley construed as a contempt, and admonished him sharply. Dousman was silent, and the matter passed by.

But a few months after, a dispute sprung up between them on Dousman's wharf, and O'Malley went to his office and made out a warrant for committing him to prison for a contempt on this stale transaction. Dousman lay in prison several days, but was finally brought up on a habeas corpus, and discharged.

In 1850 Mr. Strang, the Mormon prophet, was before the same O'Malley, charged with driving a prostitute off from Beaver Island by threatening her with personal chastisement.—The witnesses for the prosecution failed to prove any threatening words. O'Malley recalled one of them, and asked him if he "understood Mr. Strang to mean that she should be chastised, or rode on the back of a black ram, if she would not leave the Island?"—Mr. Strang said, "Please your honor, I object;" and for this Mr. Strang was committed to prison for life, for a contempt of Court, without further parley, or even making out a mittimus.

He then proceeded with the trial in the absence of Mr. Strang, and without bringing him up to hear judgment, adjudged that he be imprisoned a year for want of sureties in the sum of ten thousand dollars to keep the peace.—Whether this year was to run with the other term, or after the expiration of it, the warrant did not show.

From both these commitments Mr. Strang was discharged, on the return of a habeas corpus in the evening. But before nine o'clock O'Malley had him again arrested, brought before him, and again committed for life, without swearing a witness. It is presumed that O'Malley did not in fact intend to imprison Mr. Strang for life, but to detain him prisoner till he thought proper to discharge him.

The old traders at Mackinac were in the regular practice of seizing poor debtors without suit, and thrusting them into the County jail, until the debt was paid or satisfactorily secured. In 1842 the right of creditors thus to imprison their debtors on their own verbal process, was seriously claimed and contested, on the return of a writ of habeas corpus. But the discharge of the prisoner put an end to the practice.

INDIAN WHISKEY.

The most profitable, and, at the same time, the most ruinous trade Mackinac ever had is that in Whiskey. Indian Whiskey is made by putting two gallons of common Whiskey, or unrectified spirits, to thirty gallons of water, and adding red pepper enough to make it fiery, and tobacco enough to make it intoxicating. Its cost is not above five cents per gallon.—Thousands of barrels have been sold every year, the prices generally being fifty cents a gallon by the cask, twenty-five cents a quart by the bottle, and six cents a drink.

More than half the fish taken by the Indians for thirty years have been paid for in this article, and more than half the annuities they have received from the United States have been laid out in the purchase of it. The most wealthy and respectable traders have not been ashamed to deal in it. The outlaws and felons who found a hiding place in the country, were seldom without a supply of it; and being the instruments of wealthy traders in disposing of it, became in some degree necessary to their success in business, and thus secured their protection. By their means the horrors produced by this trade were kept out of Mackinac until the place became filled with an unprincipled class of small traders, who had as little regard to appearances as their more wealthy competitors had to integrity.

The trade in spirituous liquors has lately met with a severe check. In 1847 the Beaver Islands were erected into the township of Peaine, and in 1851 a law was passed prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, except by such traders as should enter into bonds with good sureties to make good all damages which should happen by the use of the liquors sold. This law the township of Peaine enforced. No trader there could give the security, because the citizens combined to suppress the trade; and as the best fisheries are in that township, the effect of it was a sensible improvement in the condition of the Indian fishermen, and a material change in the class of whites engaged in the business.

A great effort was made to prevent the enforcement of the law, and as the officers of the township of Peaine were all Mormons, against whom a strong prejudice exists, the act was generally condemned throughout the country. Sympathy was got up for those who were fined for the violation of the law, and the proceedings of the Constables in collecting the fines were spoken of in the newspapers as acts of robbery. But the officers were firm in their duty, and the consequence was, a most marked improvement in the state of society.

In 1853 the county of Emmet was erected, extending over all the fisheries west of Old Michilimackinac, and north of the Grand Traverse Light, as far as the Wisconsin boundary; and in the spring before the traders came on with their supplies the officers gave notice through the newspapers published at the County seat, of their intention to prosecute in every case of violation of the law within the County. On the appearing of this notice in Mackinac, a public meeting was called on a notice signed by the Supervisor and four Justices of the Peace of the town, and the District Attorney of the Upper Peninsula, to devise measures for resistance. At the meeting held in pursuance of this notice the District Attorney presided, and one of the Justices was Secretary. Resolutions were passed denouncing the people of Emmet County as felons and robbers, condemning the Legislature for erecting the County, threatening armed resistance to the public authorities, and pledging military aid to such transitory traders and fishermen in Emmet as should resist the law.

INDIAN PAYMENTS.

The payment of Indian annuities at Mackinac began a little subsequent to the war of 1812, and will continue till 1856, when the last expires. They have sometimes amounted to as much as $100,000 a year, but are now only $20 or $30,000.

The practice is to send word to the several bands some weeks before the payment is to take place, and call them in. While waiting for the arrival of the agent, they expend all their means, suffer much of hunger, and usually obtain considerable supplies on credit, for which they are charged two or three prices.—As soon as the payment is made, the Indians have a Saturnalia, outliving the carnival in the darkest places of Paris or Naples, which usually lasts till their money is expended and their provisions either eaten up or exchanged for whiskey and drank; when, on the first favorable wind, they strike their encampment, launch their boats, and return home poorer than when they left.

Formerly the money was paid to each chief, for his band. Before going to get drunk the chiefs deposited most of the money, uncounted, with some trusty white man, usually a trader with whom he dealt, only keeping what amount he wished to drink up. The banker in these cases paid himself whatever he had advanced to the Indians before receiving their annuities, and such commission as he thought proper for the safe keeping of the money. Allowing these bankers to tell their own story, the commission was often above than below twenty-five per cent. The Indians were not able to count the money, and at the end of the Saturnalia, ill qualified to judge whether well or ill dealt by.

As a few large traders monopolized this business, and acted in concert, they thus secured a settlement of all balances against the Indians, in cash, once every year, and besides plunder outright, two or three hundred per cent. profit on every article sold.

This state of things was unendurable to the class of small traders, who had no share in it; and they procured such a change of the law that the annuities were paid to the head of every family, instead of the chiefs of the bands. By this means all had a chance at the plunder, and measures still more scandalous were resorted to to obtain it.

Some of the Indians, as soon as they receive their annuities, hand the money to their wives for safe keeping. The squaw immediately divides it into several sums, each of which is appropriated to a particular use, and the last she gives to her husband to get drunk on. In these cases, though the husband frequently returns for more money, and sometimes beats his wife to compel her to give him his money, it is generally securely guarded, and faithfully appropriated, according to the original intention.

Notwithstanding a considerable number of cases of this kind, the annuities are a curse to the Indians. Take all the bands together, and they return home with less means than they set out with, and on an average they are from home six weeks, at a season of the year when fishing is good, and potatoes and corn require harvesting. Not a few have lost their lives returning home in boisterous weather, and weakened by intoxication.

DIVISION OF COUNTIES.

Michilimackinac County always had a Representative in the State Legislature, and for many years the only one from the upper part of the State. By courtesy all local matters affecting the upper country have been disposed of without opposition, according to the wish of the one or two Representatives from there.

Notwithstanding this fact, when in 1840 the Lower Peninsula was laid off into Counties, the two Counties of Emmet and Cheboygan overlapped and covered Michilimackinac; and for three years it continued in existence, not as an actual County, but as an aggregation of unorganized Counties, possessing temporary municipal authority under that name.

In 1843, when the Upper Peninsula was divided into Counties, Michilimackinac was re-established. But though this Act was drawn up by Wm. N. McLeod, the ablest Representative Mackinac ever had, it was so worded as to bound Michilimackinac "along the margin of the Lake," leaving the entire waters in Emmet and Cheboygan; and though Mackinac was never without a Representative, no proposition was ever made to change this boundary, till a bill for that purpose was introduced into the Legislature of 1853, by Mr. Strang, member from Emmet. It is also unfortunate for the village of Mackinac that the County extends only to the North of the Straits, where the land is generally unfit for settlement, instead of the South, where much of it is of the first quality, and equally contiguous. This was produced by the ignorance and carelessness of the members, who could have had it different by only asking it.

The erection of the County of Michilimackinac left Emmet with but five townships, and Cheboygan but nine, according to the United States surveys. Consequently, when these counties were organized, in 1853, they were doubled up by adding Charlevoix to Emmet, and Wyandot to Cheboygan, and making a slight change in the boundary between Emmet and Cheboygan, by means of which Emmet now consists of twenty-two townships, and Cheboygan of twenty-three, being about an average with the Counties in the best populated parts of the State. This extension of the boundaries of the two Counties has been much complained of at Mackinac, though for what reason it is difficult to imagine, for it does not have the slightest effect on that County. The real complaint, doubtless, is, that these Counties were authorized to organize at all. Mackinac is too much used to being all, and in all; and too little able to bear competition, to be willing to see any other place of business in her vicinity.

The Southern boundary of Michilimackinac leaving the waters of that County within the body of the Counties of Emmet and Cheboygan, is, to say the least, manifestly improper. But the people of Mackinac should be the last to complain of it; for the bill establishing it was drawn up and introduced by their Representative, and since that time no complaint was ever made of it till 1853, when, seeking a pretence to complain of the Legislature for authorizing the organization of three new Counties in their vicinity, they ignorantly charged them with an error committed ten years before. By the same species of blundering the Islands lying between Drummond and Saint Joseph Island, twenty-four in number, and none more than two hundred acres in extent, which, by the Act of 1840, were included in Cheboygan County, were left out of Chippewa when its boundaries were determined in 1843, and remained a part of Cheboygan till the act organizing the township of Drummond, declared them a part of Chippewa.

And Marquette, Huron, Granite, and numerous other small Islands in Lake Superior, were included in Emmet by the Act of 1840. The Act of 1843, laying off the Upper Peninsula into Counties, does not extend to them, and they remained in Emmet. Unless, by remote implication the Constitution of 1850 has taken them out of Emmet, they yet remain a part of it. And if they are not a part of Emmet, then they are not in any County; and it is doubtful whether any Court can take jurisdiction of crimes committed there.

It is not improbable that some most serious difficulty may yet grow out of this blundering Legislation. But the fault lies entirely at the door of the Representatives from the upper country; for the members from below, conscious they could not judge of the local wants of a country so remote, have voted for it such measures as its Representatives introduced.

In 1851 an attempt was made to erect the new County of Grand Traverse, out of the unorganized County of Omeena. John D. Irvine, member from Mackinac, introduced the bill, which was passed; but containing no provision for dividing the County into townships, it was impossible to organize. In 1853 this defect was remedied, and the County enlarged to the original bounds of Omeena. At the same time all the Counties within the Lower Peninsula, formerly attached to Mackinac, were detached, and attached to Grand Traverse, Cheboygan and Saginaw.

CHEBOYGAN COUNTY.

Wyandot and Cheboygan Counties were laid off in 1840, but not organized till 1853, when they were united in one, and organized. At the time of organizing, so much of Cheboygan as was in range four West, was cut off and added to Emmet, for the purpose of making the boundary between them a straight line.

The County seat of Cheboygan is at the village of Duncan, on a beautiful Bay, at the junction of the South channel of the Straits of Michilimackinac with Lake Huron. Here is a large steam saw mill, owned by J. Duncan, Esq., of Chicago, and a good wharf for steamboats. About a mile to the West, at the mouth of Cheboygan River, is another steam mill; and a mile up the River is another, driven by water power, also owned by Mr. Duncan. The mouth of the River makes a secure harbor for small vessels. Along its West bank is a beautiful and flourishing village.—The branches of the Cheboygan, and the various Lakes that outlet through it, furnishes an excellent inland navigation of 150 miles in extent, through the best agricultural soil in the State of Michigan.

The settlement of Cheboygan was begun by Alexander McLeod, who built the water mill in 1847, and now extends in the interior to the centre of the County. But the most desirable locations remain government land. The old Jesuit missions had had a number of villages, with extensive and well cultivated plantations, up the Cheboygan and its branches, and especially on the banks of the Lakes. Some of these are now occupied by Indian villages, others are grown up to forests. But a portion yet remain fields of grass, or covered with small bushes.

These locations are all accessible by boats of thirty or forty tons burthen, which can start from the saw mill, forty rods above where small lake vessels land, or two miles from the steamboat wharf. The River, being from fifteen to sixty rods in width, and very deep, affords one of the best and cheapest navigations in the world.

The soil of the inland sections contains every variety of lime, clay, sand, &c., and is generally overlaid with a rich deep vegetable (Continued on fourth page.)

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, FEB. 2, 1854.

A GENERAL RAIL ROAD LAW.

By the Constitution of 1850 the Legislature cannot grant a charter to a Rail Road Company by special enactment, but are required to pass a general law, for the organization, &c., of Rail Road Companies throughout the State. At the regular session of the present Legislature great efforts were made to pass such a law in some form or other. But the efforts failed.

This failure has been the ground of continual discussion in the newspapers, and Gov. Parsons has been most strenuously urged to call a session the present winter, for the purpose of enacting such a law. Indeed, having had no mail later than about the first of December, we do not know but such a call has been made, and possibly this subject may now be under discussion before that honorable body.

The expression in the newspapers, approving and condemning the action of the Legislature, has been about equally divided: a thing to be expected, for a bill for that purpose passed the House by a small majority, and was defeated in the Senate, not on a direct vote, but by a gross blundering on one side, and a little shrewd management on the other.

But the bitterness of expression of many of the newspapers disappointed in the result, is altogether uncalled for, and unjust. Its effect must be to hinder and defeat the cause they wish to aid. Members who were free from the slightest sympathy with the Central Rail Road Company, have been freely charged with being bought up, body and soul, by that corporation. And those who were willing and anxious to vote for a General Rail Road Law, based upon just principles, but opposed the bill in question, because they believed its provisions unjust and dangerous to the rights of the citizens, have been charged with violating their oaths of office, for no other cause than a conscientious performance of their duties.

There were in existence at the time of the adoption of the Constitution various charters for the construction of Rail Roads, which would have brought some money to their holders, could the passage of a General Rail Road Law be delayed for a few years. And as these charters confine the roads to be built to certain routes, which possibly might not be adopted by Companies under a General Rail Road Law, the people living on those lines were naturally anxious to secure the construction of those roads before a General Rail Road Law was passed.

Besides these small classes, it is doubtful whether there is any party, faction or section in the State opposed to a General Rail Road Law. Even the stockholders in the existing roads would feel more interest in the construction of some new routes, which cannot be constructed without a General Law, than in the slight benefits of an exclusive monopoly.

The opposition to the General Rail Road Bill in the last Legislature was not an opposition to the execution of that provision of the Constitution which requires the passage of a General Rail Road Law, but to the passage of a law violating the faith of the State, and giving to gigantic and powerful companies legal authority to violate and trample on the rights of private citizens.

When the State sold out the Central and Southern Rail Roads to the corporations that now hold them, it guaranteed to the purchasers that no other Rail Roads should be built, or authorized, on certain specified lines, and within certain specified limits. The defeated bill authorized the construction of roads indiscriminately, on all these routes.

The member from this District offered amendments saving the rights of these companies, which were rejected, and instead thereof a proviso adopted which neither saved the pledged faith of the State nor the rights of the companies, nor relieved the State from just obligation to respond in damages to those companies to the amount of some millions of dollars.

Every member who voted for the bill, in fact voted to violate the public faith, and to repudiate contracts, for one of which the State has received a half million of dollars—for a law for the benefit of a handful of speculators, which besides entailing endless litigation on the State would cost her in damages some millions, whenever she became just enough to deal by the rules which she enforces on the citizen.

The Southern Rail Road Company paid little or nothing for the guarantee against competing roads, and having got possession of the competing lines, probably values the guarantee at very little. But the Central Rail Road Company paid a half million dollars for the guarantees in her purchase, and would lose money by relinquishing them at six times that sum, and the passage of the bill would have been outright robbery to that extent; with no better excuse than that, the State pleased to violate her most solemn contracts.

The pretense made by the advocates of the defeated bill, that these guarantees were unconstitutional and void, could hardly be regarded as more than a pretense at best. For if they were violated and set aside for that reason, every principle of honesty would require a return of the money, which was never proposed.

But the legality and constitutionality of those guarantees has since been put to the test of legal ordeal, and the position of the advocates of good faith in our public transactions triumphantly sustained. A perpetual injunction has been granted against the construction of a Rail Road connecting the village of Jackson, on the line of the Central Road, with the south line of the State, on the sole ground that by the guarantees made to the Central Company, no such road can approach within five miles of the main line of the Central Road.

The provisions of the defeated bill were such that private property could be taken under it for the use of the companies, without any public necessity;—which is unconstitutional. And in all the proceedings for seizing the lands of individuals for the use of the companies, the machinery of the law was such as to give the companies every conceivable advantage, and to deny the most ordinary protection to the rights of individuals. Not only could the company choose its forum without the possibility of a change of venue, but the unfortunate individual whose property was seized and taken for the benefit of others, was not allowed an assessment of damages by a jury. The ordinary course of law assures to him who has sold a peck of potatoes, without fixing the price, an assessment of the value by a jury; but by this bill his home might be taken by force, for the benefit of foreign speculators, and he denied an assessment of damages by a jury.

One very singular provision of the bill, of secondary importance in practice, perhaps more than any other, showed how entirely the bill was designed for the benefit of speculators—how utterly the public necessity was overlooked. If the question of the public necessity of a Rail Road in any county is made, no one will deny that the decision of that question is safer in the hands of the Board of Supervisors of that county than a self-constituted body of speculators, who expect to make money by deciding one way, and lose it by deciding the other. Yet the rejected bill made the decision of the Board of Directors absolute, and authorized them to seize the lands of the county, without the consent of the Board of Supervisors. The interest of the company was allowed to override public necessities and individual rights.

Such a bill ought not to have passed. It would have entailed endless misfortunes upon the State. It would have been disgraceful to the age, and a scandal to the Democratic party, which was largely in the ascendancy.

But a General Rail Road Law ought to be passed. The Constitution has imposed that duty on the Legislature. Every member is bound by his oath of office to make a faithful and earnest effort to pass such a law. But this obligation does not extend to require him to vote for an unconstitutional or unjust bill.

The delay in the passage of a General Rail Road Law, growing out of these transactions, is not likely to be attended with any serious evils. There is no road of any public utility which could lawfully be built and would be likely to be built under a General Rail Road Law, but it may be built under some subsisting charter. A year from now another Legislature will assemble. Then, if there is any legitimate interest to be served by the passage of a General Rail Road Law, it will doubtless be satisfied with a just and equitable law. To such a bill a corporal's guard cannot be rallied in opposition.

RAIL ROAD TO THE COPPER REGION.

The most important enterprise for the State of Michigan, at the present time, is the construction of a Rail Road from Detroit to the copper region. The matter has commanded itself to the earnest attention of public spirited and enterprising men for a few years back. The remarkable success which has attended similar undertakings in the new States, has given strength to the various projects for this end.

The most prominent of these projects is that which proposes to run over the Pontiac Rail Road from Detroit to Pontiac. From there to construct a road to the mouth of Marquette River, on the east shore of Lake Michigan. Cross the Lake by steamboat, and construct a road from Manitowoc, in Wisconsin, to Green Bay, and thence through the copper region to some harbor in Lake Superior; with a branch through the iron region, to a point further east on Lake Superior.

In favor of this route it is urged that twenty-five miles of first class road to Pontiac is already built, and provided with depot grounds at Detroit, suitable for the conducting of a heavy business; that the Oakland and Ottawa road, is in the hands of a most enterprising company, who are laying down a first class track over this route, as far as Corunna, near fifty miles further; that the route is very favorable to construction, offering straight lines and horizontal grades at very little expense; that the country along the line is favorable to production, giving assurance of a good local business; and at that point Lake Michigan can be crossed by steamers at least ten months in the year.

These propositions are all indisputable. And if that line can command the through business from Lake Superior to Detroit, it is worthy the attention of capitalists. It has already been pressed upon the consideration of Congress; and the State Legislature at its late session passed joint resolutions in favor of a grant of public lands to aid in its construction.

But there are certain objections to this route, which so far, seem to have been quite overlooked, of such a nature that they will not only deter capitalists from embarking in it, but should induce all who are possessed of any degree of State pride to look for a better route within the State.

By this route passengers and freight coming from Lake Superior, must be transferred to steamboats at Manitowoc, and again from steamboat to cars at the mouth of Marquette River.

It is not necessary to argue that during the summer, with the competition of the Sault canal, which will be completed in 1855, no heavy freight will be sent over this road. And because the Lake freights on heavy articles ever must be considerably less than by any Rail Road which requires two transshipments in its route, that business would be done during the summer by boats passing the Sault canal.

The business of the road then would be carrying passengers, mails and such light freight as is usually carried by express companies. To determine whether this route can command that business, we will suppose it completed and a daily train coming down from Lake Superior.

We must also suppose at the same time the Lake Shore Road completed from Chicago to Manitowoc, and the Rock River Valley Road from its connection with the Illinois Roads to Green Bay.

When the train arrives at Green Bay. Every man who is in quest of pork, flour, corn, &c., takes the Rock River Road and makes his purchases in Wisconsin or Illinois, instead of Michigan. You have built a road to your neighbors farm and mill, instead of yours. You give your competitor, Rock River Valley, the advantage over your Grand River Valley by 150 miles in distance, and the saving of two transshipments, and eighty miles Lake navigation.

The train arrives at Manitowoc. To Chicago it is 150 miles by Rail Road, and he makes it in five hours. To go to Detroit he must cross the Lake, eighty miles, taking six hours, an hour for each transshipment are eight, and 295 miles by Rail Road, taking 7 1-2 hours more, are 15 1-2; ten hours and a half difference, and avoiding Lake navigation in favor of Chicago over Detroit. This difference would bring Detroit passengers around by Chicago. So you have built a road to your neighbor's store, instead of your own.

Travelers and men of business bound to all parts east and south-east, unless they had business to the north of Lake Erie, would also, when arrived at Manitowoc, keep the Lake shore road to Chicago, and thence some of the numerous roads diverging from them in every direction, avoiding this State altogether. So in every sense the road would divert business from the State, instead of encouraging business within it.

That part of the road east of Lake Michigan would be a mere local road, a branch of the Pontiac and Oakland and Ottawa; and as such would do a respectable business, when a country now inhabited only by muskrats, and occasionally visited by stray trappers, is filled with inhabitants. But it would have no practical connection with that part of the road west of Lake Michigan.

Steam navigation is practicable on Lake Michigan during ten months of the year, and when the winters are favorable, with slight interruptions, the entire year. But in any part of the Lake this navigation is disagreeable to passengers, and expensive for freight for six months, so much so that it cannot compete with even a circuitous Rail Road route, which makes nearly the same time. Rail Road speed is regularly pushed up to twice and three times steamboat time. So that a very circuitous Rail Road may make better time than a direct steamboat route.

But when the weather is boisterous, passengers coming from the north, even to the interior of the Lower Peninsula, would keep the Rail Road round to Chicago, rather than wait at Manitowoc for better weather, or encounter the perils and discomfort of Lake navigation. And passengers bound to the mineral region, would not start by this road, except in very fine summer weather, lest they might be detained by bad weather a few hours, and thus be behind the time of those that take the circuitous route around the head of Lake Michigan.

Another objection to this route, of some slight moment, is that it requires two terminations, one for the copper region, and the other for the iron country: doubling the entire rolling equipment, and the expense of running, at that end of the route, without any equivalent.

Another route which has commanded a share of the public attention, second only to the above, is that from Pontiac by way of Saginaw and the Straits of Michilimackinac, through the Iron and Copper regions to Lake Superior.

This route is equally favorable to construction, little if any inferior in the country it passes through, further removed from general competition, and absolutely secured against being tapped, and carrying its trade and business to our rivals, at our expense.

It possesses a material advantage, in intersecting, centrally, both the Iron and Copper country, by a single line; by which one half the expense of construction and rolling stock, and of running on that end of the line is saved, and the vexations and delays, attendant on making connections avoided.

This route is a trifle shorter than that by Manitowoc. As it avoids the delays of eighty miles Lake navigation, by a four mile ferry from Old Michilimackinac to Saint Ignace, it must make decidedly the better running time. It would be essentially a Michigan road, and no road out of the State could ever compete successfully for its business, if a single difficulty could be avoided.

This difficulty is the passage of the Straits of Michilimackinac in the winter. The Straits are so obstructed by ice as to render steamboating an impossibility, on an average four months every year. The most favorable seasons the obstruction is not less than three months, and it is extended to above five.

Yet but a small portion of this time are the Straits passable on the ice. The currents are so strong as to constantly waste the ice. While it is piled in mountain masses on the shores and shoals, the deep channels are either open, or covered only by thin and rotten ice. Even the mail train, consisting of men and dogs only, has remained encamped on the shore in sight of Mackinac, for three weeks, unable to cross, either in a boat or on the ice.

No contrivance for removing the ice and keeping open a passage would be of the least value. The obstructing ice is frequently piled up from the bottom, in solid masses, fifty feet high; and if set in motion by the currents, would crush a steamboat like an egg shell.

The only remedy for this evil, is a bridge over the Straits; an undertaking nearly equal to that of the construction of the road itself.—There is no difficulty whatever in the way of the construction of a bridge over the Straits, except that of expense; but the cost of a durable structure would be little if any less than $3,000,000.

Without it, this would be but a summer road; and the wants of the mineral region in winter would force the opening of some other channel, before the settlement of the country would give the road a good way business. No plan for the opening of a road on this route is, therefore, worthy of attention, unless it provides for bridging the Straits.

A third project was set on foot last summer, by an Ohio company, called the Cincinnati and Mackinac Rail Road Company, who propose to take the line of one of the numerous roads radiating from Cincinnati, as far as Greenville; thence to construct a road on nearly an air line, through the western tier of counties of Ohio, and through Hillsdale, Jackson and Lansing, Mich., to the Straits, and thence to be continued by the preceding route to Lake Superior.

This project is subject to the same objection as the last, and the further objection that its southern termination is out of the State, and obviously contrived to transfer our legitimate trade to Cincinnati. And if these objections should not prevail, still the road cannot be built, crossing the tracks of the Central and Southern roads, and extending as it does across the south line of the State, without the consent of those corporations; a consent which they can never be expected to give.

It is doubtful whether the project is serious. Cincinnati is ninety miles nearer Ontonagon by way of Chicago than by the Straits, and avoids the obstruction of the Straits, and the expense of bridging.

By the Chicago route there is not more than one third as much wilderness and unsettled country to go through; and less than one fifth as much road to be yet provided for, in order to effect the connection.

Against this the only advantage promised by the Mackinac route, is the Mackinac and Sault Ste Mary's passenger and fish transportation business. This passenger business would not amount to one passenger a day.—Any one may judge the amount of fish transportation, when we add that there are seldom 5,000 barrels of fish wintered at both places, and that the fishing in the winter is less than the home consumption. And the opening of a constant outlet would not materially change these facts. The difficulties in the way of winter fishing are too great to be overcome. It will never be resorted to in this region, except by barbarians, reduced to starvation, and gentlemen of leisure, who for an adventure will work of an occasional fine day, six or eight hours, for what fish a shilling would purchase.

Lumber, which the country immediately south of the Straits would supply in abundance, can be furnished cheaper from the interior counties, on the same route, two hundred miles further south. There are no other articles which Cincinnati looks for in this direction.

The object of Cincinnati in this move, is, doubtless, to get a direct communication with the Grand River Valley, for the purpose of competing with Detroit in the trade in groceries and southern productions generally; articles which she can furnish at a very small figure below the Detroit rates, but still sufficient, with a good line of transportation, to give her a monopoly of the trade.

So far as the people of Michigan are concerned, this object will be attained by extending the Cincinnati and Perryburg road to Detroit; but this would leave the trade between wholesalers and retailers at Detroit. To transfer that branch of the business to a rival city in a neighboring State, is the sole object of this magnificent project. The promise of a road to the Straits and beyond them is but a blend to the real purpose, and designed to secure northern aid in the effort to procure the right of way through the southern counties.

Among these three projects the only one which commends itself to the interest of Michigan as a whole, is that of a road by way of Saginaw and the Straits to the copper region; a project not to be thought of, unless the Straits are to be bridged.

There is, however, another route, so far as we know, never spoken of, which secures to the State the advantages of the improvement: avoids the difficulties at the Straits, and is more direct, and possesses more local advantages than either of the other routes.

From Pontiac, through Flint and Saginaw, to Lake Michigan, midway between Grand and Little Traverse Bays, is a route admitting the construction of an air line road of the first class, at the lowest cost. No road ever constructed in the country presents more favorable grades for the same distance. The country on both sides for a great distance is of the finest quality, and from the beginning would send forward a large amount of freight.

The termination on Lake Michigan would be at a Bay (into which Pine River discharges itself) always affording safe anchorage, sheltered from all winds but the north, and but slightly exposed in that direction, and never closed by ice. From there across to the north shore, at Seul Choix, or the mouth of Manistique River, the navigation of the Lake is never obstructed by the ice, and a good harbor is obtained for the boats at that end of the steamboat route.

Notwithstanding its higher latitude, this route is more favorable to winter navigation than that from Marquette River (Noui-pe-kago) to Manitowoc. For the mouths of Marquette and Manitowoc Rivers close with ice; there are no outside harbors, and the steamboats in winter would be obliged to lie at anchor, exposed to every storm, and loading with ice.

But on this northern route the outside harbors are sheltered, so as to afford great security to vessels; and the streams entering them are large and rapid, and closed with ice but a short time.

Grand and Little Traverse Bays, and the Islands along the route, are within a few minutes steaming of the track of the boats, and some one of them could be reached, and thus secure the most ample protection in any storm, no matter how sudden and severe. The water is so exceedingly deep on this route, that the winter does not suffice to make it cold. In the month of February large fields of ice, blowing up from the Straits by continued north winds, melt and disappear before they reach the Fox Islands.

Passengers by this route might occasionally be detained one day waiting for a winter storm to blow out. But with stanch boats this would be of rare occurrence, and going off on some rival route would be out of the question. The distance across the Lake would be less than at Manitowoc by 18 miles; saving one hour and a half.

From the mouth of Manistique River the route would be nearly an air line, through both the iron and copper region to Lake Superior, at or in the vicinity of Ontonagon, a line of country abounding more in natural wealth than any other section of the Upper Peninsula.

The advantages of this route are, that it is entirely within the State, and therefore subject to legitimate Legislative control, and protection; that it is no where liable to be tapped, and its business transferred to competing routes, carrying our legitimate trade to rival cities; that it can be used the entire year, and avoids the difficulty at the Straits; that it will command a good way business; and is the shortest as well as the best route from the copper region to Detroit, and all places to the east.

The difference in distance in favor of this route over that by Manitowoc is twenty-four miles of Rail Road, and eighteen miles by steamboat, equal to two hours and a half in time. But the saving in construction, rolling stock and daily expense in running is still greater, because it avoids the necessity of two distinct roads at the northern termination.—And all these advantages are gained without loss or expense.

There is a local advantage of no small moment, and yet quite worthy the attention of statesmen, to be gained by adopting this route. The iron region is between Lake Superior and Lake Michigan, somewhat nearest the former. The iron has to be carried by a short Rail Road to Lake Superior, where it is shipped to the Sault, carried around the rapids, and shipped again to the ports below. The completion of the Sault Canal will save this portage, and two transshipments.

But the navigation of Lake Superior and of Saint Mary's River, close a full month earlier than Lake Huron and the Straits; and that of Lake Michigan can scarcely be said to close at all.

Now, by this route as soon as navigation closes on Lake Superior, the iron can be sent to Lake Michigan, at a very slight additional charge, and there shipped to market, and the avails realized immediately, instead of remaining on hand for months as so much dead capital.

As it is now, iron manufacturers can only send forward their productions and get immediate returns for about four months in the year. Increase that term to ten months, and the capital now invested would employ twice as many laborers, and increase the dividends by a still greater ratio. The operation of this fact would fill the iron region with forges and furnaces, and change it from a wilderness to clustering villages, teeming with industrious population, digging wealth from the bowels of the earth.

No other route in the State can develop and combine so many important interests, both local and general, as this. And no other is so essentially a State work, benefitting every part, by giving prosperity to the whole.

SHAMEFUL

Last November the schooner "Sovereign of the Seas" was wrecked on Isle le Galet. An insurance agent (we have forgotten his name) came to Saint James to get assistance in saving part of her cargo. Here he chartered the schooner Seaman, belonging to Mr. Strang, but in charge of another person, to assist him through the job, at eight dollars a day. The evening of the same day the Seaman landed him at Isle le Galet, where he learned that a number of men and two vessels from Mackinac were engaged in removing the cargo. These all, with sailors and light house keeper, engaged in a tirade of the most unmitigated abuse of the Mormons. The insurance agent immediately discharged the Seaman, paying her but for one days service, and leaving her to return in her own time.

On his return to Milwaukee he called at Saint James, and went aboard the Seaman and took off about three fathoms of rope, alleging that it had been stolen from the "Sovereign of the Seas."—Mr. Strang learned of it, and requested him to return his rope, or take off the balance of the stock he had on hand, including a long line from which that piece had been cut, and which he had had in use some two years. There was a laughable scene of backing and filling on the subject, but Mr. Strang insisted that if any part of his stock of rigging, &c., was taken, the lot must go. The insurance agent brought the rope back, and put it where he got it.

Among the sailors who went aboard the Seaman, either with the insurance agent or a little previous, when his Mackinac vessels were in this harbor, some one left a marlinespike unlike the one in use there, and when they took the rope they carried off this marlinespike with them, and in the result tried to get Mr. Strang to claim it, but could not. Still, when they brought back the rope, they brought and left the marlinespike with it. The rope was of the same kind as some used on the Sovereign of the Seas, and probably the insurance agent was hoaxed. But there is not the slightest doubt that the sailors from Mackinac contrived to steal ad libitum, and charge it to the Mormons. The marlinespike was carried on the Seaman to give strength to the charge. And but for the fact that the Seaman was laying along side of the wharf in the most public place, without the slightest appearance of concealment, the attempt might have been partially successful.

THE MERIDIAN ROAD.

It will be remembered by many of our readers, that three years ago a road was laid out through Beaver Island upon a straight line from St. James to Galilee, but presenting most extraordinary difficulties in the way of construction, though when done making the most important business route on the Island.

Until the present winter but little progress was made in opening this road. Many had become discouraged with the undertaking, and some very enterprising men have expressed the opinion that the road could not be made. Last winter, to avoid the difficulties of this route, a road was made from Troy by way of Big Sand Bay to Galilee. This route was opened at small expense, but is much longer, and can never be a good road, winter or summer.

During the month of January the meridian road has been opened, and made a good winter road from Saint James to Galilee.—Though it will require much more work to make a first rate summer road, it is now so far advanced that it will continue in such situation as to be useful until it is finally well worked. The effect of the improvement, besides facilitating intercourse between the extremities of the Island, is to bring into use a large tract of excellent land.

Too much praise cannot be awarded to those who have helped this important undertaking through every discouragement to completion.

A QUESTION FOR ASTRONOMERS.

The present doctrine of all astronomers is, that the sun is the centre of the solar system, around which planets, asteroids and comets revolve. Also that fixed stars are suns to other planetary systems, having no motion corresponding with this planetary motion round the sun, and no determined or ascertained motion.

The earth is supposed to revolve round the sun once a year, at the distance of about ninety-five million of miles from it.—When the earth has made half of this annual revolution, it is therefore one hundred and ninety million of miles from where it was six months before.

Now the north pole of the earth points constantly to a point near the north star, and the south pole as constantly to a point near the south star, and consequently, the line from these two points is a straight line coincident with and a continuation of the axis of the earth.

Therefore, either the earth does not revolve around the sun, once a year, or the two pole stars also revolve around the axis of the sun, in similar and very nearly coincident orbits. And as the pole stars have constantly the same relation to the fixed stars, it would follow that all the fixed stars had an annual motion around the sun coincident with the annual revolution of the earth.

But this would make the sun the common centre of the whole starry system, and the most distant fixed stars as much the satellites of the sun as the moon is a satellite of the earth.

"There is no new thing under the sun."—SOLOMON.

Several expeditions have been fitted out during the present century to find the mouth of the Niger. The most powerful governments have thought them worthy their patronage. Bounties and medals have been offered and awarded to discoverers, by princes and learned societies. And the discovery that the Niger flows into the Gulf of Guinea, was a few years ago paraded as the greatest geographical discovery of the nineteenth century.

The following note from Raynal's East and West Indies proves that this fact was as well known and understood during the last century as now:—

"The French settled at Senegal, had long heard of the mines of Bambuck, without giving much credit to what was reported. So soon, however, as the certainty of their existence was established, they were desirous to obtain the possession of them; but, by the loss of the colony, this ambition was transferred to their conquerors. England was wholly taken up in finding out the means to appropriate these immense treasures, though the way to get at them, by the Niger, was more than three hundred leagues. If we are to give credit to the testimony of a modern traveler, the possessions of Goren are still nearer to this conquest, by the river Salum, which has always been neglected, for reasons too long to be explained at present, though it has lately been found capable of admitting vessels of three hundred tons. Besides being shorter, by the one half, this road is also easier than the other. The getting up the Niger, is attended with danger; the navigation is impracticable, except in the time of floods; and part of the voyage must be made by land, by reason of the rocks that obstruct the course of the river. Three months are hardly sufficient to surmount these difficulties; and, in one month, we may arrive there by the Salum, which presents none of these inconveniences. These two rivers lead equally, the above obstructions excepted, to Galam, Tombut and Bambarra, abounding less in gold than Bambuck, but notwithstanding very rich."—Raynal's E. and W. Indies, Edinburgh, 1782, Vol. 4, p. 28, note.

(Continued from second page.)

mold. It is naturally inexhaustible, and much of it easily cleared and cultivated. Along Lake Huron it is poor and swampy.

The prevailing timber is white pine, white and black oak, sugar maple, beech, elm, lynn, ash, &c. Norway pine, spruce, fir, hemlock, black ash, ironwood and numerous other varieties are found. The pine is not found in extensive forests, but in small groves, or scattered among hard timber in the proportion of eight or ten trees to the acre. Beech, maple and oak are found in vast forests, on very level plains, elevated twenty to fifty feet above the streams. The various evergreens, except pine, grow in swampy land, and along the slope banks of the streams.

Lumbering has heretofore been the principal business of Cheboygan County. But the village of Duncan must soon be the principal place of trade on the Straits of Michilimackinac. Situated on the South Channel, steamboats plying between the upper and lower cities of the Lakes save several miles by stopping at Duncan instead of Mackinac. Being on the main land, the business of the country can reach it easier and with less expense. It can furnish wood to the steamboats at the lowest prices, and Mackinac cannot at all.

Cheboygan County, which must do all its trade there, is without doubt the very best County for agriculture in the State; and its fisheries are considerable. The day is not distant when goods and passengers destined for Mackinac will be landed from steamboats on the wharfs at Duncan, and reshipped on the small sail vessels employed on the fisheries. Many of the first settlers of Cheboygan were not of the best class. They partake too much of the characteristics of Mackinac. But they are of the more industrious class from that place, and circumstances favor their improvement. There is a good prospect of a regular and considerable emigration of the most industrious classes from the eastern and middle States, of a decrease of drinking and dissipation, and a real and substantial improvement in society. Few if any of the Counties of the State ever began with brighter prospects than Cheboygan.

GRAND TRAVERSE COUNTY.

The country around Grand Traverse Bay has for several centuries been a favorite residence of the Indians. The supply of game was always good, and of fish abundant. The climate is very mild for the latitude, and the soil productive.

At an early period the Jesuite missions made considerable progress there. Both the apple and peach planted by them are now found growing wild, and are flourishing. The fruit, though inferior in quality to the cultivated, is, nevertheless, of considerable value. Since the Indians of Michigan have generally emigrated beyond the Mississippi, an effort has been made to concentrate those who remain around Grand Traverse, and improve their condition. This attempt has entirely failed, as it ever must, while the execution of it is entrusted to persons feeling no particular interest in the fate of the Indians, and receiving office as the reward of political services.

At the present time there are a number of small Indian villages around Grand Traverse, engaged part of the year in agriculture and part in hunting. Their number is not increasing. Pulmonary diseases are very common and fatal. At different villages are stationed school teachers, farmers and mechanics, appointed by the Government of the United States, to instruct the Indians.

As often as a new administration comes in, these appointments are changed. For twenty years past most of the incumbents have come so much attached to the country as to remain there on going out of office. Some few years since the then unorganized Counties of Leelanau, Omeena and Antrim were organized as a township of the County of Michilimackinac, by the name of Omeena.

About this time two saw mills were built, and the business of manufacturing lumber for Chicago market commenced. This gave a little impetus to settlement. In 1851 Messrs. Hannah, Lay & Co., of Chicago, erected a large steam mill at the West head of Grand Traverse Bay. The same year an Act was passed erecting the County of Grand Traverse, out of a portion of the territory of the unorganized County of Omeena. The balance of Omeena, Leelanau and Antrim remained the township of Omeena; but no provision was contained in the Act for organizing a township, choosing inspectors of election, levying taxes, or forming jury lists. It was, therefore, impossible to organize the County, and it remained destitute of legal government or judicial authority till 1853.

Many of the outlaws who had been engaged in the unsuccessful attempt to expel the Mormons from Beaver Island, resorted to Grand Traverse, and for a time lawlessness and violence run riot, except at the mills, where the influence of the proprietors answered instead of law. A gang of these villains, located just within the Bay, and ostensibly engaged in fishing, made frequent trips to the head of Beaver, where, loading their boats with such plunder as they could seize upon, they went on with the same wind to some uninhabited Island and waited a fair wind to return.

Occasionally their trips were extended to the fisheries off Pointe Seul Choix, and they returned to Hog and Hat Islands for concealment. These excursions were made in the night, laying by at uninhabited places through the day; and as their depredations were committed in the neighborhood of the Mormon settlements, and the usual prejudices against the Mormons were greatly aggravated by the late events, they generally succeeded in charging their crimes to them.

Old settlers in the country understood the matter; but they were interested in increasing the prejudice against the Mormons. New comers, traders and fishers, and the people generally throughout the United States were willingly deceived, and gladly, without evidence, believed the Mormons the guilty parties, though at that time they were destitute of the necessary boats for any such undertakings, and were in extreme want of quiet, and to the last degree anxious to avoid further excitement.

At the same time the settlements near the head of the Bay were receiving accessions of some industrious and enterprising emigrants. In 1853 an Act passed the Legislature extending the boundary so as to make it coincident with the original unorganized County of Omeena, dividing it into townships, attaching the contiguous unorganized Counties, and providing for a full legal organization.

The first visible effect of this Act is ridding the place of a few of its most undesirable inhabitants, and a great increase of a better class of emigrants. Improvements are rapidly progressing, and both agriculture and the manufacture of lumber are being carried on with success.

The pineries around Grand Traverse are extensive. There is also considerable white oak of an excellent quality. About half the land, distributed in tracts of considerable extent, is of an excellent quality for agriculture. The rest is pine plains and cedar swamps. These are covered with valuable timber, which will not be exhausted in many years. As the timber disappears, this land will also be found susceptible of a high state of cultivation.

Grand Traverse is the most beautiful Bay in Michigan, and little excelled in mild chaste beauty anywhere. Its shores are bold, and there is considerable high land around it. It is sprinkled with Islands, and its shores notched with Bays, and Harbors. Indeed, all Grand Traverse answers the purpose of a harbor. The Bay is rarely obstructed with ice. Except in very severe winters, no ice forms there.

A road has been opened from the County Seat, at the West head of the Bay to the Muskegon River, and by this route all the towns from Grand Traverse to Lake Superior are supplied with mails during the winter. Any road hereafter made from the lower part of the State to the Straits of Michilimackinac, is sure to take Grand Traverse in its route.

Grand Traverse is getting a good emigration by water. But a strong tide of emigration is now settling to the North from Grand Rapids, which will soon fill Grand Traverse County with settlers. Steamboats begin to enter the Bay occasionally, and a very little addition to its business will call them in regularly. These facilities of communication will make settlement easy and desirable.

EMMET COUNTY.

In 1810 the County of Tonawaga was laid off, consisting of that part of the State North of township thirty-six North, and West of range four West, and the County of Kishkoko, consisting of that part of the State between Tonawaga on the North, and township thirty-two on the South, and West of range three West.

In 1843 these names were changed to Emmet and Charlevoix; and Delta and Michilimackinac were cut off on the North, leaving their Northern boundary along the Northern margin of Green Bay and Lake Mich'n. These Counties, remained unorganized and attached to Michilimackinac till 1853.

In 1847 the Beaver Islands were erected into a township, by the name of Peaine. In the course of that year three meetings were held to elect township officers, but did not succeed in effecting a regular organization.

At the time this Act was passed there were three white families temporarily settled in the township, as well as four or five white men with Indian wives, and several French half-breeds; and twenty or thirty single men, and men who had families elsewhere, were spending the winter at Beaver.

But township organization was not sought by them. It was granted at the instance of Col. Fisk, of Rochester, N. Y., who had commenced a fishing establishment on a large scale, and, with his associates, had invested ten thousand dollars in improvements and outfit, at the harbor of Beaver Island.

These men succeeded in monopolizing all the office, though they neglected to attend to the public business till 1850, when the Mormons elected a majority of the officers, and in 1851 they elected all the officers, and have since continued to do so.

In 1853 the Counties of Emmet and Charlevoix were united in one, and organized under the name of Emmet. So much of Cheboygan County as lay in range four West, was included in the new County, and also Grand Traverse Bay, part of Lake Michigan, and some small Islands not before included in any County.

It was understood by every member of the Legislature when the Act was passed for the organization of this County, that nearly its entire population were Mormons; and that the legal administration of all its affairs would be in their hands. It was equally understood that they intended to emigrate to and settle the County, with a view to permanently occupy and control it.

Mr. Strang, the Mormon prophet and leader, was a member of the House, and introduced and advocated the bill, and so far did his presence and personal acquaintance with him serve to allay prejudice, that the Act passed by a vote almost unanimous. Seven votes only were recorded against it in the House.

The County was divided into three townships. Its organization was perfected in May. All its affairs have been conducted in strict accordance with the law, and for order and regularity it is an example worthy the imitation of most of the old Counties.

INDIAN POPULATION OF EMMET.

There are in Emmet five Indian villages.—Garden Island, Cross Village, Middle Village, Le Arbor Croche, and Bear Village, containing in all a population of about two thousand.

The Garden Island Indians formerly resided on the North end of Beaver Island, and have removed to Garden within six years. A majority of the males and many of the females can read, and some of them write in their own language. Very few, none but the children, speak English. They are skillful fishermen, and pay some attention to agriculture and the mechanic arts. A few years ago they were excessively dissipated; but now, owing to the suppression of the liquor trade, are sober and industrious. They are in better circumstances than any other band in the State.

A Roman Catholic Priest visits them once a year. They have a church, and are very devout. In the absence of the Priest, one of the head men reads service. A few, however, remain Pagans.

Cross Village lies on the top of a high bluff, at the bottom of the broad Bay South of Point Waquo-shance. A Roman Catholic Priest resides there, who receives his support from the United States, under the character of a school teacher. The Indians at Cross Village are considerable farmers, and keep many horses and some cattle. They are respectable workmen at house building, boat building and coopering, and have a saw mill. Changing frequently from well constructed houses to the hunter's camp, pulmonary diseases prevail.

Middle Village is on the bluff back of Isle le Galet (Skillagalee) light house, and is much such a place as Cross Village.

Near the head of Little Traverse, and upon a splendid harbor that makes up in the North side of the Bay, is Le Arbor Croche, the best located and most thriving of all the Indian towns in the State. All the Indians in the County have lands, which they have purchased of the United States. But these are the most extensive proprietors. They raise considerable quantities of corn and potatoes for sale, and, besides the business and employments common among the Indians, have a well built vessel of thirty or forty tons burthen, constructed, owned and navigated by themselves.

Bear Village is on the South side of Little Traverse, and is an out station of Le Arbor Croche. Its agriculture is considerable. All these villages are engaged in fishing a part of the year. The fisheries along the East shore are not very productive. Some seasons they come from there to Beaver, to the number of one hundred boats. Many of the streams and inland lakes furnish considerable quantities for domestic use, and during the winter more or less are taken through the ice.

MORMON SETTLEMENT IN EMMET.

Mr. Strang, the leader of the Mormons at Voree, in Wisconsin, fixed on the Islands in Lake Michigan as a place for a Mormon community in 1846. The 11th May, 1847, he, accompanied by four others, Gordon Brown, Nathan Wagner, R. Frederick Mills, and Wm. Savage, arrived at Beaver Island to explore it, and prepare for settlement. It is worthy of remark, that they were so destitute of means for the undertaking that they were obliged to sell their blankets to pay their passage on the little hooker that landed them there, and went ashore with less than two days provision, and not one cent of money.

Alva Cable had a trading house on Whiskey Point, and the Rochester North West Company, of which Col. Fisk was President, had one on the back side of the Harbor. They were not well received at these houses, and went into the woods and made a camp of hemlock boughs, and commenced a thorough exploration of the Island, living principally on leeks and beechnuts.

This perseverance, where men who would work at all were obtained with difficulty, soon got them employment—a stock of provisions, and the use of a boat. After making a most thorough exploration of the group and building a cabin, Strang, Savage, and Wagner, returned to Voree. Brown and Mills remained, and are the first Mormons settled on Beaver Island.

In the course of that summer several families moved to the Island, but became dissatisfied with the prospects and left. At the setting in of winter the Mormon population consisted of five men and their families, in all eighteen persons. A few persons left for the winter, intending to return in the spring.—The following winter the Mormon population had increased to sixty-two persons, of whom seventeen were men.

The lands were brought into market in 1848. At the land sale was the first positive demonstration of an intention by the other inhabitants to dispossess the Mormons. They got notice of the land sale first. It being the season of fishing, they were quite numerous.—

Each one marked his claim on the best quarter section he could find. After this they proposed that every claim, whether occupied or not, should be respected at the sale, and no one buy another's claim, whether the claimant was able to enter it or not. This was agreed to by all, when it was ascertained by the Mormons that all the most desirable locations were covered by claims, many of them merely fictitious, which, under the circumstances, they were not at liberty to disregard.

Very little land was entered at the sale, few being able to spare the money, and all satisfied that this arrangement would be faithfully regarded. But Thomas and Samuel Bennett entered three lots of fine land, on which several Mormons had made valuable improvements, and built houses. They were without remedy, and gave up the land with the improvements, and without harvesting the crops.—The Mormons only got one small lot at the Harbor, by buying out a claim; when, by doing as they were done by, they might with five hundred dollars have purchased property worth as many thousand.

There was another robbery of this kind, equally scandalous. Randolph Densmore and E. J. Moore, the resident agents of the North West Company, of Rochester, divided the possessions of the Company between themselves, and entered them in their own names, by which the stockholders residing at Rochester were defrauded of their improvements, worth at the time not less than ten thousand dollars. This broke up the Company, and the same men being in possession of considerable amounts of personal property belonging to the stockholders, also converted that to their own use.

The shares in this Company were but twenty-five dollars, and, at that distance from the scene of action, the facts were not within reach of the injured parties, and they submitted to the loss rather than go to law. This having occurred at Beaver Island, rendered famous by the numerous outrages charged to the Mormons, it has in some way been attributed to them in the public mind, though done by violent enemies of theirs. Moore afterwards joined the Mormons, but was a mere hypocrite, hoping to make money out of them; and directly turned against them, as in the beginning.

During the summer of 1849 the Mormon emigration to Beaver Island was considerable. Until then they had only engaged in such labor as they could find to do for traders and others around the Harbor. But at that time they commenced making a road through the swamp into the interior of the Island, where the land is adapted to agriculture, and several families settled in the interior. A steam saw mill was also commenced, and a small schooner built. Three companies of emigrants came from Voree, amounting in all to about one hundred persons.

This season the Captains of steam boats were found generally using their influence in opposition to the settlement. Emigrants ticketed for Beaver, were persuaded by every imaginable species of misrepresentation to go by into Wisconsin. When persuasion failed, they frequently refused to stop in pursuance of their contracts, and carried them by without their consent. Fifty-four emigrants from Otsego County, New York, took passage on the Steamer Empire State, on a special contract, to be landed at Beaver. The boat passed Beaver Harbor in the day time, running along close to the Island, with very fine weather, but refused to land.

Some of these boats had contracted for their wood at the Manitou Islands, and wished to avoid making two stops. But those which stopped at Beaver, were still more unjust to their passengers. They were undoubtedly acting at the instigation of the traders and fishermen, in the effort to defeat the settlement of the Mormons at Beaver. Their conduct can be accounted for in no other way. During that one season more than one hundred persons, who started for Beaver, were, by such means, either persuaded or compelled to land at some other place. The same practice has been resorted to subsequent years, but with less success.

A Conference was held at Saint James in 1849, at which most of the leading members were present, and a considerable delegation from many of the distant churches, the effect of which was a more favorable impression of the place, and confidence in its prospects.—Twelve Elders went on various Missions, with directions to return in the spring with their converts to Beaver.

The large emigration of this year was mostly of persons of the poorer class. As winter approached, some apprehension was felt, lest they should be unable to lay in a supply of provisions. The traders were A. Cable, and three associates, and Densmore and Ward, at the Harbor, and J. Cable at the head of the Island. Late in the fall they announced that they should sell no provisions to the Mormons the following winter, and advised those who had not a supply to remove. Samuel Graham, a Mormon, supposed to be possessed of considerable means, undertook to make up the deficiency, and take his pay in erecting buildings and cutting steamboat wood. Many families who had not a supply for one month, remained on this undertaking. But not one ounce came.

Fortunately, Samuel Shaw went to Chicago and engaged a cargo of timber to a lumber firm, and got them to send a vessel to winter in the Harbor, with provisions to pay for the timber as fast as it was made. This made a sufficient supply; and the same traders immediately offered to sell large amounts to the Mormons, at low prices, and so sharply did they press the competition, that Mr. Shaw found it difficult to make out his cargo.

In 1849 the Mormons commenced building a house of worship, since known as the Tabernacle. During the winter of 1849 '50, while several men were engaged in getting out timber for this building, a large company of men came from Whiskey Point and drove them from their work. One of the Mormons, Spaulding Lewis, who refused to quit work, was severely beaten.

During the same winter a debating school was instituted by the Mormons, but others came in, and by rude and filthy conduct, sometimes accompanied with threats of violence, broke it up. At a social party, new years, a large number came in uninvited, but promising to conduct with propriety, but before leaving they beat two of the Mormons, pretending to no other reason than that they were "Damned Mormons."

A mail came in, in the course of the winter, and when the Mormons called for their letters, they received every manner of insult. Some were struck, and some had letters taken from them before they left the office. Fishermen, pretending to be drunk, went to the houses of the Mormons when the men were absent, and exposed their persons in a beastly manner, accompanied with vile language and threats of violence.

Mr. Strang had left a cow on the Island for the use of a poor woman, afflicted with palsy. A fisherman of the name of Frazier, wintering on the Island, drove her off and sold her to another fisherman, named Patrick Sullivan, who, knowing the circumstances, said he "would kill any damned Mormon who came for her."

The effect of all these aggressions was a decided animosity between the Mormons and their neighbors. The distinction of Mormon and Gentile came into use, and a line of distinction in society became visible and broad. However the Mormons neither resisted nor retaliated. Until the spring of 1850 they adhered strictly to the rule of non-resistance to violence, and a patient endurance of whatever injuries and persecutions were inflicted upon them.

The spring of 1850 brought a large emigration of Mormons to Beaver. The various missionaries returned, generally accompanied with a goodly number of followers. A large company came down from Voree, and the leading men of the church removed with their families, intending to make Saint James the permanent head quarters of the church.

These emigrants generally had to land at Whiskey Point, then in possession of Peter McKinley, successor to Alva Cable. They were frequently met with threats on the boat's deck, and always on the wharf. A dozen men would generally surround a family of emigrants and order them back on the boat, telling them that they were preparing to drive off and kill all the Mormons, and had combined to prevent any more landing. There was a wharf on the West side of the Harbor, where boats might have landed the emigrants in the vicinity of the Mormon settlements, but most of them refused to do so. These demonstrations were the means of keeping away many emigrants, notwithstanding which they increased to between six and seven hundred.

At this time there was a marked change in the policy of the Mormons. They publicly announced that they should submit to injury and aggression no longer—that they would return blow for blow and stroke for stroke, and would punish every man who insulted or intruded upon them.

On different occasions fishermen and sailors went to their meetings for the avowed purpose of interrupting them in the course of worship. All these attempts were suppressed with a strong hand. Guards attended all the meetings. When strangers came in they were seated, so as to disperse them through the congregation. As the guard walked up and down the aisles, with heavy canes, the first show of disturbance was the signal for dragging out the guilty party, without waiting for parley or apology. Not a word was heard in extenuation. If any associate rose to aid or even speak for his companion in mischief, it was, but the signal to drag him out. Two or three exhibitions of this resolution put an end to this mode of disturbing meetings. But as the Mormons began at this time to keep Saturday as the Sabbath, the gentle teamsters generally found some opportunity to work their oxen that one day of the week hauling past the place of meeting. For this annoyance there was no legal remedy, and the Mormons were compelled to submit.

Mr. Strang went for his cow, and the Irish fishermen in Sullivan's neighborhood gathered with shalals to beat him and rescue the cow. They were met by an equal number of Mormons, standing in the edge of the woods ready for an encounter, and desisted. He drove the cow home, and Patrick Sullivan went to Mackinac to prosecute him before Justice O'Malley. But at that time O'Malley was a candidate for the office of Member of the Convention to revise the Constitution, to which he had no hope of being elected without the votes of the Mormons, and he sent Sullivan home without any process.

(To be continued.)

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 3.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 50.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 50 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise large quantities. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

BEAVER ISLANDS AND EMMET COUNTY.

(Continued from last No.)

FIRST ATTEMPT TO DRIVE THE MORMONS FROM BEAVER.

In May, 1850, a general invitation was given on all the fishing grounds to come to Whiskey Point against the 4th of July, for a glorious and patriotic celebration of Independence; to be consummated by the expulsion of the Mormons. In this invitation all the traders at Beaver, as well as the fishermen, joined. Material aid was furnished from Mackinac, and several small vessels owned there engaged to go to Beaver with supplies, and lay in the Harbor ready to join in the fray. Arms, ammunition and provisions, (of which whiskey was chief article,) were laid in; and the Gentiles expressed the utmost confidence of success.

On their part the Mormons gave notice of a General Assembly, and by that means called in a great number of their brethren from distant places, some of whom brought arms. A cannon and a stock of powder and lead was purchased; a regular guard enrolled, who were on duty nightly, while others were drilling. This was conducted with the utmost secrecy; all affecting to believe that no attack would be made. They also procured a large schooner, from Chicago, for the occasion; which they anchored in the Harbor, and in the night filled with armed men, who kept below the deck.

On the third of July, several boats arrived at Whiskey Point, from the fishing grounds, filled with armed men. One vessel from Mackinac arrived, and anchored in the Harbor. During the night they had a carouse, in the course of which Mr. Strang, with a select party, reconnoitred their quarters, ascertained their plans, numbers, &c., poured some of their powder in the Lake, and put tobacco in one of their barrels of whiskey, by means of which those who drank of it became excessively drunk.

The plan was to go to the meeting singly, and in small groups, with slung shot, and other concealed weapons; but affecting good order and propriety, and get seats as nearly as possible in a body, in the region of the speaker's stand and Clerks' tables. In the progress of the service they were to commence talking, drinking, swearing, &c., and if any one interfered, or attempted to keep order, begin a fight; and falling suddenly on the unprepared congregation with pistols, bowie knives and slung shot, disperse them, and disable or kill all the leaders, before they had time to rally, arm or make a stand. This was to be followed up by a general debauching of the women, and burning of houses.

At the first dawn of the fourth, the Mormons commenced firing a national salute; which was the first intimation to the Gentiles that they had a cannon. They were not a little alarmed when they discovered that at every boom of the cannon the balls skipped along the water, past Whiskey point, scarcely two rods from them, and were regularly getting the range for their buildings.

The Mormons met within the unfinished walls of the Tabernacle; eight men mounted guard, with their guns slung; the cannon unlimbered in front, in charge of twelve artillerymen, with a fire, in which heated balls were continually ready; and two patrols, and a water guard, were constantly on the lookout for the enemy.

In the course of the day two vessels and sixteen boats arrived from the fisheries, bringing men, munition, &c., including one cannon.

Several attempts were made to reconnoitre the position of the Mormons, but were not allowed to proceed. The Gentiles complained that they were not allowed to come and go as they pleased, as they had always done at all religious meetings in other places.

The following evening during their carouse at Whiskey Point, a select party of the Mormons contrived to get within hearing of them at their consultation, and learned that they had been disappointed by the non-arrival of the Gull Island, Soul Choix, and East Shore fishermen; that part of the resident traders were anxious to postpone the attempt, in the fear that it would be a failure, and the Mormons would take revenge on them for their part in the transaction; that jealousies existed among them as to the means by which the Mormons had obtained their plans; and the sober were fearful that the Mormons were too well prepared. Indecision and disorder prevailed, and they were unable to agree upon their leader. The result of all these embarrassments was that they generally agreed "to wait for recruits and then pay off the Damned Mormons for arming and setting guards, before any body meddled with them."

Not a few fishermen having come only for a spree, and having no prospect of one, except at the risk of a bloody welcome to hospitable shores, they returned to their homes, leaving some urgent business. It soon became evident that the spirit of the undertaking had oozed out, and that the difficulty would pass away without blood letting.

The mob dispersed, and the Mormons went on with their Conference. Part of those engaged in it tried to make friends with the Mormons, pretending that no hostile project had been seriously entertained. Others kept up a continual clamor that the destruction of the Mormons had been only postponed, not abandoned. From time to time a new day was fixed for the onslaught, and confidentially committed to some timid persons among the Mormons, in the hope of frightening them away.

STRANG'S IMPRISONMENT.

George J. Adams, a somewhat distinguished preacher among the Mormons, but more widely known as a small player of great parts in various companies of strolling thespians, though next to Mr. Strang, the leading preacher among the Mormons, was about this time subjected to discipline for having abandoned his wife in the State of New Jersey, and taken with him to Beaver a woman of bad reputation, and introduced as his wife, saying his former wife was dead, and he married again; the result of which was, that he was degraded, and joined in the movement against the Mormons.

After trying in vain to raise a party of malcontents among the Mormons, he went to Mackinac, where he got aid to commence a series of prosecutions against them. He seized property of the value of more than $1,000, to which he had not a shadow of claim, by process of replevin, on which the Sheriff, Tully O'Malley, took straw bail.

The Mormons litigated these seizures in the County Court, at Mackinac, and recovered; and the Sheriff became liable on his official bonds. But the Sheriff's bond was fraudulently removed from the County Clerk's files, and they were without redress.

Adams also prosecuted Mr. Strang, and got him committed to prison several times, but on removing the cause to a higher Court, he was on every commitment honorably discharged.

A grossly false statement of these proceedings was published in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, in which it was represented that the Sheriff performed a difficult and dangerous duty at Beaver in arresting Mr. Strang, and that the Mormons rushed to Mackinac in force to rescue him; whereas, in fact, Mr. Strang, on hearing that a process was out against him, went voluntarily to Mackinac, accompanied by four friends, and waited there five days, urging the consummation of the proceedings, before he was arrested at all; and except those four friends, no Mormon from Beaver was within forty miles of them. This publication in the Plain Dealer laid the foundation of the general public prejudice against the Beaver Island Mormons. But for this publication, aid and sympathy would not have been looked for from abroad in transactions which the authors had not the hardihood to pretend to justify, and the difficulty would have ended without the shedding of blood.

MORMONISM IN POLITICS.

While these proceedings were going on, preparations were being made for the State and County election. In Michilimackinac County political lines were abandoned for the time, and a County ticket put in nomination headed by Mr. Guilbeault for Representative, pledged to use their official power against the Mormons, and to deny them the protection of the Courts, and ignore them as citizens.

Against this movement another ticket was put in nomination, headed by John D. Irvine for Representative, pledged to a fair and equal administration of the law, and on this ticket were the names of three Mormons, being a trifle less than their proportion of the population.

Both the Whig and Democratic parties divided about equally on these tickets, but voted on the State ticket as usual. The Anti-Mormon candidate for Sheriff, Mr. Henry Granger, was elected by means of fraudulent tickets, in which his name was inserted so as not to be observed, in the law and order ticket. The rest of the law and order ticket were elected.

When the canvassers met, Michael Dousman, the Mackinac canvasser, proposed to reject the returns from Peaine township, (Beaver Islands,) showing ninety-two votes for the law and order ticket and thirteen for the Anti-Mormon; on the allegation that there were not, in his opinion, one hundred and five voters there. This proposition being negatived, he withdrew.

The Board completed the canvass, certifying the result, and Dousman held a separate canvass, in which he rejected the vote of Peaine, but received that of Moran, where no canvass was returned, but the result was reported ore tenes by a half breed sailor on a wood scow; and on his certificate Mr. Guilbeault unsuccessfully contested the seat of John D. Irvine.

Of the ninety-two persons on Beaver Island who voted the law and order ticket, forty-five, less than half, voted the Democratic State ticket. But the Whig Committee neglected to send tickets, and election day found the Whigs without their nomination for State officers. Consequently no votes were given for the Whig nominees for State officers.

On these facts the Detroit Advertiser and Tribune commenced a bitter warfare against the Mormons, charging them with selling themselves, neck and heels, to the Democratic party, and receiving in return immunity for criminal conduct. High judicial officers in Mackinac were accused of releasing Mr. Strang from imprisonment, by the most outrageous violation of law, and the most shameless prostitution of judicial power, for party purposes.

So far as these public men were concerned, this was taken for political wrangling, and they were not injured. But the rule, "false in one point false in all," was never applied.—What was said against the Mormons was believed; and added to the previous publications in the Plain Dealer, fixed a deep conviction in the public mind that the Mormons at Beaver were a mere lawless banditti. These publications began just at the close of navigation, and were six months old and a hundred times repeated before the Mormons heard of them.—Then civil war was waged against them, and for a long time it was impossible for them to reply to any of them. The replies, when made, were a perfect refutation of the charges, but were never published or even mentioned in the papers which had given currency to the slander.

INDIAN HOSTILITIES.

During the winter of 1850 and '51, McKinley, Cable, Ward, Dodge and other traders at Beaver engaged the Indians to assume a hostile position towards the Mormons. Kimmeoue, Peaine, Wataneea and Chenotin, influential Chiefs, accompanied by thirty braves, thirteen white men and two interpreters, called on Mr. Strang for a talk. They carried guns and tomahawks, had their faces painted with war colors, and followed a red flag.—They made long speeches about their attachment to the traders who supplied their wants, and the fishermen who intermarried with them, and their bravery and cruelty in war.

In conclusion, Peaine, in behalf of the Ottowas and Ojibwas, denounced war and annihilation against the Mormons, in case any of them sued a Gentile at law, warned him out to work a highway tax, attempted to arrest him, or cut any steamboat wood, except what was purchased by McKinley. It was evident that the Indians fully believing that the Gentiles only were citizens, and that the Mormons were merely intruders; thought they were acting in fulfillment of treaties, and in support of the authority of the United States.

Mr. Strang replied at length to their speeches. When he came to the denunciation of war, he turned to the white men, first took down their names, and from the Revised Statutes, read to them the law concerning inciting Indians to commit crimes. Then turning to Peaine, he said, "I am no child, and cannot understand you. Your voice is like a scolding woman. I will not hear you. March on." The white men were already in riotous, and Peaine and his fellow Chiefs and braves sullenly followed.

Not far from this time an attempt was made by Constable Fields, of Beaver, to arrest Eri J. Moore, who was on Garden Island selling whiskey to the Indians. He brought his supplies from Mackinac on the ice, by the single barrel, and sold nothing else. Knowing that the Indians would secrete and possibly defend him, Fields took a posse of thirteen men.—It so happened that Moore had started for Mackinac before the posse reached the Indian village. After searching till they were satisfied that he was not there, they started across the ice on their way home, when coming round a point of the island they met Moore returning, having found the ice broken, and been unable to proceed. Chase was made, and he ran into the woods, and being assisted by the Indians and several white men, he escaped. The white men got behind the bushes and shot at the posse, evidently not intending to hit them, but to shoot as close as they could and miss.

WAR ON THE MORMONS.

As soon as navigation opened, Moore obtained warrants before Justice O'Malley, of Mackinac, against thirty-nine men, charging them with being concerned in this transaction, and "putting him in fear of danger." Sheriff

Granger came to execute the warrants. Mr. Strang had gone to Hog Island with a company of workmen, trying to save a yawl boat, which had been lost from the wreck of the steamer Patchin, and frozen in the ice on Hog Island shoals. Another company were there getting out timber for cars; in all eleven men.

Granger raised a party of thirteen whites and thirty-two Indians, well armed; went to Hog Island, stole the boat the Mormons had gone in; chopped in pieces the Patchin's yawl, and believing it impossible for any to get off from the Island, a little past midnight fell upon the camp of the sleeping Mormons with the Irish hurrah and the terrible Indian war whoop.

The hurrah was a moment too soon. The Mormons sprang to their feet, and boldly rushed through the troop to secure their boat.—Finding it gone, they again broke their lines and took to the woods. Feeling their way in the darkness through a deep swamp, many of them without their boots, they met on the opposite shore, where an old leaky fish boat lay filled with ice and snow.

When they had this ready to land, but one of their company was lacking. This was the 11th April; a cold freezing morning, the Lake spotted with vast fields of drift ice. With a boat preserved from sinking only by the ice frozen in it, without sails or oar locks, and with three unsuitable cars, not half clothed, no provisions, without a line to tie their boat, nor an ax to repair any accident, they set out on the broad blue waters, for a place of safety.

Having made the circuit of the Islands at such distance as to avoid being seen—after buffeting the waves for twenty-four hours, they landed at Gull Island, then uninhabited, having suffered so much with the cold, that when they had warmed and slept, they waked with their faces so swollen that they could not recognize each other.

Here they remained five days, occupying the best fish shanty, and for want of an ax to cut wood with, taking down the others for fuel.—The fragments of provisions left in the various shanties supplied them with food, such as starving men know best how to relish. With an ingenuity of invention which necessity only produces, shaping timber with fire and knives, saving nails from burnt shingles, and using pebbles for hammers, they put their boat in good condition, and returned to learn the fate of their lost companion, and the condition of affairs at Beaver.

Twelve days elapsed after leaving Hog Island, before they reached it again. Then they found the missing man, David Bates; who, after escaping Granger and his party in the long hunt they kept up, hoping to find Mr. Strang, had subsisted on some small fragments of raw hide intended for oar straps, and about two quarts of frozen potatoes, which escaped the scrutiny of Granger's free booters. Granger took the tools, provisions, blankets, cooking utensils, &c., of the Mormons as spoils of war, and divided them among his companions. A portion of them were afterwards given up, but the larger share remained in the hands of the victors.

Among the spoils was a joiner's chest of tools, taken along by Mr. Royal Tucker to use in repairing the Patchin's yawl. Upon this Sheriff Granger made a semi-official publication in the Tribune or Advertiser at Detroit, that he had seized in Strang's piratical camp "a box of tools admirably adapted to burglarious purposes."

Granger took some fifteen or twenty prisoners to Mackinac. O'Malley ordered all to prison. But when it was ascertained that all were ready to give bail, two or three were let to bail, and the prosecution against the rest abandoned, and they went home. Those let to bail were discharged at the next session of the County Court, no one appearing against them.

Granger returned to Beaver for Strang, and getting a fund subscribed for the purpose, offered a reward for his head. The reward offered at first was but twenty-five dollars, but in a short time it was raised to $300.00. For this reward, Mr. Strang was hunted by bands of armed men, Indians and Half Breeds, Irish, &c., varying from seventy-five to 350 in number, as the prospect of success increased or diminished, for four weeks.

UNITED STATES TAKE UP AGAINST THE MORMONS.

While these proceedings were going on, President Fillmore and his Cabinet were invited to New York to assist in the ceremonies of opening the New York and Erie Rail Road. The President extended his visit to Detroit, where he had a broader residing; and while there complaints were made before him, charging the Mormons with being mere bucaniers, and alleging specifically that Mr. Strang and others were guilty of treason, robbing the mail, counterfeiting the coin, &c., and finally of trespass on the United States land.

The President ordered a vigorous and sweeping prosecution, and put the armed steamer Michigan and the cutter Ingham under the orders of Geo. C. Bates, District Attorney for the District of Michigan, to aid in making arrests, which it was alleged the Mormons would resist.

The first intimation that the Mormons had of this movement was the arrival of the Michigan at Beaver Harbor. Hon. J. M. Greig, Judge of Michilimackinac County Court, who had just adjourned his Court at Mackinac, came aboard there, and with the utmost difficulty persuaded the District Attorney and Marshal, who were aboard, to go peaceably about their arrests, without any hostile demonstration.

The Steamer anchored in the Harbor about midnight. At the instance of Judge Greig, Mr. Bates went ashore, accompanied by no officer, and Mr. Strang. A friend of Mr. Strang's arranged an interview, which took place in a few minutes.

Mr. Bates began the interview by an effort to convince Mr. Strang that he could not escape from the force in his hands, nor avoid arrest, and would do best by giving himself up promptly. Mr. Strang replied that he was satisfied with his present opinion on that subject, and asked "on what charge do you visit to arrest me?" Mr. Bates replied, "the papers are aboard, and if you will step aboard a few minutes, I will show them to you."

It was immediately arranged that Mr. Strang should go aboard the Steamer and have a consultation, where if he saw fit to do so he should surrender himself to the officer charged with his arrest. But that if he did not consent to so surrender himself, he should at the end of two hours be landed on the beach, in front of his own house, and neither pursued or watched for fifteen minutes.

Mr. Strang went aboard in the same boat that had brought Mr. Bates ashore. No papers were exhibited, but Mr. Bates and Mr. Knox, the Marshal, stated that Mr. Strang and thirty-eight others were charged with trespass on the United States land, and a portion of them, including Mr. Strang, with counterfeiting the coin, and that if they could see the men and look into the matter, they would discharge such as appeared not to be guilty, and take to Detroit for trial only such as the evidence against was conclusive.

Mr. Strang asked for a list of names of the accused, promising that if it was furnished him, all the men named in it should come to the wharf to be arrested within two hours. To this Mr. Bates finally agreed, though Mr. Knox objected, saying it would advertise the Mormons, who should run away. The list was sent ashore with a request from Mr. Strang that the men named would come to the wharf, and wait for a boat to bring them aboard. Not satisfied, Mr. Knox, with some of his Deputies, went and commenced arresting them on their approach. He soon saw his error, and desisted; and within two hours thirty-one men, all the persons named, who were on the Island, had come to be arrested.

A young fellow named William Arnold had been taken aboard at Mackinac, with the tale that the Mormons had an artificial cave in Mount Pisgah, in which they carried on an extensive business at coining, and that he had been solicited to join in the business, and had been in the cave and seen the work going on.

He was brought along to point out the cavern, but on arriving at Beaver acknowledged that his tale was false. It appeared that Adams had persuaded him to tell this tale, as a mere matter of scandal. He had been unexpectedly called to verify it in a legal proceeding, and had gone blindly on till the moment came to point out the workshop. He could go no further, and in shame and confusion burst into a flood of tears.

Some of the civilians aboard the steamer determined to believe the Mormons were guilty, though the testimony vanished. A company of them went ashore, and inquiring of children the route, made their way to Mount Pisgah, and after a thorough examination, concluded—that the cavern was somewhere else. The idea that it was nowhere, did not occur to them.

An awning was prepared, and arrangements made to hold a Commissioner's Court on the deck of the steamer, when McKinley, one of the complainants, expressed his utter inability to produce his witnesses without a delay of several days, representing that several of them were nearer Detroit than Beaver Island. The Court was dismissed, and a consultation began as to the disposition of the prisoners.—The result was that Messrs. Strang, Townsunder, Ketcham and Page, not as prisoners, but under surveillance, to be the subjects of further judicial proceedings, went to Detroit. Mr. Strang became bail for the appearance of four others, in case bills were found against them, and all the others were discharged. Mr. Strang obtained, in behalf of himself and his associates, a pledge from the District Attorney and Marshal that in case of their acquittal they should not be delivered to the Sheriff of Michilimackinac, but should be brought either on a national vessel or in custody of a Deputy Marshal, and discharged at Beaver. In the result this pledge was broken.

The prosecution continued before the District Court of the United States at Detroit, from the latter part of May till the 9th of July. Mr. Strang and twenty-six others were indicted for going out in armed force and robbing the United States mail; Mr. Strang and two others for coining, and Mr. Strang and about a dozen others in twelve bills for trespass on the public lands. A bill was also submitted to the Grand Jury of the Circuit Court of the United States against Mr. Strang and several others for treason, which was ignored.

Thirteen persons were tried on the indictment for mail robbing, and acquitted. It is well known that these men were prejudged and foredoomed; and that nothing but a defence beyond doubt or cavilling could have produced their acquittal. The whole public expected their conviction.

The Advertiser and Tribune, daily papers in the city of Detroit, belched forth morning and evening the most bitter calumnies against them, and though the Free Press occasionally admitted a brief article in their defence, it was in no sense committed in their behalf. The reports of the trial published in the Advertiser were so barefaced pervasions of the truth, as to excite severe condemnation from the Hon. W. Wilkins, District Judge. Under the circumstances, the acquittal of the defendants must be the most satisfactory evidence of their innocence.

It is worthy of remembrance, too, that the defendants were charged with going out in armed forces, and in military array at midday on the 19th of February, and making an attack on a mail train only a few rods from a large Indian village, and in the presence of a considerable number of white men. They were not arrested for this offence, till three months after. William Wilkins, Clerk of the Court and United States Commissioner, was sent to take testimony on the spot, and among three hundred witnesses attending before him, over one hundred of whom were sworn and interrogated on this point, not one man could be found who had ever heard of it till after the arrest.

Even the Assistant Post Master, Peter McKinley, though he swore to the military attack and robbery, on his cross-examination said he sent the same mail after its recovery to Mackinac on the opening of navigation, on a vessel owned and navigated by the same men he was prosecuting for robbing it.

The truth became apparent before the conclusion of the trial, that there had not only been no attack and no armed force, but actually no mail in the premises. That a portion of the defendants had been engaged only in assisting in trying to arrest a man charged with crime, who was at that time in company with a dog train, which did not carry a mail, and was not interrupted: and, finally, that the whole story of mail and mail robbery was merely a false tale, got up for the purpose of destroying Mr. Strang by the most unblushing perjury.

This conviction on the public mind, where the trial took place, can only account for the abandoning of other indictments. The trial of the first indictment did not shed the slightest ray of light on the merits of the other cases, except by showing that the whole batch were the creations of conspiracy and perjury.

(To be continued.)

(Continued from fourth page.) and closely imitating their motions when they slunk behind trees, or laid in wait for their enemy. The war dance was then resumed, and formed a strong contrast to the usual sluggishness of the dancers. It was not difficult to appreciate how formidable such men must have been in the early days when it required all the ability of a CASS and SCHOOLCRAFT to manage them.— Their yells were frightful. There was a wildness in their bearing, a savage ferocity in their gaze, a nervous eagerness in the brandishing of their weapons, which evinced how highly wrought their souls had been by the narration of the adventures of war.

But strange to relate, their next ceremony was one of delicate kindness. They presented to the mother of the diseased a bunch of eagle feathers (emblems that her child had flown to rest) wrapped in fine cloth, as Indian children are. This she is to keep for a year, to carry with her wherever she goes, and to watch over, as if it was her child. There is an exquisite pathos in this custom which touches the finest sensibilities of the heart. Their loved one is not decaying in the cold grave; but is pillowed on the bosom of her mother.

The ceremonies on this occasion are new to me. I am informed that they are confined to the Lake bands, and are only performed when the deceased is related to some great man. They usually walk over the grave, and strike a post with their tomahawks, relating their war deeds as they do so.

In the afternoon another much commoner phase of Indian manners was developed. A party went around dancing the begging dance—the object of which was to procure provisions for a feast in honor of the dead. They repeated it several times before the stores of different traders, who invariably gave them a maw-kaw of sugar, a barrel of pork, tobacco, flour or some other article which they prize. That night I passed the place where the girl was buried. A single torch, and low whispers of human voices, attracted my attention. Her sisters were eating over her grave.

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1854.

UTAH AND THE NEW YORK TRIBUNE.

The New York Tribune publishes a long and interesting article from "The Seer," on the condition and progress of Utah, and another on polygamy, or what the Seer calls "Celestial Marriage;" to which the Editor appends the following remarks:—

MORMON POLYGAMY.

We publish in another column, from The Seer, documents of high interest and importance, which shed a great deal of light on the weighty question of the treatment which the community in Utah should receive from the United States. One of these papers related to the growth and present condition of the Mormon Church, to the number of its adherents and the progress of its doctrines in different parts of the world, and to the splendid work of reclaiming the desert, which the emigrants have achieved in the face of obstacles and difficulties, such, as in all history, scarce any exiled and pioneer people ever had to contend with. It is impossible, we think, to read the simple facts set forth in the Epistle of Orson Pratt and not feel a degree of admiration for the courage, energy, and industry which have accomplished so much in the subjugation of the wilderness, and converting the useless haunts of beasts into the habitable home of men.

But a far graver interest attaches to the second of the documents in question, which treats of what is called in the Mormon jargon, "Celestial Marriage," or polygamy. This is the difficult and dangerous point in our political relations with that people, and on this head the Rules of Celestial Marriage are calculated to reassure the anxiety of the most nervous among those who deplore the existence of such an institution. They show that there is no need of an invading army of the United States soldiers to put down the evil in question, but that, if it is not prolonged by external persecution, it must speedily extinguish itself, and put an end at the same time to all the distinctive falsities and absurdities in general. We have in these theological state papers the palpable evidence that polygamy does not work well among an industrious, shrewd newspaper-reading community. The results which are naturally to be expected from it, are evidently appearing in full bloom. Domestic discord has invaded the penetralia of Mormonism, and the nursery, kitchen and parlor of the saintly households are already in hot water on account of wilful wives and battling babies. Hence the necessity for new revelations, telling the sex that there must be no cap-pulling, face-scratching, or baby-spanking of other than their own bairns. If the thirty loves of Brigham Young, or whatever the number is, have a lot of cherubs apiece, all under one roof or in one neighborhood, as they are possessed of domestic precedents and practices of American women, it is a matter of course that they cannot dwell in all that saccharine softness of communion with one another which The Seer sets down in its catalogue of good behavior, and that the institution which so degrades and enslaves them will inevitably be overthrown. Among these sixteen mortal rules for the guidance of polygamic wives, the shortest and last of the lot is most significant that there is a screw loose in the uxorious arrangements of the saints. It runs thus:—

"Rule 16th.—Let each mother correct her own children, and see that they do not dispute and quarrel with each other, nor with any others; let her not correct the children of the others without liberty to do so lest it give offence. The husband should see that each mother maintains a wise and proper discipline over her children, especially in their younger years; and it is his duty to see that all his children are obedient to himself and to their respective mothers. And it is also his duty to see that the children of one wife are not allowed to quarrel with and abuse those of the others, neither to be disrespectful or impudent to any branch of his family."

Now, rules are never made against aught but entities. Crimes come before laws, and faults before corrections and advisals. If, then, the polygamy of the Mormons be let alone to work out its own necessary results, it is certain that Rule No. 16, with its fifteen antecedents, will become speedily obsolete.

This being the common-sense of the matter we hope there will be no talk of sending an army to conquer the Mormons and compel them by sack and bloodshed to renounce this monstrosity. We might as well think of putting down the concubinage of slavery by the same means. Besides, the Mormons form a separate community, and it would be hard to say whence we should derive our authority to coerce them into conformity to the faith, laws, and usages established by the separate States of the Union, but not provided for in the Constitution or legislation of the Union itself.

And, even if there were no moral certainty that polygamy will extinguish itself in Utah, it would by no means be a plain case for a resort to violence. Wisdom would still dictate waiting for the action of mental and moral influence instead of resorting to the temporal arm.

Certainly, the institution as it exists there, is not to be put on a level with polygamy among us and in defiance of laws. Whatever is done universally and legally, though wrong, is attended with more or less of a compensating principle; hence the profession of a soldier, whose business it is to kill according to law, is better than a brigand, whose business it is to kill without law. So too of polygamy in accordance with Mormon law in comparison with bigamy in our latitude. The one is a crime by the law of this community; the other is not only permitted, but held to be virtuous and laudable by the law of that. We cannot force our laws upon the Mormons; but we may be sure that if we leave them at peace, the necessities of Society, and the progress of intelligence and the moral sentiments among them will lead to the correction of the evil we deplore.

This article certainly pays a deserved tribute to the industry and enterprise of the Mormons in Utah. And its distinction between legal polygamy in Utah, and the misnamed bigamy, which in christian countries consists in abandoning one wife to swindle the heart of another, is the beginning of justice. But the argument against polygamy, and the reasons for believing it will be of short continuance, strike us as in the last degree puerile. The argument is this:—

"A rule has been made that different wives of the same husband, shall not punish each other's children. Rules are not made against anticipations, but entities. Therefore the fault of spanking each other's bairns already exists, (otherwise the rule against it would not.)"

"Therefore (assuming that this fault is neither curable, nor endurable,) polygamy will be abandoned—and with it all the distinctive features of Mormonism, which make the deep gulf between it and other systems of religion." How the latter conclusion is arrived at we do not understand.

It is not true that rules are made only against entities. They are commonly made against probabilities, as well as experienced evils. The Newspaper-reading American citizens in Utah, know very well that in such places as New York, where a majority of the people live from two to a dozen families in one house, differences frequently arise between the children of different mothers; and indiscreet mothers are prone to aggravate them, by occasionally chastising those who have wronged their own bairns; and that this evil is only partially curable, but has to a great extent to be endured. (Yet it has not broke up the system of dual marriage, with which it is intimately connected.)

Does it strike any one as in the least singular, or as indicating domestic broils, that when one man is the common father of all the children in such a house, he should assume the ultimate control in family government, and restrain imprudent women from making quarrels? If so, then the social state in Utah, with its polygamy, ought to be more peaceable and better ruled than in New York.

All the argument against polygamy is founded on the assumption that women will not do right, and will quarrel, cause or to cause, an assumption very far from complimentary. If this is true, there is rottenness in the social order which produces it.

That the marriage system throughout christendom is a bad one, is universally felt, and generally acknowledged. As long ago as the publication of the Spectator, it was allowed by the ablest writers in the English Language, that not one in one hundred matches were happy; and that not above one in four escaped open quarrels, and public hostilities between husband and wife. It has not grown better since.— The evil is every where felt, and every where acknowledged.

Tyrannical husbands and obstinate wives are too numerous to be hated; hen-pecked husbands and hen-hussed wives too common to be despised; and broken spirited husbands and broken hearted wives are met too often to be objects of compassion.

Contrivances without number have been set on foot to cure or mitigate the evil. Divorces have been made easier, until from being granted for adultery only, they can be had for a dozen flimsy reasons, one of which is incompatibility of temper; a reason which either party can manufacture at any time; and instead of making less quarrels, they have removed some of the strongest inducements to peace.

There is a small excess of marriageable women over men in most well populated countries, and more men than women are predisposed to celibacy. By the universal custom women cannot propose, but only accept marriage. The consequence is, that few can ever have their choice of husbands. They must take such as offer, or none. They cannot even postpone a present offer, in the hope of a better. For that may never be made, and the present is not likely to be renewed. To a woman possessed of only ordinary charms, an offer of marriage is coupled with the probable conditions—"this or none—now or never." In nine cases out of ten the man proposing has not been tried in the business of the world, and the chance of getting a good husband, by the exercise of the utmost caution, is about equal to that of drawing a capital prize in a lottery. A very moderate share of attention to that object insures perpetual celibacy.

In consequence many talented women find themselves tied for life to puerile men, whom they cannot but despise; and just and amiable women, to unjust and selfish men, whom they are compelled to dread; and they set about preaching womens' rights, in the hope of some relief by relaxing the matrimonial bond as much as possible.

Others, of virtuous habits, and unused to licentious conduct, are shocked in finding their husbands spending their time at tipping houses and their money on women of ill repute; or with declining health are neglected and abandoned for the society of women more grateful to a sensual and unfeeling man, and they die, broken hearted.

A more numerous class, hitched together, like a horse and mule in one team, jostle through the world, having the same ends to accomplish, but forever opposing each other; or like pigs in a field quarreling the live long day, but too much wonted to separate; lying down together at night to continue the quarrel with which there is no happiness, and without which they would die of homesickness.

The Caudle curtain lectures and the sequel were admired by every body, because every body felt the truth. So little is felicity expected in conjugal life, that a man who pretends that his wife's worst passions between him and his wife, is discredited by his best friends; and the highest compliment a woman can bestow on her husband, is that he treats her as kind as though she was not his wife.

And the most hopeful popular remedy for this universally acknowledged evil, is that of making marriage so near nothing at all, that it shall be only a partnership at will, for propagating the human species; about as near marriage at all as one can well conceive of.

What a lovely state of society it will be, when the authority of the husband over the wife's person ceases, lest he should whale her; his control over her property, lest he should squander it; his direction of her business, so as to give her a chance to get rich; and over her associations and employments, in order that she may take her true position among the public men of the age, and her true niche in the temple of fame!

Would not this purpose be about as well accomplished by abolishing marriage altogether? Why not just borrow a husband for an occasion, when one was really necessary? Or, if only a lackey or personal attendant was requisite, hire one, who, being retained on no false hope, but merely serving for wages, would be more attentive and obsequious?

Whatever new evils spring up with polygamy, and they have not yet been named, it is scarcely possible that these should not disappear. If men of established habits and known character are seeking wives, those who consent to marry them know what kind of companions they are bargaining for; and where a woman of real excellence may refuse a dozen uncertain and undesirable propositions, without the least fear that her merits will fail of appreciation, our best women will not mate themselves to men whom all their lives they must hate, fear, despise, or loath.

The effect of polygamy is to give to women a wider range for the selection of husbands.— Consequently they will accept only such as suit them. Higher talent, purer virtues, more constant kindness, more enterprise, better business capacities, a larger share of everything that makes the man and the gentleman, is then requisite to get wives at all.

The possession of these excellences in man, will confer happiness on the companions of their possessor. And the man who possesses them, will not only be careful in the first instance who he selects for the companions of his life, but exceedingly careful when he has a happy household, not to destroy his domestic felicity, by introducing a shrew, recommended only by a pretty face or small ankles.

Mutual jealousy between wives is only conventional. To say that it exists in nature, is most uncomplimentary to the female sex, in more ways than one. That love is divided undiminished, every father, every mother of several children very well knows. It is only prejudice which prevents the application of this rule to wives as well as children.

Children inherit both their physical and intellectual and their moral characters, in some measure from their parents. It is better, therefore, for the coming generations, that amiability and moral excellence should to every woman be a sure passport to a happy marriage; and that a good physical form, commanding talent, untiring enterprise, and social and moral superiority in man, should perpetuate itself in a numerous posterity.

With polygamy women will emulate such a character, till habit has established it for life, because it offers a sure hope of a happy marriage; and men who will not make themselves deserving, must either remain solitary, or take up with such shrews as no better man would marry.

Under the dual system mankind have been, and necessarily must be, less careful of the breed of their children, and children's children, than of their pigs and chickens. For daughters they could not choose, and the habit of being mercenary and regardless of congeniality extended to sons marriages.

But the worst fault of the system is, that wives being generally mated rather than matched to their husbands, treat them without affection, and those men who have any degree of kindness acquiesce, because they feel that it would be cruel to exact more than the heart can feel. Desolate in the want of love, they seek the affection in vile places, which is denied at home, and too often their delinquencies are returned upon them, and the household made a desolation. The few that are really by re-ond as used to liding their ing house-repute; or and abangrateful they die, together,

m, jostle ends to h ends; live long e; lying o quarrel d without ss.
the sequel use every licity ex-who preven this friends;
can be-her as edy for that of all, that for prop-near no re of.
Will be, over the aler; he should ness, so and over ong the h in the well ac-gether?
in occa-Or, if re on no wages, polyga-it is disap-known to concom-where a dozen with-fail of mato e they women nds.—
ch as more or busianything is then n man, ons of esses st in-ons of e has domerecomances, y con-ex, ined unof sev-only of this al their n some there-miniby worriage;
anding
d moritself such a r life, mar-selves r take would been,
of the laugh-bit of enial-that matchaffecree of hat it heart they a deencies ehold really

well matched, are carried away by the prevailing custom, and virtuous women are ashamed to show their affection for their husbands. It is an unpardonable weakness. Thus connub-ial felicity is denied the good and the evil, the well and the ill matched.
Nearly all the children born are the offsprings of matches without affection, or where affection is worn out. Hence frequent idiocy and nearly universal ill-temper. Thus man is put below the brute. Instead of improving the race, the worst stock is cultivated as much as any, and crossed and recrossed upon the best, and all its ills aggravated by the powerful mental influence of woman upon her posterity.
Women admire and love every manly excellence, and they are fond of each other's society. Take away the feeling of degradation, and shame, and a half dozen intellectual, amiable and beautiful women would spend their lives far more happily, with one man, such as either would really choose, than separately with the same number of men, such as they can get, in the existing state of society.
Then these ladies who hold their husbands in such esteem, beating children, and quarreling with other women, part and parcel of the rights of the women of America, would be free either to choose single blessedness, or to match themselves to those men who are so vile that but one woman can live with them at a time, and she only at the expense of a perpetual quarrel, and an occasional beating.
And the man who unfortunately was married to a vixen, instead of abandoning a home no longer endurable, for tavern haunting and other vile practices, would seek his happiness in the affection of a more amiable wife; and restrain the vicious, for the welfare of a household, in which even still centered the hopes of his life.
Selfish and mean men, and quarrelsome scolding women, are underrated by polygamy.
That is the sum of its discovered evils. Among its benefits are a higher estimation of physical, social and intellectual excellence; more of human happiness, a more numerous posterity, and a better race.

IMPOSITION.
In November last, four gentlemen from this place were in Milwaukee, purchasing merchandise, produce, &c., For convenience,
all placed their purchases in store on the wharf of Messrs. Kellogg & Strong, to be shipped in one lot, when their assortments were complete. As the last lots were coming in, one of the clerks from Kellogg & Strong's counting room, came into the storehouse, and without the slightest provocation, commenced swearing about Beaver Island and every thing going there, damning them all to hell, and wishing them in the bottom of the Lake. This was not addressed to any person in particular, but the gentlemanly clerk took pains to ring his noisy soliloquy in the ears of Messrs.
Strang and Wait, of Saint James, who were delivering produce, &c., in store. Mr. Wait immediately called at the counting house and inquired of the principal
"how much extra wages he paid his clerk for abusing his customers." The clerk made his apology, that he "was just then very mad at somebody else, and could not avoid swearing, but did not address the gentlemen from Beaver Island, and he thought they ought not to take offence at what was not addressed to them in particular." The principal thought "this apology ought to be satisfactory." Here the matter dropped. The bill of wharfage and storage for the party, was charged over to the steamer Bucepha-lus, when the property was shipped, to be settled at Beaver, and the same clerk who charged it over came with the receipted bill in his hand, and called on Mr.
Strang for his wharfage and storage. Mr. Strang asked a bill, and he declined making one.—
He paid the money, and demanded a receipt, which was also refused. He then called several gentlemen around, and compelled the dishonest clerk to exhibit his receipted bill of the same charges, which he had collected not five minutes before. The money was returned, but—what is the conclusion?

DEATH OF CAPT. GUNNISON, U. S. A.
The untimely and tragic fate of this gallant and able officer, while engaged in the arduous duties of the government, has caused a profound impression throughout the country.
Capt. Gunnison was placed by the War Department, in April last, in command of the party charged with the survey and exploration of the Central Pacific Railroad route. He left St. Louis, after receiving his instructions from the government, early in June last, with high hopes, and possessing the confidence of the country that a more faithful, energetic and efficient officer could not have been selected for the important post assigned him. The appropriation of Congress providing for the survey was extremely limited, but the utmost power was given to Capt. Gunnison, by the Secretary of War, consistent with the act under which the survey was required to be made.— It was not until May that Capt. Gunnison received a notification that he was required to assume the command of the expedition. He immediately set out for Washington to arrange the necessary matters for the difficult work before him; the organization of his party, the selection of his assistants, the purchase of commissary and material for the work. The Secretary of War, having the most unbounded confidence in the judgment and fidelity of Capt. Gunnison, allowed him to write his own instructions, and to organize the whole plan and material of the expedition. This work was accomplished in less than a week, and the gallant officer was on his way to the mountains.
Capt. Gunnison was a native of New Hampshire. He graduated at West Point in the year 1835. After his graduation he assumed his place in the artillery. On the organization of the Topographical Department of the army, consisting of thirty-six persons, he was transferred to that branch of the service. He was selected for that scientific corps because of his peculiar qualifications, and his active and efficient labors in the Topographical corps has won for him a name among the first in the country. For many years previous to 1849 he had been engaged in the coast survey of the Lakes, and his labors in that important work have been second to none in his corps. He was remarkable for energy, accuracy and perseverance in whatever he undertook for the Topographical bureau; and it is believed that Col. Albert, his chief, regarded him as one of the most competent, faithful and upright officers in the service of the War Department.—
He was an honest man. He served his government with all the energy and power of his cultivated mind.
In 1849 he was attached to the party under Capt. Stanbury, which was ordered to make a Topographical Survey of the basin of the Great Salt Lake. Capt. Gunnison was charged with the astronomical duties of that survey; and the manner in which he acquitted himself is well known to the country. The detention of the party at the Mormon city of Utah enabled Capt. G., in the interval of time, to make important observations upon the theocracy of the Mormon government, which, in the following year after he returned, were given to the public. This work is one of the most interesting records of the interior growth of this country, and of the peculiarities of the Mormon church, which has ever been written. It was extensively republished in this country and in England.
Capt. Gunnison married Miss Delony, of Georgia, in 1841, and he now leaves his wife and three children, who it is believed are in the latter State, to mourn his untimely and most melancholy fate. As nearly as can be ascertained he was killed by a band of Utah Indians, who had mistaken his party for Mormons. His body was pierced by twenty-six arrows, one of his arms had been cut off, and he was otherwise mutilated. This must have occurred about the 26th October last. Capt.
G. had determined to go into winter quarters,
and was making his arrangements accordingly.
His death in the service of the government,
many hundred miles in the interior of the country, is an instructive lesson to the War Department, in reference to the safety of scientific officers thus detached from the haunts of civilization and safety. He was one of the ablest and bravest men in the scientific corps, and, although young, had won a position as an officer, and a character as a gentleman, which gave promise of the highest usefulness to his country. Peace to the gallant dead.—
N. Y. Herald.

It is, perhaps, just to add, what could not be published during Capt. Gunnison's lifetime without the risk of jostling a gallant gentleman out of public service, that Capt. Gunnison was a Mormon. Nor was he quite alone, even among public officers. He had studied Mormonism, and could not but believe it.

THE MASSACRE OF CAPT. GUNNI-SON AND PARTY.
We are indebted to George Moran, Esq., of Grosse Point, for the following copy of a letter from his sons, who were attached to the expedition under Captain Gunnison, a portion of which, with its gallant leader, was massacred by the Utah Indians a short time since.— Free Press.

FILLMORE CO., UTAH TERRITORY,
October 29, 1853.

DEAR FATHER:—Our 98th camp was at the crossing of Sevier River, California road. Our ext camp was Cedar Springs. This camp we left on Sunday, at 12 o'clock, M., and marched until 9 o'clock, P. M., making 18 miles.—
The next morning we left this camp at sunrise, at 9 o'clock, A. M., camped on Sevier River.
The next morning, (Tuesday,) Captain Gunnison, with twelve men, left to survey Sevier Lake, we moving our camp up the river 4 miles.
The next day about 10 o'clock, as a party was about leaving to find a pass through the mountain, a man came into camp, and informed us that Capt. Gunnison and party had been attacked, and all killed by Indians, with the exception of himself, he escaping.
Capt. Morris immediately set off, with his party, in pursuit of the Indians, and after men, for the spot, but the Indians had fled, leaving eight dead bodies, perfectly naked, and cut all to pieces, upon the field. The names of those killed are—Captain Gunnison, Mr.
Kern, Mr. Creutzfeld, John Bellows; and three Riflemen, named Calfield, Lipitrot, and Martines.
Capt. Gunnison received fifteen arrows, all so bad his breast cut open. Mr. Kern had only one ball through his breast. Mr. Creutzfeld received several balls, also had his hands cut off; whilst the rest of the men were cut and butchered most horribly. Those that escaped were four in number—Corporal Barton, Smith, Whiteside, and Merah.
I forgot to name one man; his name is Wm.
Potter; he was also killed.
We are all well, and are under the command of Capt. Morris. We will leave on Monday, the 31st, for Salt Lake, where we will wait for orders from Washington.
The distance from Westport to where the Captain was murdered is about 1,500 miles, on Sevier River, about eighteen miles from Sevier Lake.
It is not known when we shall return, but we expect to leave Salt Lake in May. Your affectionate sons,
ALEXANDER MORAN,
RICHARD MORAN.

IMPORTANT DECISION.
Mr. Justice Bagg, of this city, before whom several complaints had been lodged for violations of the new liquor law, and one of which he had heard, yesterday made a decision adverse to the constitutionality of the act. Three points were made, viz: 1st. That the constitution does not authorize the submission to the people of any act for their approval or disapproval, except in specific cases. 2d. That the constitution expressly forbids the passage of any law granting licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, &c. 3d. That the constitution guarantees the right of trial by jury in all penal cases. Upon these points Justice Bagg decided that the new liquor law is unconstitutional, and thereupon dismissed the complaint.
His opinion was a written, and, we understand, an able one.
We observe among the proceedings of the city council, published in the Free Press of yesterday, an opinion of Jas. B. Witherell, Esq., City Attorney, given in obedience to the requirements of a resolution of the council, touching the question of constitutionality.—
Mr. Witherell regards the law as in contravention of the constitution, and gives his reasons therefor.—Detroit Free Press.

Such we have no doubt will be the final decision of the highest tribunals. The safe course, we believe, is to enforce the law of 1851, which is not repealed by that of 1853. Suppressing intemperance depends on citizens rather than laws. We doubt not Emmet will remain the only County in which liquors are not sold.

UTAH.—The population of Utah is stated by the Conference held at Salt Lake last October at 18,206, as follows:—Salt Lake City, 5,979; Salt Lake County, 2,273; Utah County, 4,064; Juab County, 229; San Pete, 765; Millard, 304; Iron, 847; Tovele, 215; Davis,
1,598; Webber, 1,933.
This is far less than we expected, and when it is considered that it is made up of clerical reports, including all the names of church members who may be temporarily absent and possibly not return, it does not show a resident population of above half what was asserted in 1849, when the State of Deseret was organized and applied for admission into the Union. By the same document it appears that the number of Elders, &c., out on missions is only 139. We had supposed it not less than 500. At the present rate we shall soon be even with them.

WEATHER.
Our winter has been extremely fine. The sleighing has been good since new years, but the amount of snow is moderate, and has fallen in small quantities every week, with no thaw sufficient to make it run. The depth in the woods is now from eighteen to twenty-four inches. The severest cold this winter was 11 degrees below zero, Fah. The ice covers a large area, but is thin, and there are no large ridges and mountain piles, as two years ago.

The quantity of ice is less than half what it was then.

This number is issued ten days in advance of its date, for the convenience of sending off a mail, which is about to leave. The Islander will continue to issue regularly. We shall send one more number to those subscribers who have not paid, and then strike their names from the list. One mail only has been received here during the winter. Another will be in within a week, and one more in March. We had letters from a few of the Elders out on missions by the mail, and expect by the next to hear from all. So far the news is cheering. We cannot fail of large additions in the spring.

The supply of provisions is abundant, and a large quantity will remain on hand for the spring trade. Flour retails at $7.00, potatoes are worth 37 cts. per bushel. Several kinds of fish, which they are holding for the spring trade. Teams are generally in excellent condition, with plenty to do.
Less wood is being cut than last year, but the seasoned wood is well brought forward, and the green is hauled nearly as fast as cut. The supply for trade is good, but not what it might be. There is a scarcity of laborers, and many are cutting for logging, for want of help to cut cord wood.

INDIAN WAR IN UTAH.—We have noticed elsewhere the death of Capt. Gunnison, at the hands of the hostile Indians in Utah. The Indians have been at war with the Mormons for a year past, and while traders on the plains have encouraged them, the government has at best been neutral, and many have looked on hoping that the Mormons would be destroyed;
when a horde of plunderers protected by troops could steal another country, made valuable by the labor of Mormons. We are happy to believe that this hope will perish. Few as they are, the Mormons will take care of themselves.
The habit of doing so will make them formidable.

Traders intending to come on the fisheries, are reminded that liquors are not legally sold. Though the Courts overrule the law of 1853, as they probably will, that of 1851 is still in force. The people of Emmet are fully determined to enforce the law, and armed resistance will not be sufficient to prevent them. Traders who intend to deal in liquors, will do well to find some other place of operations. The results so far have not diminished the courage of the Mormons.

The article by Elder Hutchins is from a work which he is about issuing from this office. We take the liberty of reprinting it in the Islander as a proper mode of advertising his valuable work, which we commend to those in search of the truth.

We have several long articles from various newspapers, indicating a change of the public feeling in regard to the persecution of the Mormons, and the prevalent practice of accusing them of crimes as an excuse for injuring them, which we hope soon to embody and present to our readers.

Preparations are making for several new settlements in the spring, both on different islands, and on the East Shore. We hope to open every part of Emmet County before the end of the season.

The President's Message has been received. We do not always get it till spring.

FAMINE IN MEXICO.
In several of the departments of Mexico,— among others, Durango and Zacatecas,—the crops have almost entirely failed, and a famine is anticipated in consequence. Even now, the only article of food to be procured in Zacatecas is the prickly pear, and this is to be obtained only at so great a price that the poorest class can get nothing to eat but cactuses; and this has produced dysentery, by which numbers are being carried off. A city of Mexico paper says that "the loss of crops cannot be general throughout the country; but the imperfect state of our means of communication renders it impossible to transport grain to the departments of Zacatecas and Durango—say, from Puebla, for example."—Detroit Free Press.

A THOUSAND A DAY.
During the year 1851, the arrivals of immigrants at the port of New York, amounted to 300,992—an average, deducting Sunday, of one thousand a day. Of these immigrants, 300, 418 were from Europe. The following statement exhibits their respective countries whence they came:—

Germany, 118,611	Spain, 471
Ireland, 118,131	Italy, 359
England, 31,551	Poland, 188
France, 8,868	Denmark, 157
Scotland, 7,694	Belgium, 83
Switzerland, 6,471	Sardinia, 69
Wales, 2,581	Sicily, 42
Sweden, 2,005	Portugal, 37
Norway, 1,589	Russia, 33
Holland, 1,223

THE GLOBE.
THE OFFICIAL PAPER OF CONGRESS, AND NEWSPAPER FOR THE PEOPLE.
It will be seen by the annexed extract from a letter of General Washington to David Stewart, dated New York, 19th March, 1790, that the idea of such a paper as I propose to make the Globe originated in the mind of the father of his country. He said:—

"It is to be lamented that the editors of the different Gazettes in the Union do not more generally and more correctly (instead of stuffing their papers with acurrility and nonsensical declamation, which few would read if they were apprised of the contents) publish the debates in Congress on all the great national questions. The principles upon which the difference of opinion arises, as well as the decisions, would then come fully before the public, and afford the best data for its judgment."—Sparks' Writings of Washington, vol.
10, p. 84.

THE DAILY GLOBE,
AND
THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.
Having succeeded in my purpose of perfecting the reports of the debates in Congress and giving them the official stamp, I now propose to send them abroad, in connection with the news of the day, in such haste as shall outstrip full and accurate intelligence sent from the seat of Government in any form whatever.
It will even anticipate the scraps of news forwarded to cities within two hundred and fifty miles of Washington by telegraph. Before the events thus transmitted are published in the morning papers, (for instance, of the city of New York,) the Globe containing them will have reached the post office of that city by the express mail of the previous night. The process by which this will be effected I now lay before the public.
I will have a corps of sixteen Reporters in Congress, each in succession will take notes during five minutes, then retire, prepare them for the press, put them slip by slip in the hands of compositors, and thus, while a debate is going on in Congress, it will be put in type, and in a few minutes after it is ended, it will be in print. I shall by this means be enabled to send by the Express Mail of 5 o'clock, P. M., for the east, west and north, and by that of 9 o'clock, P. M., for the south, all the proceedings of Congress up to the ordinary hour of adjournment. Thus the accurate debates of Congress will reach the cities two hundred and fifty miles from the capital before their daily morning papers are in circulation.
The miscellaneous news I shall be careful to gather from remote sections of the country by telegraph. I will obtain from the Executive Department, through official sources, the matters of moment transacted in them, and through agents employed for the purpose, all the city news of consequence in sufficient time to be put into the Globe and mailed in the Express Mail trains. In this way I hope to create a new era in the dissemination of news from Washington. Hitherto no paper has attempted to give authentic accounts of things done at Washington, before the public mind at a distance had received its first impressions from irresponsible telegraphic dispatches, or by letter writers biased by peculiar views.
It is part of my plan to reduce the price of the daily paper to half that of similar daily papers, and thus I hope to extend its circulation so as to invite advertisements. I will publish advertisements of the Government. To subscribers in the cities I hope to submit such terms as will induce them to advertise their business in every village throughout the Union, where the Globe is sent daily under the franke of members of Congress, all of whom take it, and some of them a large number of copies.
The installation of a new administration and a new Congress portends much change in the course of public affairs as the result of the next session. Many vast interests which were brought up in the last Congress, were laid over by a Democratic majority to await the action of a Democratic Executive. The new modelling of the tariff; the new land system;
the question of giving homesteads, and making every man a freeholder who may choose to become one; the approximation of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans by a national railroad across the territory of the Union; reform in the Army, Navy and civil offices—all these great questions, with a thousand minor ones, deeply affecting multitudes of men and every State in the Union, will, now being matured by public opinion, come up for the Government's decision. These new issues, co-operating with old ones, coming up to be disposited of by new actors in the scenes at Washington, will be apt to modify greatly, if not alter essentially, the party organizations of the country.
The Daily Globe will be printed on fine paper, double royal size, with small type, (brevier and nonpareil,) at five dollars a year.
The Congressional Globe will also be printed on a double royal sheet, in book form, royal quarto size, each number containing sixteen pages. The Congressional Globe proper will be made up of the proceedings of Congress and the running debates as given by the Reporters.
The speeches which members may choose to write out themselves, will, together with the messages of the President of the United States, the reports of the Executive Departments, and the laws passed by Congress, be added in the Appendix. Formerly I received subscriptions for the Congressional Globe and Appendix separately. But this has not been found satisfactory, inasmuch as it gave an incomplete view of the transactions of Congress; and therefore I have concluded not to sell them apart, considering that neighbors can have the advantage of both by clubbing, in case individuals shall find it too onerous to be at the charge of both.
To facilitate the circulation of the Congressional Globe, and cheapen it to the subscribers, Congress passed, last year, a joint resolution, making it free of postage.
The next session of Congress will be a long one; and it is believed that the Congressional Globe for it will reach 4,000 royal quarto pages, as the last long session made 3,842, and the long one before that made 3,901 royal quarto pages—four large volumes each session.—
If subscribers will be careful to file all the numbers received by them, I will supply any that may miscarry in the mails. This work increases in value as it grows old. The first seventeen volumes will command three times and some of the subsequent ones twice their original subscription price.
The subscription price for the Congressional Globe (including the Appendix and the laws) is six dollars.
Complete indexes will be made out and forwarded to subscribers soon after the session is ended.
Subscribers for the Daily should have their money here by the 5th, and for the Congressional Globe by the 15th of December. The money must accompany an order for either the Daily or the Congressional Globe. Bank notes current where a subscriber resides, will be received at par.
JOHN C. RIVES,
Washington, October 12, 1853.

GOOD TEMPER.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

There's not a cheaper thing on earth,
Nor yet one half so dear;
'Tis worth more than distinguished birth,
Or thousands gained a year.
It lends the day a new delight;
'Tis virtue's earnest shield;
And adds more beauty to the night
Than all the stars may yield.

It maketh poverty content;
To sorrow whispers peace;
It is a gift from heaven sent
For mortals to increase.
It meets you with a smile at morn;
It lulls you to repose;
A flower for poor and peasant born,
An everlasting rose.

A charm to banish grief away,
To free the brow from care;
Turns tears to smiles, makes dullness gay—
Spreads gladness everywhere;
And yet 'tis cheap as summer dew,
That gems the lily's breast;
A talisman for love as true,
As ever man possesses'd.

As smiles the rainbow through the cloud
When threatening storm begins—
As music 'mid the tempest loud,
That still its sweet way wins—
As springs an arch across the tide,
Where waves conflicting foam,
So comes this seraph to our side,
This angel to our home.

What may this wondrous spirit be,
With power unheard before—
This charm, this bright divinity?
Good nature—nothing more!
Good temper—'tis the choicest gift
That woman homeward brings,
And can the poorest peasant lift
To bliss unknown to kings.

THE GUIDE TO ETERNAL LIFE.

BY JAMES HUTCHINS.

ACCORDING to the declarations of Jesus Christ and his Apostles, eternal life depends upon a correct knowledge of the Father and the Son; hence it behooves all who desire eternal life, to become acquainted with God the Father, and Jesus Christ the Son. The Bible having been written by inspiration, I shall take that for a criterion. What kind of a being is God? The Bible says, "and God said: Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; so God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." Gen. i. 26, 27.

It is obvious, then, that God is the image and likeness of man, so far as personal appearance is concerned. Hear his own words to Moses, respecting his person: "And the Lord said, Behold, there is a place by me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock: and it shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a cleft of the rock: and will cover thee with my hand while I pass by: and I will take away mine hand, and thou shalt see my back parts: but my face shall not be seen." Ex. xxxiii. 21, 22, 23.

He hath then both body and parts. Hath he passions? "For I was afraid of the anger and hot displeasure wherewith the Lord was wrath against you, to destroy you. But the Lord hearkened unto me at that time also.—And the Lord was very angry with Aaron, to have destroyed him: and I prayed for Aaron also the same time." Deut. ix. 19, 20. And again: "The Lord said unto Moses, Behold, thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, and this people will rise up, and go a whoring after the gods of the strangers of the land, whither they go to be among them, and will forsake me, and break my covenant which I have made with them."

Then he said: "My anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and I will hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall befall them, so that they will say in that day, Are not these evils come upon us, because our God is not among us? And I will surely hide my face in that day for all the evils which they shall have wrought, in that they are turned unto other Gods." Deut. xxxi. 16, 17, 18.

And again: "See now that I, even I am he, and there is no God with me: I kill, and I make alive; I wound, and I heal; neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand.—For I lift up my hand to heaven, and say, I live forever. If I whet my glittering sword, and my hand take hold on judgment, I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and will reward them that hate me. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall devour flesh; and that with the blood of the slain and of the captives from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy. Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people: for he will avenge the blood of his servants, and will remember vengeance to his adversaries, and will be merciful unto his land, and to his people." Deut. xxxii. 31 to 39.—And again: "For love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God; for God is love." I John iv. 7, 8.

Saying that the God that created the heavens, the earth and the contents thereof is God of body, parts and passions, it is obvious that whoever acknowledge and worship a being without body, parts or passions, are worshipping what exists not, and cannot save. He who created all things, even the great God Almighty, ty, ever hath been a wonder-working God.—He confounded the language of the Babelites, and scattered them upon all the face of earth, to prevent them from accomplishing their unlawful determination. He rained upon Sodom and Gomorrah fire and brimstone from heaven to destroy them, because the cry of them was waxen great before his face.

He it was in the days of Noah that opened the windows of heaven and inundated the earth, to depopulate the world, in consequence of the wickedness of man. He miraculously led the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt by the hand of Moses, guiding him as a scribe does his pen. He it was that sent his only begotten Son into this world to make a propitiation for our sins, and through him marked out and established the way whereby all the human family might be saved.

Inasmuch then as God sent his Son into this world for the happiness and salvation of the human family, it will be well to search out the precise course that was pursued, and system that was established by Jesus Christ, while he was upon the earth. It will then be an easy matter to know what a man must do to be saved, inasmuch as he marked the way whereby all mankind might be saved. We see that he came into this world as do other men; he was born of a woman; grew from infancy to manhood; he was baptized by John.

"Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water." Matt. iii. 13, 16. "And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan." Mark i. 9. Jesus Christ was then, is now, and ever will be, the waymark whereby the human family will or can be saved in the kingdom of God. "And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me." Matt. x. 38. "Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me." Matt. xix. 21. And again, Jesus said: "If any man serve me, let him follow me." John xii. 26. And again: "And he said to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." Luke ix. 23.

The next question then to be taken into consideration is, by what authority did Jesus preach the gospel? Did the power naturally exist within himself? or did he preach by supernatural authority? Said he: "All things are delivered to me of my Father: and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father; and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him." Luke x. 22. As much as to say that no man was able to testify that God was God, or that he was the Son of God, without revelation from heaven. And again: "I do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me." John viii. 28. "Jesus answered them, and said, My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. He that speaketh of himself seeketh his own glory." John vii. 16, 17, 18. He set forth no principle, he preached no gospel only as he was taught of his Father, which was in heaven. By what authority did his Apostles preach and baptize? "I have called you my friends; (said the son of man,) for all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you. Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you." John xv. 15, 16.

Said he: "As thou hast sent me into the world; (speaking of his Father,) even so have I also sent them into the world." John xvii. 18. "And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach." Mark iii. 14. "And said he unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark xvi. 15, 16.

And again, said he: "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Matt. xxviii. 19. We will next notice those whom Jesus Christ chose, ordained and sent forth into the world to preach the everlasting Gospel. "If ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you ward, how that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery, as I wrote afore in few words." Eph. iii. 2, 3.

"But I certify unto you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me is not after man; for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Gal. i. 11, 12. Paul then preached the gospel by revelation, and not by the wisdom or learning of this world. Said the same writer again: "And no man taketh this honor to himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron." Heb. v. 4.

Hence it is plain that no man can preach the everlasting Gospel, even that gospel that was preached by Jesus Christ and his Apostles, excepting he be authorized from heaven. And any other gospel or doctrine aside from that which was preached by them cannot save, and is not calculated to benefit the human family. Paul marvelled in his day at some of the believers for being turned away from the pure gospel, to that which was spurious.

He wrote to them respecting it: "I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you unto the grace of Christ, unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, if any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." Gal. i. 6, 7, 8.

Seeing then that the Apostles were commissioned by legal and proper authority to preach the gospel, and to administer in the ordinances pertaining thereto, it will be well to notice some of their preachings and practices, in regard to the order of the kingdom of God.

See the Apostles preaching on the day of pentecost, and Peter's instruction to those that were pricked in their hearts.

They said unto Peter, and to the rest of the Apostles: "Men and brethren, what shall we every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, be baptized, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For this promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts ii. 37, 38, 39.

Compare this with what the Apostle Paul wrote on the subject of calling: "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe on him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" Rom. x. 14. "When the Apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them that they might receive the Holy Ghost: for as yet he had fallen upon none of them; only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost. Acts viii. 14 to 17.

This then was the order of the kingdom of God in the days of the Apostles. In regard to the reception of the Holy Ghost, it will be well to notice some more of the rich instructions of the Son of God, pertaining to the eternal plan of salvation. He spoke on this wise: "I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman." John xv. 1. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." John xiv. 15. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him." John xiv. 21. "If a man love me, he will keep my commandments: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." John xiv. 23. Again, hear his conversation with the ruler of the Jews, Nicodemus: "Jesus answered and said unto him, verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. Nicodemus saith unto him, how can a man be born when he is old? can a man enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born? Jesus answered, verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water, and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." John iii. 3, 4, 5.

"Paul, having passed through the upper coasts, came to Ephesus; and finding certain disciples, he said unto them, Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be an Holy Ghost. And he said unto them, Unto what then were ye baptized? And they said, Unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after him; that is, on Christ Jesus. When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spoke with tongues, and prophesied." Acts xix. 1 to 6.

By the laying on of the Apostles' hands then the believers received the Holy Ghost, the gift of tongues, and the spirit of prophecy. "And when Simon (the sorcerer) saw that through laying on of the Apostles' hands the Holy Ghost was given, he offered them money, saying, Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Ghost." Acts viii. 18, 19. Hear the answer of Peter: "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought that the gift of God may be purchased with money. Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter; for thy heart is not right in the sight of God.—Repent therefore of this thy wickedness." Acts viii. 20, 21, 22.

The subject of immediate revelation being one in which mankind have little or no faith, I shall dwell more largely upon that subject. John the revelator says: "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Rev. xix. 10. Paul, the Apostle, writes thus respecting the same: "Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages, and from generations, but now is made manifest to his saints, to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles." Col. i. 26, 27. Likewise the same wrote on this wise: "But of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly, that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night." I Thess. v. 1, 2.

Again: "Touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you; for ye yourselves are taught of God to love one another." I Thess. iv. 9.

Again, said the Son of God: "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day. For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment what I should say. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak, therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak." John xii. 48, 49, 50.

And again: "Enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat. Because straight is the gate, and narrow is the way, (not ways,) which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matt. vii. 13, 14. Likewise: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. vii. 21.

Hence you can plainly see the necessity of being inspired by a supernatural influence, or power, that he may have the testimony within his own breast, to bear him witness that he is pursuing a course acceptable in the sight of heaven. John said: "A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven." John iii. 27. And Paul said: "Now we have received not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." I Cor. ii. 12.

INDIAN FUNERAL.

BY J. L. C.

The evening succeeding our arrival a young girl related to Mucka-da-pe-na-se (or the Blackbird) died. Her father came to us for cloth and trinkets, with which to decorate her body. Of course we could not refuse them. The custom is one which originates in the purest feelings of human nature, and, though linked to a heathenish superstition, evinces a tenderness of affection we do not expect in an Indian. To appreciate the extent of this, one must know how few worldly goods they possess, and how many are required for this testimonial to the dead. Indeed, with all our civilized refinement, we have failed to make death as beautiful as he. He even shuns the word. The departed are not extinct—forever gone. They "sleep," or the "sand is upon them." And in their simple faith they believe that Manitua has received them into a happiness so perfect that earth has not its counterpart. And even now, when christianity has made the office of the great destroyer more apparent to them, and consequently more terrible, they fondly cling to their old custom of surrounding the deceased with those things he loved best when living.

I went to the lodge where the corpse was laying. The monotonous "thump," (the word, though vulgar, is the only one that expresses it,) of a native drum, and the worldless chant of a medicine man, were the first sounds that greeted my ear; but soon I distinguished that low, smothered wail, peculiar to the Indian women, when mourning the dead. It is impossible to conceive anything, unless one has felt it in his heart, so eloquent as grief. A man came out, and at first ordered me away; but recognising in me a connection of the tribe, invited me to enter, which I declined. He then, with a courtesy as unreasonable as unexpected, drew his knife and cut a hole in the bark, through which I beheld the interior.

The corpse, robed in the finest of cloth and silk, and surrounded by every thing that anxious affection could have lavished upon her, if living, occupied one side. On the other, at the upper end—the man's place—sat the medicine man, clad in a rabbit skin robe, with his bag upon the mat before him, and his drum in his hand. Next succeeded the father of the deceased, then the male relations, and lastly the females, down to the daughters of the family, who, as is generally the custom, were nearest to the door. A few faint coals served to light the scene, and to separate the quick from the dead.—She had been beautiful when living, and fair for one of her race. If the disease, which had so long preyed upon her until death in tender pity snatched her to himself, had left the impress of pain, destroyed the roundness of her cheek, or pinched her faultless features, a gentle smile resting upon her face, like a sunbeam, hid it all beneath its brightness; and she laid surrounded by other girlish ornaments, and decked in her daintiest apparel, as if sleeping a sleep of sweet dreams, and destined to know an awaking of joy.

Upon the succeeding day she was buried. All of her relations, —and they who understand Indian consanguinity, will appreciate what a multitude—followed her to the grave. Something like a procession was attempted. First came a man bearing the flag of the United States and the banner of the Chippeway nation, one in each hand—certainly an adroit method of avoiding the question of precedence. The latter was a singular affair, composed of crane (the armorial bearing or do-daim of the greatest clan of the Chippeways) hawk and eagle feathers, confined by a red and curiously worked binding at their points, to a pole, leaving their plumage free to float upon the wind. The body followed, in a coffin, suspended by wythes from two stout poles, the ends of which were borne by four chiefs. Next was the father and male relations, with their faces blackened; then the mother and sisters, disheveled hair and downcast heads, their sobs, laden with the accents of affliction, forming a touching contrast to the mute sorrow of the men. Having arrived at the grave, the bearers deposited their burden upon the earth, while the mourners sat themselves around, and resorted to the consolation of the never failing pipe. After several minutes spent in this manner, the sound of drums, accompanied by yells, and the firing of guns, was heard in the distance, and drew nearer and nearer, until a group of twenty-five or thirty warriors ranged themselves around the body, and commenced a slow, measured dance, in honor of the dead. They discharged frequent salutes, loading their pieces as they danced. Three males and five females sang a wailing chant, which would have been melodious if it had not been accompanied by the drums. The warriors, however, moved in perfect time to it.

At length, the character of the dance changed. The step became more animated—the music a song of triumph, and was often drowned by the terror-striking war whoop. The dancers continued to move around the grave; but they were no longer performing the offices of sorrow. They were consoling the living, endeavoring to dispel from their minds the thought of their bereavement. Ever and anon they paused, and some noted warrior came forward and related his deeds on the war path. One had killed a Sioux brave, and dedicated his soul to be the slave of the diseased girl in heaven. Another had taken a scalp, which he said her spirit could laugh at. Another had slain a noted chief, who was on a retreat. As he was running at the time of his death, he could carry her back to the spirit land so quick that she need eat but once on the way.—Thus one after another came forward, some brandishing their weapons to show how they had taken scalps, others firing guns,

(Continued on second page.)

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 4.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 51.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

BEAVER ISLANDS AND EMMET COUNTY.

(Concluded.)

AFFAIR WITH THE BENNETTS.

Two men, Richard O'Donnell and James Hoy, had beaten Samuel Graham, a leading Mormon, with a cane, breaking his arm and fracturing his skull. Warrants were issued for their arrest, but Sheriff Granger would neither arrest them, or suffer it to be done. He took them in his personal keeping, pretending to employ them as assistants; until the attempt to arrest them was given over, when they returned to the fisheries.

Wm. N. McLeod, Prosecuting Attorney for Michilimackinac County, went to Beaver to direct a prosecution. Under his advice a Constable, with two men, went to arrest them. They were resisted by Thomas and Samuel Bennett with loaded guns, and driven back. Soon after the Constable returned with a posse of some thirty men, and additional warrants for the Bennetts, and acting under the official instructions of the Prosecuting Attorney.

The Bennetts refused to surrender to the Constable, and as he drew back to call his posse to assist, fired upon him. At the second shot he fell, seriously though not mortally wounded. The fire was returned. There was a crash of arms one moment, and all was still. Thomas Bennett was dead—shot through the heart. Samuel had one hand nearly shot away.

There were upwards of seventy fishermen within three-fourths of a mile, who had a military organization, and had been well drilled. They were banded together to resist arrests, and had agreed on a signal for a call to arms of three guns. But the rapid discharge of arms alarmed them, and prevented the signal being understood. Some fled to the woods, and some took to the Lake in their boats. Before the rest were ready for action the posse were upon them, and compelled them to disperse. O'Donnell was pursued upon the water, and taken.

A Coroner's inquest was held on the body, and a verdict brought in according to the facts. This jury consisted of six Mormons and six Gentiles, and their verdict was signed by nine of the Jurors, the other three declining to sign on the allegation that it was not in proof that the Constable was a citizen; pretending that if he was not a citizen, the warrant and his office would neither protect him nor his posse in the doing of their duty. In fact he was a citizen; but it is doubtful whether another instance can be found of the raising a question of that kind, for the purpose of charging an officer criminally for obeying the mandate of his warrant.

Had the same resistance of the legal authority occurred at any other place, and a public officer performed similar duties in like manner, his conduct would have been applauded by the public voice throughout the length and breadth of the country. But in this case it was spoken of everywhere as a most atrocious murder. Statements were published in nearly all the papers, representing that the Bennetts were unarmed, and only standing upon their legal rights against "Mormon law;" that the Mormons had long before doomed them to death; and on that occasion had killed and cut in pieces one of them, and terribly mutilated the other, from mere blood-thirstiness. The surgical examination was garbled into a tale of post mortem barbarities, such as cannibals would turn pale at the rehearsal of.

The account of these transactions reached Detroit after the indictment, and previous to the trial of Mr. Strang and the other Mormons indicted in the District Court of the United States. The Daily Advertiser advised not on the prosecution of this posse as murderers; but of Mr. Strang also, who was in Detroit when the events occurred. The indignation excited against the Mormons by these events was a most dangerous preparation for their trial; but they passed the ordeal unscathed.

A great effort was made to produce the impression that these Bennetts were substantial farmers, and respectable and liberal minded men. Nothing could be further from the truth. They were escaped felons from Ireland, who kept beyond the bounds of civilization, to avoid the extradition laws. They had been some time in Mackinac, where they were noted for thieving propensities, and the place becoming too warm for them, had taken up their abode at Beaver Island. Thomas took an Indian wife, and lived with her till the expense of supporting the children was more than the value of her work, when he turned her off late in the fall to provide for herself. On her way to her father's, at Traverse, she was overtaken by a storm and perished, with all her children.

Samuel Bennett prosecuted nearly all the men on Beaver Island, charging them with the murder of his brother. Sheriff Granger commenced raising a posse at Mackinac ostensibly for the purpose of arresting the accused, but really for the purpose of wasting the entire Mormon settlement on Beaver Island. Jacob Sammons, of Duncan, learning the purpose, remonstrated, and offered to go alone and make the arrests.

The result justified his confidence in the peaceable and law-abiding disposition of the Mormons. He went alone to Beaver, and gave out notice that he had come to arrest the men concerned in killing Bennett, and wished them to meet him at a designated place the next day to be arrested.

In the mean time two men, H. D. McCulloch and Samuel Graham, had gone to Mackinac and been arrested and thrust into jail. Notwithstanding this, they met Mr. Sammons, according to his request, and above twenty were taken into custody, and remained there prisoners in his hands till the United States steamer Michigan returned with Mr. Strang on board, and a number of public officers charged with arresting divers other persons, and taking the testimony of numerous witnesses, to be read on his trial, when part of them were transferred to the custody of the Marshal of the United States, and Sammons chartered a vessel and took the rest to Mackinac.

At Mackinac he had the utmost difficulty in protecting his prisoners from the mob. They were taken before O'Malley, and ordered to prison. The Mackinac jail is a log building, in a side hill, consisting of two rooms, cold and damp, like an out door cellar, each only eleven feet square. One room is a dungeon, and the other has two grated holes, twelve or fifteen inches square, without glass. It is furnished with neither beds, chairs, benches or table. To such a place fourteen men were committed to remain ten weeks, until the charge against them could be laid before a Grand Jury.

The intention evidently was that they should perish of the confinement. But Granger's cupidity saved them. They arranged with him to allow them to go out and work about town, they paying him for their board, which he also charged to the County, thus giving him double pay for boarding them.

The excitement against them had passed off, and as they were industrious men, they got plenty of work at a place where good laborers can scarcely be got at any price. As steamboats came in almost daily, covered with passengers, these men were pointed out to them as the Mormon "prisoners for murder," and the idea of keeping men on such a charge, in the public streets, at work about on docks, where steamboats were coming and going at all times of day and night, was so perfectly ridiculous as to produce a strong suspicion, even with those prejudiced against them, that the prosecution was without any foundation.

The tragedy had sunk to a farce; but as if it needed one more scene to mark it with its true character, Sheriff Granger, while he held these men prisoners for murder, summoned them to serve him as a posse in executing a writ of replevin, where he was resisted; two of them as appraisers of replevied property, and finally a majority of them as Jurors on an inquest, which was held before him. The Sheriff pocketed the fees, because they being his prisoners he was entitled to their services. No bills were found against them, and after eleven weeks detention they were discharged. But the Grand Jury, in order to keep up some show of justification for the violence which Mackinac had exhibited in the matter, indicted two persons who were not in custody, and who were no more complicated in the matter than those they refused to indict.

GENERAL OPPRESSION.

Between the 11th April and the 23d of June, 1851, ninety-nine Mormons were arrested on Beaver Island and carried to distant places, prejudged and foredoomed, to answer to criminal charges. Some individuals had to run the gauntlet on from twelve to forty different accusations. Before the end of August every one had been legally acquitted, and returned home. Yet so voracious was the public maw for some tale of Mormon rascality, that their discomfited accusers found as many to feast on their fables as ever.

Besides prisoners, a great number were taken away on compulsory process as witnesses. At one time but twenty-four men were left. The women cultivated the fields, and thus produced the crops which the following winter saved the settlement from starvation.

In addition to prosecutions, the United States Marshal seized large quantities of square timber, on the allegation that it was wrongfully taken from public land. Most of this was cut on lands belonging to individuals. That cut on government lands was taken in accordance with instructions of the Commissioner of public lands. And Mr. Strang held in his hands a written official note from Geo. C. Bates, the District Attorney who prosecuted him, advising him to cut the timber, and assuring him that he should not be prosecuted.

These seizures were abandoned, but before the timber was restored, Peter McKinley, whom the Marshal had left in charge of it, had four thousand feet belonging to Mr. Strang thrown into the Lake.

But some of the Deputy Marshals engaged in the seizures took quantities belonging to the Gentiles, who had engaged in these prosecutions, most of which was sold—a single act of justice amid a long train of wrongs—for they had no excuse. They were mere trespassers.

STEALING ON THE FISHERIES.

In the spring of 1852 a large body of fishermen and traders came on, prepared for hostilities. The Steamer Northern landed fifty in a body at Whiskey Point, but the buildings were in a ruinous condition, and the prospects so unpromising that most of them left on the same boat.

A large schooner started from Mackinac a few hours later, with a still greater number, well armed, and avowing the intention to kill the Mormon men and take the women on the fishing grounds to cook and do the drudgery. Learning the failure of the other party, and that the Mormons were prepared to welcome them, they abandoned the undertaking.

Among those that remained, two immediately commenced selling whiskey to the Indians, and before a week passed around found themselves charged with a penalty of twenty dollars for violating the Statute; and only escaped further prosecution by shipping off their liquors, and promising reform.

They then went on the fishing ground, and went into partnership with a Mormon in the fishing business, and after selling off their stuff and getting a quantity of fish, one went with the fish, pretending to go for supplies, and the other took the boat which belonged to the Mormon alone and went to Mackinac, boasting there that he had stolen enough to make good his fine for selling liquors. At Mackinac this was considered an excellent joke.

Transactions like the following were frequent through the summer. A lantern, a piece of chain and some old irons were stolen from the wharf at Presque Isle, one hundred and twenty miles east of Beaver, and several respectable new spars, issued many hundred miles away, published flaming notices of the transaction, representing that the Mormons were the thieves; as though anybody would go a hundred and twenty miles to steal a few shillings worth of property, such as could be picked up nightly in any neighborhood. Among these the "Green Bay Spectator" took the lead. Stories of this kind were so often repeated, that their utter incredibility was lost sight of.

As an extreme example of this, may be mentioned the "Buffalo Rough Notes," which gravely published a statement that the Mormons habitually boarded the Lake Steamers, and pirated what they pleased; and they, with one eminent exception, submitted to it.

Any one who had taken pains might have collected during that summer fifty accounts of Mormon depredations on the property of others, gravely and circumstantially asserted, in respectable newspapers, not one of which would have been credited for a single moment, had it been asserted on any other people; every one made up of improbabilities, and containing the most glaring absurdities and impossibilities. Yet these were credited and repeated from mouth to mouth undoubtingly by those who in other matters are not over credulous. It is clear enough if any reliance can be placed on newspapers and legends, that the Mormons have a most plenary power of miracles in mischief-making, and if not preserved from destruction by the Almighty, are wonderfully and supernaturally strengthened in villany and protected from punishment by the Devil.

Numerous thefts were committed upon various fishermen on Beaver Island, all of which were charged to the Mormons. But in several instances the stolen property was finally discovered in the hands of other fishermen; in none was it found in the hands of the Mormons. Many instances occurred where fishermen reported themselves stripped of everything, and unable to pay the sums advanced to them by traders, and getting new supplies, left for distant fisheries, where they were found in possession of the lost property, having made a good speculation out of their own falsehoods and the trader's credulity.

This system once begun was overdone, and soon no fisherman on Beaver could get credit. At the same time a general system of plundering the Mormons was carried on by the fish-men. This was not a new practice. As early as 1850 Mr. Strang had landed 14,000 feet of lumber, on Whiskey Point, where he owned a small piece of land, and a few weeks after there was not 1,000 feet left. More than twenty shanties were afterwards found on the remote and secluded fisheries, covered and floored with this lumber, and not even the marks obliterated. But in 1852 the fishermen supplied themselves regularly from the gardens of the Mormons, and some considerable fields of potatoes and turneps remote from dwellings were quite cleared out.

A few Mormons were fishing, and their nets were lifted and stolen till they were quite broken up; but while this was going on, the guilty were detected, and prosecutions commenced. The Mormons recovered their damages. On the criminal prosecutions part of the accused escaped, and the rest gave bail, and accused and bail left the country together.

MR. STRANG IN THE LEGISLATURE.

In 1851 there was a new apportionment of Representatives among the Counties of the State, and though Emmet and above twenty other unorganized Counties in the Lower Peninsula were attached to Michilimackinac for judicial purposes, yet on this apportionment they were all included with Newaygo, Oceana, Lake and Mason in a single Representative District, and Michilimackinac became a District by itself. This apportionment was probably made without much consideration, for it is very evident that not a dozen persons in the State thought of the Mormon settlement being in Newaygo District.

Had the people of Peaine township voted as a part of Mackinac District, they would have controlled the election; but their votes would have been liable to be rejected, on the ground that the apportionment bill placed them in Newaygo District. But if they voted as part of Newaygo District, there was no mode provided in law for the return and canvass of their votes.

A more serious difficulty was, that, by the Constitution, all the State north of township twenty was included in the District of the Upper Peninsula, and elected its Representatives the last Tuesday in September; but Newaygo was one of the Districts of the State at large, and elected the Tuesday following the first Monday in November; and it was questioned whether the Legislature had the power of detaching Emmet County and legislating concerning it as part of the State at large. Moreover it was disputed whether the Beaver Islands were really in Emmet or Michilimackinac County, the general but erroneous opinion being that they were in Michilimackinac.

The universal opinion was that the Mormon settlement was in Michilimackinac District, and it was known that it could control the election. But the Mormons concluded that legally they were in Newaygo District, where the result was uncertain. Mr. Strang was put in nomination, but his name not announced till election day. There were four other candidates in the field, and he received more votes than any three of them.

The Canvassers met at Newaygo, seven hundred miles by any traveled route from Beaver, and had no intimation that Mr. Strang was in the field, or the Mormon settlement in their District, till Mr. Chidester arrived there as Canvasser for all the unorganized Counties attached to Michilimackinac. He succeeded in satisfying them that the Beaver Islands were in their District, and Mr. Strang received the certificate of election.

This result was exceedingly mortifying to Mackinac, and the more violent set about devising means to defeat it. At the town meeting the spring previous Mr. Strang had been elected Supervisor of Peaine, and in the effort to prevent his sitting with the Board the Grand Jury had trumped up an indictment against him, hoping to frighten him from the place, and E. A. Franks, one of the Jurors, mentioned the fact in his hearing, before the warrant issued, but Mr. Strang would not leave, and on being arrested refused to give bail, and waited the result. After being in custody five days he was turned at large, and continued to visit Mackinac both on official and private business, as he had occasion, unmolested.

But on its being ascertained that he was elected to the House of Representatives, a warrant was issued on this old affair for his arrest, and the plan laid to seize him on his way to the Capitol. There was no officer nearer than Detroit having jurisdiction of the writ of habeas corpus, and the session would close before a writ could be obtained and executed.

This plan was defeated by Mr. Strang's going by way of Green Bay. But Mr. Irvine, District Attorney of the Upper Peninsula, went with a warrant to Detroit, and engaged an officer there to meet Mr. Strang at Lansing, and arrest him, immediately before the call of the House. The special deputation of the Detroit officer to execute this warrant was a forgery.

In the mean time the certificate of Mr. Strang's election had been withdrawn from the files of the Secretary of State, and Mr. James Barton, who stood next to Mr. Strang in the canvass, came on from Newaygo to contest Mr. Strang's seat in his absence. This would have given Mr. Barton a clear field, neither an opponent or a certificate of election against him, and the universal opinion in his favor.

The plan signally failed. Though charged with a breach of the peace, so that he could not claim privilege from arrest under the Constitution, Mr. Strang claimed privilege as to the manner of the arrest, at common law; insisting that he could be removed, only by permission of the House, after they had examined the ground of the proceeding. As the officer charged with his arrest determined to remove him forcibly, before the House assembled, he prepared for defence, and notified him that he should treat any attempt to remove him as an unprovoked assault; saying, significantly, when his claim of privilege was disputed, "I will put my neck in a halter upon that."

When the House was called, he laid a duplicate of his certificate of election on the Clerk's table, and was sworn in. Informing the House of the attempt to arrest him, after several propositions, a Committee was appointed to investigate the matter, who reported the facts at length, coming to the conclusion that the arrest was attempted, not for the furtherance of justice, but from private malice and persecution, and a desire to deprive the House of his services as a member. He was discharged from arrest by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Barton's petition for leave to contest his seat immediately came up, and being referred to the Committee on Elections, two reports came in, the majority report being adverse to Mr. Strang. Leave was granted to the parties to be heard at the bar of the House. Mr. Taylor, Ex-Secretary of State, appeared for Mr. Barton. Mr. Strang defended himself, in person. His defence was spoken of in the press generally as marked with great ability, and an extraordinary amount of legal learning, and general information.

Mr. Strang maintained his seat, by a vote of forty-nine to eleven; which considering that both prejudice and legal opinions were against him in the outset, was a fine tribute to his learning and ability. But what was still more complimentary, some of the ablest members of the House stated in their places that they were not only convinced by the arguments of Mr. Strang, but that their prejudices were quite removed. Among these were the Hon. E. Ransom, of Kalamazoo, for a long time Chief Justice, and once Governor of the State.

The effect of these proceedings was to give Mr. Strang a high standing in the Legislature, and among the public men of the State. He fully maintained that position through the session. At its close he had carried all the measures which his District, consisting of twenty-six Counties, asked, and was universally acknowledged to have exerted more influence than any other member, without having ever condescended to anything short of the most open and manly means.

When he entered the House, Newaygo and Oceana Counties were organized and fully detached from all other Counties, but had no judiciary except Justices of the Peace and Judges of Probate. Consequently no crime, however heinous, committed there, could be punished. Judgments recovered before Justices of the Peace could be appealed, which laid them on the Clerk's files, and operated as a perpetual stay of execution.

Grand Traverse had not so much as a County organization legally existing, but was fully detached from all other Counties; and was, therefore, utterly without law. One-fourth of the State, extending from township twenty to the Straits, had only a single township organized in it, and only a foreign judiciary. There were several portions of the territory of the State not in any County, and therefore not subject to the jurisdiction of the judiciary, or of any local municipal authority, and it was in the most serious dispute to what Counties some of the largest settlements in the District belonged.

These and a hundred other wants growing out of the blundering legislation of thirty years were remedied, leaving him abundance of leisure to attend to all the general business of the session. The organization of Grand Traverse County was perfected, two new Counties and eight new townships organized, and a judiciary and municipal government provided for all parts of the district.

ATTEMPT TO KIDNAP MR. STRANG.

The people of Mackinac were mortified at Mr. Strang's success as a legislator. As he was on the steamer Morton in May, 1853, bound for Buffalo, but stopping at Mackinac a few minutes, an attempt was made to kidnap him, with the avowed purpose of "serving him as they did old Jo."

This attempt was made by a gang of rowdies, without any official authority, who had an old writ on which he had before been arrested and legally discharged. Mr. Strang defended himself, barricaded his stateroom door, where he remained in a state of siege till the boat entered the Saint Clair, when he broke

(Continued on fourth page.)

NORTHERN ISLANDER;

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1854.

SAMUEL GRAHAM.

At a meeting of the citizens of Springport, Jackson county and vicinity, the Hon. Samuel Graham, late of Beaver Island, was called upon to give a lecture on the subject of Mormonism, showing its moral and political bearing upon community. When, at the hour appointed for the commencement of the services, the Rev. J. S. Comstock, the standing advocate of Mormonism in that vicinity, arose and requested the privilege of introducing Mr. Graham to the audience. Whereupon it was thought expedient to organize the meeting, which was done by calling the Hon. Josiah Whitman to the chair, and appointing Richard Moore, Secretary. After the meeting was duly organized, the Rev. John S. Comstock proceeded to warn the people against listening to the remarks of Mr. Graham, stating that inasmuch as he had once been a zealous advocate of the doctrine which he was then opposing, his remarks would be merely to traduce individual character, and not an attack upon the doctrines and principles of Mormonism. Hence they were to receive the statements which he (Graham) was about to make with due consideration and caution; and after making some personal remarks upon Mr. Graham, and prejudging the matter to the audience, he very unceremoniously took his leave, without waiting to hear a reply; an act of cowardice seldom witnessed amongst the preachers of that doctrine—after which Mr. Graham arose and proceeded to disclose, in an eloquent, clear and concise manner, some of the distinctive doctrines of Mormonism, showing their moral and political bearing upon the world of mind. After he closed his remarks, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, That the doctrines of Mormonism, as taught by Jas. J. Strang and his votaries, are anti-republican, demoralizing, poisoning to the minds of the youth, and dangerous to the free institutions of our country.

Resolved, That inasmuch as Samuel Graham has been an able advocate of those doctrines for about eight years, having preached them throughout the United States, and being in possession of all the facts in relation to the corrupt administration of Jas. J. Strang, it devolves upon him as a lover of freedom, and a friend to humanity, to deliver a series of lectures throughout the Union, in exposition of those corrupt doctrines, and unburden the minds of those led away by the cunning devices of Strang, and his adherents.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be sent to some paper for publication.

JOSIAH WHITMAN, Pres't.

RICHARD MOORE, Secretary.

The foregoing is from the Jackson Patriot, of Oct. 5th, 1853, but as the Patriot did not send us a copy, we have but just got our eye upon it. We can hardly see the justice of giving free admission to articles of this kind in respectable papers, and not so much as putting the injured parties in possession of a copy, so as to advise them of the attack upon them. We know not how far such is the custom among editors; but we have never yet said an unkind word of any one without sending, or endeavoring to send, to him a copy of the paper containing it.

It is no part of our policy to defame or in any degree injure the character of those who go out from among us; and we shall not now depart from the rule which has so far governed us in this respect. Nor do we think it would add anything to the reputation of Mormonism, could we show that Samuel Graham—once a zealous advocate of that faith, but now its bitter opponent—was as great a scoundrel as he accuses his late friend, Mr. Strang, of being.

"Revile him not—the Tempter hath
A snare for all—
And pitying tears—not scorn and wrath—
Befit his fall.
Scorn! would the angels laugh to mark
A bright soul driven,
Fiend-goaded, down the endless dark,
From hope and heaven!"

But though we will not depart from so safe a rule, we owe it to ourselves and perhaps to the public to take some notice of this new mission and dispensation which has been committed to

"the Hon. Samuel Graham," and of this new gospel which "devolves on him, as a lover of freedom, and a friend of humanity," to deliver in a "series of lectures throughout the United States." And whenever he takes upon himself the mission of this new Apostleship, we will cheerfully do our part in furnishing the new fledged ambassador with credentials of capacity, if nothing more.

Indeed, in no respect would we do worse than the Hon. Josiah Whitman, President, Mr. Richard Moore, Secretary, and the meeting of which they were officers. For we did believe, while he was among us, that Mr. Samuel Graham was a fair and honorable man. It is true that some very grave accusations followed him from his former residence in Jackson County, but it is so common to tell falsehoods upon all who join the Mormons, and his appearance was so fair, that we did not deem them deserving a passing inquiry. It was not till about the time of his apostacy that his moral character fell into doubt here. Whatever opinions have been entertained of him here since then, no unfriendly allusion has been made to him in our columns. If we have not commended, so we have not accused.

Not so the meeting at Springport. "Set a thief to catch a thief." So says the old saw, and so say they. In the first resolution they denounce the doctrine of Mormonism as "demoralizing, poisonous to the minds of youth, and dangerous to the free institutions of our country;" and in the next, recommend Mr. Graham as a public lecturer, because he has been eight years preaching those corrupt doctrines. Cannot a man be found to lecture against Mormonism, who has not been eight years engaged in poisoning the minds of the youth, corrupting the public morals, and destroying the free institutions of the country?

Here, it is not disreputable to be a Mormon; and to have been an able advocate of Mormonism for eight years, would be no mean introduction into society. But at Springport, where the Mormon doctrine is believed to be "anti-republican, demoralizing, poisonous and dangerous," to be a Mormon would naturally produce a strong suspicion of want of veracity.

Hence we justly had some confidence in Mr. Graham while he was among us, especially before we discovered any exceptional act in his conduct.

But how is it with the people of Springport, where Graham's sole recommendation is, that he has been an active participator in the alleged Mormon corruptions for eight years? If our doctrine is, so dangerously corrupting, what is there in the antecedents of Samuel Graham to assure them that he could advocate it and constantly dabble with it eight years and escape contagion?

No doubt when thieves fall out, they disclose each other's peculations; but it is equally true that when hypocrites fall out with honest men, they accuse them of such crimes as they themselves would commit under similar circumstances.

Having never been partners in crime with Mr. Graham, we have never had anything of that kind to tell on him. If he has been an associate in crimes and moral pollution, he kept his conduct and associations secret from us.—He so carried himself as to retain the confidence of the public generally in this place, until he was found in league with our enemies. Whatever we have since seen and learned of him, we are content that he shall be his own trumpeter.

The people of Jackson County will readily perceive that there is nothing in the time and manner of Mr. Graham's separation from the Mormons to exempt him from the full force of the obloquy of Mormonism, if, in fact, that institution is disreputable.

If the Mormons were really building such an institution, and teaching such doctrines as Mr. Graham now represents, they would naturally confer the highest offices, and those which carry with them a knowledge and control of affairs, on such as had been tried in inferior stations, and found possessed of the necessary obtuseness and recklessness.

Now, this Samuel Graham, before he left Jackson County for this place, in 1848, became one of the highest officers in the church, and the personal adviser and confidant of the Prophet, and so continued until near the close of the trial of the Prophet before the United States District Court in Detroit, in 1851. During all that period he was an influential adviser and an active participator in the leading transactions of the Mormons, exercising constantly probably more influence than any other man, except the Prophet; and not unfrequently during his numerous and long absences, filling his place and performing his official duties.

During that period the Mormon settlement on Beaver Island grew up from a little handful of a half dozen families to nearly its present importance, and all its institutions were formed and put in operation. Had those institutions received the public approbation, no man could have denied to Samuel Graham a large share of the credit of establishing them. With the reputation he has helped to give them, shall he escape his share of their pater nity?

Whatever answer the people of Springport make to this question, they cannot but see that Mr. Graham all along knew just what Mormonism was, and that it is foolish to pretend that he advocated it while he believed it pure, and abandoned it when he discovered it corrupt. They must know that during the last three years of Mr. Graham's eight years ministry, he knew the character of Mormonism just as well as he does now; and they are aware also that often during that period he went among them and exhibited as much zeal in proselyting them to Mormonism as he does now in convincing them that what they spitefully said of his doctrine was true.

Such an advocate of Mormonism Graham continued to be, until some time after he left Beaver Island, and ceased to be a dweller among us. All he knows of Mormonism now—all he knows of "the corrupt administration of James J. Strang"—he knew as well, while he was the zealous propagator of the one and the vigilant minister of the other.

And the kind of instrumentality he had in propagating Mormonism, and the time and nature of the testimony he has borne in its favor, are such as to give a very suspicious character to his present opposition, whatever conclusions the public may come to as to the subject matter.

In 1851 the Mormons on Beaver Island published the book of their institution and doctrine, entitled—"The Book of the Law of the Lord, consisting of an inspired translation of some of the most important parts of the Law given to Moses, and a very few additional commandments, with brief notes and references,"—which contains the quintessence of their system, and the body of whatever is in it, good or evil.

The divine authority of this "Book of the Law" is attested by the following certificate:—

"Be it known unto all nations, kindreds, tongues and people, to whom this Book of the Law of the Lord shall come, that James J. Strang has the plates of the ancient Book of the Law of the Lord given to Moses, from which he translated this law, and has shown them to us. We examined them with our eyes, and handled them with our hands. The engravings are beautiful antique workmanship, bearing a striking resemblance to the ancient oriental languages; and those from which the laws in this book were translated are eighteen in number, about seven inches and three-eighths wide, by nine inches long, occasionally embellished with beautiful pictures. And we testify unto you all that the everlasting kingdom of God is established, in which this law shall be kept, till it brings in rest and everlasting righteousness to all the faithful." Signed, "Samuel Graham," and six others.

In July, 1851, after Mr. Graham had ceased to reside at Beaver Island, he was called as a witness before the United States District Court at Detroit, and this book and certificate called in question; and Mr. Graham, there, before the Hon. Ross Wilkins, Judge of the District Court, and in the name of the Great God, swore a solemn oath that this certificate was true.*

We know it has since been plead in his behalf that there was some kind of prevarication by which he evaded the exact point; that by some mental reservation, or verbal evasion, he only seemed to testify to the truth of this certificate, and carried that impression to Court, Jury and every body else, while captiously avoiding that exact point himself.—Of the moral of such a defence we leave our enemies to judge.

But no such evasion in fact occurred. Mr. Graham was upon his cross examination, in the hands of George C. Bates, one of the most able attorneys in the State, whose object was to discredit Mr. Graham's testimony, by getting some answer out of him which the Jury could not, or would not believe.

The reader will understand the force of the attack from the following considerations:—Mr. Graham's certificate is a most solemn testimony of the divine authority of the Mormon institution. If he had answered that this certificate was false, he would have placed himself just where he seems to be now, the perjury excepted—confessedly guilty of bearing false witness in the matter of salvation, and everlasting life, and of a conspiracy to impose a false religion on mankind.

But he did no such thing.—Mr. Graham, with steady and unhesitating voice, and unchanged countenance, and with such marks of sincerity as to challenge the most respectful consideration, if not actual credence of the persecutors of the Mormons, affirmed the truth of that certificate in all its parts; asserting anew, on his solemn oath, that he had been present near two months as an assistant in the translation of the plates, and much of the time had them in his possession, and reiterated, with his reasons, his unshaken faith in the identity and antiquity of the plates, and their translation by divine power.

Here was no evasion—no dodging the question. The whole was summed up by Mr. Graham answering that he was as certain of the truth of what he had stated in that certificate as of anything which he had sworn to, or anything which he pretended to know.

Mr. Bates was satisfied with the witness' position, and prepared to go to the Jury with the argument, that, if Graham's testimony was true, Mormonism was also true; if the Jury did not believe Mormonism, they could not believe this testimony; if this was false, his testimony was altogether tainted, and should be struck out.

Such was the position voluntarily assumed by Mr. Samuel Graham, not at Beaver Island, nor under the much dreaded influence or terror of the Mormon leaders, but in the city of Detroit, and in the District Court of the United States, by his solemn oath, in the name of the Most High God.

If both this oath and that certificate, on the truth of which, in the great day of God Almighty, souls will be saved or lost, are lies, then are the people of Springport welcome to all the truth they can draw from the same fountain.

But for the matter now in hand it is not necessary to discuss the question of the truth or falsity of Mr. Graham's certificate or oath. It is enough that they are either true or false. He has cut himself off from saying that he was sincere, but deceived. He has placed himself in the catalogue of the knowing ones.

By his own account of himself, he was the bosom and most intimate and trusted friend of the Prophet, and his most influential counselor; possessed of all his secrets; the chief of those Apostles who have established the Mormon institution and doctrine; and in the absence of the Prophet, his Viceroy, exercising all his authority. Yes, and if Mormonism is not true, the holder of a guilty key to the back entree; a wire-worker behind the scenes; a chief actor in a conspiracy to get to himself wealth, influence, fame; something or anything; by swindling mankind out of salvation and everlasting life; by lying to them in the name of the Almighty; and confirming the lie by a judicial oath.

But if that certificate is true; if Mr. Graham was not guilty of willful, deliberate, aggravated and most horrible perjury, before the United States District Court at Detroit, and before God Almighty, what can be said of his present position? Where shall the world look for a parallel in falsehood and treachery?

Personal, political, national treacheries are not to be named with this. Their consequences, at the most, are transitory—of the earth, earthly—and of short continuance; but this is eternal. If Mr. Graham did not lie in the name of the Lord God Almighty; if he did not conspire to impose a false religion on mankind; if he did not commit perjury, such as earth nor heaven had witnessed in a thousand years, then his turning away from the revelations of the Most High; his departure from the Divine Commandment, after receiving heavenly gifts, being made partaker of the Holy Ghost; of the word of God, and the powers of the world to come; where shall the world look for a parallel to this treason against the kingdom, which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God; this falsehood against the Eternal?

We know of none. We can conceive of none but that of the Apostle Paul, after being called by the voice of Jesus Christ, guided and directed by divine revelation, preaching the gospel throughout the Roman empire, and establishing churches in nearly all the cities of Greece and Asia Minor, and taken prisoner to Rome, denouncing Jesus Christ as a traitor against the state and nation—the christian religion as an imposture—the christian doctrine as demoralizing and poisonous to the minds of youth; and going about preaching to his converts, a return to the dead rites of Judaism, and the abandoned superstitions of heathen mythology.

It is right that the Apostles of this crusade against Mormonism should be so base, so self-stultified. Still we cannot help thinking that these facts qualify a man much better to humiliate himself in dust and ashes, and confess his sins, than to preserve the decaying morals of the nation, and prop up the tottering pillars of state.

One other fact the occasion compels us to allude to, though we do so with no disposition to accuse. We will not affect any prudery on the subject of the accusations made by the public and by Mr. Graham against us. They charge us with some improper interference with the marriage relation; and the fact that we really disapprove of the existing social state, is made the occasion for charging us with doctrines and practices which we abhor.

One of the most prominent complaints against the Mormons—is that accusing them of separating families by inducing wives to leave their husbands and come here.

Since the settlement of Beaver Island we know of but three instances of women separating from their husbands and coming here.—They are Mrs. Brown, of Springport, and Mrs. Coltrin, of Parma, Jackson Co., and Mrs. Beebe, of Genesee Co., Mich.

In regard to the latter, it is only necessary to say that, after a residence of some three or four weeks, she left here in company with her husband, who had followed her; and the readers of the Islander will remember that we made her case the occasion of some very severe remarks upon the separation of families, expressing our wish never to see another runaway wife here, and our fixed conviction that every such, whether she succeeded or failed in getting another husband, would in the end repent her delirium in dust and ashes. Everything we have said, everything we have done, shows that our complaint of the marriage relation is, not that the bond of union is too strong, but that it is too weak.

The facts in the other two cases, occurring, one in Springport and the other in the adjoining town, the people of Springport can investigate for themselves. They doubtless are already aware that both women left there and came here under the protection of "the Hon. Samuel Graham." If there was anything corrupt or immoral in either case, doubtless Mr. Graham can tell what it was. We do not know.

If the reader has any interest in knowing what the Mormons did with Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Coltrin, we answer, nothing—as far as we have ever heard, Mr. Graham excepted.—Mrs. Coltrin, after a two or three months residence, left here with her husband. Mrs. Brown, not having the good fortune to be followed, and finding no Mormon who would take her, connected herself in succession with Thos. E. Dodge, a Gentile trader from Saint Charles, Ill.; J. L. Frazier, a Gentile trader from Plymouth, Mich.; Ray Peckham, a Gentile trader from Racine, Wis.; and Andrew Thayer, a Gentile trader from Rochester, N. Y., and has finally taken a mission to Kenosha, Wis., "as a lover of freedom and a friend of humanity." "to unburden the minds of those led astray by the cunning devices of Strang and his adherents."

We can see no reason why her old neighbors, the good people of Springport, should not make her an Apostle of this new dispensation against Mormonism, and send her also on a mission "throughout the Union;" and as the ancient rule was to send Apostles two and two, it might not be amiss to send her and Mr. Graham together. Let them lovingly go, "like idiots gazing in a book, Who leap at stars, and fasten in the mud."

TO OUR PATRONS.

This is the last number of the Islander which we shall send to non-paying subscribers. The next No. will be issued in about two weeks, after which we shall keep the work constantly going on, and seldom if ever fail of the regular issue. No man need imagine that the paper is not printed because he fails to receive it. We shall strike off every name from our mail books which is in arrears. At the same time we shall send this paper to several who are not subscribers, in hopes they will become so.

Payments for the Islander can always be made to us by mail, at our risk. But we will not send another paper beyond Emmet County on credit. We have more than $3,000 of newspaper accounts now on our books, one half of which we will guarantee collectable. Yet none of it is worth collecting. We will give the whole for a farrow cow.

SCIENCE, vs. THE BOOK OF MORMON.

When the Book of Mormon was first published, several attempts were made to impeach its credibility, by arraying history and some of the natural sciences against it. These attempts all failed, and have been long since abandoned, as have all attempts at argument against Mormonism; vituperation and slander against its votaries being universally resorted to.

It is well for us to take an occasional note of these matters, though we are no longer attacked with that kind of arms. Among the "Smithsonian Contributions to knowledge," is a "Memoir on the extinct species of American ox, by Joseph Leidy, M. D.," proving by the most incontestible evidence the former existence and recent extinction of several species of oxen in North America.

So this scientific Institution has fully answered one of the objections first made to the Book of Mormon, that it affirmed the use of cattle in America by the early inhabitants, two thousand years before the discovery by Columbus. The popular opinion was that they were first introduced by the Spaniards.

It is not amiss to add that the American buffalo is truly an ox, and might have been domesticated at an early period, as similar cattle have in India from time immemorial. The musk ox found west of Hudson Bay, and above sixty-five degrees north latitude, is also a genuine ox, and a native of America, found nowhere else, unless possibly in the neighboring province of Siberia in Asia.

So the argument was never good. But whatever doubt may have existed as to a former domestication of the buffalo, none can exist as to these extinct species of oxen. Nothing could be more probable than that the domestic ox in the hands of a civilized people like the Nephites of America, should have been hunted out and become extinct after the conquest of all their country, by their more savage neighbors the Lamanites. But in a grass producing country, and a mild climate like the Mississippi valley, no race of wild oxen could become extinct until the country was well peopled.—Like European cattle, horses, buffalo, &c., they would increase infinitely, and range the country in countless herds.

SALT LAKE AFFAIRS.

We are not in receipt of any recent news from Utah, and are looking with anxiety for information from that quarter. We were quite surprised recently to learn that the population of Utah is but eighteen thousand.

But this information does not shake our confidence that they will maintain themselves against the Indians, and any other force that shall go there to disturb their peace. Nor do we think it a misfortune to the Brighamite Mormons that military protection is not extended to Utah, as to other territorial settlements. In the end they will have to take care of themselves, and the incursion of a few barbarous bands of Indians among them will compel them to learn the art of war, and insure them to watchfulness and self-defence. There are enough of them to withstand all the Indians in Utah.

But our latest news from Washington, some two months old, to be sure, shows a new feature in the Utah affairs. In the plan for the organizing the Territory of Nebraska in the proposition to carry its western boundary to the mountains, a few miles this side of Salt Lake City, placing fort Bridger and nearly all the country between it and the Mormon settlement in Nebraska Territory.

The boundary proposed is an unnatural and inconvenient one. But the reason given for it is horrible. The friends of justice and religious liberty, if there are any in the country, must have been shocked at Mr. Richardson, of Illinois, avowed the intention and effect of the proposed change.

Fort Bridger was established many years since by the man whose name it bears, as a place for carrying on Indian trade. During his long residence among them, Bridger had obtained great influence over the Indians.—After the commencement of the war of the Indians upon Utah, and after the regular revocation of Bridger's license as an Indian trader, it was ascertained that he was furnishing arms and ammunition to the hostile Indians.

For this crime process was duly issued against him in the name of the United States, and an attempt made to arrest him, and where did he flee to avoid an arrest for aiding and abetting an Indian tribe in making war on the United States? To Washington—to the seat of government.

And because the persons injured by the war are Mormons, it is now proposed to extend the Territory of Nebraska as near to Salt Lake City as possible, without including the Mormon settlements, so that the Indians can shelter themselves from the militia of Utah by a short retreat over the Territorial boundary, and can get their supplies near at hand. Mr. Bridger wishes to go back to his trading house, thirty miles out of the Mormon settlements, and recommence selling guns, powder and lead to aid the Indians in killing Mormons in Utah, and United States officers on public duty in the mountains, and to help him on in so laudable an undertaking Congress propose to dismember Utah.

We do not know the fate of this proposition. But when Doby-eater Richardson, of Illinois, proposed it, no one rebuked him. Such a wretch is a fit representative of Egypt, or the neighboring military tract, Algiers.

STEAMBOAT WOOD.

There are now three wharfs at this place prepared to sell steamboat wood, and one at Galilee in such a state of forwardness that first class boats can get to it, though it will take some two months to complete it.

But the supply of wood is not commensurate to the facilities for disposing of it. We are not precisely informed of the amount on hand, but presume it will not vary much from three thousand cords.

But what wood is on hand is of the very best quality, of good length, nearly all body wood, and much of it well seasoned. The supply of seasoned wood will more than supply the trade till the green is seasoned.

But the wants of trade require more wood than has been cut. Unless choppers are employed to cut and teams to haul wood, there will not be enough for the summer and fall trade. It is hoped that twenty or thirty hands may be employed constantly in cutting. Yet the wants of agricultural labor almost forbid it.

The price of wood this year will be $1.75 per cord, and possibly may rise higher; but this rise will not be equal to that in articles we purchase.

DYE'S BANK MIRROR.

We are in the regular receipt of "Dye's Bank Mirror," a very good Bank Note Reporter, published at Cincinnati. Circulation 75,000. Its illustrated descriptions of counterfeiters are very valuable.

THE MUSICAL WORLD AND TIMES

I just what its name indicates, a musical paper for all the world, well deserving the attention of those who delight in sweet sounds.

CLIMATIC STATE OF BEAVER ISLAND THE PAST WINTER, FARM. THERMOMETER.

	December.	January.	February.	March.	Means.
Mean for the month,
at 7 A. M.,	25.21	14.74	12.53	23.64	19.03
Mean for the month,
at 2 P. M.,	27.52	18.39	21.51	33.00	25.10
Mean for the month,
at 9 P. M.,	25.31	16.09	15.10	25.11	20.42
Mean of the three observations,	26.04	16.41	16.38	27.37	21.55
Highest range,	45.00	38.00	43.00	53.00
Lowest do	10.00	10.00	11.00	4.09
Greatest variation
in one day,	9.00	22.00	28.00	30.00
Days Three below zero,		5	5
Days Three above freezing,	11	9	5	16

This will be recognized by those acquainted with our climate as an unusually severe winter. The lowest range of the thermometer since the Islands were settled was 12°, and 4th of Feb. morning was but one degree short of it. This, exceedingly cold as it is with us, is not as cold as it occasionally is in all inland places three or four degrees south of here. But the extent of the Lakes, and the immense depth of water, gives uncommon steadiness to the weather, and moderation to the changes.

Probably many places may present a milder mean, and yet have had severe weather a portion of the winter.

We usually look for cold winters with high water, and last year was the highest water in two centuries. But as the water began to fall early in the summer, and continued constantly falling till winter, many looked for a mild winter.

There is every prospect of a continued fall of the Lakes for some years to come, and of course a reasonable prospect of mild seasons.

Larks appeared March 20th. Singing birds about the 1st April. Vegetation is coming forward freely, but there are large quantities of ice in the Lake.

The prospect of high prices in provisions the coming season has had the effect of sending many persons into the woods to make farms. The woodman's axe is heard generally through the Island, and the best locations are being rapidly filled up.

It is necessary that we produce grain for our own consumption, otherwise we shall be forever troubled with scarcity. The lands in these Islands are as well adapted to growing wheat as any in Wisconsin, and for grazing are equal to any in the United States. The same may be said of large tracts on the east shore, which can be opened to settlement at the present time without the slightest difficulty.

We shall have a mill to do our grinding the present year, and as there is every prospect that flour will bear a high price for two or three years, it is all important that we produce our own. Land enough is now improved to raise a fine portion of the supplies for the inhabitants. Already we have a full supply of the coarser crops, and shall have some to spare for the spring trade.

NEW SETTLEMENTS.

It is deemed of considerable consequence to make a good beginning in the settlement of Pine River early this spring. It was intended to settle there last spring, but a great crowd of Gentiles rushed in and prepared for hostilities. Now they are all gone, and there is no prospect that any of them will return. If the brethren go in, in good season, there is not the slightest danger of interruption.

Pine River is the next location in this region for building up an extensive farming community. The proper situations for settlement are some miles inland, but having good water communication with all the world.

Fishing and wood business can be done there only to a limited extent. Nor is it a lumber country, though there is good timber for all necessary home purposes. It is essentially an agricultural country.

The settlement at Drummond Island needs reinforcement. Indeed, it is scarcely begun. As the situation is a valuable and important one, it offers great inducements to the enterprising.

Many of the small Islands in this immediate neighborhood are well adapted to settlement, and have some partially improved lands, with good grazing.

THE FISHERIES.

The Beaver Island fisheries have for a long time been in the hands of a numerous rabble of fishermen, who had not the slightest interest in their preservation. The custom with them has been to throw the fish offal into the Lake, and every autumn numerous nets are lost by hard storms, which remain at the bottom filled with the carcasses of the fish caught in them. The buoys of other nets are carried away, leaving the nets regularly set, and continuing to catch fish until they rot away.

The effect has been to drive off the fish, until the fisheries seemed to be failing. Numerous valuable fisheries have been destroyed in this way, but the progress of destruction was arrested here two years since, and last fall the improvement was very perceptible.—The present year will probably be as favorable as any formerly. The strictest measures will be taken to preserve the fisheries.

Small sail vessels will leave Saint James weekly, during the season of navigation, for Fox Islands, Grand Traverse and Pine River, carrying the mails. They will touch at the other Islands as often as business requires.

THE ICE.

The extent of the ice last winter was greater than has been seen at any previous time within the memory of man, though the quantity is not as great as it was two years ago. At that time there were numerous ranges of icebergs, miles in length, from forty to seventy feet high, and not unfrequently resting on the bottom in six or seven fathoms water.

Last winter these ranges were few of them—above fourteen feet high, and not very extensive, and it is seldom that the bottom is found plowed by the floating ice in more than two fathoms water.

The ice has at times extended in vast fields as far as the Manitow Islands. These fields are occasionally many miles in extent, and icebergs have been seen about fourteen feet high. But the fields consist of broken, scattered fragments of ice, and there has been no day that a steamboat could not have passed them.

The existence of ice in that region in any quantity, is a new thing. When the wind was light, these ice fields could be passed on one side or the other. But if high, they would soon pass to some other region.

LATER.

OPENING OF NAVIGATION.

The Propeller Wisconsin, Capt. Hickey, arrived last evening from Chicago, bound for O-swego, being the first arrival of the season. She brings Elders Brownson, Finch, Loomis and Fields from their winter's mission, with a few emigrants, and report large numbers on the way.

The Wisconsin encountered large fields of ice at the Fox Islands, but had no difficulty in passing it. There is no prospect of her getting through the Straits immediately. The wind is strong from the east, a favorable wind for opening the Straits, but the thermometer is only up to 32°, and the ice does not waste rapidly.

We look momentarily for the Lady, usually the first boat through, and expect to see a fleet within three or four days. Several sail are near the Manitow Islands. By passengers on the Wisconsin we have a few papers, and very little news.

We find the following in the Chicago Tribune, of March twenty-fifth, which is the last and nearly all we can find from that quarter. "This Indian alliance is very powerful, but we are confident the Brighamites will successfully resist it, and we believe the overland emigrants will suffer more by the hostilities than the Mormons. Our only fear for the Mormons is in the known cowardice of some of the leaders. The body of the people have the genuine buckram."

The Mormons had fortified Salt Lake City in Nov. last, to some extent, and the prospect is that it will be the first walled city in the United States:—

"The latest advices from Salt Lake City state that Walker, the Utah Chief, was preparing to give the Mormons battle. He has sworn that the war shall be one of extermination, and, as he has enlisted the Camanches and Apaches in his cause, a bloody struggle may be expected. An endeavor was made by the Mormons to negotiate a treaty with him, but his demands were of such a character that they would not comply with them. He required that they should build him a house as large as Gov. Young's, on a prominence near the city, pay him a large sum of money, and furnish him with as many wives as their veritable Governor has. So far as the house and money was concerned, the Mormons were willing to comply, but furnishing the wives was another matter, and here the negotiations ceased.—It is a matter of much regret that this difficulty should have occurred, as during the prevalence of Indian hostilities, the route to California across the plains will be one of much danger, especially to small parties of emigrants."

EUROPEAN WAR.

We are unable to ascertain from our meager file of papers, the state of the war question in Europe and Asia. It appears, however, that Turkey is making a noble stand against the aggressions of Russia, and that she is sustained by France and England. The prospect is that Europe is about to become a vast battle-field. The result will be a serious change in the map of Europe.

AMERICAN POLICY.

The policy of the American Government at the present time is undoubtedly national extension. A quarrel has finally been picked with Spain, in the hope of seizing Cuba; but Mexico, Central America, and the Pacific Islands are all in the way. The Americans are essentially a land-stealing people. The cloud of war in Europe is their occasion to extend the model Republic.

A vessel will leave this place for Grand Traverse carrying and bringing back the mail in a few days. We have had no mail since early in Feb. Anticipating an earlier opening, we had arranged to have our spring mails from there instead of Mackinac. Had not this arrangement been made, we should have had another mail over the ice previous to this.

(Continued from fourth page.)

down the door and jumped off on a wharf on Canada shore. Here the matter ended.

EFFORT TO OVERRIDE THE LIQUOR LAW IN EMMET.

At the same time the people of Mackinac called a meeting to devise means for destroying the Mormons; at which resolutions were passed disapproving the conduct of the Legislature in creating township and County organizations within sixty miles of Mackinac, and denouncing war against Emmet County, in case any person was arrested for violating the Liquor Law; and offering sympathy and assistance to the band of outlaws at Pine River and Grand Traverse Bay, and some fishermen on Gull Island, in waging war upon the Mormons.

Unfortunately the outlaws at Pine River took this in earnest. Entering into league with a disaffected family of the name of Hill on Beaver Island, who acted as spies for them, they stole large quantities of nets from the Mormons and Indians fishing at Beaver, and set fire to an immense quantity of Railroad ties, ready for shipping.

Before this crime was traced to them, the Sheriff of Emmet went to Pine River to summon three persons residing there to serve as Jurors at the approaching Circuit Court. On his way, learning that the outlaws at Pine River had determined that no process whatever should be served there, and violence threatened against any officer who attempted it, he got a second boat and took in all fourteen men, unarmed, believing that the presence of that number would prevent violence, till his business was known; when it was supposed the animosity of a portion at least would be appeased.

This reasonable opinion was not realized.—The criminal opposition to lawful authority there was greater than could have been anticipated. Believing that the Sheriff had come to arrest criminals, a large force assembled to meet him at the place of landing, prepared for battle.

He was permitted to land, and immediately met with a demand, what he had come for.—He stated the nature of his business, and showed his processes. While this was going on they examined his boats, and ascertained that he was without guns.

They then crowded up with such unmistakable signs of hostilities that he returned to his boats. Thirty of the outlaws were strung along the beach, within four rods of the boats; from thirty to fifty on the bluff, immediately back, rising abruptly some twenty-five feet high.

As the Sheriff's party were getting into the boats, this crowd commenced a murderous fire upon them. The wind was on shore, and the boats got off with difficulty. Before they had got beyond gun shot range, some had fired four rounds. Six men were wounded; some of them very severely, but none killed. More than fifty balls passed through the boats and rigging.

The outlaws took boats and pursued for twelve miles, the latter four of which they kept up a running fire, but without effect.—The Sheriff finally took refuge on the barque Morgan, where the wounds were bound up, and the same night he returned to Beaver.

The intention of the outlaws was to kill the whole party, and then report that they had been killed while engaged in committing some crime, and thus set public indignation against the Mormons. The Sheriff escaping, they took alarm, lest some signal act of revenge should follow, and all fled. The fishermen at Gull Island, and who were in league with them, fled as soon as they got the news. Not a soul was left at either place.

Scattering in such hot haste they failed to agree upon any story to tell, for the purpose of charging the blame on the Mormons. At Mackinac an attempt was made to put afloat the story that the Mormons had shot first, and wounded a boy. But the history of the matter was already before the public, and they failed to successfully falsify it.

At the Circuit Court held at Saint James shortly after, the guilty parties were indicted, but none have been arrested.

Since then there has been no attempt to interrupt the due course of legal administration in Emmet. The population is rapidly increasing. Though as yet it has no rich men, it has no paupers. There are schools for all the children. No liquors are sold, and the population are contented, prosperous and happy. The Indian population are superior in moral and material progress to any others in the State.

CONDUCT OF MACKINAC TOWARDS THE MORMONS.

From the first opening of the controversy against the Mormons, with a few honorable exceptions, the people of Mackinac have joined in every project for their destruction with relentless hatred. Immense and immeasurable as was the previous blackguardism, turpitude and rapacity of Mackinac; infamous to a proverb, in her reeking corruptions; her conduct towards the Mormons has been more than ordinarily intemperate, indecent and violent.

Mackinac, which was mostly built on plunder, and enlarged and beautified by stealing from the United States the town on Drummond Island, surrendered by Great Britain; which gained all its wealth, supported its luxury, and supplied the waste of its immense and unequalled dissipation, by plundering the national treasury, and robbing and stealing from the Indians; has exhausted the vocabulary of the language, for words wherewith to accuse the Mormons; who were six years in her exclusive jurisdiction without her being able to convict one of an offence; though so shameless in her proceedings that public officers boast of stealing from the Mormons by the perversion of legal authority.

The people of Mackinac had stood at the public treasury, like pigs at a trough, with nose and feet in, and received nothing from the nation but favors; and upon the first sound of arms surrendered their place, and took money and the oath of allegiance at the hands of the British; and now they find a poverty of words, and a marasmus of language to express their horror of the treason of the Mormons, who after being robbed and plundered of millions of property by the public authorities in two different States, and exiled from their boundaries, have determined to flee no further; to die upon their native soil, rather than flee from their country, for a home where they can worship God.

Rhetoric is exhausted in the vain effort to describe the morals of Mackinac, and its surrounding dependencies; where men raised to civilization have separated themselves from the restraints of society, leaving families and character behind, to give loose reins to lust and avarice; dreading no frown from the powerless, illiterate and dependent Indians; no loss of caste among the fellows whose errand is the same unrestrained saturnalia, in which actors and victims alike perish; where Indian men are brutalized by persuasions and temptations, which a Christian education and the experience of mature years in civilized communities, would resist in vain; that their wives may be intoxicated by compulsion, and prostituted by violence, before their eyes; where the humanity of the Indian has been ignored, and his rights placed below those of the dog, and thousands murdered by slow debasing processes of torture, immeasurably more cruel than the Indian ever knew how to inflict; for no greater temptation than the profits on adulterated whiskey: where men who are ashamed to intermarry with the colored races, have taken not only marriageable Indian women, but Indian wives, as prostitutes, and concubines during pleasure; till the streets were filled with half bloods, whose fathers were ashamed to acknowledge them; using their own daughters and grand-daughters as prostitutes in the same polluted bed with their mothers, till incest with the mixed races ceases to be despicable in their eyes.

Yet in this Mackinac, whose tints no logomachy can make life-like, are stalking about, wretches with withered and tearless eyes, wilted cheeks, shrunken vitals, and hearts where pulsation is dying out, and whose consciences are in no trouble in the recollection of robbery, rape and murder; asking assistance from Christian men to exterminate the Mormons: while in her mansions, late returned from loathing infamy, to revel in wealth and falsehood; amassing and destroying, and destroying and amassing; living lives made up of the refuse of human depravity; her chief men invoke the power of the mob, the stiletto of the assassins, the poisoned chalice, the perjury of their creatures, the perversion of the law, the corruption of the judiciary and the crushing weight of State and national government; to help them steal a few farms made valuable by the labor of Mormons; and correct the morals of a people among whom in seven years not one child has been born out of wedlock, and the sole discovered case of fornication or adultery punished by publicly whipping and banishing the guilty man from the settlement.

In Mackinac, where at the Indian payments the most respectable men have heretofore considered stealing from the Indian annuities honorable; where hundreds of inexperienced whites, and thousands of Indians, have been victimized and their lives destroyed for the sole purpose of obtaining their property; where gambling, drunkenness and debauchery swallow up all things, and during one third of the year are the sole employment of the population; where twenty cold blooded murders have been committed within the memory of man, and not one punished; where, till recently, poor men were imprisoned and sold without law and without process; where law is scarcely resorted to, except to gull or destroy some one by the perversion of it; and where the public officers, the sworn conservators of the peace, openly and shamelessly appeal to the mob power to override the authority of the law, and publish their perjured infamy with their names signed to it; there, in such a place, the men are found to complain of the Legislature for giving a legal organization to Emmet County, the inhabitants of which have never been guilty of an offence against the peace and good order of society.

Such conduct, out of the common order as it is, is not incomprehensible. Equally with that of a Burke or a Thug, it belongs to Pandemonium. But it is equally a matter of cause and effect.

When the Mormons were expelled from Missouri, the public meeting at Independence, which determined their expulsion, published their reasons for so doing, declaring that they did not proceed against them at law, because they had violated no law; but, that, on account of difference in religion, and in domestic institutions, (having no slaves,) the presence of the Mormons was incompatible with the happiness of themselves; therefore they would expel them, peaceably if they could, and forcibly if they must.

Yet, in spite of this public declaration, made by the Missourians, it has for years been asserted, and is believed by ninety-nine in a hundred, even in the free States, that the Mormons were banished from Missouri for their crimes.

So readily was this falsehood credited, that when an attempt was made to steal a country in Illinois, made valuable by the industry of the Mormons, the first move was to accuse them of enormous crimes, and the most astounding corruptions, as an excuse for the wrongs which were to be inflicted on them.

Though the Governor of the State, who was present during most of their calamities, over-awed and prevented from defending them; the Senate Committee appointed to investigate and whitewash the cruelties practiced on them; the Hon. S. A. Douglass, the distinguished Senator from Illinois, then Judge of the Criminal Courts in that District; and Col. Kane, of the United States Army, who witnessed their expulsion; all agree that the patriotism, morals and industry of the Mormons was far superior to that of their enemies; yet Christian men have labored successfully in convincing mankind that the Mormons were guilty of all they were accused of, and that the half was not told.

Then why should not men, clothed with iniquity as with a garment; reeking in corruption like the sewer of a slaughter house; whose whole lives are a mystery of iniquity; incomprehensible except by the deductions of Pandemonium; who have for fifty years built up and dwelt in a Colossus of wickedness, at the vastness of which human nature stands aghast; appeal to the same deep seated prejudice; the same wicked credulity; to sanctify more deeds of blood; assist them in destroying a successful rival to their trade; stealing a country preferable to their own; and prolonging the decay of Mackinac, till they can sell to victims able to pay for improvements which are rapidly becoming worthless.

The tide is now turned. Withering, blasting condemnation has come on these outlaws, and their more influential coeppers. The tale of Mormon ignorance, cupidity and wickedness, has been resorted to, till the well informed perceive its hollowness and falsehood.—The dignity and manhood of the Mormons has been vindicated in the presence of the assembled wisdom of the State, and their moderation and justice in its highest Courts. The same prudence which characterizes their past acts will insure them a glorious future.

ISLANDS IN EMMET COUNTY.

Besides numerous small and uninhabitable islands, and one of one or two hundred acres in extent in Grand Traverse Bay, the following habitable islands are included in Emmet County:—

ISLANDS.		LENGTH.	BREADTH.	EXTENT IN ACRES.
Beaver Group.	Big Beaver,	13 6 1/2	3 1/2	35,219
	Garden,	5 2	2	4,401
	Harbor,			10
	Hog,	3 1/2	1	2,071
	Hat,			11
	Rabbit,			69
	Virgin,			96
	Trout,			81
	High,	3 1/2	2	3,510
	Gull,	1 1/2	1	140
Fox Islands.	Holy,			1
	Le Galet,			1
	Patmos,	5 1 1/2	1 1/2	3,382
	Paros,	2 1/2	1 1/2	777
Summer Islands.	Big Summer,	3 1/2	1 1/2	2,130
	Little Summer,	1 1/2	1 1/2	583
	Poverty,	1 1/2	1 1/2	192
	Little Isle,	1 1/2	1 1/2	10
	Saint Martins,	2 1/2	1 1/2	1,322
	Gull,	1 1/2	1 1/2	14
	Little Gull,	1 1/2	1 1/2	6
	Gravel,			1

BIG BEAVER.

This Island is the largest in Lake Michigan, and one of the finest in the world. The Harbor at Saint James is the best in the Lakes, having an entrance eighty rods wide, with sixty feet water, a perfectly land-locked cove of great depth, with clay bottom, sufficiently extensive to accommodate a thousand vessels.

Saint James is the County seat of Emmet County, the seat of the fishing trade for Lake Michigan, and the head quarters of the Mormons east of the Rocky Mountains. It is a small but flourishing place, and cannot fail of getting a rapid growth.

It is scattered in groups amidst old forest trees, on dry rising ground, having a landscape of matchless beauty spread to the North and East, which the hand of improvement will rapidly develop.

The principal articles sold are fish and wood, and the purchases are dry goods, flour, salt, cordage and hardware. Small quantities of lumber are made, and a great number of fish barrels. Some attention has been given to boat building, and a few small schooners have been constructed here. There is one saw mill. Three large wharves are devoted to the wood business.

There is a Post Office at Saint James, the only one in Emmet County. A printing press has been in operation there for four years, and a weekly paper is issued.

At the South-East extremity of the Island is the new village of Galilee. The only business yet opened is that of getting out wood for steamboats. A large wharf has been built for that purpose. At the southern extremity of the Island is a Light House.

Most of the Island is well adapted to agriculture, and farms have been opened in every part. It produces all the crops usually cultivated in New York, Ohio, Wisconsin and Iowa, in perfection.

GARDEN ISLAND.

The Indian name of this Island is Tagoning, signifying garden or cultivated land. It is now inhabited by about two hundred Indians, who subsist by fishing and raising corn and potatoes. Many of them can read and write; their morals are good, and they are improving; and what is quite uncommon, are increasing in numbers.

HOG ISLAND.

Hog Island is occupied by a few families of Indians. Most of it has been in cultivation, but is now grown up to forests. Large fields, however, remain to grass. The soil is poor, but well adapted to grazing, and very little labor would be requisite to open an extensive grazing farm.

HIGH ISLAND.

High Island has considerable waste land, but much of the soil is of the very best quality. It has extensive old fields, most of which are grown up to forests, but some remain to grass. It is exceedingly well adapted to settlement, and the Mormons have a small beginning.—The Harbor is deep and bold, with good anchorage, but not entirely land-locked.

PATMOS.

Patmos is a mountain rising abruptly from Lake Michigan, to the height of two or three hundred feet. The summit is rolling and beautiful, and a most excellent soil. Towards the South-East the land is but moderately elevated, and exquisitely beautiful. There is the Mormon settlement. Several farms are opened, but there is room for more. No better farming land is found anywhere. There is no Harbor, but the shores are bold, and the landing good with any kind of craft.

BIG SUMMER.

Big Summer is the largest and most valuable of the Summer Island Group. It is partially surrounded and cut in different places by steep ledges of limestone, but the soil is excellent for cultivation. It has an excellent Harbor, which will naturally draw around it the business of the group, and build up a pretty little town.

SAINT MARTIN.

Saint Martin is elevated four hundred and fifty feet above the Lake, and its shores are precipitous limestone cliffs. Around it are valuable fisheries, and the soil is fertile, and well adapted to farming.

LITTLE SUMMER.

Little Summer Island has a good soil for agriculture, and the fisheries around it, though not extensive, are good. Its shores are rough and precipitous, but the water full of reefs and shoals.

POVERTY ISLAND.

Poverty Island has precipitous shores, a good soil, and fisheries of some value. It deserves a better name than it has received.

LITTLE TRAVERSE BAY.

Little Traverse puts up deep into Emmet County, nearly dividing the main land. The head of the Bay is an excellent Harbor, well adapted to local commerce. It is too far off the regular steamboat routes to attract the steamers on the long lines. Nevertheless, when the country settles, it will become a place of much consequence.

The Indian settlements around Little Traverse are extensive and prosperous. The soil is well adapted to agriculture, and the country well watered. There are several streams furnishing good water power, and considerable quantities of valuable timber around them.—But it is not so abundant, as to tempt lumbermen to make lumber for export.

PINE RIVER.

At the centre of the promontory between Grand and Little Traverse Bays, a small River enters Lake Michigan. On the old maps it is named See-pe-wa, or Green River; but is now known extensively by the name of Pine River. This stream is only a quarter of a mile long, and comes out of a Lake of about one hundred acres in extent, which is connected by a River only sixty rods long with Long Lake, sometimes called Pine Lake.

Pine Lake extends by its main or widest channel fourteen miles up in the country, and by a narrow Bay branching from one side several miles further. The shores of this Lake are bold, its waters deep; it embodies some beautiful islands; it is indented by numerous promontories; separated by deep Bays, and Harbors; presenting as fine natural scenery as the eye of man ever beheld.

The country around Pine Lake is well wooded, maple and beech being the prevailing timber. There is enough of pine for the use of the inhabitants, but the quantity does not accord well with that name.

The mouth of the River is closed by a bar, with no more than two feet of water. Inside this the depth is sufficient for steamboats.—But there is still enough between Pine Lake and Lake Michigan to drive mills. The Bay in which Pine River discharges, makes a very good Harbor; and with the advantage of water power, inland navigation, and a fine back country, it cannot fail of becoming a flourishing place.

When the outlaws who had been engaged in the crusade against the Mormons left Beaver, many of them went to Pine River. There they were joined by others from various quarters, ostensibly for the purpose of fishing.—The fisheries have never supported the settlement. Indeed, very few fish were sold. With no other visible business, they continued to increase till 1853, when they numbered seventy or eighty men.

These men made an occasional descent upon Beaver to steal from the Mormons. But as their object was to steal, they were not particular who suffered by it, and were prowling about the Lakes at all times, and taking whatever was in their way, and charging their own thefts to the Mormons. The breaking up of their settlement after the murderous assault on the Sheriff of Emmet, gave security to property for fifty miles around.

THE NORTHERN FARMER.

Vol. 1, of the enlarged, 48 page edition, commences January 1st, 1854; specimens now ready, and beautifully illustrated, the entire volume to contain about two hundred engravings, executed in the best style. This is the cheapest and most popular paper ever published in this country. It is adapted to all sections of the United States, having a large circulation in every State in the Union. It is highly valuable to poultry breeders, bee keepers, farmers, and the people of every class and condition in life. Edited by T. B. Miner, author of the "American Bee Keeper's Manual," and the "Domestic Poultry Book," recently published, a very popular work, containing 350 pages, and 130 splendid portraits and engravings, at only fifty cents per copy.

Postmasters act as agents by virtue of their office. Specimen numbers sent free, on application. The following is the regular Prospectus for the volume, and the periodical will not fall short of its character as here given:—

PROSPECTUS FOR 1854.

The Northern Farmer is published monthly, at Utica, Oneida County, N. Y., (Editor's address as below,) and contains forty-eight large octavo pages. It is devoted to Miscellaneous Literature, Practical Agriculture, Cattle, Sheep, Swine, Poultry, Bees, the Diseases and Cures of Animals, Rural Architecture, the Mechanic Arts, Modern History, and numerous other interesting subjects, either original, or gems culled from the entire Encyclopedia of Domestic and Foreign Literature, with a view to render this work not only the cheapest, but the most interesting and beneficial to people of all classes, that has ever emanated from the American Press.

ITS ILLUSTRATIONS.

This paper will contain more costly engravings of Cattle, Sheep, Swine, Poultry, Bee Hives and Bee Housings, Views of Foreign and American Landscapes and Cities, &c., &c., than have ever appeared in any magazine or periodical at the same price in this country.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

Several pages will be exclusively devoted to the interests of the Ladies. Many rare plants, flowering shrubs, roses, &c., in the culture of which they are interested, will be illustrated by engravings, and the manner of their cultivation will be given. Many hundreds of the most valuable original and selected recipes in domestic cookery, &c., will be furnished, and a large amount of useful, instructive, moral reading will be contained in this department, that will have a tendency to improve the minds of young ladies, and cause them to be better prepared to assume the domestic duties of life.

THE YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

This Department will embrace Travels in Foreign Countries, History, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Essays on Morals, Business Habits, &c., with much other matter by the best writers. In brief, neither money nor labor will be spared to render the entire work superior to all other similar productions.

ITS MERITS AS A STOCK REGISTER.

The proprietor will aim at making this journal the most authentic Stock Register in the country, and the best breeders in the United States will contribute to its pages. Persons owning blooded animals are invited to send in descriptions, with their opinions of their merits, which will be paid for in cash; and if they possess cuts or engravings of their animals, they will please forward them by express.

THE PRACTICAL CHARACTER OF THE PAPER.

The Agricultural Department of the paper will contain the writings of men who have held the plow and swung the scythe, and visionary, theoretical schemes of the day will be discarded. The wheat will be gleaned from the chaff, and sound, solid science, that admits of no overthrow, will take the place of theories that only confuse the mind, without possessing a practical application.

ITS ADAPTATION TO ALL SECTIONS.

This periodical will be of universal interest, and will be read with the same approbation in the Canadas, Oregon, New England, the Middle and the Southern States, California and the far West. It will be strictly a national paper, using its influence for the promotion of the welfare of all alike.

ITS CHEAPNESS.

The proprietor wishes to furnish a periodical for the especial benefit of the people, the bone and sinew of the land, in which they may all be heard, and in which all may feel at home. Such a journal must be cheap, possess great merit, and have a very extensive circulation; and these results can only be effected by the active co-operation of its patrons; and for the purpose of rewarding all who exert themselves in obtaining subscribers, the following very low club terms are offered:—

TERMS.

1 copy per annum, $1.00. 5 copies per annum, to clubs or agents, to different addresses, 4.00. 10 copies per annum, to clubs or agents, to different addresses, 7.00. 20 copies per annum, to clubs or agents, to different addresses, 12.00. And all larger numbers at the same rate, sixty cents per copy!—Cash in advance—and all papers discontinued at the expiration of the time paid for.

Additions may be made to clubs at any time, at the club rates. The back numbers from January furnished in all cases.

Bank bills current where subscriptions are obtained, will be received in payment, also Post Office stamps. Small sums in silver, when carefully enclosed, may be safely remitted.

Canada subscribers supplied with the small edition at the same rates as to all other subscribers, but three cents per annum extra on each volume of the small edition, required to pay postage to the line. Specimen numbers sent free, on application, post paid.

THE SMALL EDITION.

This paper is also published monthly, under the title of "The Northern Farmer, sixteen page edition," and it is designed for those who prefer a smaller paper at a smaller price. Its form, size of pages, &c., are precisely like the forty-eight page edition, being made up of choice selections from it.

TERMS.

1 copy per annum, 31 cents. 5 copies per annum, to clubs or agents, to different addresses, $1.00. And all larger numbers at 20 cents per annum.

Address, T. B. MINER, Clinton, Oneida County, N. Y.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 6.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 48.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

For the year, $1.00; for three months, $0.50; for one month, $0.25. In advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether of business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per line (12 lines for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made of those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

BY MARY DIEMER AMES.

[For the Rochester Daily Democrat.]

They tell me that she still is young,
Though now she bows 'neath a load of care,
And deep lines cut in the marble brow,
The cold hand of grief hath furrow'd there.
They tell me that not long ago,
Those eyes were bright and that face was fair;
Now her lustrous orbs wear a lenden hue,
And frost lies thick on her raven hair.

A low, and cold, and darksome room
Is this, where she sits and weeps and sews;
The furnace tempest raged without,
And the howling wind moaned wildly blows.
It creeps in the half hung door;
It rattles the broken window pane;
The shattered roof does not shelter her,
From the chilling snow, and driving rain.

What if the glorious sun look down,
As if to gladden her dreary lot,
With his genial rays so bland and warm,
In her gloomy prison she sees them not;
What if the earth be filled with flowers,
And breezes dance on the grassy hills;
And singing birds and rejoicing streams,
A thousand hearts with their gladness fill?
Her life-long task is not yet done,
From her dark abode she doth not stir;
God's gifts so lovely, so beautiful,
She deemeth not they were made for her.

When the dawning light her task begins,
But it endeth not when the day is done;
Though full of pain thro' the long, long night,
Weary and suffering she still sews on.
And thus she toils through all her years;
Though joy has flown and though hope is dead;
Sewing and sewing, and sewing on,
For the scanty need of daily bread.

What wonder that the wine of life,
So soon consumes in each fevered vein?
What wonder the soul's light waxes dim,
In a body worn with woe and pain?
O, marvel not that death comes soon,
And grasps in his, that shadowy hand!
God giveth that, she hath never known,
Sweet rest—a home—in the heavenly land.
O, blessed man that sells for gain;
O, blessed woman in splendid dress;
Think of the stricken and sorrowing ones,
Who turn to you in their wretchedness.
We give our tears to the poor slaves,
Who 'neath the rod of the tyrant smart;
O, let us be the down-trodden ones,
Whom we daily meet in the crowded mart.
Rochester, June, 1853.

From Arthur's Home Gazette.

INVESTIGATION.

BY ELIZABETH JESSUP FAMES.

Mysterious thing! the property of beings

With whom instinct is instinct, prompt and strong

Eye of the soul! the inner mysteries seeing

Unthought—unasked—resistless borne along

And, like a flash of vivid lightning, striking

Conviction home, attracting or disliking.

A marvellous gift—such as God made men finds it—

Illuminate at once by innate reason,

Yet still unreasoned on! Genius enshrines it

Instinctively! It hath no time or season.

It is inspired without its will or power,

And blossoms in the soul a spiritual flower.

It follows where the Prophet's foot has trod,

And comes at once from Nature and from God!

Eye of the soul! its living power and presence,

Translucent orb, around the mental moving

In the pure light of Truth's ethereal essence,

With chemist test distinguishing, and proving its power!

Wisdom's high worth from folly's effervescence

The following, from the Rochester Daily Democrat, sufficiently explains itself. The first letter, signed "S. A. E." was written to whitewash and excuse the attack made by a band of outlaws at Pine River on Sheriff Miller, while engaged in summoning Jurors.

We do not know who S. A. E. is, but presume he is some good natured denizen of Rochester, who spent a few weeks in the region of the Straits, in search of large tales, and gave them to the public without much attention to their credibility.

We give the letter, and Mr. Strang's reply, that the falsehood and refutation may stand together.

[ED. ISLANDER.]

THE MORMON TROUBLES AT BEAVER ISLAND—FIGHTING ANTICIPATED.

Cor. of the Rochester Daily Democrat.

MACKINAC, July 30th, 1853.

DEAR SIR:—Thinking that perhaps you might wish to learn some of the particulars of the Mormon difficulty, and being in possession of the principal facts in the case, I thought I would communicate them to you. The Mormons, for some time past, have been committing depredations on the fishing parties, in the vicinity of Beaver Island, on the main western shore, by occasionally stealing a gang of nets or a boat. Last winter, in the absence of the fishermen, they burned their houses, together with a number of barrels of fish and salt, which had been stored there during the winter. Their depredations continued, until the fishermen at last became exasperated, and made application to the town of Mackinac for material aid. A meeting was immediately called, and not a little bustle and confusion made. Nothing, however, was accomplished. The fishermen returned without success, depending on their own resources for defence against these midnight marauders.

The Mormons still continued, whenever an opportunity offered itself, to pilfer the goods of Mackinac merchants, which had been sent to the fishing grounds for trading purposes. The merchants were finally compelled to remove their goods. Shortly afterwards they stole a boat from a Mr. Bushee, who kept the light house on the Island of Skilagalee, which boat was found in their possession. The circumstances of this last depredation were these: Some one had burned up one thousand railroad ties, that lay at the upper end of Beaver Island, near the light house. The Mormons charged the Gentiles with this, who, I have no doubt, were guilty. They (Mormons), under pretence of summoning Jurymen, went over with two small boats, fifteen men, and four guns. They landed at Pine River, stating that their business was to summon three men as Jurymen.

One of these men had formerly been a Mormon; and one object they had in view was to get this man into their possession, that they might punish him as a traitor. The Mormon Sheriff, Miller, commenced reading what he called a summons; which proved, however, to be a warrant for the arrest of Savage and two others, whom they said they should carry back, "dead or alive." The people at Pine River remonstrating, and threat following threat, the Mormons became alarmed and took to their boats, firing as they started off, and wounding a boy in the leg, and a girl in the arm, six, as the Mormon account states.

I was just now informed that the Pine River people were receiving aid in the shape of money, rifles, revolvers, &c., and that they intend to return to-morrow, and (as they term it) try "titles with them." They all appear to be resolute and determined men, and there will doubtless be a skirmish between the two parties soon. The Mormons threaten to go over with six hundred men and "sweep the land;" but I am informed, by good authority, that they cannot raise one hundred efficient men. Present appearances indicate warm times; and it appears to be the impression here, that it will end in the extermination of the Mormons from Beaver Island. The fishermen are leaving Gull Island and other points in the vicinity of the Mormons.

Yours respectfully,

S. A. E.

THE BEAVER ISLAND TROUBLES.

—The letter from J. J. Strang, the Mormon leader on Beaver Island, will attract attention. It is a reply to the letter of a correspondent (given above) who spoke freely against the alledged conduct of the Mormons. As a matter of justice, give Mr. Strang's letter, with the remark that it is accompanied with very ample evidence of his respectability, from those who have had excellent opportunities of forming a correct opinion. Ed. Rochester Daily Democrat, 27th, 1853.

THE MORMONS AT BEAVER ISLAND.

Answer to S. A. E. by Mr. J. J. Strang, the Mormon leader on Beaver Island.

Saint James, August

EDITORS OF THE NORTHERN ISLANDER:

SIRS—I find in your weekly Democrat of August 4th a communication headed "Mormon Troubles at Beaver Island," &c., and signed "S. A. E." which appears to have been written either in entire mistake, and on the most gross misinformation, or designed to excuse and white wash one of the most murderous assaults ever made upon a public officer, and to encourage and strengthen men whose avowed object is to overthrow all legal government in the county of Emmet.

If you will allow me a small space in your paper, it will give me pleasure to show the real truth in the matter, accompanied with such evidence as will convince those who would prefer to believe something else.

S. A. E. begins by accusing "the Mormons" of a long train of crimes and misdemeanors. Before confiding, I propose to take up each of these specific charges, and show their falsity.

He then accuses "the Gentiles" with feloniously burning a quantity of railroad ties belonging to the Mormons, and, to say the least of it, speaks as though he regarded it a justifiable retaliation. If that is the idea of the writer, it is a most dangerous doctrine to be promulgated in a land of law.

Doubtless, laws may be so bad, and so badly administered, as to justify resistance by a whole people; but it is a new thing to justify or excuse retaliatory crimes. If such conduct can be tolerated against the Mormons to-day, we don't know who will exempt to-morrow. The prejudice which denies to the Mormons legal protection, will not be satisfied with one victim.

The writer then says, "the Mormons" were summoned three times by Sheriff Miller, and that they refused to appear. What he called "summons" was a warrant for the arrest of Savage and two others.

What statement could be more absurd? What falsehood more obvious? What statement could Sheriff Miller have for pretending he had no warrant, if he intended to make arrests? Saying he had no warrant, would encourage resistance. Showing one, usually prevents it. There could be no possible inducement to the Sheriff to say he had no warrant, if he intended to make an arrest. No sane man can believe that part of the story.

I have pursued this point, however, for no other purpose than to discredit S. A. E., for it is equally a crime to resist a Sheriff making an arrest, or summoning a Juror.

I know your correspondent seems to excuse resisting an arrest, by saying that the Mormons wanted to get one man into their hands, and punish him as a traitor. But this assertion is gratuitous and false.

The Mormons of Beaver Island have never taken revenge on any of the numerous individuals who have robbed, persecuted and sought to kill them. They have never sought any but legal redress. The citizens of Emmet to any private, or unlawful, or unconscionable end.

And, more than that, they have never been accused of it, in any specific case. We have often been accused of intending such things; and in general terms, of having done them. But no man has ever specified a single case. None can do it. Let any man attempt to do it, and I stand ready to justify our conduct, not merely to the satisfaction of the impartial, but to the satisfaction of a world overwhelmed with prejudice against us.

Pine River was a fishing village on the east shore, twenty-five miles from the nearest Mormon settlement, containing some seventy-five men, regularly banded together to resist the enforcement of the law; and pledged to mutually support one another in resisting the collection of taxes, the enforcement of the law against retailing intoxicating drinks, and the arrest of any of their number for any offence whatever; and in general to have no law there. And in these undertakings they were guaranteed the aid of the county of Mackinac, by a public meeting, got up by the officials, the proceedings of which you will find in the Detroit Weekly Free Press of May 30th.

Yet your correspondent has the hardihood to assert that at that place, Sheriff Miller, with but fifteen men and four guns, after he had been alarmed with threats and started to leave, was the first to fire, and wounded a boy. Was ever lie so transparent? Was ever tale so preposterous? So incredible?

Neither Sheriff Miller nor any one of the men with him fired a gun, nor did they show one; and the Pine River people did not venture to fire upon him, till some of their men looked into his boat and reported "they have no guns." There was no boy wounded. If so, why has not somebody found out what his name was? The six wounded Mormons were from one end of the United States to the other. Why has he not been seen by somebody? What surgeon dreamed of two wounds?

Your correspondent, after speaking without reprobation, of some efforts at Mackinac to aid in an armed resistance to the authority of the State, and calling a renewal of the attempt to commit a most bloody murder, by the unobjectionable name of "trying titles," says "the Mormons threaten to go over with six hundred men and sweep the land."

All I have to say to this is, it is an unmitigated falsehood. The Mormons have never threatened or proposed to take any but legal redress. And how justly and with how much moderation they have used the judicial power vested in Emmet county. I refer the inquisitive with confidence to the Hon. Samuel T. Douglas, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court, who presided at the Circuit for Emmet county, and to Sidney D. Miller, Esq., of Detroit, who acted as Prosecuting Attorney.

Having disposed of this matter, I will return to the specific charges against the Mormons, and answer them in their order.

The first charge is, "occasionally stealing a gang of nets or a boat," "on the main western shore."

Where fishermen and fish traders "most do congregate." Not one prosecution has ever been commenced there against any Mormon, on any such charge. If there is any proof why no prosecution? If no proof, why are not Mormons entitled to the common right, with other citizens, of being held innocent?

The second charge is, "turning the houses, fish and salt, of the fishermen, last winter and spring." This is but a reiteration of the charge, made in the proceedings of the Mackinac mob meeting spoken of by your correspondent, and published in the Detroit papers. Those proceedings located the offence at Birch Point; said there was indubitable proof that the Mormons committed the offence; that they no longer affected secrecy, but went boldly about the most felonious outrages; and that it was vain to prosecute them at law, because the trial would be in the new county of Emmet, with Mormon Juries.

I replied to this charge, through the New York Tribune, showing that Birch Point is in the county of Mackinac, and the jurisdiction of offences committed there, exclusively in the Courts of that county, and calling upon the citizens and officers of that county, if there was any evidence that the Mormons had committed the offence, to bring it before the Grand Jury. A similar article was published in the Northern Islander, and forty copies distributed among the officials and leading citizens of Mackinac. Two Grand Juries have since sat there, and not one word of evidence has been offered before them on the subject. The conclusion is obvious.

The third charge is, "pilfering the goods of the Mackinac merchants, on the fishing grounds, till they were obliged to remove them." This is the first time that any of the goods of the Mackinac merchants were pilfered. Yet your correspondent speaks of it as a common occurrence, persisted in till merchants were compelled to remove their goods. Now, I challenge him, or any other man, to name an instance. It is not necessary to discuss the question, who is guilty? All we ascertain that the crime has been committed. As a gentleman well posted in the affairs of all this section of country, and of good character to maintain truth, I say this State at least, I say this accusation was never publicly made, in either Mackinac or Emmet county, until, made through the columns of the Monroe Democrat of August 4th, 1853, and that it is without a shadow of foundation; and I challenge specifications.

If any gentleman dare risk his reputation in contradicting me, let him begin by telling what merchants have been plundered? when and where it was done? what goods were taken? and where and to what place the plundered merchants removed?

The fourth charge is, that the Mormons "stole a boat from Mr. Burke, who kept the Light House on Skilagalee, which boat was found in their possession."

There has been no boat stolen from Skilagalee. Neither the keeper of this Light House, or any other person who lives, or ever did live at Skilagalee, pretends that any boat has been stolen from there. There is not a boat missing from that Island by any means, felonious or otherwise.

And no boat, stolen, or alleged to have been stolen, has ever been found in possession of the Mormons, or of any of them. If the thing has been done, some body did it. It is not the duty of the public names, dates and places.

Our calumniators cannot name a man, who ever found a boat stolen, or supposed to have been stolen, in the possession of a Mormon. They cannot name a Mormon, in whose possession a stolen boat, or boat supposed to have been stolen, was ever found. They cannot name a time when, or a place where, a stolen boat, or boat supposed to be stolen, was ever found in the possession of the Mormons, or of any Mormon. And they cannot designate a boat, either now or at any previous time, in possession of any Mormon in Emmet county, but we can justify his possession, by showing a legal title to it. If all the fishermen could do the same, there would be less persons interested in making the Mormons infamous, in order to use them as a scape-goat for their own sins.

Either this tale is a mere falsehood, made up to raise prejudice against the Mormons in distant places, or it is a blundering version of the equally malicious tale of the loss of a boat from the South Manitou Light House.

Some time last spring, the boat belonging to the South Manitou Light House was missed, and the loss attributed to the Mormons. The sole evidence on which this charge was founded, was that a three-masted schooner was seen lying behind the Island, the day before the theft, and recognized as the Emmlin, owned at this place.

This charge was forwarded to the Collector at Mackinac, accompanied with the proofs, and by him transmitted to the Government at Washington, and Capt. — (I cannot remember his name,) of the Topographical Engineers; and member of the Light House Bureau, to whom had been assigned the duty of inspecting Light Houses on the Upper Lakes, came to the Revenue Cutter, Ingham, and investigated the charge.

The result of this investigation was, that it was proved beyond a shade of doubt, that the Emmlin was hauled up for repairs; some four months before the boat was stolen, and was undergoing repairs, and was not launched till five weeks after the stealing of the boat at South Manitou Light House; and at the very time she was alleged to have been at South Manitou, she was on the rocks here, stripped of her plank on her keel, and several men at work strengthening her ribs. Thus fell to the ground every word of evidence against the Mormons. And these facts can be shown, whenever there is an occasion, by more than two hundred witnesses, including a large number of officers of Steam Packets, who stop regularly at this harbor.

And your correspondent concludes by predicting the extermination of the Mormons of Beaver Island, with apparently less feeling for the contemplated murder of two thousand human beings, than is commonly produced by the destruction of so many insects in an ant hill. What is humanity, when such things can be written without a sigh?—read, and no word of reproach breathed?

I am quite indifferent whether S. A. E. estimates the Mormons at six hundred or one hundred efficient men. But I confess that my face mantles with shame, that any one, citizen or stranger, should think so low of Republican and Christian Michigan, as to believe her government and people would suffer the unprotected population of a county to be exterminated, murdered in cold blood.

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, JUNE 1, 1854.

"The Mormon Saints claim the power of healing the sick and blind by touching them."—Free Press.

Can the Free Press tell of any Saints who do not or did not in their time of life claim this power? As a religious paper the Free Press is evidently behind the times. By proper efforts, the editor might get out a very respectable religious paper; but it would certainly be a very different undertaking from a mere political enterprise, and require attainments of a higher order.—Truth and intelligence could not be successfully substituted by plausibility and assurance.

But to return to the question. Were there ever any Saints among whom the power did not exist of healing the sick by touching them? We have never heard of them. The Prophets in Israel, and the Apostles and Elders among the early Christians all exercised the power.

In the brief record we have of Prophetic administration, several examples occur of the healing of the sick, and some of the raising of the dead. King Jeroboam built an altar, and offered sacrifices at Bethel, contrary to the word of the Lord. While contending against the Prophet of God before the altar, his hand was smitten of God, and "dried up," so that he could not pull it in again, and the altar rent in twain. Yet when he entreated the Prophet, he healed him, that his hand became well as before. 1st Kings, xiii. 6.

During the reign of Ahab, when the Prophet Elijah was in exile, a widow in Zarephath entertained him. Her son died, and the Prophet raised him to life. 1st Kings, xvii. 21, 22.

A noble woman at Shunam entertained the Prophet Elisha, and when afterwards her son died, he raised him to life. 2d Kings, iv. 32 to 37.

The Syrian General, Naaman, was a renowned warrior, and an eminent statesman; but he was a leper. And he went from his own country into a foreign land to the saints of that day to be cleansed, and the Prophet Elisha healed him. 2d Kings, v. 14.

These are but a few cases of healing the sick, and some readers have therefore inferred that the exercise of the gift was rare. Such an inference, however, is not just. The occasion given why Naaman went to be healed, is a full answer to it.

"Now Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was a great man with his master, and honorable, because by him the Lord had given a victory unto Syria: he was also a mighty man of valor; but he was a leper.—And the Syrian had gone out by companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a maid; and she waited on Naaman's wife. And she said unto her mistress, Would God the Lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy." 2d Kings, i, 2, 3.

The gift of healing was so much in vogue, that a country girl, when alive, and a slave in a foreign land, remembered and spoke of the usual custom, with a confidence as to the mind.

It was well established in Israel but in Syria, the gift was later king of Syria, and he did not hesitate to send Hazael to the Prophet in Israel to learn the issue of the disease.

We need not, therefore, pursue the meager record contained in the Old Testament of the healing of the sick by the saints of God. Enough is already shown to prove that it was an established rite among them.

The New Testament record covers but a brief period of time. But for the time covered by it, it is a continued record of the healing of the sick.

The ministry of Jesus, the chief of the Saints of that day, consisted quite as much of healing the sick as teaching truth and righteousness, and the mysteries of the Gospel. His fame went through all the land, for healing the sick, giving sight to the blind, casting out devils, and rebuking all manner of disease.

The beginning of his ministry was his going about Galilee, "teaching in the synagogues, proclaiming the Gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease among the people." Matt. iv. 23.

"And his fame went throughout all Syria; and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with diverse diseases, and torments, and those which were possessed of devils, and those which were lunatic, and he healed them." Matt. 24.

And spending three years and a half, a continued series of such acts, and giving his life for the redemption of mankind, he sent his apostles to preach, and to heal the sick, and to those that were lame, they shall speak, and they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover. Mark xvi. 17, 18.

The apostles, after Christ's time, continued to work in the same manner; ib. 20; one instance of which occurred at the temple, where a man who was lame from his birth was healed by Peter and John. This man sat daily at the gate of the temple to beg. When he asked money of them they had none; but Paul said to him: "In the name of Jesus of Nazareth rise up and walk; and took him by the hand, and immediately his feet and ankle bones received strength, and he leaping up, stood and walked, and entered into the temple, and praised God, and all the people saw him."—Acts iii. 2 to 16.

The ministry of the Apostles continued to be characterized with such works, as far as the scriptures trace it. And the traditions of the church show that the succeeding Christian ministers were possessed of the same power over diseases, during several succeeding ages.

And the conclusion is, that not only the Mormons or Latter Day Saints, but all other Saints, claim the power of healing the sick, &c., by touching them; that is, by the laying on of hands, as well as by various other modes.

It was that this gift should be given to whosoever believed the preached gospel, without any limitation of age or country, we have his testimony that those who are not possessed of it are none of his; that is, they are not believers of the true gospel, and are not Saints.

Doubtless the answer to all this will be, "but the Mormons only claim this power, the ancient saints possessed and exercised it."

Not too fast. That is a question of fact which we will examine directly. The theory is, that all the saints have this gift among them. If any religious people profess not to have this; by their own testimony they are not saints; that is, are not the people of God. Protestants generally profess not to be possessed of this gift, which Christ has promised to all true believers of the gospel. Therefore, they are not true believers; that is, are not saints.

Mormons profess to be possessed of this gift, and profess in all other things to conform to the standard of doctrine, gifts, graces and priesthood of the true church. If the facts correspond with the profession, they are the true church.

The Mormon saints are themselves, most of all men, interested in knowing the truth of this claim of power to heal the sick. And we submit that it is not possible that they should be ignorant of the truth or falsity of their profession in the premises.

Among them the practice of laying on of hands for the healing of the sick is nearly as common as sending for a physician to give medicine is among other men. The Elders are all liable to be called on to administer this rite, and there are few members who have not resorted to this means of healing, since their profession of the faith.

Either this laying on of hands has some influence on the disease, or it has not. And whether it has or not, they know best among whom it is in constant practice. What motive could the Mormons have for keeping up the practice among themselves for more than twenty years, as they have, if it was without effect?

Enemies have alledged that the object was to impose upon and deceive mankind. But when it is considered that the laying on of hands is attended to in private; that no display is ever made of it; that all the elders have the utmost repugnance to administer in the presence of unbelievers or strangers; that the subjects are generally their children and near friends, and that the healings are never published, such an allegation is merely ridiculous.

What possible inducement could men have to lay hands on their friends and the members of their families, of all ages, from creeping infancy to tottering old age, and in every condition of life, from the pauper to the prince, on the pretence of healing them, unless they really believed that diseases are thus healed? How could they practice this rite for twenty years, among a people of many thousand souls, resorting to it so generally as to nearly supersede the profession of physicians, and yet not know of a verity whether they possessed the gift or not?

Whoever answers these questions, as we doubt not every man of sense will answer them, has but to go among the Mormons and make a candid inquiry of a thousand persons in succession, what they know about the gift of healing, and he will not, with the Free Press, say, "the Mormon saints claim the power of healing the sick and the blind by touching them." But he will say, "the Mormon saints heal the sick, &c., by the laying on of hands, and the prayer of faith."

THE EUROPEAN WAR.

The war in Europe is fairly begun, without leaving any hope of peace till all the great powers have exhausted their strength in the struggle.

So far Turkey has made good head against Russia, her formidable foe. But the Emperor was right in treating the Turkish Empire as a sick man, just about to expire.

Notwithstanding her success so far, and her formidable preparations, it is evident that alone Turkey could not stand the shock of Russian invasion a single campaign. Her strength is utterly exhausted in preparing for the encounter. She has no resources left to fall back on, in case of misfortune. Without aid, her first defeat would be but the signal for the breaking up of the Empire.

Russia, properly denominated the Bear, is the most tenacious of life, the hardest to overthrow or materially injure of any existing nation. We know of none like her in the history of the past.

The Bear may be torn by dogs, shot through and through, and cut up with edge tools, enough to kill other more dangerous animals, without materially diminishing its power to do mischief. The assaults that others die of, are necessary to develop its strength and ferocity.

So of Russia. When her foreign commerce is cut off, her seaport towns reduced to heaps of black and smoking ruins, her maritime provinces ravaged with fire and sword, and the track of the invaders, leaving not a blade of grass behind, crosses from sea to sea, Russia will be but just aroused to the fight. Then her giant hand will stretch forth, and the nations perish.

Russia has deliberately gone into the present war, counting the cost, and with the purpose of conquest. The Emperor must have expected to fight England and France, as well as Turkey.

Austria and Prussia, being partners in the spoliation of Poland, are chained by that iniquity, to Russia, who in the end will swallow up them also. The fear that in the progress of war the nationality of Poland will be proclaimed as a measure of hostility to Russia, drives them to a hypocritical neutrality, and a real subservience to Russia.

Great Britain and France have undertaken to maintain the integrity of the Turkish empire; to defend her territory and her independence intact. It should not be imagined, however, that they are undertaking this labor of love merely in regard to the justice of the Turkish cause.

If Russia succeeds in swallowing up Turkey, the relative consequence of France in the politics of Europe is lost, while that of Russia is greatly increased; and Russia would be mid-way between Great Britain and her sessions in India, with the power of striking a resistless blow before the Home Government could hear of the approaching danger.

Though Russia has proposed a partition of the Turkish empire between herself and either of these powers, it is plain that she alone would be a gainer. Russia can yield to them no share but what would be overshadowed by her overgrown territory, and would be as of unbeat the sub-children that the published, rely ridic-

ducement bands on members of es, from ring old tion of he prince,
ng them, ved that ? How rite for people of porting to ly super-physicians, a verity
the gift

the ques-very man em, has Mormons ry of a cession, the gift of ot, with the Mor-power of blind by he will heal the on of faith."

n, without the great gh in the ad against the Emperor pire as a ar, and her ident that shock of ign. Her paring for ces left to Without
e signal for the Bear, is et to overisting na-the histonot through ole enough s, without do mis-st, are nec-ecosity.

commerce to heape maritime word, and at a blade sea, Rusght. Then the na-

the pres-the pur-must have ce, as well

rs in the that in-swallow progress be pro-Russia, ity, and undertaken kish em-independ-how-labor of

of the

up Turce in the of Russia ould be hpe striking ernment

a tenancy at her will. In reality there was nothing to offer them, and this is the reason they would not join in the spoliation.

There had been no war in Europe, beyond an occasional local outbreak, for thirty-nine years; being the longest uninterrupted peace experienced in Europe for more than two thousand years.

Never did the great powers of Western Europe enter upon war with more unanimity than now. Yet their statesmen, especially those of Great Britain, seem to be fully conscious of the immensity of the peril, and the entire uncertainty of the result. Evidently the most eminent men in Great Britain fear that it may with them become a struggle for national existence. In France all know that dynasty is involved, and more than the return of the Elder Bourbons are at stake in case of defeat.

The Germans are so metaphysical to think of political results all others have laid the plans for them to fight out. But some have turned their eyes to the probability, almost certainly, that the Russian monarch, who puts one foot on Constantinople, will put the other on Koningsberg.

In our judgment Great Britain and France erred in fixing themselves upon a conservative policy. They should have menaced the eastern powers with the nationality of Poland, the independence of China and Hungary, and the restoration of Finland. Invoking the spirit of revolution against despotism, they could have built up barriers between themselves and Russia out of her own dominions, and reduced her to reasonable bounds before their own strength was exhausted.

It is curious to observe what singular preferences great nations make for going to war.—The beginning of this controversy was a dispute between the different christian sects at Jerusalem, who should hold the keys of certain churches.

These were christian churches when the Turks conquered the country, jointly occupied by different sects, who occasionally disagreed, and got up tumults and fights in the churches.

The Turkish authorities had to decide these disputes among the christians, and in doing so awarded the possession of the keys of the churches to such as used the trust most justly. Yet the Russian government, dissatisfied that the keys of one of the churches was given to the Roman Catholic instead of the Greek priest, made it a subject of diplomatic complaint.

In pursuing the negotiation, the Emperor of Russia claimed the guardianship of all the Greek churches in Turkey and the protectorate of the Greek population, and demanded an acknowledgment of these claims by treaty, and denounced war as the alternate.

To yield to these claims would be to practically cede the sovereignty of the country to Russia, and make the Sultan the vassal of the Emperor. Turkey resisted, and hence the war. No one will fail to see that this pretence of Russia is utterly false; that it is only a pretence to get up a war for the purpose of conquest.

The end of the war God only can know, and he to whom He reveals it. It is certain that Russia occupies the position from which a great army must come, in fulfillment of prophecy, and invade the Holy Land, in the last days; but the time for that invasion is not yet.

The times are big with interest. It behooves those who delight in truth and knowledge to study the prophecies.

THE MORMONS OF SALT LAKE.

A gentleman who has recently been among the Mormons of Salt Lake furnishes the New York Journal of Commerce with the following:

1st. They are Pantheists. They believe there are many Gods. The three Gods of this world, they say, are revealed in the Bible, (which is a book made under their direction,) and are the Father, the Son, and the Spirit.—Other worlds have other Gods. Jupiter is a large world, and may have five or six Gods.

Matter is eternal, and Gods are great minds that preside over matter and rule it. Hence the need of many Gods.

2d. Gods and men must use means to grow greater. Marriage and birth are great means of advancement. Hence, God the Father has been married, which is proven by the fact that he had a Son, Jesus Christ, and by such passages as, "Are not his angels ministering spirits?" which passages they interpret as follows: Who naturally ministers to man?—Ans. A wife. Now, God has married of such, and they are therefore myriads of wives to Him. Men imitate God when they marry.

3d. Polygamy. The Patriarchs, and others of early age, had many wives. Only when despots and oppressors ruled, did the Bible law of many wives become disregarded. It is only human enactments that prevent the right use of unnatural marriage now. They argue from the difference of the sexes, which exists without their consent, that God ordains that all shall marry, whether they desire it or not. There is no more power of choice in this, than there is whether we eat or not, sleep or not, and other necessary functions of life and health. Hence, to refuse to marry, or neglect it when of suitable age, is disobedience of God's authority.

Reason on which marriage is founded.—They argue again, that mind is only matter; and this material mind is always struggling to develop itself. God having provided so liberally for its development, by the sexuality of each individual, we sin if we prevent mind from developing itself; and hence, as no one can be saved in his sins, that person is not religious—cannot be happy in a future state—who is not married. To this they add tortured scripture without end. And as the sinner must marry only the "Latter Day Saints," it becomes the duty of every masculine "saint" to receive every woman who offers herself; as he thus "saves a soul from death, and hides a multitude of sins."

Practically, many of these "saints" are zealous for their creed. Some have ten, some twenty, and some have fifty wives. It is a common thing to introduce a stranger thus: "I introduce you to Mrs. Harris, and Mrs. Harris, and Mrs. Harris," on to the end of the chapter. The result is, great effeminacy of the husband. He walks a poor wretch, covered with a cloak at mid-summer day, and downcast in looks. The children are numerous, as marriage unproductive is sin. It is said that the premature deaths and still-born infants are in undue proportion to the number of births.—Attendant on this are jars and contentions.—So that, though they satisfy lust, the Mormons are not a happy people.

Their mode of holding service is peculiar. Their edifice is like an ancient Grecian or Roman theatre; depressed where the pulpit or desk is, some 20 feet, and rising to a flat roof, the base of instrumental music. Next, the congregation on the circular seats, one above the other. The band commence playing, and play some time. Then a prayer, which in language is much like that of an ordinary pastor. It means, however, a very different thing, as they understand the scriptural language employed. Then comes a sermon. Sometimes several speeches or sermons in succession, filled with such sentiments as above. They close with instrumental music and a benediction. Their services are often long.

The Book of Mormon they do not hold in as great a reverence as formerly. Of the Bible they make great use. In its interpretation they are the extreme literalists; and many have the whole of it at their tongue's end. So that false and absurd as their system is, it is no easy matter to discuss with them.

Lastly, they make regeneration to be—consent to be a Latter Day Saint, and a married individual, their ritual or rather Judaized modernism. Their outward law nominally under the constitution of the United States; really the whim of their leaders, modified by a sort of traditional usage, that even a few years have compelled them to adopt. They have an Ecclesiastical Court to settle disputes; allow no suits or reference to government of the State or national authority.

The Valley of the Salt Lake is not the richest land that ever saw the sun, and there are physical causes that will silence all fears that a people so penitently and obedient, and so cause the glorious prospects of the West to be seriously clouded. They are on the wane.—Their own errors contain the elements of self-destruction.

But how sad the picture, rather the fact, that thousands of good, sensible men and women, as many truly are, should be so deluded!—Who would have thought that the basest lusts and passions—the most downright despotism—the most stupid hierarchy, could arise and be fostered, and attain the threatening aspect they once had, but now are losing.

It would be difficult to crowd together more errors in the same space than are found in the foregoing; and, if the onslaught was upon anybody but the Mormons, not easy to get so ridiculous a tissue of lies in so respectable a paper as the Journal of Commerce, or get it republished in the Free Press.

If the men have ten, twenty, and fifty wives apiece, and in the result are poor wretches, with downcast looks, covered with cloaks at mid-summer, then how is it possible that the children are numerous?

Such men are seen by the thousand in all the christian cities, where men who count polygamy felony waste their strength on harlots; but they don't beget children. Visit their houses, and love has given no pledge but the lecher's lip.

Polygamy saves a woman's health, and thus makes her capable of bearing more and stronger children. But it has no effect on the health of men, because any man of ordinarily sound constitution is capable, without any unusual tax upon his strength, of begetting more children than twenty healthy women can bear.

The world has been astonished with the growth of the Mormon settlements, particularly that at

Utah; and the indomitable energy with which they posted themselves into the fastnesses of the mountains, and built up a flourishing republic, has been the admiration of the most enterprising men of this enterprising age.—Yet now we are told by the grave Journal of Commerce that this has been done by men so worn with lechery that they require cloaks in mid-summer!—Bah.

And the writer states that premature deaths and still-born infants are in undue proportion to the births. We do not know how this is in Utah, but is singular if the removal of the cause produces the effect. Place the still-born infants of the first year at New York, where half, and Philadelphia, the causes.

We are pleased with the complaint that the Mormons understand the Bible so well, and use it so successfully. May it be that these unlettered Mormons from the plough understand the Bible better than your college bred clergymen? Why is it that it is no easy matter to discuss with them? Does it not imply that they have something of the spirit by which it was written?

"For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of God which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual. But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1st Corinthians, ii. 11-14.

As usual, the article ends with the prediction of the speedy extinction of Mormonism. That has been the chorus of every declamation against them for twenty-four years, and it seems to be as fresh and green as ever.

RUMORS AND A ROBBERY.

Some days ago a large number of fishermen were encamped on High Island, apparently waiting favorable weather to go further west. Some of the Indians visited them, and the bottle passed around freely; and in their drunken carouse they boasted that they were going over to Beaver to get nets. That is, to steal them from the Mormons, who were just taking out their outfits upon the fishing grounds.

The Indians immediately gave the Mormons notice of the threat, but was regarded only as a vain boast, and no attention paid to it, and the matter forgotten.

Last Thursday we learned there was a man on Garden Island making inquiries about the alleged robbery of two boats from Saint Ignace.

The substance of the story was that they had obtained an outfit on Saint Ignace, and instead of sending it to the boat by a vessel, took the outfit to the island, and in the absence of the boatmen, they had taken it. It seems that the boatmen had ascertained this tale, and had ascertained whether they had been swindled, and came back with this story to the purpose of swindling him.

Last Friday Mr. Mills called on the Post Office in Mackinac to receive mail for this place, and was followed to the boat by a mob of some twenty men, armed with pistols in their hands, threatening to kill him, in case he ever returned, and alleged as a reason that they suspected some of the Mormons had committed the robbery.

While on the dock Mills escaped personal assault, owing either to the cowardice of the mob, or to the fact that being a United States mail carrier the crime of assaulting him would be investigated in the United States District Court at Detroit, instead of the local Court held at Mackinac.

We learn from Mr. E. B. Coleman, an extensive nursery man, of Peru, Ill., who was in Mackinac getting ornamental trees, that the unfortunate fishermen represented that while camped on Beaver Island they were visited, in the course of the day by three men engaged in pulling evergreens, and that they recognized those three men among the band that robbed them, the following evening.

These were Mr. Orson Duncan, of Dundee, Ills., and two young men employed by him to pull evergreens for Coleman and his brother J. T. Coleman, of Joliet. Mr. Coleman very frankly replied that these men were in his employ, and that the story as to them must be false.

In consequence, he was rudely treated, accused of being a confederate with the Mormons, and threatened with violence, and we were assured by some of the passengers on the boat that brought him away, had a narrow escape, though he seemed to take it cool.

Immediately on these facts being known here, Mr. Strang set an investigation on foot, and the result is, that it appears that the fishermen on High Island left there for parts unknown, the day following the alleged robbery. Two boats were seen coming from their camp, and keeping snug under the shore of High Island, in the obscurity of the timber, just before the evening of the robbery, and approached as near Beaver as they could without being exposed to observation from the Mormon settlements.

Upon the most thorough inquiry, it cannot be learned that these boats came to any place of business or settlement this way, or that they had been there before.

Possibly it may have been a small party between the robbers and the robbed, intending to get a new outfit on the credit of this misfortune, and go somewhere else to fish, as several scamps did last year.

These traders at Mackinac, in setting their employees to rob, plunder and carry on border war against the Mormons, have raised a storm they cannot ride out; and will, in the end, learn by most bitter experience, that having taught men to steal, they will help themselves at their expense as soon as ours.

On examining their abandoned camp, nothing was discovered to shed any light on the subject. But on its being suggested that the wind at that time was strong from the south, and that if the men in these boats had committed the robbery, they could not have returned to their camp with their boats, nor any nearer than the extreme north end of High Island, Mr. Strang sent there to pursue the investigation.

Here was found the coals, ashes, and brands of a recent camp fire, and in the ashes a burnt chest lock, a pair of strap hinges, iron and brass nails, metallic buttons, broken tobacco pipes, &c., &c.

To us these circumstances show conclusively that the robbery was committed by the fishermen from High Island. And we think the circumstances indicate that their intention was to make a foray upon the Mormons, and that they unintentionally, or perhaps indifferently, robbed their own friends.

TRADE WITH MACKINAC.

The trade between this place and Mackinac, amounting a few years ago to $8,000 or $10,000 a year, has entirely run out. We are quite warranted in saying that in twelve months past it has not amounted to $5,000.

This result is entirely owing to the efforts of Mackinac to destroy this place by lawless and violent means. The Mormons, who settled this place, were not able to carry on trade. Though they foresaw that the natural advantages of this place would in the end build up an important commercial town, they had no desire to enter upon commercial undertakings at present.

Had Mackinac been content merely to let us alone, we should have continued to sell our produce and make our purchases there. For the purpose of keeping up the necessary intercourse, we had already constructed small sailing vessels adapted to that trade.

They should by this time have had a retail business with us amounting to $40,000 or $50,000 a year. That would have done something to prolong their decay. Instead of it, they have spent thousands in getting rid of us, and we have grown to a formidable rival.

It is, with our increased facilities, less expensive to trade at Chicago and Detroit, than it would be at Mackinac. But so violent has been the competition, that the trade from this place, is not safe there.

The Deseret News, of March 16th, contains a notice of the death of Willard Richards, late Editor of that paper, and Post Master at Salt Lake City.

Richards was for many years one of the Twelve Apostles, and was with Joseph in Jail at Carthage at the time of his martyrdom. It will be remembered that he escaped the same fate by the lodging of a rifle ball in his watch.

The following is taken from the prayer offered up at his funeral:—

Bless the widows of thy servant Willard, who are called to part with a dear and beloved companion. Inspire them with the power of the Holy Ghost, and wisdom to bear with patience and resignation the trials they are called to encounter, and to live in such a manner as to prepare them to enjoy his society in the possession of thrones, principalities and powers in the celestial world.

The News says, further:—On the 31st of December, '36, at the setting of the sun, Dr. Willard Richards was baptized at Kirtland, under the hands of Presidents Brigham Young, in presence of Heber C. Kimball, and others who had spent the afternoon in cutting ice to prepare for the baptism. Doctor Richards was born at Hopkinton, Middlesex county, Massachusetts, June 3d, 1804.

Pine River, May 9, 1854.
BRO. STRANG:—After a good deal of labor and some expense we have arrived at one of the handsomest countries in the world. Paul said: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things that God hath prepared for them that love him."

This is decidedly the handsomest land I ever saw. George and I have found a place that we calculate to build on. It is situated on Pine Lake, on the north side of the outlet. There is no improvement here that is of any use to us, except a chance to plant.

We have plenty of Indian visitors. This would be a good place to trade with them. They have some furs to trade on.—Corn-stalk is here, and I send this letter by him. This is a better place decidedly than I anticipated. I never saw a place that was fit to be spoken in the same day with this. If the land is as good as it looks, I can feed a large family here.

GALEN B. COLE

We learn that a large company of emigrants are now on their way from Texas to this place.

A company is daily looked for from New York, and another in a few weeks from Iowa. From every direction they are continually coming in, in small companies, and the missionary spirit prevails among our preachers.

There has been a debate in Congress on the subject of polygamy, which we shall publish soon.

We have been shown a letter from the Vice President of the Saint Canal Company, to the Hon. Jas. J. Strang, contradicting the statement that that Company have located any lands in Emmet County.

The weather was favorable for the observation of the Annular Eclipse, May 26th. We have not room for a particular notice in this number, but shall give it hereafter.

Lieut. Reynolds, with six boats and a fine party of men arrived here last Monday, to commence the Topographical Survey of the Islands. They went to Hog Island to pitch their camp.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a Conference at Brownstown, Wayne County, Michigan, the 17th and 18th days of June next.

Also at Colchester, Canada West, (if the weather is favorable a woods meeting,) at 7 o'clock, on the 21st, 22nd, and 23rd of June next.

The General Conference will be held at Saint James, Beaver Island, the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th of July next, at which sacrifices and offerings will be offered by the heads of families of all the congregation.

BOOKS.

The following books are constantly for sale at this office:—Ancient and Modern Michilimackinac, including an account of the controversy between Mackinac and the Mormons. Price, 25 cts. A History of the Rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the discovery of Ancient American Records, by George J. Adams. Price, 12 1/2 cts. A Discussion of the Roman Catholic Mission, between Charles Rafferty and James Strang. Price, 10 cts. The Diamond: being the Law of Prophet Succession. Price, 5 cts. Money may be sent by mail at our risk from any part of the United States for these books. We will return the books by mail, free of postage.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Detroit, Nov. 1, 1853. Pursuant to the Statute, in such case made and provided, I hereby appoint the third Tuesday of July and January as the times for holding the Circuit Courts for the County of Emmet during the years 1854 and 1855. SAML T. DOUGLASS, Circuit Judge, Third District.

COWDERYS LETTERS.

Oliver Cowdery was the earliest associate with Joseph Smith in the ministry of the dispensation of the fullness of times. The series of letters, one of which we insert in each number, till the publication is complete, give a most faithful history of the bringing in of the dispensation. They were written in answer to brief letters from Wm. W. Phelps, then a recent convert, and a seeker for farther knowledge. The letters of Phelps consisting principally of brief inquiries, we omit, the answers being full without them.

LETTER I.

Norton, Sept. 7, 1834.

DEAR BROTHER, Before leaving home I promised to write long, to write for you, and for reflection, aside from the care and common conversation of my friends in this place, I have thought that were I to communicate them to you, might, perhaps, if they should not prove especially beneficial to yourself, by confirming you in the faith of the gospel, at least be interesting, since it has pleased our heavenly Father to call us both to rejoice in the same hope of eternal life. And by giving them publicity, some thousands who have embraced the same covenant, may learn something more particular upon the rise of this church, in this last time. And while the gray evening is fast changing into a settled darkness, my heart responds with the happy millions who are in the presence of the Lamb, and are past the power of temptation, in rendering thanks, though feebly, to the same Parent.

Another day has passed, into that, to us, boundless ocean, ETERNITY! where nearly six thousand years have gone before; and what flits across the mind like an electric shock is, that it will never return! Whether it has been well improved or not; whether the principles emanating from him who "hallowed" it have been observed; or whether, like the common mass of time, it has been heedlessly spent, is not for me to say—one thing I can say—it can never be recalled!—it has rolled in to assist in filling up the grand space decreed in the mind of its Author, till nature shall have ceased her work, and time its accustomed revolutions—when its Lord shall have completed the gathering of his elect, and with them enjoy that Sabbath which shall never end!

On Friday, the 5th, in company with our brother Joseph Smith, jr., I left Kirtland for this place, (New Portage,) to attend the conference previously appointed. To be permitted to travel with this brother, occasions reflections of no ordinary kind. Many have been the fatigues and privations which have fallen to my lot to endure, for the gospel's sake, since 1828, with this brother. Our road has frequently been spread with the "fowler's snare," and our persons sought with the eagerness of the savage, for the ferocity for innocent blood by men, either heated to passion by the insinuations of those who professed to be guides and way-marks to the kingdom of glory, or the individuals themselves! This, I confess, is a dark picture to spread before our patrons, but they will pardon my plainness when I assure them of the truth. In fact, God has so ordered, that the reflections which I am permitted to cast upon my past life, relative to a knowledge of the way of salvation, are rendered "doubly endearing."

Not only have I been graciously preserved from wicked and unreasonable men, with this our brother, but I have seen the fruit of perseverance in proclaiming the everlasting gospel, immediately after it was declared to the world in these last days, in a manner not to be forgotten while heaven gives me common intellect. And what serves to render the reflection past expression on this point is, that from his hand I received baptism, by the direction of the angel of God—the first received into this church, in this day.

Near this time of the setting of the sun, Sunday evening, April 5th, 1829, my natural eyes, for the first time, beheld this brother. He then resided in Harmony, Susquehanna county, Penn. On Monday, the 6th, I assisted him in arranging some business of his, and he then directed me to write the Book of Mormon. These were days never to be forgotten—to sit under the sound of a voice dictated by the inspiration of heaven, awakened the utmost gratitude of this bosom!—Day after day I continued, uninterrupted, to write from his mouth, as he translated, with the Urim and Thummim, or, as the Nephites would have said, "Interpreters," the history, or record, called "The Book of Mormon."

To notice, even in few words, the interesting account given by Mormon, and his faithful son Moroni, of a people once beloved and favored of heaven, would supercede my present design: I shall therefore defer this to a future period, and as I said in the introduction, pass more directly to some few incidents immediately connected with the rise of this church, which may be entertaining to some thousands who have stepped forward, amid the frowns of bigots and the calumny of hypocrites, and embraced the gospel of Christ.

No men in their sober senses, could translate and write the directions given to the Nephites, from the mouth of the Savior, of the precise manner in which men should build up his church, and especially when corruption had spread an uncertainty over all forms and systems practiced among men, without desiring a privilege of showing the willingness of the heart by being buried in the liquid grave, to answer a "good conscience by the resurrection of Jesus Christ."

After writing the account given of the Savior's ministry to the remnant of the seed of Jacob, upon this continent, it was easily to be seen, as the prophet said would be, that darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the minds of the people. On reflecting further, it was as easily to be seen, that amid the great strife and noise concerning religion, none had authority from God to administer the ordinances of the gospel. For, if question might be asked, have men authority to administer in the name of Christ, who deny revelations? when his testimony is no less than the spirit of prophecy? and his religion based, built and sustained by immediate revelations in all ages of the world, when he has had a people on earth? If these facts were buried, and carefully concealed by men whose craft would have been in danger, if once permitted to shine in the faces of men, they were no longer to us; and we only waited for the commandment to be given, "Arise, and be baptized."

This was not long desired before it was realized. The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will. On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us while the veil was parted, and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered anxiously looked for messages, and the keys of the gospel of repentance! What joy! what wonder! what amazement!

While the world were racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting on uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard. As in the "blaze of day," more—above the glitter of the May sun beam, which shed its brilliancy over the world of nature! Then his voice, bright, mild, pierced our hearts, and we were dispossessed of all our former notions—we listened—we were amazed! 'Twas the voice of an angel from glory—'twas the voice of the Most High, as we heard we rejoiced, and his love enkindled upon our souls, and we were wrapt in the vision of the Almighty! Where was room for doubt? No where: uncertainty had fled, doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled forever!

But, dear brother, think further, think for a moment, what joy filled our hearts, and with what surprise we must have bowed, (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hand the holy priesthood, as he said, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness!"

I shall not attempt to paint to you the feelings of this heart, nor the majestic beauty and glory which surrounded us on this occasion; but you will believe me when I say, that earth, nor men, with the eloquence of time, cannot begin to clothe language in as interesting and sublime a manner as this holy personage. No; nor has this earth power to give the joy, to bestow the peace, or comprehend the wisdom which was contained in each sentence as they were delivered by the power of the Holy Spirit! Man may deceive his fellow man; deception may follow deception, and the children of the wicked one may have power to seduce the foolish and untaught, till naught but fiction leads the many, and the fruit of falsehood carries its current the giddy to the abyss; but one touch with the finger of his love, yes, one ray of light from the upper world, and the word from the mouth of the Savior, from the holy Spirit, makes it all into truth.

It is true that we were in the presence of an angel; the certain fact that we heard the voice of God, and the truth unsullied, flowed from a pure personage dictated by the will of God, to me, past description, and I shall never look upon this expression of the Savior's goodness with wonder and thanks giving while I am permitted to tarry, and in those mansions where perfection dwells and sin never comes, I hope to adore in that day which never shall cease!

I close for the present: my candle is quite extinguished, and all nature seems locked in silence, shrouded in darkness, and enjoying that repose so necessary to this life. But the period is rolling on when night will close, and those who are found worthy will inherit that city where neither the light of the sun nor moon will be necessary; "for the glory of God will lighten it, and the Lamb will be the light thereof." O. COWDERY.

FRAGMENTS.

O! CENSURE NOT THE HEART.

BY RICHARD STORRS WILLIS.

O censure not the heart that loves,
However strange the choice we see
Each gentle spirit knows its mate,
Tho' hid from us the tie may be!
When mortals meet, their spirits hold Communion, in the silent air:
And trust, and doubt, and love, and hate,
Invisibly are awakened there!
O let them freely love that can!
Our mortal loves will soon be o'er,
We cannot know what earthly bliss
Survives—upon a heavenly shore!
Full many a fragile, tender joy,
Was made for this poor world alone;
And whether found, or failed of, here,
In after-life will ne'er be known!

quandary, but we know of no one more fortunately situated in this respect than an English army officer. If he receives an insult and don't challenge the offender, he is tried by a court martial and broke with infamy. If he does challenge his adversary and happens to kill him, he is handed over to the civil power and hung for murder. If he don't make a fool of himself he is drummed out of the army. If he does make a fool of himself, six feet of cordage jerks him out of the world.

The "Poor Scholar," who is a very lazy man, has got to spelling Tennessee, 10 A C!

Sweet to the Sweet.—Woman is a beautiful flower that can be told in the dark, even by its (s)talk.

A sick bachelor.—The New York Times thus heads a long article on this subject: "A sick Bachelor! A dying camel in the desert! A sailor on a hencoop in the middle of the Atlantic! All the same. The same incident from different points of view. The same subject with varied accessories. If there is preponderance of misery on any side it is on the side of the sick bachelor. The camel, however intelligent it may be, is still as sensitive as the human sufferer, and the sailor, floating on a hencoop a thousand miles from land, is at least spared the misery of knowing that there is help within call. The sick bachelor is the ne plus ultra of human misery."

Mr. Timothy, said a learned lady, who had been showing off her wit at the expense of a daughter, "you remind me of a barometer, that is filled with nothing in the upper story."

Divine Almira, meekly replied her admirer, "in thanking you for that compliment, let me remind you that you occupy my upper story entirely."

Curious sentence.—The following verse contains every letter in the English alphabet except "E." It is a question whether any other English rhyme can be produced (in print) without the letter "E," which is a letter employed more than any other. By inserting the word vex instead of tax, in the second line, the verse would contain all the letters of the alphabet:—

A jovial swain may rack his brain,
And tax his fancy's might,
To quiz in vain, for 'tis most plain
That what I did was right.

Effects of Wrong Spelling.—Not long since, a gentleman, then a chorister of a certain choir in Vermont, wrote to a certain publisher in Boston, for a copy of that popular singing book, entitled "The Ancient Lyre." In his communication he used the following language: "Please send me the Ancient Lyre, well bound." The publisher, in answer to his request, replied:—My dear sir—I do not doubt but the devil has been, and still is in Boston; but it will be difficult to comply with your request, for the reason that Boston influence is so strongly in his favor that it will be impossible to find him."

The Mount of Olives furnishes a source of wealth to the Catholics by no means inconsiderable. Above a certain height, it is found in congealed granulated masses, and in this state is fit for conveyance to all the large towns in the island, and even as far as Malta. Constantinople and the vicinity are in like manner supplied with this article of paramount necessity in a warm climate, from the captives near the summit of Mount Olympus, where the snow lies throughout the year.

We should like to know.—How many spokes there are in a wheel of fortune.
Of what kind of timber is the post of honor?
What kind of knife is used in cutting capers?

Would the telegraph line be good for a fishing excursion.

Solution of Haunted Houses.—A haunted house is a tenement of any number of ordinary stories, to which is added an extraordinary one in the form of a ghost story.

Whether you are playing on the stage or the world, your character should be well dressed. Broadcloth is generally received with smiles, though covering a rascal; while linsey wolsley is rather run upon, though covering a portrait.

THE NORTHERN FARMER.

Vol. 1, of the enlarged, 48 page edition, commences January 1st, 1854; specimens now ready, and beautifully illustrated, the entire volume to contain about two hundred engravings, executed in the best style. This is the cheapest and most popular paper ever published in this country. It is adapted to all sections of the United States, having a large circulation in every State in the Union. It is highly valuable to poultry breeders, bee keepers, farmers, and the people of every class and condition in life. Edited by T. B. Miner, author of the "American Bee Keeper's Manual," and the "Domestic Poultry Book," recently published, a very popular work, containing 250 pages, and 130 splendid portraits and engravings, at only fifty cents per copy.

Postmasters act as agents for the office. Specimen numbers sent free on application. The following is the regular Prospectus for the volume, and the periodical will not fall short of its character, as here given:—

PROSPECTUS FOR 1854.

The Northern Farmer is published monthly, at Utica, Oneida County, N. Y., (Editor's address as below,) and contains forty-eight large octavo pages. It is devoted to Miscellaneous Literature, Practical Agriculture, Cattle, Sheep, Swine, Poultry, Bees, the Diseases and Cures of Animals, Rural Architecture, the Mechanic Arts, Modern History, and numerous other interesting subjects, either original or culled from the entire Encyclopedia of Domestic and Foreign Literature, with a view to render the work not only the cheapest, but the most interesting and beneficial to people of all classes, that has ever emanated from the American Press.

ITS ILLUSTRATIONS.

This paper will contain more costly engravings of Cattle, Sheep, Swine, Poultry, Bee Hives and Bee Houses, Views of Foreign and American Landscapes and Cities, &c., &c., than have ever appeared in any magazine or periodical at the same price in this country.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

Several pages will be exclusively devoted to the interests of the Ladies. Many rare plants, flowering shrubs, mosses, &c., in the culture of which they are interested, will be illustrated by engravings, and the manner of their cultivation will be given. Many hundreds of the most valuable original and selected recipes in domestic cookery, &c., will be furnished, and a large amount of useful, instructive, moral reading will be contained in this department, that will have a tendency to improve the minds of young ladies, and cause them to be better prepared to assume the domestic duties of life.

THE YOUTH'S DEPARTMENT.

This Department will embrace Travels in Foreign Countries, History, Natural Philosophy, Chemistry, Essays on Morals, Business Habits, &c., with much other matter by the best writers. In brief, neither money nor labor will be spared to render the entire work superior to all other similar productions.

ITS MERITS AS A STOCK REGISTER.

The proprietor will aim at making this journal the most authentic Stock Register in the country, and the best breeders in the United States will contribute to its pages. All persons owning blooded animals (age limited) to send in descriptions, with their opinions of their merits, which will be paid for in cash; and if they possess cuts or engravings of their animals, they will please forward them by express.

THE PRACTICAL CHARACTER OF THE PAPER.

The Agricultural Department of the paper will contain the writings of men who have held the plow and swung the scythe, and visionary theories and schemes of the day will be discarded. The wheat will be gleaned from the chaff, and sound, solid science, that admits of no overthrow, will take the place of theories that only confuse the mind, without possessing a practical application.

ITS ADAPTATION TO ALL SECTIONS.

This periodical will be of universal interest, and will be read with the same approbation in the Canadas, Oregon, New England, the Middle and the Southern States, California and the far West. It will be strictly a national paper, using its influence for the promotion of the welfare of all alike.

ITS CHEAPNESS.

The proprietor wishes to furnish a periodical for the special benefit of the people, the bones and sinews of the land, in which they may all be heard, and in which all may feel at home. Such a journal must be cheap, possess great merit, and have a very extensive circulation; and these results can only be effected by the active co-operation of its patrons; and for the purpose of rewarding all who exert themselves in obtaining subscribers, the following very low club terms are offered:—

TERMS.

1 copy per annum, $1.00. 5 copies per annum, to clubs or agents, at different addresses, $4.00. 10 copies per annum, to clubs or agents, at different addresses, 7.00. 20 copies per annum, to clubs or agents, at different addresses, 12.00. And all larger numbers at the same rate, sixty cents per copy. Cash in advance, and all papers discontinued at the expiration of the time paid for.

Additions may be made to clubs at any time, at the club rates. The back numbers from January furnished in all cases.

Bank bills current where subscriptions are obtained, will be received in payment, also Post Office stamps. Silver coins in silver, when carefully enclosed, may be safely remitted.

Canada subscribers supplied with the small edition at the same rates as to other subscribers, but three cents per annum extra on each volume of the small edition, required to pay postage to the line. Specimen numbers sent free on application, post paid.

THE SMALL EDITION.

This paper is also published monthly, under the title of "The Northern Farmer, sixteen page edition," and it is designed for those who prefer a smaller paper at a smaller price. Its form, size of pages, &c., are precisely like the forty-eight page edition, being made up of choice selections from it.

TERMS.

1 copy per annum, 31 cents. 5 copies per annum, to clubs or agents, at different addresses, $1.00. And all larger numbers at 30 cents per annum.

Address, T. B. MINER, Clinton, Oneida County, N. Y.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 7.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 54.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

Terms:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular number will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

POETRY.

A SUMMER EVE.

BY GEO. SCOTT.

[For the Rochester Daily Democrat.]

The sun's gone down to his place of rest,
In the golden realms of the distant west;
His pillow—a cloud in the hazy blue,
His canopy—of the violet's hue.

The portals of day are left ajar,
While weeping through is a single star,
Just on the threshold, burning dim,
Watching to welcome darkness in.

How gently blow the evening gales,
From their balmy home in the flowery vales!
And cool refreshing dews disclose
Sweet perfume from the languid rose!

What a holy calm pervades the scene!
All nature sleeps in a tranquil dream!
Save 'mong the echoes, where softly swell,
The mellow tones of some distant bell.

'Tis a hallowed hour, that of closing day,
When the world assumes her sable array;
When silent repose to earth hath given
A spell, like our dreary thoughts of heaven.

YOUNG AGAIN.

An old man sits in a high backed chair
Before an open door,
While the sun of a summer afternoon
Falls hot across the floor,
And the drowsy click of an ancient clock
Has natched the hour of four.

A breeze blows in and a breeze blows out
From the open door,
And flutters now on the wrinkled brow,
And now it lifts his hair;

And the hidden light of his eye drops down,
And he sleeps in his high backed chair.
The old man sleeps; and the old man dreams,
His head drops on his breast,

His hands relax their feeble hold,
And fall to his lap in rest;
The old man sleeps, and in sleep he dreams,
And in dreams again is blest.

The years unroll their fearful scroll,—
He is a child again,
A mother's tone is in his ear,
And drift across his brain,

He chases gaudy butterflies,
Far down the rolling plain.
He plucks the wild rose in the woods,
He gathers eggplants,

And holds the golden buttercups
Beneath his sister's chin;
And angles on the meadow brook
With a bent and naked pin.

He loiters down the grassy lane
And by the running pool,
And a sigh escapes his parted lips,
As he hears the bell toll for school.

And he sits on the grassy slope of luck,
And he hears the bell toll for school,
A mother's tone is in his ear,
And drift across his brain.

He chases gaudy butterflies,
Far down the rolling plain.
He plucks the wild rose in the woods,
He gathers eggplants,

And holds the golden buttercups
Beneath his sister's chin;
And angles on the meadow brook
With a bent and naked pin.

He loiters down the grassy lane
And by the running pool,
And a sigh escapes his parted lips,
As he hears the bell toll for school.

And he sits on the grassy slope of luck,
And he hears the bell toll for school,
A mother's tone is in his ear,
And drift across his brain.

He chases gaudy butterflies,
Far down the rolling plain.
He plucks the wild rose in the woods,
He gathers eggplants,

And holds the golden buttercups
Beneath his sister's chin;
And angles on the meadow brook
With a bent and naked pin.

He loiters down the grassy lane
And by the running pool,
And a sigh escapes his parted lips,
As he hears the bell toll for school.

And he sits on the grassy slope of luck,
And he hears the bell toll for school,
A mother's tone is in his ear,
And drift across his brain.

He chases gaudy butterflies,
Far down the rolling plain.
He plucks the wild rose in the woods,
He gathers eggplants,

And holds the golden buttercups
Beneath his sister's chin;
And angles on the meadow brook
With a bent and naked pin.

DEFENCE OF POLYGAMY.

LETTER FROM A LADY IN UTAH TO HER SISTER IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.
Great Salt Lake City, Jan. 12, '54.

DEAR SISTER:—Your letter of Oct. 2d was received yesterday. My joy on its reception was more than I can express. I had waited so long for your answer to our last, that I had almost concluded my friends were offended, and would write to me no more. Judge, then, of my joy when I read the sentiments of friendship and of sisterly affection expressed in your letter.

We are all here, and are prosperous and happy in our family circle. My children (four in number) are healthy and cheerful, and fast expanding their physical and intellectual faculties. Health, peace and prosperity have attended us all the day long.

It seems, my dear sister, that we are no nearer in our religious views than formerly.

Why is this? Are we not all bound to leave this world, with all we possess therein, and reap the reward of our doings here, in a never ending hereafter?

If so, do we not desire to be undeceived, and to know and to do the truth?

Do we not all wish in our very hearts to be sincere with ourselves, and honest and frank with each other?

If so, you will bear with me patiently, while I give a few of my reasons for embracing and holding sacred that particular point in the doctrine of the Church of Saints, to which you, my dear sister, together with a large majority of Christendom so decidedly object.

I mean, a "plurality of wives."

I have a bible which I have been taught from my infancy to hold sacred.

In this bible, I read of a holy man named Abraham, who is represented as the friend of God—a faithful man in all things—a man who kept the commandments of God; and who is called in the New Testament, the "Father of the faithful." [See James 2d, 23; Rom. 4th, 16th; Gal. 3d, 8th, 9th, 16th, 29th.]

I find this man had a plurality of wives, some of which were called concubines. [See book of Genesis; and for his concubines see 25th chap. 6th verse.]

I also find his grandson Jacob possessed of four wives, twelve sons and a daughter.—These wives are spoken very highly of by the sacred writers, as honorable women. "These," say the Scriptures, "did build the house of Israel."

Jacob himself was also a man of God, and the Lord blessed him, and his house, and commanded him to be fruitful and multiply. [See Genesis 30th, to 35th, and particularly 35th, chap. 10th and 11th, verses.]

I find also that these twelve sons of Jacob, by these four wives, became princes, heads of tribes, patriarchs, whose names are had in everlasting remembrance to all generations.

Now, God talked with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob frequently; and his angels also visited and talked with them, and blessed them and their wives and children.

He also reproved the sins of some of the sons of Jacob for hating and selling their brother, and for adultery. But in all his communications with them, he never condemned their family organization; but, on the contrary, always approved of it, and blessed them in this respect.

He even told Abraham that he would make him the father of many nations, and that in him and his seed all the nations and kindreds of the earth should be blessed. [See Genesis, 18th chap. 17th, 18th and 14th verses, also 12th chap. 1st, 2d and 3d verses.] In later years I find the plurality of wives perpetuated, sanctioned and provided for in the law of Moses.

Does the P-almist not only had a plurality of wives, but the Lord himself spoke by the mouth of Nathan the prophet, and told David that He (the Lord) had given his master's wives into his bosom; but because he had committed adultery with the wife of Uriah, and had caused his murder, He would take his wives and give them to a neighbor of his, &c., [See 2d Samuel, 13th chap. 7th to 11th verses.]

Here then, we have the word of the Lord, not only sanctioning polygamy, but actually giving to King David the wives of his master (Saul) and afterward taking the wives of David from him, and giving them to another man. Here we have a sample of severe reproof and punishment for adultery and murder while polygamy is authorized and approved by the word of God.

But, to come to the New Testament, I find Jesus Christ speaks very highly of Abraham and of his family. He says: "Many shall come from the east, and from the west, and from the north, and from the south, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of God." [Luke, 13th chap. 28 and 29th verses.]

Again he said, "If ye were Abraham's seed, ye would do the works of Abraham."

Paul, the apostle, wrote to the saints of his day, and informed them as follows:—"As many of you as have been baptized of Christ, have been born into Christ; and if ye are Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise."

He also sets forth Abraham and Sarah as patterns of faith and good works, and as the father and mother of faithful Christians, who should, by faith and good works, aspire to be counted the sons of Abraham and daughters of Sarah.

According to Jesus Christ and the apostles, then, the only way to be saved is to be adopted into the great family of polygamists, by the gospel, and then strictly follow their holy examples.

Again: John the Revelator describes the holy city of the heavenly Jerusalem, with the names of the twelve sons of Jacob inscribed on the gates. Rev. 21st, 12th.

To sum up the whole, then, I find that polygamists were the friends of God—that the family and lineage of a polygamist were selected, in which all nations should be blessed—that a polygamist is named in the New Testament as the father of the faithful Christians of after ages, and cited as a pattern for all generations. That the wife of a polygamist, who encouraged her husband in the practice of the same, and even urged him into it, and officiated in giving him another wife, is named as an honorable and virtuous woman, a pattern for Christian ladies and the very mother of all holy women in the Christian church, whose aspiration it should be to be called her daughters.

That Jesus Christ has declared that the great fathers of the polygamist family stand at the head in the kingdom of God. In short, that all the saved in after generations should be saved by becoming members of a polygamist family; that all those who do not become members of it are strangers and aliens to the covenant of promise—the commonwealth of Israel, and not heirs according to the promise made by God to Abraham.

That all people from the east, west, north and south, who enter into the society of polygamists and under their patriarchal rule and government.

Indeed, no one can approach the gates of heaven without beholding the names of twelve polygamists (the sons of four different women by one man,) engraved in everlasting glory upon the pearly gates.

My dear sister, with the scriptures before me, I could never find in my heart to reject the heavenly vision which has restored to man the fullness of the gospel, or the latter-day Prophets and Apostles, merely because in this restoration is included the ancient law of matrimony and of family organization and government, preparatory to the restoration of all Israel.

But, leaving all scripture history or precedent, out of the question, let us come to Nature's law.

What, then, appears to be the great object of the marriage relations? I answer, the multiplying of our species—the bearing and training of children.

And while a kind husband should nourish, sustain and cherish the wife of his bosom by every kindness and attention consistent with her situation, and with his most tender affection, still he should refrain from all those untimely associations which are forbidden in the great constitutional laws of female nature, which laws we see carried out in almost the entire animal economy, human animals excepted.

Polygamy, then, as practiced under the Patriarchal law of God, tends directly to the chastity of women, and to sound health and morals in the constitutions of their offspring.

The polygamic law of God opens to all vigorous, healthy and virtuous females a door by which they may become honorable wives of virtuous men, and mothers of faithful, virtuous, healthy children.

And here let me ask you, my dear sister, what female in all New Hampshire would marry a drunkard, a man of hereditary disease, a debauchee, an idler, or a spendthrift? Or what woman would become a prostitute, or, on the other hand, live and die single, or without forming those inexpressible dear relationships of wife and mother, of the Abrahamic covenant, or Patriarchal law of God, were extended over your State, and held most sacred and honorable by all?

Dear sister, in your thoughtlessness you inquire, "Why not a plurality of husbands as well as wives?"

To which I reply,—

1. God has never commanded or sanctioned a plurality of husbands.

2. "Man is the head of the woman," and no woman can serve two lords.

3. Such an order of things would work death and not life; or, in finer language, would multiply disease instead of children.

This law leaves females exposed to a life of single blessedness, without husband, child or friend, to provide for or comfort them; or to a life of poverty and loneliness, exposed to temptation, to perverted affections, to unlawful means to gratify them, or to the necessity of selling themselves for lucre. While the man who has abundance of means is tempted to spend it on a mistress in secret, and in a lawless way, while the law of God would have given her to him as an honorable wife. These circumstances give rise to murder, infanticide, suicide, disease, remorse, despair, wretchedness, poverty, untimely death, with all the attendant train of jealousies, heart-rending miseries, want of confidence in families, contaminating diseases, &c., and finally, to the horrible license system, in which governments, called Christian, license their fair daughters, I will not say to play the beast, but to a degradation far beneath them, for every species of animal creation, except man, refrain from such abominable excesses, and observe in a great measure, the laws of nature in procreation.

I again repeat, that nature has constituted the female differently from the male, and for a different purpose.

The strength of the female constitution is designed to flow in a stream of life, to nourish and sustain the embryo, to bring it forth, and to nurse it on her bosom.

Not so with man. He has no such drawback upon his strength. It is his to move in a wider sphere. If God shall count him worthy of an hundred fold in this life, of wives and children, and houses, and lands, and kindreds, he may even aspire to patriarchal sovereignty, to empire, to be the prince or head of a tribe or tribes, and like Abraham of old, be able to send forth for the defence of his country, hundreds and thousands of his own warriors, born in his own house.

A noble man of God, who is full of the spirit of the Most High, and is counted worthy to converse with Jehovah or with the son of God, and to associate with angels and the spirits of just men made perfect—one who will teach his children, and bring them up in the light of unadulterated and eternal truth—is more worthy of a hundred wives and children than the ignorant slave of passion or of vice and folly is to have one wife and one child.

Indeed, the God of Abraham is so much better pleased with one than with the other, that he would even take away the one talent, which is habitually abused, neglected or put to an improper use, and give it to him who has ten talents.

In the Patriarchal order of the family government, the wife is bound to the law of her husband. She honors him, "calls him lord," even as Sarah obeyed and honored Abraham. She lives for him, and to increase his glory, his greatness, his kingdom or family. Her affections are centered in her God, her husband and her children.

The children are also under his government worlds without end. "While life or thought or being lasts, or immortality endures," they are bound to obey him as their father and King.

He also has a head to whom he is responsible. He must keep the commandments of God, and observe his laws. He must not take a wife unless she is given to him by the law and authority of God. He must not commit adultery, nor take liberties with any woman except his own, who are secured to him by the holy ordinances of matrimony.

Hence a nation organized under the law of Abraham and the patriarchs, would have no institutions tending to licentiousness; no adulteries, fornications, &c., would be tolerated. No houses or institutions would exist for traffic in shame, or in the life blood of our fair daughters. Wealthy men would have no inducement to keep a mistress in secret or unlawfully. Females would have no grounds for temptation in any such lawless life.

Neither money nor pleasure could tempt them, nor poverty drive them to any such excess; because the door would be open for every virtuous female to form the honorable and endearing relationships of wife and mother in some virtuous family, where love and peace and plenty would crown her days, and truth and the practice of virtue, qualify her to be transplanted with her family circle in that eternal soil where they multiply their children without pain or sorrow or death, and go on increasing in numbers, in wealth, in greatness, in glory, might, majesty, power and dominion, in worlds without end.

O, my dear sister! could the dark veil of tradition be rent from your mind—could you gaze for a moment on the resurrection of the just—could you behold Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and their wives and their children clad in the bloom, freshness and beauty of immortal flesh and bones—clothed in robes of fine white linen bedecked with precious stones and gold, and surrounded with an offspring of immortals as countless as the stars of the firmament or as the grains of sand upon the sea shore, over which they reign as kings and queens for ever and ever—you would then know something of the weight of those words of the sacred writer which are recorded in relation to the four wives of Jacob, the mothers of the twelve patriarchs, namely—"these did build the house of Israel."

O that my dear kindred could but realize that they have need to repent of the sins, ignorance and traditions, of those perverted systems which are misnamed "Christianity," and be baptised, buried in the water in the likeness of the death and burial of Jesus Christ, and rise to newness of life in the likeness of his resurrection, receive his spirit by the laying on of the hands of an apostle according to the promise, and forsake the world and the pride thereof!

Thus they would be adopted into the family of Abraham—become his sons and daughters—see and enjoy for themselves the visions of the spirit of eternal truth, which bear witness of the family order of heaven; and the beautiful and glorious eternal kindred ties; for my pen can never describe them.

Dear, dear kindred—Remember according to the New Testament, and the testimony of an ancient apostle, if you are ever saved in the kingdom of God, must be by being adopted into the family of polygamists—the family of the great Patriarch Abraham; for in his seed or family, and not out of it, "shall all the nations and kindreds of the earth be blessed."

You say you believe polygamy is "licentiousness"—that it is "abominable, beastly," &c., "the practice only of the most barbarous nations, or of the dark ages, or of some great or good men who are left to commit gross sins."

Yet you say you are anxious for me to be converted to your faith, and that we may see each other in this life, and be associated in one great family in that life which has no end.

Now, in order to comply with your wishes, I must renounce the Old and New Testaments—must count Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and their families as licentious, wicked, beastly, abominable characters; Moses, Nathan, David and the prophets no better. I must look upon the God of Israel as partaker in all these abominations, by holding them in fellowship, and even as administrator of such iniquity, by giving King Saul's wives into King David's bosom, and afterwards by taking David's wives from him and giving them to his neighbor.

I must consider Jesus Christ, and Paul, and John, as either living in a dark age, as full of the darkness and ignorance of barbarous climes, or else willfully abominable and wicked, in fellowshiping polygamists, and representing them as fathers of the faithful and rulers in heaven.

I must doom them all to hell with adulterers, fornicators, &c., or else, at least, assign to them some good or corner in heaven, as ignorant persons, who, knowing but little, were beaten with few stripes.

While by analogy I must learn to consider the Roman popes, clergy and nuns who do not marry at all, as foremost in the ranks of glory, and those Catholics and Protestants who have but one wife as next in order of salvation, glory, immortality and eternal life.

Now, dear friends, much as I long to see you, and dear as you are to me, I can never come to these terms. I feel as though the gospel had introduced me into the right family, into the right kindred, into the right lineage, and into good company. And, besides all these considerations, should I ever become as beleaguered with unbelief of the scriptures, and heavenly institutions as to agree with my kindred in New Hampshire in theory, still my practical circumstances are different, and would, I fear, continue to separate us by a wide and almost impassable gulf.

For instance I have (as you see, in all good conscience, founded on the word of God) formed family and kindred ties which are inexpressible dear to me, and which I can never bring my feelings to consent to dissolve.

I have a good and virtuous husband, whom I love. We have four little children, which are mutually and inexpressibly dear to us.—And besides this, my husband has seven other living wives, and one who has departed to a better world. He has in all upwards of twenty-five children. All these mothers and children are endeared to me by kindred ties, by mutual affection, by acquaintance and association; and the mothers in particular by mutual and long continued exertions of toil, patience, long suffering and sisterly kindness. We have all our imperfections in this life; but I know that these are good and worthy women, and that my husband is a good and worthy man, one who keeps the commandments of Jesus Christ, and presides in his family like an Abraham. He seeks to provide for them with all diligence; he loves them all, and seeks to comfort them and make them happy. He teaches them the commandments of Jesus Christ, and gathers them about him in the family circle to call upon his God, both morning and evening.

He and his family have the confidence, esteem, good will and fellowship of this entire Territory, and of a wide circle of acquaintances in Europe and America.

He is a practical teacher of morals and religion; a promoter of general education; and at present occupies an honorable seat in the Legislative Council of this Territory.

Now, as to visiting my kindred in New Hampshire, I would be pleased to do so, were it the will of God. But first the laws of that State must be so modified by enlightened legislation, and the customs and consciences of its inhabitants, and of my kindred, so altered, that my husband can accompany me with all his wives and children, and be as much respected and honored in his family organization, and in his holy calling, as he is at home, or in the same manner as the patriarch Jacob would have been respected had he, with his wives and children, paid a visit to his kindred.

As my husband is yet in his youth, as well as myself, I fondly hope we shall live to see that day.

For already the star of Jacob is in the ascendancy; the house of Israel is about to be restored; while "Mystery Babylon," with all her institutions, await her own overthrow.

Till this is the case in New Hampshire my kindred will be under the necessity of coming here to see us, or, on the other hand, we will be mutually compelled to forego the pleasure of each other's company.

Now, dear sister, I must close; I wish all my kindred and old acquaintance to see this letter or a copy thereof, and that they will consider it as if written to themselves. I love them dearly, and greatly desire and pray for their salvation, and that we may all meet with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of God.

Dear sister, do not let your prejudices and traditions keep you from believing the Bible; nor the pride, shame, or love of this world keep you from your seat in the kingdom of heaven among the royal family of polygamists.

Write often and freely.

With sentiments of the deepest affection and kindred feeling, I remain, dear sister, your affectionate sister.

BELINDA MARDEN PRATT.

Mrs. LYDIA KIMBALL, Nashua, N. H.

P. S. My kind love to your husband and all inquiring friends.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, JUNE 8, 1854.

THE ANNULAR ECLIPSE.

Comets and Eclipses have been the terror of every superstitious age, in which we have any mention of them. Yet, singularly, they are seldom alluded to in the first fragmentary history of any people emerging from barbarism.

But for the fact that eclipses can be mathematically determined, backwards as well as forwards, and are proved demonstrably to have occurred in all ages, we should suspect them of being a modern contrivance.

An eclipse of the sun is produced by the moon interposing itself between the sun and the earth, so that the shadow of the moon falls upon the earth.

If the moon passes between the earth and sun, so as to obscure the whole face of the sun from any point on the face of the earth, it is a total eclipse.

If the entire size of the moon passes between the earth and sun, without obscuring the whole face of the sun, what remains unobscured will at the time of greatest obscuration appear as a bright ring around the moon, and it is called an annular eclipse.

An eclipse less than either of these is a partial eclipse. In fact an annular eclipse is partial, and so is a total eclipse, except for a very brief period; but the above classification is convenient.

Partial eclipses are very common. Annular and even total eclipses sometimes occur quite frequently, so that the same person, without emigration, may witness several in a life time. At other times they are so rare, that a long life may not suffice to witness one; without traveling to the opposite side of the earth for the purpose. This fact makes a careful observation of one when it does occur an important scientific study, as well as scenic entertainment of rare impressiveness.

An annular eclipse, visible throughout the United States and British America, occurred the 26th May last, and at this place the atmosphere was favorable for observing it.

As the longitude of places in this region has never been accurately ascertained, and the Topographical survey of the Lakes, a work of immense magnitude, and intended for all time, is going on upon an assumed, and not an ascertained meridian, we look upon it as a great oversight that no officer was detailed to ascertain the true meridian by an observation of this eclipse. So good an opportunity may not occur again in many years.

The beginning of this eclipse was in latitude one degree twenty-two minutes south, and longitude one hundred and seventy-six deg. thirty-five min. west of Greenwich, just to the north-west of the Phoenix Islands, in the Pacific Ocean. The track of the eclipse is north-eastwardly, to the west coast of the continent, becoming annular long before it passed the Sandwich Islands.

The line of central annular eclipse first touches the American Continent in Washington Territory, just above forty-eight deg. north latitude. Slowly getting a higher latitude, it crosses the southern extremity of Van Couver's Island, and passes into British Territory in one hundred and nineteen deg. west lon.

At lon. one hundred and nine deg. it attains a lat. of forty-nine deg. forty-five min., from which it gradually recedes southwardly, passes into Minnesota in ninety-six deg. west lon., frequently crossing the national boundary, intersects Isle Royal centrally, then crossing Canada, north of Lake Huron, it re-enters the United States a little below Ogdensburg, and passes into the Atlantic within a few miles of Portsmouth, N. H.

The end of the eclipse is in the Atlantic eastward of Florida, about lat. twenty-eight deg. twenty-eight min. north, and lon. seventy-three deg. forty min. west. But this last point of contact is not the most eastern lon. at which the eclipse is visible, the line of the annular eclipse having passed far to the northward and eastward of it.

An eclipse, in the scientific sense, is simply the interception of one heavenly body by another, whereof obscuration is the inevitable, though not always the apparent effect, because of the possibility of other obscuring media intervening the eye and the luminary exposed to obscuration, such as clouds, mountains, &c.

The sun and moon appear to describe great circles by their paths through the heavens. That traced by the sun is called the ecliptic circle. The moon's path crosses this twice, in opposite portions of the heavens, thus forming an angle of five deg. The points at which the moon's orbit touches the ecliptic are known as the nodes of the moon.

During each revolution, therefore, the discs of the sun and moon must, necessarily, each pass through these nodes; and, at certain periods, it will happen that both bodies will reach the same point at the same moment, or some points of their several paths so near the same, that their apparent distance asunder will be less than the sum of their apparent semi-diameters.

Either total or partial interception must result, according to the relative magnitude of their discs, (that is, the relative size of their faces,) and to the distance between those points of their respective paths at which their centres would be found at any given moment. Partial or total eclipses are thus produced.

Eclipses of the sun always happen during a new moon; for only at that time does our satellite come between us and the sun, or within the ecliptic circle. There may be five solar eclipses in the course of a year. There cannot be fewer than two.

The phenomena recur at regular intervals of time—say, at the expiration of a cycle of 223 "in-nations," as they are called in the astronomical nomenclature—or, 18 years of 355 days and 15 hours each—when the sun and moon meet in the same position, with respect to the lunar node. It is because of this exactitude and regularity that astronomers are enabled to predict the return of an eclipse with such accuracy.

The first eclipse prophet is unknown. But, what must have been his feelings, when his calculations received the joyful fruition of their exact fulfillment. With what anxiety he must have watched the coming of the appointed day! How slowly did the revolving moons pass by! At last, the day arrived; he retired to his rocky summit, for there was no observatory for him; there to await the test of his triumph, or defeat.

The sun rises bright and beautiful; it mounts the heavens, and scatters glory in its path—while the mortal world below are engaged in the avocations of business and the pursuits of pleasure, he is watching with intense anxiety to know what the result will be.

But in the very noon of the day his triumph arrives. The sun begins to wane—it wanes—it dies. The terror-stricken millions below cry with agony, while the lone man on his bleak and barren tower, with outstretched arms, offers his thanks to the God of the universe, who has crowned his efforts with success.

Total eclipses are so rare, that the superstitious always look upon them with dread. The ministers of different false religions use them to terrify their followers: Pagans generally dread them as evidence of the anger of the Gods; nearly all christian people, including some even of the learned, dread them as prognostics of war famine and pestilence.

Total eclipses are well calculated to awaken a superstitious awe. The darkness is sometimes so great as to render some of the planets visible to the naked eye, and even some of the more brilliant stars. All nature is wrapt in gloom. The animals seek their hiding places, and the winged tribes their roosts. Even the flowers close their petals.—Darkness and silence hold perfect sway—that silence which at times is more eloquent than speech.

A total eclipse of the sun occurred on the 28th day of July, 1851. It was carefully noted by the most eminent astronomers of our own as well as of other nations. The reports of the Royal Astronomical Society upon the eclipse of '51 have furnished us some graphic descriptions, from which we take a few paragraphs:—

The approach of the totality was accompanied with that indescribably mysterious and gloomy appearance of the whole surrounding prospect which I have seen on a former occasion. A patch of clear blue sky in the zenith became purple black while I was gazing at it. I took off the higher power with which I had scrutinized the sun, and put on the lowest power, (magnifying about 34 times.)

With this I saw the mountains of the moon perfectly well. I watched carefully the approach of the moon's limb to the sun's limb, which my graduated dark glass enabled me to see to great perfection. I saw the moon's serrated limb advancing up to the sun's, and the light of the sun glimmering through the hollows, between the mountain peaks, and saw these glimmering spots extinguished one after another in extremely rapid succession, but without any of the appearances which Mr. Baily has described.

Before alluding more minutely to these, I must advert to the darkness. I am inclined to think that in the wonderful, and, I may say, the appalling, obscurity, I saw the grey granite hills within sight of Hoosac more distinctly than the darker country surrounding the Superga. The suddenness of the darkness in 1851 appeared to me much more striking than in 1842. A candle had been lighted in a lantern about a quarter of an hour before the totality. Mr. Haselgren was unable to read the minutes of the chronometer face without having the lantern held close to the chronometer.

The aspect of things near the close of the eclipse is described in this wise:—

I again looked around, when I saw a scene of unexpected beauty. The southern part of the sky, as I have said, was covered with uniform white clouds; but in the northern part were detached clouds upon a ground of clear sky. This clear sky was now strongly illuminated to the height of 30 deg. or 35 deg., and though almost 90 deg. of azimuth, with rose-red lights shining through the intervals between the clouds. In a short time the white sun burst forth, and the corona and every prominence vanished. I withdrew from the telescope, and looked around. The country seemed, though rapidly, yet half unwillingly, to be recovering its usual cheerfulness. My eye, however, was caught by a duskiessness in the south-east, and I immediately perceived that it was the eclipse-shadow in the air, traversing away in the direction of the shadow's path. For at least six seconds this shadow remained in sight, far more conspicuous to the eye than I had anticipated.

Dr. Robinson of Ireland and Dr. Robertson of Scotland were so fortunate as to witness it from an island off the Norway coast. They describe the sea fowl of that region as flocking to their customary places of rest in the crevices of the rocks. The darkness at the moment of total obscuration, was sudden but not absolute. The cloud had left an open strip of sky, which assumed a dark orange color.—This was first lurid, and then suddenly changed to a greenish blue. Upon persons and things a most unearthly light was sparingly thrown. Lamps were as visible as in a dark night, and the redness of their light presented a strange contrast with the green hue around them. The scenes of earth were indeed appalling!

Scenic grandeur equal to that was not looked for with the eclipse of May 26th, but at this place no anticipation was disappointed. The day was remarkably fine, and the light as clear as we have ever witnessed.

The light house at Isle-le-Galet, situated as it is in the dark range of the highlands of Tonedagana, had never been seen from here before, though the light is sometimes seen at night. But on this occasion, not only the light tower, but the keeper's house, were plainly visible at the distance of eighteen miles. Even the windows could be discerned, and the little white houses of the Indians several miles beyond were in plain view.

In the lower part of the sky, at a vast distance away, were seen small scuds of light vapor, scarcely discernible, but above the clearness was unequalled.

The eclipse here was not quite annular, the south line of the annulus passing twenty or twenty-five miles to the north of us; but at the moment of greatest obscuration, the opening in the north side of the ring was very slight.

As the obscuration began, the hue of the sky gradually changed to grey, and then orange, and the darkness was such as to arrest the attention of animals and birds. Fowls did not go to roost, but tame fowls gathered around their usual roosting places, and walked discontentedly about, while wild fowl flew restlessly, squawking and unseasonably seeking a place of rest, and cows returned towards their accustomed yards.

The moon appeared to pass before the sun from the north-west, and to leave it to the east, obscuring about eleven digits on the sun's northern limb.

An eclipse similar to this will occur the 7th of August, 1869, until when the curious, who failed getting sight of this, must rest content.

We had the satisfaction of observing this from beginning to end, with a good telescope, and noted carefully the results, but presuming they will not be of popular interest, omit them.

On our first page the reader will find an able defence of the Salt Lake doctrine of Polygamy. In doing so we do not subscribe to its entire soundness. But we cannot conceal from ourselves that Polygamy was not only allowed, but required and enforced by the law of God. Of this there is much evidence not alluded to by Mrs. Pratt, and she has given abundance.

While persons professing to be saints of God, and ministers in the dispensation of the fullness of times, denounce as immoral, licentious and degrading, that which God has enjoined, we should be traitors to an holy calling if we shunned to declare the whole counsel of God.

Having shown the truth, with the evidence of it, our duty is done. But many are fond of hearing both sides—holding that falsehood has as much right to be defended as truth. For the benefit of such, we shall soon publish a debate in Congress on the subject, in which the assembled wisdom of the Nation have said their say on the other side.

Persons coming to the Conference in July will probably find boats as follows:—

Propellers Ogdensburg and Michigan will leave Chicago for this place from the 1st to the 4th of July, touching at intermediate ports.

Propeller Lady of the Lake will leave Ogdensburg from the 20th to the 25th June, for this place, coming through the Welland Canal, and touching at Cleveland and Detroit.

Propeller Bucephalus will leave Buffalo from the 1st to the 5th July, for this place, touching intermediate ports.

Steamer Michigan will leave Green Bay about the last of June, for this place.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a Conference at Brownstown, Wayne County, Michigan, the 17th and 18th days of June next.

Also at Colchester, Canada West, (if the weather is favorable a woods meeting,) at Charles Hutchins', the 24th and 25th of June next.

The General Conference will be held at Saint James, Beaver Island, the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th of July next, at which sacrifices and offerings will be offered by the heads of families of all the congregation.

BOOKS.

The following books are constantly for sale at this office:—

Ancient and Modern Michilimackinac, including an account of the controversy between Mackinac and the Mormons. Price, 25 cts.

A History of the Rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the discovery of Ancient American Records, &c., by George J. Adams. Price, 12 1/2 cts.

A Discussion of the Roman Catholic Religion, between Charles Rafferty and James J. Strang. Price, 10 cts.

The Diamond: being the Law of Prophetic Succession. Price, 5 cts.

Money may be sent by mail at our risk from any part of the United States for these books. We will return the books by mail, free of postage.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Detroit, Nov. 1, 1853.

Pursuant to the Statute, in such case made and provided, I hereby appoint the third Tuesdays of July and January as the times for holding the Circuit Courts for the County of Emmet during the years 1854 and 1855.

SAM'L T. DOUGLASS,

Circuit Judge, Third District.

or, scarce-the clear-not quite of the an-twenty-us; but st obsc-ne north y slight.
gan, the changed ge, and s to ar als and to roost, d around ces, and about,
stlessly, ly seekows re-ustomed pass beth-west, t, obsc-on the his will 1869, ho fail-must rest a of obning to pe, and its, but be of m.
and an able of Poly-be to its not conceal ot only althe law of be not al-given s of God, the fulllicentious enjoined, ing if we
of God. vidence of fond of hood has
th. For ublish a in which have said in July gan will let to the porta.
ave Og-une, for d Canal,
t.
Buffalo is place, een Day
enstown, nd 18th (if the ing.) at of June held at 7th, 8th ces and of famifor sale ac, in-between 6 cis.
of Ja.
the diske, by Relig-mes J. phetic ak from of post-1863. made r Tuesrhold-of Em-60
dric.

MORMON OUTRAGE.—We are informed that two respectable citizens, of the Island of Mackinac, took a boat with a supply of provisions, stores, nets, &c., and went to Grand Island for the purpose of fishing. Upon their arrival there, they were attacked by the Mormons, their property, with the exception of their boat, was taken from them, and they were driven out into the lake upon an inclement night. It is about time these miscreants were brought to their bearings, although we have little confidence that they will ever be so, so long as they have votes and influence enough to make it an object for politicians to fawn about them.

—Det. Eng.
Why such an article as the foregoing should find a place in a respectable paper, is more than we can divine. There is no Grand Island in either Lake Michigan or Huron; no Island ever called by that name within the range of the Mackinac fisheries.

Grand Island, Lake Superior, is two hundred and fifty miles from Mackinac, and there is not a Mormon there, or within one hundred miles of it, and that is the only Island ever known by that name above Niagara River.

It has been represented by the people of Mackinac and by the newspapers in their interest, for three or four years past, that the Mormons were in the constant practice of stealing whatever property was brought among them, or left exposed in any of the country near them.

If this is true, would two fishermen citizens of Mackinac venture among them with "a supply of provisions, nets, stores, &c." And if what all Mackinac has been agreed in saying for the last three years is not true, then why should this new tale be credited?

And if "these miscreants" cannot "be brought to their bearings, so long as they have votes and influence enough to make it an object for politicians to fawn about them," will the Enquirer be so good as to inform its readers and us what politicians are expected to do the fawning?—Can the Enquirer learn nothing by experience? Has not the editor of that paper seen $30,000 expended and prejudice and perjury resorted to, to fix the stain of some offence on the Mormons? And has he not seen their integrity vindicated in every judicial investigation?

With the mass of facts before him, which he will well enough recollect, without our repeating them, has he not every reason to believe that tales of this kind are constantly manufactured, merely for effect? Does he not see that this upon its face is false?

For what is said about fawning politicians, we should really like to know what act has been done in which the Mormons of the State of Michigan can be suspected of trafficking with politicians? What favors have they ever received, what benefit have they conferred, which by possibility could be the result of political bargaining? We sincerely wish to make this issue, and would like to see both sides fairly represented in both the Enquirer and Islander.

If there was the slightest probability that the offence named had been committed by any Mormon, we should protest against its being styled a "Mormon outrage." What would any one think in reading in a respectable paper of Baptist outrages, and Presbyterian outrages, because a member of either of those churches had committed an offence against the law? We cannot see why statements of this kind so lightly made, are so perseveringly persisted in by the newspaper press. We are unwilling to believe that men deemed honorable would wittingly conspire with a band of miscreants to literally crush out and murder a people, by heaping up a pile of falsehood against them, till no one would dare to do them justice.

Here at Saint James are a number of merchants doing business, with general assortments of goods. The doors of several stores are of pine boards, only an inch thick. Mr. Wait's store is only enclosed with half inch boards, and locked with a common padlock, which could be picked with a cut nail, and no person sleeps in it or within eight rods of it. Yet never a store has been broken into here.

Mr. Wait wintered eighty barrels of fish in an unfinished building, with boards stood up against the doorway, and propped up with a rail outside for want of a door lock.

M. M. Aldrich wintered a quantity of fish, pork, flour, &c., worth above $1,000, protected from theft only by common glass and sash windows.

F. Johnson & Co. had a considerable quantity of the same kinds of property and several hundred bushels of grain in a building only enclosed with inch boards, on their wharf; and for several weeks one side of the building open to make room to work a pile driver, so that the property was as much exposed as though it had been in the street; and they have now and have had for more than a week past more than $1,200 worth of pork, beef, flour, beans and dried fruit piled up in the same building, and pork and flour out on the wharf.

And among all this not one article, not a pound weight, not a penny's worth has been stolen. Not one merchant can be made to believe his property is unsafe. Such another place cannot be found in Michigan. We doubt whether it can in the United States.

Here are four packing houses, where the packing of fish is going on daily. In those houses and on the wharves are seldom less than two hundred barrels of fish. Neither packing house has a lock, and two are without doors. Add to this the nets and other things used in fishing, which are just as much exposed to the depredation of anybody who pleases to steal them as are the pebbles upon the Lake shore, and there is nightly not less than $5,000 worth of property, of the same kind that the Mormons are constantly accused of stealing, as conveniently exposed as it possibly could be, and the owners cannot be persuaded that there is the least danger of losing a thing.

We have mentioned this particular kind of property, not because it is in any respect more exposed to depredation than every thing else of the portable kind owned here, but because these facts are within the observation of the officers of the numerous steamboats which stop here, and any person from Chicago to Ogdensburg can learn the truth by inquiring of them.

Now, with all these facts in the possession or in the reach of the whole public, how is any man of sense to believe these oft repeated tales of "Mormon outrage?" How is it? Are the Mormons, as a people, such unmitigated thieves that they will commit open, daring robberies on their shores, and go hundreds of miles to steal all manner of property, and yet so honest they will not steal from each other?

We have heard of "honor among thieves," but it is asking too much of human credulity to ask mankind to believe, that a people are more honest among themselves than any other community in the State, and are nevertheless an unmitigated den of thieves.

Or does the Enquirer mean to be understood that "there are some very bad men among the Mormons, whose outrages bring disgrace upon the whole?" Then why call their misdoings "Mormon outrages?" And why not prosecute the criminals, and prove their guilt? And how does it happen that these few bad men never steal from their neighbors?

The standing fact, known to numerous strangers as well as residents, that property both of citizens and strangers is safe here at Saint James without guard or locks as it is no where else in the United States, among as numerous a population, can never be answered but by admitting a remarkable degree of honesty among the people.

HARBORS.

The New York Tribune, in advocating its favorite system of River and Harbor improvement at the expense of the national government, selects Mackinac as an example to illustrate this necessity; arguing that the local business at Mackinac could never bear the expense, and has comparatively a trifling interest in the construction of a good harbor there; but that the through navigation is deeply interested in the construction of an artificial harbor there, as a place of refuge in heavy weather and adverse winds.

No error could be more obvious; no instance more unfortunate for the case of the Tribune. There is anchorage for a thousand vessels in perfect safety in any storm in the vicinity of Mackinac, though not so situated as to accommodate the local trade. The narrow deep channels among the Islands are all harbor, for refuge in dangerous weather.

The reason why vessels do not stop and lay one side or the other of Round Island, immediately in front of Mackinac, is because if the weather is too bad to go by there in either direction, it is impossible to get there.

All vessels coming up Lake Huron, if they meet a storm in the Straits, can make Duncan, at the lower end of the south channel, eighteen miles south-east of Mackinac. If it is not a north-west storm, they can keep on under the south shore to McGulpin's Point, six miles west of Mackinac, where the anchorage is good. If by any means they failed of making the south channel, there still is no difficulty in making the Cheneux, which is as safe as a canal basin. But to get to Mackinac is impossible.

Vessels coming down Lake Michigan, if they encounter bad weather, always make Saint James, where they are as safe as in the basin of the Brooklyn navy yard. Or if passing here, they get into the Straits, and find the weather forbidding, they make Saint Helena, eleven miles west of Mackinac, where there is an excellent harbor, always safe.

Mackinac is the most perfect illustration of a place, which anything can pass if she can only reach it. All the difficulty, all the danger, is in getting so far; none in going by.

Every vessel meeting adverse winds as she reaches the Straits seeks a harbor to lay in for favorable winds; and at each entrance of the Straits she finds them, furnished ready by the hand of nature. But if Mackinac harbor was still as a dry dock, no vessel after working its way so far would be inclined to stop. The anchorage one side or the other of Round Island is always good, but they have no occasion for it.

We do not object to the theory of the Tribune, on paper. But it has been so generally used as a pretext for getting money expended either where harbors cannot be made at any reasonable cost, or where there is no occasion for them, that it is doubtless impossible to restore it as a part of the national policy.

The following named subscribers to the Islander have paid in advance to the number set opposite their names. Our issue having been quite irregular, they may not know when their subscriptions expire, and for this reason we publish the statement. The statement refers to the whole number, not to the number in each volume.

NAMES.	P. O.	NO. P'D TO.
Ezra Thayer,	Rochester,	75
Abiah Higby,	North Bay,	60
W. W. Tyler,	Port Leyden,	60
Jesse Sealey,	Savannah,	72
Francis Cheeseman,	Theresa,	61
Joseph Winders,	Pittsburgh,	75
David Routzen,	Findlay,	120
Arza Bartholomew,	Crookery Creek,	60
Amel Lake,	Allensville,	90
Samuel Black,	King's Mills,	70
L. F. Wait,	Ionia,	57
Samuel Whitney,	Bloomington,	62
James G. Miner,	Burlington,	64
Ethan Griffith,	Racine,	71
John Allston,	Potosi,	90
Charles Rogers,	Fairfield,	81
Lewis Jackson,	Council Bluffs,	71
Joseph K. Lane,	" "	59
Abram Rose,	" "	59
Jacob Stokes,	" "	59
Phillip Garrost,	" "	59
Jacob Croft,	Grand Saline,	92
William Slade,	" "	92
James Smith,	Micko,	81
D. S. Brown,	Port Rowen,	80

In stating these accounts we have reckoned forty numbers a year, because in issuing a weekly paper in summer and monthly in winter, each annual subscriber would be entitled to that number.

STATE CENSUS.

The several officers charged by law with taking the census in the County of Emmet have their work far advanced, and the result so far is very gratifying. A few of the Islands are yet to be visited, and a portion of the unorganized territory; but it is already shown that the population of the County is over four thousand. We think it a little short of five.

The returns, we are assured, will show a development of resources equally gratifying.

The Detroit Weekly Tribune, of Dec. 13th, 1853, and containing the President's annual Message, reached the P. O. at this place the 27th May last, by due course of mail. This is the consequence of the miserable arrangement of sending our mail through the office at Mackinac. It might as well come by San Francisco.

Since the passage of the Nebraska bill, the Charleston papers advocate the reopening of the African slave trade. We doubt whether the north will make a stand against the propagandism of slavery.

He who labors for mankind, without a care for himself, has already begun his immortality.

He who would acquire fame, must not show himself afraid of censure. The dread of censure is the death of genius.

Solitude bears the same relation to the mind that sleep does to the body. It affords it the necessary opportunities for repose and recovery.

COWDERY'S LETTERS.

Oliver Cowdery was the earliest associate with Joseph Smith in the ministry of the dispensation of the fullness of times. The series of letters, one of which we insert in each number, till the publication is complete, give a most faithful history of the bringing in of the dispensation. They were written in answer to brief letters from Wm. W. Phelps, then a recent convert, and a seeker for further knowledge. The letters of Phelps consisting principally of brief inquiries, we omit, the answers being full without them.

LETTER II.
—, Sept. 20th, 1834.

DEAR BROTHER:—In my former letter to you I promised to commence a more particular and minute history of the rise and progress of the Latter Day Saints; and publish, for the benefit of inquirers, and all who are disposed to learn. There are certain facts relative to the works of God, worthy the consideration and observance of every individual, and every society:—They are that he never works in the dark—his works are always performed in a clear, intelligible manner: and another point is, that he never works in vain. This is not the case with men; but might it not be?

When the Lord works, he accomplishes his purposes, and the effects of his power are to be seen afterward. In view of this, suffer me to make a few remarks by way of introduction. The works of man may shine for a season with a degree of brilliancy, but time changes their complexion; and whether it did or not, all would be the same in a little space, as nothing except that which was erected by a hand which never grows weak, can remain when corruption is consumed.

I shall not be required to adorn and beautify my narrative with a relation of the faith of Enoch, and those who assisted him to build up Zion, which fled to God—on the mountains of which was commanded the blessing, life forever more—to be held in reserve to add another ray of glory to the grand retinue, when worlds shall rock from their base to their centre; the nations of the righteous rise from the dust, and the blessed millions of the church of the first born shout his triumphant coming, to receive his kingdom, over which he is to reign till all enemies are subdued.

Nor shall I write the history of the Lord's church, raised up according to his own instruction to Moses and Aaron; of the perplexities and discouragements which came upon Israel for their transgressions; their organization upon the land of Canaan, and their overthrow and dispersion among all nations, to reap the reward of their iniquities, to the appearing of the Great Shepherd, in the flesh.

But there is, of necessity, a uniformity so exact; a manner so precise, and ordinances so minute, in all ages and generations whenever God has established his church among men, that should I have occasion to recur to either age, and particularly to that characterized by the advent of the Messiah, and the ministry of the apostles of that church; with a cursory view of the same till it lost its visibility on earth; was driven into darkness, or till God took the holy priesthood unto himself, where it has been held in reserve to the present century, as a matter of right, in this free country, I may take the privilege.

This may be doubted by some—indeed by many—as an admission of this point would overthrow the popular systems of the day. I cannot reasonably expect, then, that the large majority of professors will be willing to listen to my argument for a moment; as a careful, impartial, and faithful investigation of the doctrines which I believe to be correct, and the principles cherished in my bosom—and believed by this church—by every honest man must be admitted as truth. Of this I may say as Tertulian said to the Emperor, when writing in defence of the saints in his day: "Who ever looked well into our religion that did not embrace it?"

Common undertakings and plans of men may be overthrown or destroyed by opposition. The systems of this world may be exploded or annihilated by oppression or falsehood; but it is the reverse with pure religion.—There is a power attendant on truth that all the arts and designs of men cannot fathom; there is an increasing influence which rises up in one place the moment it is covered in another, and the more it is traduced, and the harsher the means employed to effect its extinction, the more numerous are its votaries.

It is not the vain cry of delusion from the giddy multitude; it is not the sneers of bigots; it is not the frowns of zealots, neither the rage of princes, kings, nor emperors, that can prevent its influence.

The fact is, as Tertulian said, no man ever looked carefully into its consistency and propriety without embracing it. It is impossible: that light which enlightens man, at once enraptures him; that intelligence which existed before the world was, will unite, and that wisdom in the Divine economy will be so conspicuous, that it will be embraced, it will be observed, and it must be obeyed.

Look at pure religion, whenever it has had a place on earth, and you will always mark the same characteristics in all its features. Look at truth, (without which the former could not exist,) and the same peculiarities are apparent. Those who have been guided by them, have always shown the same principles; and those who were not, have as uniformly sought to destroy their influence.

Religion has had its friends and its enemies; its advocates and its opponents. But the thousands of years which have come and gone, have left it unaltered; the millions who have embraced it, and are now enjoying that bliss held forth in its promises, have left its principles unchanged, and its influence upon the honest heart unweakened.

The many oppositions which it has encountered; the millions of calumnies, the numberless reproaches, and the myriads of falsehoods, have left its fair form unimpaired, its beauty untarnished, and its excellence as superior; while its certainty is the same, and its foundation upheld by the same God.

One peculiarity of men I wish to notice in the early part of my narrative. So far as my acquaintance and knowledge of men and their history extends, it has been the custom of every generation, to boast of, and extol the acts of the former.

There has ever been an apparent blindness common to men; which has hindered their discovering the real worth and excellence of individuals while residing with them; but when once deprived of their society, worth, and counsel, they were ready to exclaim, how great and intangible were their qualities, and how precious is their memory.

The vilest and most corrupt are not exempt from this charge: even the Jews, whose former principles had become degenerated, and whose religion was a mere show, were found among that class who were ready to build and garnish the sepulchres of the prophets, and condemn their fathers for putting them to death, making important boasts of their own righteousness, and of their assurance of salvation, in the midst of which they rose up with one consent, and treacherously and shamefully betrayed, and crucified the Savior of the world.

No wonder that the inquirer has turned aside with disgust, nor marvel that God has appointed a day when he will call the nations before him, and reward every man according to his works.

Enoch walked with God, and was taken home without tasting death. Why were not all converted in his day and taken with him to glory? Noah, it is said was perfect in his generation; and it is plain that he had communion with his maker, and by his direction accomplished a work the parallel of which is not to be found in the annals of the world.

Why were not the world converted, that the flood might have been stayed? Men, from the days of our father Abraham, have talked, boasted, and extolled his faith: and he is even represented in the scriptures—The father of the faithful.

Moses talked with the Lord

face to face; received the great moral law, upon the basis of which those of all civilized governments are founded; led Israel forty years, and was taken home to receive the reward of his toils—then Jacob could realize his worth.

Well was the question asked by our Lord, "How can the children of the bridechamber mourn while the bridegroom is with them?" It is said that he traveled and taught the righteous principles of his kingdom, three years, during which he chose twelve men, and ordained them apostles, and chose others to preach and administer ordinances.

The people saw and heard—they were particularly benefited, many of them, by being healed of infirmities, and diseases; of plagues, and devils: they saw him walk upon the water; they saw the winds and waves calmed at his command; they saw thousands fed to the full with a pittance, and the very powers of darkness tremble in his presence—and like others before them, considered it as a dream, or a common occurrence, till the time was fulfilled, and he was offered up.

Yet while he was with them he said, you shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man, and shall not see it. He knew that calamity would fall upon that people, and the wrath of heaven overtake them to their overthrow; and when that devoted city was surrounded with armies, well may we conclude that they desired a protector possessing sufficient power to lead them to some safe place aside from the tumult of a siege.

Since the apostles fell asleep, all men who profess a belief in the truth of their mission, extol their virtues and celebrate their fame. It seems to have been forgotten that they were men of infirmities, and subject to all the feelings, passions and imperfections common to other men.

But it appears that they, as others were before them, are looked upon as men of perfection, holiness, purity and goodness, far in advance of any since.

So were the characters of the prophets held in the days of these apostles. What can be the difference in the reward, whether a man died for righteousness' sake in the days of Abel, Zacharias, John, the twelve apostles chosen at Jerusalem, or since?—Is not the life of one equally as precious as the other? and is not the truth just as true?

But in reviewing the lives and acts of men in past generations, whenever we find a righteous man among them, there always were excuses for not giving heed or credence to his testimony.—The people could see his imperfections; or, if no imperfections, supposed ones, and were always ready to frame an excuse upon that for not believing. No matter how pure the principles, nor how precious the teachings—an excuse was wanted—and an excuse was had.

The next generation, perhaps, was favored with equally as righteous men, who were condemned upon the same principles of the former, while the acts and precepts of the former were the boasts of the multitude; when, in reality, their doctrines were no more pure, their exertions to turn men to righteousness no greater, neither their walk any more circumspect—the grave of the former is considered to be holy, and his sepulcher is garnished, while the latter is deprived of a dwelling among men, or even an existence upon earth. Such is a specimen of the depravity and inconsistency of men, and such has been their conduct toward the righteous in centuries past.

When John, the son of Zacharias, came among the Jews, it is said that he came neither eating bread nor drinking wine. In another place it is said that his meat was locusts and wild honey.

The Jews saw him, heard him preach, and were witnesses of the purity of the doctrines advocated—they wanted an excuse, and they soon found one—"He hath a devil." And who, among all generations, that valued his salvation, would be taught by, or follow one possessed of a devil?

The Savior came in form and fashion of a man; he ate, drank, and walked about as a man; and they said, "Behold, a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners."

You see an excuse was wanting, but not long wanting till it was found. Who would follow a dissipated leader? or who, among the righteous Pharisees, would acknowledge a man who would condescend to eat with publicans and sinners? This was too much—they could not endure it. An individual teaching the doctrines of the kingdom of heaven, and declaring that the kingdom was nigh, or that it had already come, must appear different from others, and could not be received.

If he were athletic, he must not drink, if faint he must not eat, if weary he must not rest, because he had assumed the authority to teach the world righteousness, and he must be different in manners, and in constitution, not in form, that all might be attracted by his singular appearance: that his sinners might gain the grace which he would not give.

Since the apostles fell asleep, all men who profess a belief in the truth of their mission, extol their virtues and celebrate their fame. It seems to have been forgotten that they were men of infirmities, and subject to all the feelings, passions and imperfections common to other men.

But it appears that they, as others were before them, are looked upon as men of perfection, holiness, purity and goodness, far in advance of any since.

So were the characters of the prophets held in the days of these apostles. What can be the difference in the reward, whether a man died for righteousness' sake in the days of Abel, Zacharias, John, the twelve apostles chosen at Jerusalem, or since?—Is not the life of one equally as precious as the other? and is not the truth just as true?

But in reviewing the lives and acts of men in past generations, whenever we find a righteous man among them, there always were excuses for not giving heed or credence to his testimony.—The people could see his imperfections; or, if no imperfections, supposed ones, and were always ready to frame an excuse upon that for not believing. No matter how pure the principles, nor how precious the teachings—an excuse was wanted—and an excuse was had.

The next generation, perhaps, was favored with equally as righteous men, who were condemned upon the same principles of the former, while the acts and precepts of the former were the boasts of the multitude; when, in reality, their doctrines were no more pure, their exertions to turn men to righteousness no greater, neither their walk any more circumspect—the grave of the former is considered to be holy, and his sepulcher is garnished, while the latter is deprived of a dwelling among men, or even an existence upon earth. Such is a specimen of the depravity and inconsistency of men, and such has been their conduct toward the righteous in centuries past.

hearts, when reproved, were not willing to repent; but sought to make a man an offender for a word: or for wearing camels' hair, eating locusts, drinking wine, or showing friendship to publicans and sinners.

When looking over the sacred scriptures, we seem to forget that they were given through men of imperfections, and subject to passions. It is a general belief that the ancient prophets were perfect—that no stain or blemish ever appeared upon their characters while on earth, to be brought forward by the opposer as an excuse for not believing. The same is said of the apostles; but James said that Elias [Elijah] was a man subject to like passions as themselves, and yet he had that power with God that in answer to his prayer it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and a half.

There can be no doubt but those to whom he wrote looked upon the ancient prophets as a race of beings superior to any in those days; and in order to be constituted a prophet of God, a man must be perfect in every respect. The idea is, that he must be perfect according to their signification of the word. If a people were blessed with prophets, they must be the individuals who are to prescribe the laws by which they must be governed, even in their private walks.

The generation following were ready to suppose, that those men who believed the word of God were as those to whom they were delivered, and supposed they must be perfect in every respect, and that they must be governed, even in their private walks.

The generation following were ready to suppose, that those men who believed the word of God were as those to whom they were delivered, and supposed they must be perfect in every respect, and that they must be governed, even in their private walks.

You will see that I have made mention of the Messiah, of his mission into the world, and of his inward and outward appearance; but do not understand me as attempting to place him on a level with men, or his mission on a parallel with those of the prophets and apostles—far from this I view his mission such as none other could fill; that he was offered up without spot to God a propitiation for our sins; that he rose triumphant and victorious over the grave, and him that has the power of death. This man could not do. It required a perfect sacrifice—man is imperfect. It required a spotless offering—man is not spotless. It required an infinite atonement—man is mortal.

I have, then, as you will see, made mention of our Lord, to show that individuals teaching truth, whether perfect or imperfect, have been looked upon as the worst of men. And that even our Savior, the great Shepherd of Israel, was mocked and derided, and placed on a parallel with the prince of devils; and the prophets and apostles, though at this day, looked upon as perfect as perfection, were considered the basest of the human family by those among whom they lived.

It is not rumor, though it is wafted by every gale, and reiterated by every zephyr, upon which we are to found our judgments of one's merits or demerits. If it is, we erect an altar upon which we sacrifice the most perfect of men, and establish a criterion by which the vilest of the vile may escape censure.

But lest I weary you with too many remarks upon the history of the past, after a few upon the propriety of a narrative of the description I have proposed, I shall proceed.

OLIVER COWDEY.

FRAGMENTS.

A Good One—Riding over the Hamilton and Dayton railroad the other day, under the charge of Mr. John Vandusen, (the gentlemanly conductor, pro tem,) he told us the following incident, which we thought worth "making note of."—"One day last week," said he, "there came on board of the cars, from one of the upper country stations, a very pretty, genteel young lady, en route for this city. She was alone, so I waited upon her to a good seat, and made her as comfortable as possible. It was a few minutes before the starting hour, and she was so agreeable and so talkative, I lingered, and had quite a pleasant chat. Afterward, when collecting the tickets, she detained me again an instant, and gave me some fine peaches, which she said came from her friend's orchard, in the country; and I began to think that I had not met with such a charming lady passenger for many a day. Well, we arrived at the depot—there I attended her to a carriage, handed her up the carpet-bag, and after all, what do you think she said?"

Now, we thought, of course, that the lady would say, very politely, "thank you sir," smile like a gleam of sunshine, the carriage would roll off, our friend John would bow an adieu, and, with a sigh, perhaps, turn away and forget the matter. So we stated that as our supposition.

"No," said John, "she done no such thing; but just as her foot was on the step, she turned, and with a sort of look I can't describe, observed:—"

"You must consider this, sir, merely a car acquaintance. You must not expect to be recognized if we chance to meet anywhere else;" and John drew a long breath.

"What did you say?" we asked.

"Why, I thought that rather uncivil, at least, so I replied very quickly,—"

"Certainly not, madam; I was just going to remark that you must not feel slighted if unnoticed by me anywhere but on the cars—for, really, we conductors have to be careful about our acquaintances!"

"And the lady?" said we.

"She looked quite silly, as she drove off," replied John.

The Russian Bear and the Turkey Cock.—We have heard a good deal lately about the "position taken by Turkey;" and as the attitude assumed has been rather warlike, we may come to the conclusion that the "position taken by Turkey" is in fact standing on drumsticks.

"Why don't rich folk take Epsom salts?" Because they are made for working people."

The true poet is he who finds for the universal thought and feeling the becoming language.

Our possessions are wholly in our performances. He owns nothing to whom the world owes nothing.

The snake may reach the eminence as certainly as the eagle, but he reaches it by crawling, and he still remains a snake.

The only correct idea of social liberty is, that each person should be suffered to occupy his proper place, according to his natural capacities.

The effort of character is always to command consideration. We sport, and toy, and laugh, with men, and women who have none; but we never confide in them.

Many persons fancy themselves friendly, when they are only officious. They counsel, not so much that you should be recognized as teachers of wisdom.

The great race between a nightmare and a clothes-horse came off yesterday. The man who entered the mare wasn't wide awake; so the horse took the prize.

A young widow was asked why she was going to get married so soon after the death of her first husband.

"Oh, la," said she, "I do it to prevent fretting myself to death on account of dear Tom."

A barber desired a groggy customer of his, one Sunday morning, whose breath smelled strong of alcohol, to keep his mouth shut, or the establishment might get indicted for keeping a rum hole open on Sunday.

Eddy was up for exhibition, and was being catechized before his admiring friends:—

"Who was put into the fiery furnace?"

asked his father.

"Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego," was the answer, after some assistance.

"Who put them in?"

Eddy's face brightened this time, and with all the boldness of one who was sure he was right, cried out.

"Little Johnny Green!"—Knickerbocker.

The Musical World is informed that at an expedition given by the Choctaw Indians the other night, they "kindly offered to give a specimen of tomahawking and scalping, if any lady or gentleman in the audience would step forward."

"Miss, will you take my arm?"

"La! yes, sir, and you too."

"Can't spare but the arm, miss," replied the bachelor.

"Then," said she, "I can't take it, as my motto is, to go the whole hog or nothing!"

A Forlorn Hope.—The widow that wishes to die an old maid.

Since the new divorce bill went into operation, marriages are placed under the head of limited partnerships.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 8.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JUNE 15, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 55.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

DEBATE IN CONGRESS ON POLY- GAMY.

The Chairman. The next bill on the Calendar for consideration is House bill No. 317, entitled "A bill to establish the office of Surveyor General of Utah, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes."

While the bill was under consideration in committee of the whole, the third section was read, as follows:—

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That on proof of settlement and cultivation, as required by this act, to the satisfaction of the surveyor general, or other officer designated by law for that purpose, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, a certificate shall be issued to the party entitled, on presentation of which, if approved by the Secretary of the Interior, a patent shall issue thereon: Provided, however, That on the death of any such settler, before the completion of the four years' occupancy and cultivation required by this act, the right shall descend to his heirs at law, who shall be entitled to a certificate and patent as aforesaid on proof, as before provided, of continued occupancy and cultivation by such settler to the time of his death: Provided, however, That when lands are claimed under any of the provisions of this act by persons who are not citizens of the United States, patents shall not issue therefor until they become citizens: And, provided further, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be the husband of more than one wife.

Mr. Bernhisel. I move to amend the third section by striking out all after the word "citizen." In the eighteenth line, being the last proviso.

Mr. Haven. I hope the committee will adopt the amendment of the delegate from Utah, [Mr. Bernhisel.] One reason is, that I do not desire, by any legislation which we may enact here, to recognize any such institution as that in Utah.

Mr. Letcher. I think it would be as well to leave this matter alone; but the only objection I have to it is, that the committee did not apply the same sort of provision to gentlemen who are to get $3,000 a year out there in the way of salaries. I cannot understand why a section of the bill was reported authorizing a salary of $3,000 to be paid to men who had half a dozen wives without any restriction whatever, and why this third section should be reported with a restriction confined to settlers alone. My object in rising was to ascertain from the chairman of the committee on public lands the reason for this discrimination, why the settler should be punished for having more wives than one, while office holders, who are in the receipt of large salaries, not only have the benefit of money, but of the women to boot. [Laughter.]

Mr. Davis, of Rhode Island. I do not see that this discrimination is any worse than that of inserting the word "white" in these territorial bills. I do not see that it is legislating in favor of any worse institution than we have already prepared to establish by making this other discrimination in favor of white citizens alone. I do not know that it is any worse than legislating in favor of an institution which knows nothing of marriage between a large class of people, which does not even regulate the institution of marriage in any form whatever. And yet, with all the defects of Utah, they have some regulation as to the relation of man and woman. And it seems to me, as far as I can discover, that the institution of the south is calculated to denationalize our territories, and to prepare them to introduce a system of promiscuous concubinage, so far as one portion of the community is concerned, and to give one portion of the community full power and control over another portion of the community.

I do not particularly object to this amendment, unless the other amendment is also carried; and I see no good policy in making such a distinction as this. I would as lief have Utah come into this union with their defective institutions as to have a slave State come into

it. I do not think that there is more evil in the one than there is in the other; but I am opposed to the admission of either, without conformity to the general and well settled principles of the moral laws, as they are known and understood by every reasonable man.

Mr. Smith, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I only take occasion to remark, that nothing surprises me more than to hear gentlemen who never were in a slave State, perhaps, in their lives, discourse ex cathedra on the character of our institutions. Now, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. Davis] speaks upon this subject as though a common indiscriminate intercourse of the sexes existed among a portion of the population of the southern States. But I would have that member to know that the tie of marriage is, in many respects, to a very large extent, as sacredly observed among the negroes of the south as it is among the people from whom he comes. And I do not hesitate to say that the crime of incontinence is as rare in the southern States as it is in the great State of Rhode Island. If, however, the gentleman from that State is prepared, in connection with this subject, to get up and justify the institution of Mormonism—an institution which authorizes a man to have as many wives as he can maintain—if, I say, he is prepared to maintain such an institution as that, on so poor a pretext, let him go home and justify himself to his constituency. I hope, sir, the provision will not be stricken out.

Mr. Cobb, of Alabama. Sir, I advocated that provision before the committee, and I shall advocate it here, believing that it is right. I believe that this government, when they propose to grant donations without any particular consideration, should—and it is their province to—discriminate and encourage that class for whose peculiar advantage these donations are intended.

The gentleman from Virginia speaks of giving large salaries to persons occupying the position which I understand the Governor of Utah does. Now, without intending any disrespect even to the delegate from that territory, I will say that I am myself opposed to the principle of encouraging these individuals by giving them large salaries. And so far as my own action is concerned, I am opposed to increasing their salaries.

As I have been the zealous advocate from the first of ingrafting on the bill the provision, now proposed to be stricken out, I desire to propound a few questions to the delegate from Utah, which, if he answers to my satisfaction, I may, perhaps, and in all probability will, vote for striking out the provision to which he objects.

I may have been too rigid in the principles which I have been accustomed to entertain, and I desire to propound a few questions to the Delegate from that Territory, with a view to correct my own judgment, if it should appear to be wrong.

I will accordingly ask the gentleman from Utah whether this proviso, which limits the benefits of this act to persons who have now, or hereafter have, only one wife, will, in his opinion, work any very considerable injustice or hardship to any considerable number of the inhabitants of the Territory of Utah?

I do not desire to do any great injustice to any set of people, or to any individuals; and if the gentleman, the Delegate from Utah, will tell me that the proviso will work any great hardship to a considerable number of individuals in the Territory which he represents, I may perhaps change my mind and views upon this question. Until I am satisfied upon that point, I must insist, so far as my vote is concerned, upon the retention of the proviso in this bill.

It is a most wholesome proviso, and one which the government ought to see carried out. The principle that an individual should have only one wife is a good one, and should be supported.

Mr. Bernhisel. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Alabama, I will state that the proviso will work injury to a very considerable number of the inhabitants of the Territory of Utah. The more wives a man has, the more farms he needs to support them. [Laughter.]

Mr. Giddings. If there is any one feature of legislation which should be adhered to by statesmen, it is that of dealing out the same measure of justice to all who are affected by their legislation. Now, sir, for weeks and months, I have sat here and heard gentlemen denounce all attempts to interfere with the domestic institutions of our Territories. From the commencement of the discussion upon the Nebraska question to this day, scarcely a southern man has spoken who has not sneered at, condemned and repudiated all attempts "to interfere with the domestic institutions of our Territories." They are now in favor of interfering with the domestic institution of marriage in Utah, among the Mormons.

I am earnest upon this subject. I am myself in favor of this proviso, taken as an independent proposition. It is in favor of morality, of propriety, of decency, and good order. But I never will go for it while we legislate for slavery in our Territories, and the admission of slave States, and permit the inhabitants of Nebraska to make such regulations in regard to their domestic institutions, including slavery and unlimited concubinage. I would deal out to the Mormons the same measure of justice and freedom that I would give to the citizens of Nebraska, with their hundreds of concubines. I will permit the Mormon to enjoy his dozen wives, and I believe I could do it with a great deal better conscience than I could give the slaveholder the privilege of an unlimited number of concubines.

Now, sir, when the Mormon marries, he does it openly, before the public. The act is lawfully registered; and, when it has taken place, the woman assumes and takes the same standing in society and in the community as her husband. He recognizes her as his lawful partner. His children are legitimate. They are educated; they are taught to understand the laws of the country, and its constitution. They become enlightened and intelligent, and may become useful members of the community.

Sir, the Mormon does not sell his wife, nor does he sell his children. No, sir. God forbid. The Mormon recognizes his child as entitled to his care, to his attention, to his protection, to the privileges of education. He does not sell his own offspring to a slave dealer. No, sir; no, sir. The gentleman over the way, from Virginia, [Mr. Smith,] says that negroes in the south are entitled to marriage. Why, sir, am I to stand here at this day and proclaim that there is no such institution as legal marriage among three millions of slaves in the United States? A fact of which we all are conscious. Is it not true that the gentleman who has made the declaration would sell the wife of his slave to-morrow, if he could get his price for her? Or, that he would do worse, perhaps? That there is no law in Virginia to protect that female from the outrages of a brutal owner.

Are we to sit here, month after month, and hear discussions in favor of promiscuous, unlimited concubinage in the south, and then turn round and pass laws limiting the Mormons in Utah in respect to marriage?

Mr. Chairman, if you will adopt a rule I will follow it. I would deal out the same measure of justice to the Mormons that I would give to those of Nebraska. I would exclude slavery and polygamy from both, and from all Territories.

Mr. Phillips. I do not rise to reply to anything which has fallen from the gentleman from Ohio. I rose, sir, when the gentleman from Ohio obtained the floor, for the purpose of expressing my entire concurrence in the motion to strike out this provision. I say that it is a provision which has no parallel in the legislation of this country. It is another step onward in the progress of centralization on the part of this government, of which this Congress has already given some strong evidences. We are not only now undertaking to regulate the industry of the country, to regulate the education of the country, to become the general almoner for all its charities; but we are now undertaking to regulate its morality. Sir, where, in the legislation of Congress, will any gentleman point me to a precedent where such a provision as this has ever been annexed to any legislation of Congress? Why, sir, in the homestead bill which this House has passed, was there any provision that no man shall become a settler who had been an adulterer; that no man should be entitled to the benefit of a homestead who had taken the life of his brother, or who had committed a larceny, or any crime whatever? Is there to be found such a provision in any of our laws making donations of land to settlers? Why is it that in this bill, in reference to the only Territory where this is regarded as a legal institution, this provision is inserted? Why, sir, if in Utah, which is an organized Territory governing itself, the marriage of more than one wife is illegal, it is punishable there as a crime; and if legal, it is a most extraordinary thing, that having permitted the organization of a Territory where this is a known legal institution, that when we pass bills for that Territory we exclude from its benefits all the persons who are living in said Territory.

Why, sir, I say that there is no principle whatever on which this is founded; and the remark of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Letcher] to the inquiry, was perfectly legitimate. For if we exclude these men from the benefit of settlements on the land, on the ground that they are in the commission of a crime, why, he asked, do you not annex the same condition to the salaries of the important officers in the same country? You have given salaries to the Governor and judicial officers of that Territory. Why, then, has not this condition been annexed to those salaries?

I say that Congress has nothing to do whatever with this transaction. We are disposing of the public land. It is not necessary or proper for this Government to make this condition. How is it to be worked out? Who is to investigate the fact? If you are making a provision, it ought to be a provision with some sanction; there should be some mode of enforcing it. What provision is there here for ascertaining the fact whether the party is entitled to make the entry?

To what tribunal have you delegated the inquiry to know whether the person applying for this benefit is subject to the condition? Sir, there is nothing of all this; and it looks to me to be most out of place, and most inopportune. It is certainly without the slightest precedent in the past history of the country; and I trust, therefore, that this motion to strike out will prevail.

After a long discussion on a point of order, Mr. Stephens said:—

My main object in rising was to declare my opposition to the principles and views of the gentleman [Mr. Campbell] on the merits of the proviso under consideration in toto. I allude to the position assumed by him, that the General Government has not only the right, but that it is its duty to interfere in cases of morals, and to erect such a standard of morals in the Territories as Congress may think proper. I put it to the good sense and mature consideration of that gentleman, if this bill were to grant lands to every body who should be a Presbyterian, a Methodist, a Catholic, or of any other particular denomination of religion, whether he would hold it to be the duty of this Congress, according as a majority of their views might be, to pass such a law?

Sir, the Constitution of the United States has guarded this point. Congress has no power to establish any religion—none at all. Congress has no power to touch the question of morals, which lie at the foundation of all systems of religion. Congress can rightfully exercise no power which looks to the establishment of any particular tenets of any religion or any religious sect, or to the putting down of any such religion or sect, either in the States, Territories, or any where else.—Congress can only interfere with such actions in a criminal point of view as come within the class of "mala prohibita." Congress has no right to look to those actions designated by ethical writers as "mala in se." None whatever.

The gentleman says that this practice of polygamy is regarded as a great moral crime in every one of the States of the Union. I am not going to discuss before this House the question whether that practice is moral or not. Congress has no right to set up a standard of morals for the people of any portion of this country. I meet this question at the threshold—I stand upon principle. I stand upon the Constitution of the United States. I will do the same justice to the people of Utah that I will to people of other Territories, without inquiring into their ecclesiastical polity.

I am in favor of granting lands to the people of the Territory of Utah in the same manner, and upon the same terms, as we do to the people of the other Territories of the Union. I would make no discrimination. If we discriminate to-day against Mormons, to-morrow, perhaps, we shall be asked to discriminate against Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians or Catholics. The evils of such discriminations, or even the attempt to make them, have been wisely provided against in the Constitution.—Let us stand by the Constitution.

Let us strike out this proviso, and let the people of Utah, amenable to their own laws, civil as well as ecclesiastical, have the rights and privileges of this bill, just as the people of all the other Territories within our jurisdiction. The power which will be exercised in this proviso will, if ever brought in full operation, break down the only safeguard we have for religious freedom.

Mr. Smith, of New York. Sir, I believe that no subject has come before us involving more important principles than this subject.—I wish it might be discussed temperately and patiently, and passed upon deliberately and wisely.

I am in favor of retaining the proviso under consideration, and I have risen to say a few words in reply to the gentlemen from Alabama and Georgia, [Mr. Phillips and Mr. Stephens.] Before doing so, however, I will notice what was said by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Smith.] That gentleman says that the marriage tie among the southern slaves is held sacred. I believe that it is held sacred to a considerable extent; and therefore I am willing to say so. But, sir, no thanks to the laws for this. Thanks for it to the faithful affections of the parties to the marriage, and to the kindness of masters and mistresses who permit the indulgence of these affections.—But, sir, we are legislators, and we are to look at the legal character of things. We are not to accept concessions and privileges in the place of legal rights. We are to inquire whether marriage among the slaves is legal.—Now, sir, there is no legal marriage among them. I go so far as to say that I am ready to stipulate in advance, that if the gentleman from Virginia can show that there is a legally married slave in all the south, I will give up all my opposition to slavery. The slave is incapable of any contract—even that of matrimony.

The slaves, after they have passed under the ceremony called marriage, can, as well as before it, be sold from each other, and separated forever.

Mr. Jones, of Tennessee. If the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I will tell him of one case.

Mr. Smith. I will yield, certainly, for that purpose.

Mr. Jones. Some two years ago, in this city, I was speaking to a gentleman from Maryland about buying some slaves. He said his negroes had been married by a Catholic priest, that he himself was of the same religion, and that he would not sell them unless the priest was to go along with them. They were married by a Catholic priest, which I presume the gentleman would call legal. I have seen them legally married.

Mr. Smith. I have no doubt of what the gentleman states.

The Chairman. The gentleman from New York will permit the Chair to interrupt him. The Chair ruled some time ago, that during the discussion in committee upon territorial business, he should confine gentlemen in their remarks to the discussion of the subject under consideration. The gentleman from New York will, therefore, confine himself to the amendment now pending before the committee.

Mr. Smith, of New York. Never mind what the Catholic said to the gentleman of Tennessee. I ask that gentleman whether he, himself, believes that there is legal marriage among the slaves? Sir, the gentleman has carried us into Maryland. I will follow him there, and I will say to him, that the Maryland books (1 Maryland Reports, 561, 563) show that a slave cannot be prosecuted for bigamy. He cannot be guilty of bigamy, for he never was a legal husband. He never had ability to contract legal marriage.

But, sir, to the subject before us. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama and Georgia, that we are not to concern ourselves with the morals of the Territories. I make the province of civil government quite as narrow as those gentlemen do. I do not include in that narrow province the duty of promoting morals, nor even of protesting morals. All I would receive at the hands of Government is protection of person and property. The office of Government is to hold a shield over the great essential natural rights of its subjects.—Now, sir, I hold that polygamy invades a great natural right, and that it is, therefore, the duty of civil Government to suppress it.

I suppose that it will not be denied that polygamy prevails in Utah. But it is said that polygamy is a part of the religion of the Mormons; and that, as we would keep ourselves clear of the offence of invading the religion of our subjects, we must not strike at polygamy. I admit, sir, that the reformation of religion cannot be a legitimate object of legislation.—But, sir, that legislation may be sound and justifiable which incidentally affects religious systems. If a religious system tramples on any of those great rights which it is the office of Government to protect, then, at just those points where such system offends, Government is to meet it and overcome it.

I argue the duty of Government to suppress polygamy on just the principles that I argue the duty of Government to suppress land monopoly. I believe that all persons have an equal right to the soil. The Maker of the earth has provided one home, not two homes, for each person, not two farms, but one farm, for each farmer. The right to the soil is natural and equal. So, sir, the right of one man to one wife, and each woman to one husband, is a natural right; and for one man to get more than one wife, or for one woman to get more than one husband, is to violate this natural right, which is the duty of Government to protect.

The word of God shows that nature provides but one wife for one man, and one husband for one woman. That word teaches us that He "made them male and female"—not male and females, nor female and males. And if there are any present who do not bow to the authority of that word, I would point such to the census. The census, in every country, and in every age, shows that the sexes are numerically equal, and that the arrangements of Providence forbid polygamy.

I have proceeded in my argument for sustaining this proviso on the ground that this Government has as full power and authority over the people and institutions of its Territories as a State government has over the people and institutions within its jurisdiction. Now, I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Stephens] whether the government of his State should or would permit the dark-haired men of his State to press and practice upon their claim to a hundred wives each, and thus to shut out the light-haired men from marriage?

Mr. Disney. Various arguments passed through my mind with regard to this matter concerning the Mormons and this proviso, both pro and con. I shall not weary the House by repeating them. They bore upon the point which the gentleman from Georgia has touched, as to how far the Congress of the United States might legally interfere with the religious faith and religious actions of the people of the Territories. Again, on the other hand, it suggested itself to my mind as a question of policy. The committee will observe that this bill, as it now stands, so far as it relates to the granting of lands does not interfere with the religious belief or existing institutions of the people of the Territory. There is no interference at all. The proviso simply provides that in making these grants of lands, a particular class of persons shall not be entitled to the benefits of them.

One word here by way of reply to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Letcher,] who asked me a question this morning. That question, as I understand it, was, why a limitation of this sort had been imposed with regard to donations of land to settlers, when a similar provision was not introduced with regard to the salary of the surveyor general? Now, sir, am I really expected to answer a question of that sort? The first section of the bill provides that where an individual shall discharge certain specific and well defined duties, he shall be paid for the services so rendered at a specific and defined rate. That is natural.—The reason is obvious. The propriety of it will be admitted by everybody. The first section, then, is simply to provide compensation for a particular officer, who is to render certain services; and there can certainly be no necessity for me to explain why a limitation is not put upon the salary of that officer. The latter portion of the bill provides for donations of land to settlers. Now, the Government might pay one who practices polygamy for discharging the duties of surveyor general for services rendered, and yet might esteem it impolitic to make donations of land—gifts to parties on condition of settlement, and thus settle that country with persons practicing polygamy.—The distinction, I apprehend, is sufficiently obvious without any further remarks from me.

One word more. I have risen merely for the purpose of explanation, and not to express opinions. As I have already stated, when I submitted this bill to the committee on public lands, it was without this proviso.

Now, with regard to the Mormons themselves, I have to state the fact, that polygamy is a legal institution in the Territory of Utah. I have a volume of the statutes of Utah before me, and I have examined it carefully.

Mr. Millson. Really, I am somewhat astonished at that declaration of the gentleman from Ohio. Do I understand the gentleman to say that polygamy is a legal institution in the Territory of Utah?

Mr. Disney. Yes.

Mr. Millson. Has the law legalizing it ever been revised by Congress? I should like to know if the gentleman has any information upon that subject?

Mr. Disney. I have just stated that I have examined the laws of the Territory of Utah.

Mr. Millson. What I wish to ask the gentleman is, whether that law has ever been revised by the Committee on Territories? And, if so, whether the Committee on Territories are prepared to—what I take it for granted they will promptly do—report a bill annulling such a law?

Mr. Disney. I will answer the gentleman. There is no statute in the Territory of Utah expressly allowing polygamy as such, although it recognizes its existence. The statutes recognize the issue of marriages under such a system there as EXISTS-AT-LAW, and make provisions in regard to estates, and in every way and form recognize the existence of polygamy as a legal institution. I hold in my hand a statute of that character. I desire merely to make one more remark in addition to what I have already said. It is proper for me, in justice to the Mormons, to state that their statute books are filled with provisions AGAINST incontinence of a most severe character.

Mr. Simmons. Sir, I am opposed to striking out the clause, for two reasons. My first reason is, that it would be repudiating the whole antecedent policy of this Government upon the subject of legislating for Territories, and fitting them to become republican States of this Union. The ordinance of 1787, providing for the government of the North West Territory, from which the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin were formed, and which received the sanction of the old Congress under the confederation, and the confirmation of the new, laid down six articles as fundamental rights, to be forever secured by the government to the people, "for extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, which form the basis whereon these republics, their laws and constitutions, are erected; to fix and establish those principles as the basis of all laws, constitutions and governments, which forever hereafter shall be formed in the said Territory, and for the establishment of States and permanent government therein," &c. And among these articles, the third one reads in this manner:—

"Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged."

Here, sir, religion and morality are recognized as being necessary to good republican institutions. Certainly, sir, they do not mean by religion and morality Mormonism and polygamy.

But again, sir, this very ordinance of 1787 was adopted, word for word, avowedly on its face, by Congress, as an ordinance for the government of the Mississippi Territory, then containing the embryo State now in part represented by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Phillips,] and made it the law there too, "excepting the last article forbidding slavery," which exception was made in consequence of the contiguity of that great Territory to slave States, and of its being deemed a necessary outlet for their emigration. But the whole of the six articles, excepting the last, was adopted and applied in so many words to that Territory, together with its declaration that religion and morality are the basis of free republican institutions; and with its provisions for the support of schools and education.

It seems, sir, that this Government once had something to do with these subjects. Congress once thought that Territories could not be properly fitted to become republican States without morality. If the learned gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Stephens] will take the trouble to look into Heeren's introduction to his Political History, he will be satisfied the author is right, when he says, the reason why the civilization of Asia is so much behind that of Europe, is owing to the institution and prevalence of polygamy, which spoiled the domestic relations, and occasioned more evil than slavery itself, because one was the parent of the other.

Sir, polygamy, everywhere, spoils the domestic relations, breaks up the family circle, which is the school of morality, of social order, and of republican liberty. But, sir, as with individuals, so it is with a people, always going from one extreme to another. A few years ago the Mormons were driven out of the State of Illinois by violence, and the two Smiths were shot in a base and cowardly manner in prison, from general disgust with their institutions. The whole society was soon afterwards expelled from the State. Now that they are gone away into the western woods, and got homes in another place, at a great distance from ourselves, we do right not to persecute; but by no means, with our government patronage, let us encourage and strengthen such institutions; for, when in the course of the increase and settlements of our people in the western domains, they come to be neighbors, or fall in contact with Mormons, they will certainly have more trouble. All their institutions are at variance with ours. I would therefore pass no law to build up or strengthen them. I shall vote in favor of retaining the provision in the bill for these reasons. It seems to me very unwise in the House of Representatives to allow the idea to go abroad to the world that we are recognizing and patronizing such institutions by bounty laws, institutions at war with all true liberty and the moral sentiment of Christendom.

(To be continued.)

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, JUNE 15, 1854.

The friends of Temperance held a State Convention in Detroit, the latter part of April, to prepare for the fall campaign.—Since then we have heard of no movements. We fully expected to see the act of 1853 overruled by the Courts, and were quite prepared for the existing difficulties.

The act of 1853, known as the Maine Law, was supported by some of the bitterest enemies of temperance, because they dare not return to the people after opposing it. They made it unconstitutional, for the purpose of getting it overruled by the Courts, and then voted for it, to save themselves with their constituents. Several old, firm, consistent friends of temperance, after fruitless efforts to amend, finally opposed it, believing that it would damage the public morals and discourage the temperance reformers.

It was a melancholy exhibition of the triumph of vice, when at Lansing, among the conservators of the public weal, men daily hot with liquor, and seldom quite free from intoxication, crowded themselves forward as the most faithful advocates of reform, and pushed aside the unflinching laborers of twenty-five years service in the cause, as luke-warm half-hearted reformers, behind the enterprise of the age, and as old fogies, or hypocrites.

If we had any confidence in the workings of experience to make men wise, we should look forward to the next Legislature with hope. Prohibition is eminently necessary. That necessity is felt and acknowledged by a large majority of the people.

At the last session of the Legislature this District was represented by an unflinching advocate of temperance, who was too old a bird to be caught with chaff. Whether it will be so again is very uncertain. We are not free from the most serious anxiety on the subject; more on account of this liquor question than any other. We have no important local interests to look after. We are anxious to see a man brought forward for a member of the next House sound in this respect, not seriously objectionable otherwise, who can be elected. We care little what party he belongs to.

The Monroe Democrat, of March 23d, has the following:—

SQUATTER SOVEREIGNTY.—The organ of the Mormon community that colonized Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan, has the following argument in favor of Douglas' principles of popular sovereignty, which we commend to all who advocate the Nebraska bill:—

"What business has Congress or the United States with the law concerning marriage?—That is a domestic matter of each State, in which each is sovereign. Fifteen of the States allow a large portion of their population, (the slaves,) as many wives as their masters please, and as many concubines as they can get. A majority allow every man to keep as many concubines as he can hire, and turn them off when he pleases, and consign them to poverty and destruction. In all the States vast numbers are publicly kept as common prostitutes, and neither Congress or any other power has been appealed to. But because the Mormons in Utah have, like the Puritans in New England, determined to be governed by the law of God, they must, forsooth, be refused admission into the Union. Does not republicanism itself guaranty to Utah the right of self-government? Have not they the same right to establish polygamy, that Michigan has to prohibit it, and establish dualty? Is the republicanism of America a reality, or is it a false pretense, a swindle? Nothing can be clearer than that if the people of Utah see fit to institute and practice polygamy, no power on earth can legally prevent them. The only real difficulty in the matter will arise when those who have been legally married in Utah to a number of wives, choose to go with their wives to reside in other States.

We don't see any thing especial to object to in what the Democrat says. Yet it does put us in the wrong pen.

The Democrat will remember that we were answering the question of the Chicago Tribune, 'what shall we do with the Mormons?' in reference to the expected organization of Utah as a State. It was not squatter sovereignty, but State sovereignty that we were advocating.

If squatter sovereignty, or what is called popular sovereignty, is adopted as the rule of the nation, then it will certainly follow that the TERRITORY OF UTAH has the same right to establish polygamy as Oregon has to establish dualty.

And if State sovereignty is to be maintained intact, it as clearly follows that Utah, as a State, has the same right to establish polygamy as Michigan has to prohibit it and establish dualty.

We have not at any time advocated the new political doctrine of squatter sovereignty.—But we have insisted that if that doctrine prevailed with the national government, it must carry with it the practice of absolute non-interference in any of the internal affairs of a Territory; whether in regard to marriage, slavery, or any other domestic institution; which does not trench directly upon those powers expressly granted to Congress by the Constitution.

And we have thrust before the people the fact that if Congress does affirm this squatter sovereignty doctrine, for the purpose of introducing slavery into Nebraska and Kansas, other radicalisms may transplant themselves to new unorganized Territory, and in the exercise of this new and untried sovereignty present to Congress pills, more bitter than either slavery or polygamy, to be swallowed, in order to preserve the life of the new born ruler, "squatter sovereignty."—He draws all his sustenance from his Congressional mother, and she will need vomit up what little remains of morals, public virtue and national honor, as well as an enormous mass of ancient and religious prejudices, and ancestral traditions; or the bantling will perish of the food he is nourished with.

We do not subscribe to the doctrine of popular sovereignty, or the sovereignty of majorities any where, as sound in morals.—

We hold that minorities have rights as well as majorities. Every written constitution is a standing witness that there are some things which a majority cannot rightfully do. And all experience shows that the power which must be vested in a majority, in order that the wheels of government may not be stopped, is ever liable to abuse.

We recognize in the government of the United States sovereign power, absolute, except so far as restrained by the constitution, for certain specified purposes, and power concurrent with the States for certain other purposes.

Beyond this, all the rights and attributes, and all the prerogatives and powers of sovereignty, except so far as restrained by written constitutions, belong to the State governments.

The rights reserved in the constitution of the United States to the people, belong to them equally, whether residing in States, organized Territories, or any unorganized dominion.

The rights reserved to the people by the State constitutions, belong to the people of the States severally reserving them.

The States can have no power whatever in the Territories, because they are not in their dominion.

The constitution contains no express grant to the United States of power to govern Territories. But it recognizes the United States as the holder of Territory, not within any State, by the clause granting power to make rules and regulations concerning the public lands, under the name of Territory, and by providing for the admission of new States to be erected in that Territory.

This Territory is within the boundary and dominion of the United States, but not within that of any individual State, and dominion carries with it the right to govern, absolute, except so far as limited by a valid constitution. Hence the United States hold all the attributes and prerogatives of absolute sovereignty within the Territories, except so far as limited by the constitution, in reserving certain powers to the people.

The United States can not only do in any Territory whatsoever the government of a State might constitutionally do within its jurisdiction, but they may do all those things which the State governments are prohibited doing by the State constitutions.

To exercise all this power, simply because it is constitutional, would be an abuse of the power of majorities. The object being to erect these Territories into States, they should be allowed, as they usually have been, to exercise so much of the local powers of government as can safely be reposed in their hands.

When the Territory now included in the five North Western States was only occupied by a few traders and adventurers, with a small portion of the American element, the fathers of the republic prescribed to them a law of inheritance, a judiciary, a bill of rights, &c., and guarantied to them a free republican constitution as a Territory in a state of population, as soon as there should be 5,000 free male inhabitants of full age in the Territory, and in due time admission into the Union as States; but for the present gave the entire power of the local government to the Governor and Judges, subject only to the constitution and the supervision of Congress. Similar provisions of law were made for the organization of several of the early Territories. And our opinion is that it was wisely done, and that the rule ought not to have been departed from.

New Mexico was a conquered country, and the people not well affected to the United States.—But they were more than squatters. They were well settled, held legal titles, and by treaty were entitled to all the rights, privileges and immunities of citizens. If popular sovereignty was allowed to prevail, they would have organized institutions as inimical to every religion but the Roman Catholic, as those of Utah are to all but the Mormons; and twenty times as opposed to American progress as the Mormon institution is falsely accused of being.

This difficulty might have been avoided by sending them a government like that of the North West Territory; calling in a large portion of the American element by liberal grants of land, and reconciling the Mexicans to American institutions, by a just administration, of a better government than they had ever possessed.

Neither policy was resorted to. But while Texas was allowed to menace two-thirds of the Territory with the extension of her dominion over it, and Texan revolutionary land warrants were located on the ancient Mexican farms which had been occupied under legal titles for 150 years, a little handful of Americans, protected by a military government, bullied the Mexicans into submission to their squatter sovereignty, and organized Territorial government without authority from Congress. In order to keep up this order of things, a majority of the old residents have been constantly bullied out of their right of citizenship, in violation of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. And yet squatter sovereignty has failed, and New Mexico is represented in Congress by a Roman Catholic priest, who cannot speak a word of English, and has no more sympathy with American institutions than Santa Anna.

A large portion of the New Mexicans have been driven away by the wrongs heaped upon them, and the country must be further depopulated; whereas a more just policy would have Americanized it, and made it a respectable State before this time.

The people who settled Utah had been monstrously outraged, and deserved sympathy and liberality from the United States.
But they were not qualified for self-government. Allowing them to undertake it, has brought about the legal establishment of more than one institution to which Congress would never have given its consent. But the thing has been done, and cannot be undone.

So we say in regard to the people of Utah, prudence would have dictated sending them a government, consisting of men of legal learning, uncorruptible integrity, and prudent, liberal, conservative principles; men remarkably free from sectarian prejudices, and able to command the confidence, both of the people they governed, and the General Government.

Such a policy would have saved the interminable struggle just opened in Congress in the debate on the bill establishing the office of Surveyor General of Utah.—
The effort to hedge in the Mormon institution, by legal restriction, is now proved unavailing;
and the appeal to lawlessness will doubtless again be made.—
The effect of this, with numerous concurring causes, will be to generate wide spread lawlessness and general disorder. It destroys the foundation of free government.

In the particular case of Nebraska, we see no objection to giving the same powers to its government at its first organization as are possessed by most of the existing Territories—because it will undoubtedly be filled with a people qualified and disposed to use the power wisely.

But we do object most seriously to recognizing squatter sovereignty, for the purpose of accomplishing a great wrong; like the extension of so oppressive and demoralizing an institution as that of slavery.

And we earnestly protest against hypocritically using squatter sovereignty as the means of extending an institution which denies marriage and permits unrestrained concubinage to 3,000,- 000 of people, and then trampling upon it to disfranchise 18,000 people who allow continent, well regulated, and scriptural polygamy.

We have a little pride in being right in politics, as well as religion. Will the Democrat put us right with its readers?

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

In Massachusetts a company has been organized with a capital of $5,000,000, to colonize with Free Soilers and erect free States of these Territories. Kansas, lying west of Missouri, is their first field. They contemplate sending forward 20,000 Yankees and Germans the present year, 70,000 before another Presidential election, and thus make Kansas a free State in season to vote for the next President. If the affair is as well managed as Yankee enterprises usually are it will succeed.

In reference to Nebraska, which lies west of Iowa, it is thought that, if a free State is raised up south of it, freedom will take care of itself there. Emigrants are pushing from Iowa to Nebraska with unexampled rapidity, several thousand having settled and opened farms since January.
These are nearly all originally from the free States. The Germans are rushing forward for Nebraska at the rate of several hundred a day.

Circumstances indicate the raising up of free States, on the Missouri, with more rapidity than it could have happened if no effort had been made to desecrate them to slavery. The hard contest which it cost to break down the Missouri Compromise, has called the attention of the world to this splendid country, now unexpectedly opened to settlement. The severe measures necessary to obtain the Indian title, would not have been taken, except for the great anxiety to increase the proportion of slave States; and had the Territory remained sacred to freedom, it might not and probably would not have been legally opened to settlement for years.—
The people of the free States are more mobile than planters and slaves, and can settle a township with free men, easier and for less expense than a single slave plantation can be made. And fortunately, at this crisis, the Irish emigration, which is favorable to slavery, is falling off, and the German and Scandinavian, which is favorable to freedom, is rapidly increasing.

The following from Brigham Young's address to the people of Utah, (published in the Deseret News,) is about the foolishness thing we have seen yet. A man who will thus snarl at those from whom he receives his bread, is not fit to be the leader of a people.

But for the office of Governor, which he holds by the favor of Gen. Pierce, he would fall into insignificance and absolute disgrace. Government patronage, and Congressional appropriations, are the salt that have preserved his organization from absolute putridity. Insulting language is an ill requital for the favors he has received.

At the time of the expulsion from Nauvoo he maintained his standing as the supposed holder of a temporary vicegerency, keeping up the delusion that he held an appointment of some one of Joseph's children to the Prophetic office, to be published in due time. While persecution was operating as an universal external pressure, this was a sufficient bond of union.

Since this, though continually sustained by the public treasury, he has lost ground, and has less followers from year to year. If removed now from the office of Governor, in three months he would be forgotten. He says:—

I have no fears whatever of Franklin Pierce excusing me from office, and saying that another man shall be the governor of this territory.

We have got a territorial government, and I am and will be governor, and no power can hinder it, until the Lord Almighty says, "Brigham, you need not be governor any longer," and then I am willing to yield to another. I have told you the truth about that.

It came into my mind when brother Bernhisel was speaking, and the same thing strikes me now, viz., inasmuch as he does first-rate as our delegate in Washington, I was going to move that we send him again next season, though it is the Sabbath day.

I understand these things, and say as other people say, "We are Mormons." We do things that are necessary to be done when the time comes for us to do them. If we wish to make political speeches, and it is necessary for the best interest of the cause and kingdom of God, to make them on the Sabbath, we do it. Brother Kimball has seconded the motion that Dr. Bernhisel be sent back to Washington as our delegate; all who are in favor of it raise your right hands. [More than two thousand hands were at once seen above the heads of the congregation.] This has turned into a caucus meeting. It is all right. I would call for an opposite vote. I will try it, however.
[Not a single hand was raised in opposition.]

I will now say, not only to our delegate to Congress, but to the elders that leave the body of the church. He (our delegate) thought that all the cats and kittens were let out of the bag, when bro. Pratt went back last fall and published the revelation concerning the plurality of wives, it was thought there was no other cat to let out; but allow me to tell you, elders of Israel and delegates to Congress, you may expect an eternity of cats, that have not yet escaped from the bag. Bless your souls, there is no end to them. If there is not one thing, there will always be another.

Ward, who murdered Butler, at Louisville, Ky., has had his trial in Hardin County, and been acquitted. The defence was, that Ward was only armed with two revolvers and a Bowie knife, and only took his brother, armed also, to assist him; whereas, Butler was a schoolmaster, and might possibly have a ferrule or a pen-knife in his hands.

Several respectable southern papers justify the murder, because Butler was a Yankee. This is said unblushingly, and in no covert language. European papers animadvert with just severity upon this result; charging the responsibility of the acquittal justly upon the general spirit of lawlessness throughout the country.

RAIL ROAD TO MACKINAC.

Some of our readers have doubtless heard of the Cincinnati and Mackinac Rail Road—that is to be—and possibly some of them may have imagined that it would sometime be built.

The stringency of the money market has caused the undertaking to be abandoned. Aside from the legal difficulties in the way of getting such a road across the Central Road, the project was a most transparent humbug from the beginning.

During the present session of Congress an act has been passed erecting a new Land District, consisting of all the Lower Peninsula north of township twenty, the County of Delta in the Upper Peninsula, and the Islands generally except Drummond and those farther north.

The Office for this District is most judiciously located at Duncan, on the south side of the Straits, eighteen miles from Mackinac.

This location, made by the President with sole reference to the public interest and the convenience of those doing business at the Land Office, is another heavy blow upon Mackinac.

Duncan is destined to be the city of the Straits. Situated as it is upon the main land, with one of the finest back countries in the world, a good harbor and good water power, upon the most favorable point to command and accommodate the commerce passing through the Straits, its growth must be rapid, and its prosperity lasting.

Steamers passing up and down the Lakes stop at the wharves at Duncan, and those who are in search of homes in a healthy region, will do well to call there before going to the land of prairies.

AN ANCIENT BOOK.

The oldest book in the United States, it is said, is a manuscript Bible in the possession of Dr. Witherspoon, of Alabama, written over a thousand years ago! He describes it as follows:—

"The book is strongly bound in boards of the old English oak, and with thongs, by which the leaves are also well bound together.
The leaves are entirely made of parchment, of a most superior quality of fineness and smoothness little inferior to the best satin. The pages are all ruled with great accuracy, and written with great uniformity and beauty, in the old German text hand, and divided off into chapters and verses. The first chapter of every book in the Bible is written with a large capital of inimitable beauty, and splendidly illuminated with red, blue and black ink, still in vivid colors; and no two of the capital letters in the book are precisely alike."

A very great mistake. The Bible was not divided into chapters 1,000 years ago. The writer evidently intends to be understood that it is an English Bible, written in the German text; but the English was never written in that. The old English black letter is similar to German, but not the same. There is no existing copy of the entire Bible in any language near a thousand years old.

We learn by the Detroit Tribune that the Young Men's Hall, in that city, has been opened for lectures in defence of the Inquisition.
When Mr. Strang was under arrest in Detroit, charged with divers capital crimes, he had the promise of that Hall (in case of his acquittal) for a lecture in defence of the Mormons. When acquitted he applied for it, and was refused. Subsequently some of the same gentlemen applied to him for favors, which they would have been glad to have purchased with thousands, and got them.

NOTICE TO NAVIGATORS.

The reef in front of the Harbor of Saint James, Beaver Island, is now marked with a water station, consisting of a tripod bearing a flag staff, with a black flag and death's head and cross bones.—
This reef is about eight miles in front of the Harbor, and four or five miles south of Hog Island.—
The least water upon it is six feet ten inches, and any craft can run either side of it forty rods off.

The tripod and flag can be seen four or five miles with the naked eye.

NEW TERRITORIES.—Our readers are doubtless already aware that Congress has passed an act organizing two new Territories, Nebraska and Kansas, and have opened them to slavery, by the repeal of the prohibition in the Missouri Compromise.

The Propeller Lady of the Lake, Capt.
Rossman, landed here last Tuesday fifty-three passengers, forty-eight of whom were emigrants from Iowa to this place; the fruit of the last winter's mission of elders Hickey and Pierce. These emigrants brought with them nine teams, and a considerable quantity of stock, provisions, &c., and have the appearance of genuine American sovereigns, who clear land, make farms, and know how to take care of and enjoy them.

The small sail craft trading from this Harbor are doing a good passenger business to Grand Traverse. The emigration to that place is considerable, and we presume when the land comes into market again will be large.
It will be seen by an advertisement in this paper that all the lands at that place are now withdrawn from sale, to await a selection for Rail Road purposes.

CHARLES H. TAYLOR has been appointed Register, and HIRAM A. ROOD Receiver, of public monies, for the Cheboygan Land District, in Michigan.

We shall hereafter publish weekly credits of all payments for the Islander.

Payments for the Islander last week.
Joseph Philmot, $2.80. John Fitch, 50 cts.
James Smith, $1.50.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a Conference at Brownstown, Wayne County, Michigan, the 17th and 18th days of June next.

Also at Colchester, Canada West, (if the weather is favorable a woods meeting,) at Charles Hutchins', the 24th and 25th of June next.

The General Conference will be held at Saint James, Beaver Island, the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th of July next, at which sacrifices and offerings will be offered by the heads of families of all the congregation.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of the Establishment of an additional Land Office in the State of Michigan.

In pursuance of the act of Congress, approved April 20, 1854, entitled "An act Establishing a Land Office in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan," the District for which it is to be called the "CHEBOYGAN LAND DISTRICT," it is hereby declared and made known, that the Land Office for said District has been located for the present, by the President of the United States, at the town of Duncan, in the northern part of the Southern Peninsula of said State.

Given under my hand, at the City of Washington, this sixteenth day of May, A. D. 1854.
JOHN WILSON,
Commissioner of the General Land Office.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of Withdrawal of certain Lands in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, on the routes of the Oakland and Ottawa, and other proposed Rail Roads.

At the solicitation of a majority of the Delegation in Congress from the State of Michigan, the President of the United States, by his order bearing date the 1st of May, instant, has directed that the following named townships be withdrawn from sale or entry until further orders, except for valid pre-emption claims, to wit:—

IN THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.
In the district of lands subject to sale at Duncan:

North of the base line and west of the principal meridian, lower peninsula.

Townships thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range two.

Townships thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range three.

Townships thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four,
thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight,
and thirty-nine, of range four.

Townships thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven,
thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range five.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four,
thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight,
and thirty-nine, of range six.

Townships twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four,
thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight,
and thirty-nine, of range seven.

Townships twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight,
and thirty-nine, of range eight.

Townships twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven,
thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range nine.

Townships twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range ten.

Townships twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range eleven.

Townships twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twelve.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirteen.

By order of the President:

JOHN WILSON,
Commissioner.

BOOKS.

The following books are constantly for sale
at this office:—

Ancient and Modern Michilimackinac, including an account of the controversy between Mackinac and the Mormons. Price, 25 cts.

A History of the Rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the discovery of Ancient American Records, &c., by George A. Adams. Price, 125 cts.

A Discussion of the Roman Catholic Religion, between Charles Rafferty and James J.
Strang. Price, 10 cts.

The Diamond: being the Law of Prophetic Succession. Price, 5 cts.

Money may be sent by mail at our risk from any part of the United States for these books.
We will return the books by mail, free of postage.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Detroit, Nov. 1, 1853.

Pursuant to the Statute, in such case made and provided, I hereby appoint the third Tuesday of July and January as the times for holding the Circuit Courts for the County of Em-met during the years 1854 and 1855.

SAM'L T. DOUGLASS,
Circuit Judge, Third District.

POETRY.

A PARTING SONG.

BY J. R. BARRICK.

The dream is o'er—how sweet it past
On rosy winds to me,
Yet with its lingering dream is cast
A parting thought of these;
Then what the joy of summer hours
With all their light and bloom,
Since with the fading of the flowers
We part in deep'ning gloom?

The autumn wind, another day
To me will mournful sigh
When thou art far, art far away
Beneath another sky;
Another hour, another hour,
My heart will pine alone,
As some poor bird in summer bower,
When its fond mate is gone.

My bark by wild winds rudely tost
On wayward seas may roam,
And hope and promise all be lost,
So dear to childhood's home;
The sky above me darkened be,
That once was shining bright,
Yet will a pleasing thought of thee
My spirit fill with light.

And when beneath another sky
Where golden hours are thine,
When warm looks beam from every eye
Around love's burning shrine,
Then lady, think! oh, think of me!
In every pleasant dream
My thought will wander then to thee
As starlight to a stream.

GLASGOW, KY.

ANGELS' FOOTPRINTS.

BY FRANK H. SPRENKLE.

I used to think when very young,
That heaven was just overhead;
That all the clouds at evening hung,
By angel hands were spread;
And used to sit and look for hours
Into the azure deep,
If happily I might but see
The angels' pearly feet.

Methought they watched us from the blue;
But when we turned our eyes
Above, to catch a glimpse of them,
They hid within the skies,
Or flew behind some silvery cloud,
So softly floating by,
And, peeping o'er the edges, smiled
To see us children cry.

I used to weep, because, forsooth,
I looked so long in vain:
But hope would chase away the tears
With her sweet songs again;
And patiently I'd watch the sky
At morning, noon and night;
And once I fancied that I saw
The angels' footprints bright.

The sun had set behind the hills,
And cast a roseate glow
Upon the sky—reflecting down
O'er everything below.
And there were hosts of shining specks,
O'er all the upper deep;
And these I thought must surely be
The tracks of angels' feet.

I gazed in childish wonderment,
With all my pulses stilled;
A glory seemed to fill my soul,
My day-dream was fulfilled,
A little prayer came in my mind
My mother taught to me—
"If I am always good and kind,
The angels I shall see."

ASHLAND, JULY 18th.

A SERENADE.

BY S. J. M.

The star of love is in the sky,
Its light is on the lake;
And through the clouds fluttering by,
The struggling moonbeams break.
Then wake, my love, through dreams of bliss
And joy around thee press,
For heaven has sent such nights as this,
The lover's heart to bless.

With gentle ray the stars all glow,
To light my pathway here,
And each soft mind seems sighing low,
To whisper thou art near.
Then wake, my love, and list to me
With kindly ear to-night,
While loving strains I sing to thee
Beneath the starry light.

The lovely host Night's Queen attend,
Half veil their radiant eyes,
To see her glorious form ascend
In beauty through the skies.
Then come, my love—oh! come with me,
While night's soft hours are here,
And sweetest strains of minstrelsy
I make to glad thine ear.

A SONNET.

I love the wild wood of a summer day,
The morning brook, the fairy chanting bird;
The tinkling bell that tell of grazing herd;
The jeweled grass, the leafy canopy;
The blushing wild rose by the soft wind stirred.
I love their sunbeams as they force their way
Thro' woven branches to quiet the oak;
I love the quivering and uncertain light
The mellowing tinge, the last and lingering look
That sunset gives when melting into night—
The tranquil grandeur of the one of love,
When wood and scenes, like earthly hopes,
Grow dim—
For nature speaks of nature's God above,
And bids us thro' her to commune with Him.

THE BOOK OF MORMON.

Six hundred years B. C., according to the Book of Mormon, Lehi, who was a righteous man, was forewarned of the destruction of Jerusalem and the Babylonish captivity, who was commanded by the Lord, took his family and fled into the wilderness. He pitched his tent in the wilderness near the Red Sea, and sent back his son to Jerusalem, who persuaded one Ishmael and his family to accompany them to their father Lehi.

The Lord promised to lead them to a choice land above all lands; therefore they set out on their journey for this land. After a long and tedious journey, they came to the great waters, or the Ocean. Nephi, the son of Lehi, who was also a prophet, and their pilot, or leader in the wilderness, was commanded and instructed to build a ship sufficiently large to transport them over the sea.

This work was accomplished in eight years from the time they left Jerusalem. They set sail, and in a proper time landed, as we infer from their record, somewhere on the Western coast of South America. They immediately commenced tilling the earth, and erecting mansions for dwelling places.

Lehi had six sons, Laman, Lemuel, Nephi, Sam, Jacob and Joseph. Laman, Lemuel, and the sons of Ishmael rebelled against God, and would not keep his commandments; for this they were cursed. Their posterity in process of time became a powerful nation; but extremely wicked, and their chief occupations were hunting, plundering, and roving about from place to place. In the Book of Mormon they are called Lamanites.

The other sons of Lehi were obedient to the commandments of God. This posterity also in the course of time became a great nation, and were called Nephites. To them God committed his divine oracles, (the holy priesthood,) and they had prophets and inspired men among them. They also kept a record of their prophecies, and revelations, and the proceedings of their nation. When they left Jerusalem they brought with them the law of Moses, and the writings of the former prophets, down to the days of Jeremiah. This accounts for the question from Isaiah and others, which are found in the Book of Mormon.

The Nephites tilled the land, built cities, and erected temples for places of worship; but the Lamanites lived a more indolent life; although, in some instances they built cities. The Nephites were at times faithful to God, at other times they were indifferent, and would not be faithful. They frequently had long and tedious wars with the Lamanites, and were often driven before them.

They were constantly emigrating to the North. At length they commenced settlements in the region of country not far from the Isthmus of Darien, and while in those parts they advanced farther in science and arts, than at any time previous; and built more spacious cities, and buildings than they did before.

Six hundred and thirty odd years from the time Lehi left Jerusalem, Christ, after his resurrection, appeared unto many of the Nephites and established his church, chose disciples and sent them through the land to preach his gospel, thus fulfilling the saying: "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold, them I must go and bring also."

Individuals of the Lamanites at times were obedient to the faith. The Nephites, after Christ's appearance, were faithful for many years; but in the third or fourth century iniquity began to abound, and their love began to wax cold. Some dissented and raised up churches for the sake of gain; and thus they were troubled with the spirit of pride and haughtiness.

God commanded Mormon, who lived in the fourth century, to preach repentance to them, and foretell their destruction if they would not repent. The Lord foreseeing that they would not repent, commanded Mormon to collect the writings of his forefathers—their revelations and prophecies, &c., and make an abridgment of them, and engrave them upon new plates, (their manner of keeping records was to engrave them on metallic plates.)

But in consequence of their wars, and their flight to the North, to escape the Lamanites, he did not live to finish this work; and when the final destruction of the Nephites drew near, he gave the records to his son Moroni, who lived to see their final extermination, or destruction by the hands of the Lamanites, and they with his father left to moulder on the plain.

Thus a powerful nation, whose fathers were the favorites of heaven, were cut off, and their names have faded into oblivion. Oh! sin thou foul monster! Thou art terrible, thy ways are death! why didst thou cause such a nation to be blotted out of the earth?

The Indians of America are the descendants of the Lamanites, and according to predictions that are in the Book of Mormon, they will yet lay down their weapons of war and be converted unto the Lord.

Moroni finished compiling and abridging the records of his fathers, which he engraved upon new plates, for that purpose, to use his own words, as follows: "and now behold, we have written this record according to our knowledge, in the characters which are called among us the reformed Egyptian, being handed down and altered by us, according to our manner of speech."

And if our plates had been sufficiently large, we should have written in Hebrew; but the Hebrew hath been altered by us also; and if we could have written in Hebrew, behold, ye would have had no imperfection in our record. But the Lord knoweth the things which we have written, and also that none other people knoweth our language, therefore he hath prepared means for the interpretation thereof."

He also engraved on them an account, called the "Book of Ether," of a people who left the Old world, and came to this continent, at the time the language was confounded at Babel; which was a partial fulfillment of the saying: "So the Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth."—Gen. xi. 8. If any person should wish to learn further concerning this people, let him read the Book of Mormon.

Moroni was then commanded to deposit this record in the earth, together with the Urim and Thummim, or as the Nephites would have said, Interpreters, which were instruments to assist in the work of the translation, with a promise from the Lord that it should be brought to light by means of a Gentile Nation that should possess the land; and be published to the world, and go forth to the Lamanites, and be one of the instruments in the hands of God for their conversion.

It remained safe in the place where it was deposited, till it was brought to light by the administration of angels, and translated by the gift, and power of God.—But, says one, who ever heard of such a thing as a record being deposited in the earth? We answer: that it is nothing more strange than it was for Jeremiah to hide the tabernacle, and the ark of the covenant, which contained the tables of stone, written upon by the finger of God, Aaron's rod, and the pot of manna, in Mount Nebo.

This account is to be found in the Apocrypha of the Old Testament; 2nd Book of Maccabees, ii. chapter. But, says the objector, perhaps the account is not true! We answer: that history corroborates it. This record was not designed to be a source of wealth, or worldly profit to any one; but to be deposited again, because they were sacred, as much so as the tables of stone on which the ten commandments were written.

However, they were shown to the chosen witnesses, men of undoubted veracity, who testify that they saw it and know by the voice of an angel that it is the work of God. But, says the objector, again, why was it not shown to the world, and then there would have been no doubt about this matter? We answer: first, because God commanded otherwise, which is the best of all reasons; why did not Moses show them to all the children of Israel? We have no account of his showing them to but a few; but on the contrary, they were placed in the Holy of Holies where the Highpriest was only allowed to enter once a year.

Third, why did not Christ show himself to the Jews after the resurrection, and thus convince them that he was the true Messiah? Peter said: "Him God raised up the third day and showed him openly: not to all the people, but unto witnesses, chosen before of God, even to us who did eat and drink with him after he rose from the dead." Acts x. 40, 41. Thus the world had to believe the resurrection of Christ from the testimony of interested witnesses, and not from disinterested. What men often think to be the best way, God generally looks upon as foolishness.

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

What a book it is—that of the Proverbs! Forget that we were ever obliged to repeat them mechanically in our childhood, read them as they stand in all their breadth and richness of their meaning, with our better experience of life, and nothing short of utter astonishment and admiration will be our feeling. Such gems of wisdom in such golden settings from one who lived and died before the name of wisdom was known among the nations from whom the world's sages have since sprung! What shrewd perception of human character under all conditions and moods—what comprehensive exhibition of life in its whole compass, and of Divine Providence in its mortal aims and sure rewards and punishments—what counsels to frugality, industry, moderation, prudence, benevolence, peace! What varied illustrations from man and beast, nature and art! How terse and polished the style! How condense the thought! To think of reading the little book through in a day would be folly, although its lines may be run over in an hour. Every line is a sermon, and gives food for new reflection every time we recur to it.

We met a gentleman in a book store the other evening, searching for the origin of the multiplication table. It was invented by Pithagoras, the Grecian philosopher, 520 years before Christ, and is thus 2391 years old. It has done great service in the world in the study of mathematics.—Portland Eclectic.

FRAGMENTS.

Arago, on the very day of his death, it is said, revised for a new edition his tract on thunder, and sent one of his secretaries to find out the exact length of certain undulation in a given column of air. Three hours before his death, he said to M. Biot, "I must hand in my resignation as Perpetual Secretary of the Academy, as I can no longer fill the duties." "Very well, do," replied M. Biot, "and we will come in procession to give it back to you, and reproach you for your ingratitude."

A person looking at some skeletons the other day, asked a young doctor present where he got them. He replied, "we raised them!"

A bachelor observed that he would marry if he was certain of a wife perfectly good. A bystander begged him to bespeak one, as none were ready made.

A late visitor to Cuba divided the inhabitants into two classes—one of which makes a living by manufacturing cigars, and the other by smoking them.

An Irish lad complained the other day of the harsh treatment received from his father. "He treats me," said he, mournfully, "as if I was his son by another father and mother."

Drinking water neither makes a man sick, nor in debt, nor his wife a widow.—Spanish Maxim.

A Novelty in Business.—A friend, who arrived from England in the last steamer, informs us that his house at Birmingham has received from a pen-maker at New-York, an order for fifty working girls. The order was executed in less than one week, and passages were secured for the whole party at £3 per girl.—Boston Transcript.

Deserving.—"Do you know Mr. John Brown?" "Yes, my dear." "Is he not a deserving man?" "Yes, he deserves a flogging, and if he ever gallants you again, I will give it to him!"

A Neighbor of ours informs us that wood goes further when left out of doors than when housed; some of his having gone upwards of a quarter of a mile in one night.

A Southern Darkey, having purchased a hat, was observed to take it from his head on a fall of a shower of rain, and to manifest a considerable anxiety to preserve it from the wet. On being remonstrated with on his stupidity in thus leaving his head exposed, he wittily observed—"Hat belong to me—head to massa!"

One of our young bloods dining at a fashionable hotel, a few weeks since, was requested by a gentleman to pass some articles of food that was near him. "Do you mistake me for a waiter?" said the exquisite. "No sir, I mistook you for a gentleman," was the reply.

John Randolph met a personal enemy in the street one day, who refused to give him half the sidewalk, saying that he never turned out for a rascal. "I do," said Randolph, stopping aside, and politely raising his hat—"pass on, sir—pass on!"

A young lady, says one of our exchanges, remarked to a male friend that she feared she would make a poor sailor. The gentleman promptly answered, "Probably—but I'm sure you would make an excellent mate."

Is there any harm in a man's sitting down in the lap of ages?—Ex. paper. No, but the "laps" usually chosen are those ranging from the "ages" of eighteen to twenty-five.

A western paper, in speaking of a man who died in the most abject poverty and neglect, said that "he died without the aid of a physician."

The adage that "there is more pleasure in giving than receiving," is supposed to apply to kicks, medicine and advice.

Son and heir.—"How many of us are there?" "Why, if you count the girls, there are four—but some people don't count the girls.—I'm One."

To find out the way to the Sheriff's office, endorse for a friend, and go security for his house rent.

To "preserve the State" and keep our morals sweet, has ever been the argument which power has made use of to justify its oppression of the humble. To preserve the public morals of Italy, the Pope has converted the whole country into a vast prison-house, making talking as dangerous as counterfeiting.—To "preserve the State," Austria is guilty of kidnapping, and looks upon a meeting of "three or more persons" in a corner as a matter of sufficient atrocity to be shot down as an insurrection.

It is announced for the benefit of those persons who did not get a sight of the comet, that it will again appear before the public, for a few nights only, in the autumn of 2147.

Remarkable.—You may see a thousand excellent things in a paper, and never hear a word of approbation from the readers, but just let a paragraph slip in of one or two lines, that is not in good taste, and you may be sure of hearing about that.

There is no place like home, unless 'tis the home of the young lady you're "after."

Naomi, the daughter of Enoch, was no chicken when she entered the holy state of Matrimony—being five hundred and eighty years old! Courage, girls.

"Do you like novels," said a city girl to her country beau.

"I don't know," said he, "for I never eat any, but I'm some on young possum."

A slanderer of the softer sex undertakes to prove that Satan was a woman, named Lucy Fir.

WHOLE NO. 13

Another reason by which I shall be goved in the vote I shall give upon this provisis that mentioned by the gentleman from inia, [Mr. Millson,] and, I believe, by gentleman from New York, [Mr. Wal-

we are recognizing, in the form of law, that in this country the crime of polygamy does actually exist. I am opposed to the provision for this reason. When we are taking hold of this crime, I propose to take hold of it directly, as we should of any other crime. By the laws, I believe, of some of the States of this Union, polygamy is a crime punishable with death. I believe that punishment suited to the crime, and I believe it the duty of this government to prescribe that penalty for its commission, wherever it exists in the Territories over which the Federal Government has jurisdiction.

(To be continued.)

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1854.

EASTERN WAR.

Austria and Prussia have become parties to the war against Russia. Better for the cause of freedom had they taken the other side; for the spirit of revolution could have been invoked in Poland, Hungary and Italy.

The Turks have gained several slight advantages of the Russians in the principalities on the Danube. The Russians have evacuated Circassia, and the Circassian chiefs, reinforced by the Turks, and aided by numerous European officers, and armed with improved weapons, are preparing to advance into Russia.

The English and French fleets have made a demonstration against the outworks of Sebastopol, the Russian naval depot of the Black Sea. Their intention is to take the Crimea, and make it the ground from which to attack the southern provinces of the empire.

The naval force of England and France in the Baltic has taken numerous positions of minor importance, and is making immense preparations for attacking Cronstat. Indeed, there is a rumor that Cronstat has been taken. This opens the way to St. Petersburg, the capitol.

The Finns are much dissatisfied with the severe measures resorted to by Russia to obtain soldiers, and are seizing every opportunity to leave the country, and escape to Sweden. Finland formerly belonged to Sweden, and was added to Russia in 1808, and the people have never been satisfied with their change of masters.

Sweden, Norway and Denmark side with the western powers, but have not yet become parties to the war.

So far the results are against Russia. The armaments being prepared against her are the most formidable ever fitted out. Yet all the rest of Europe seem more anxious about the result than the Autocrat and his faithful subjects.

The western powers are evidently exceedingly anxious to end the controversy by negotiation, and unwilling to try the wager of battle. Never was so important a war entered upon with so great reluctance; yet they are unanimous as to its necessity. In defeat, Russia is dreaded.

Saint Domingo is the second in size and importance of the West India Islands, and was the first land occupied by the Spaniards in America. It has been independent and in the hands of Africans and mulattoes above half a century.

At the present time it is divided into two nations; the empire of Hayti in the west, and the republic of St. Domingo in the east. The imperialists are nearly all African, and the republicans have a strong mixture of Castilian. The boundary between the two has never been settled, and the independence of neither is acknowledged by the United States, though it has long been a practical fact.

Among the projects for extending the area of slavery, is that of acknowledging the independence of and then annexing the republic, on the condition that she adopt a constitution allowing the introduction of slaves, and then on the boundary controversy conquer Hayti, and thus make a powerful slave State. The project is visionary, but shows the intention of the propagandists.

UNITED STATES AND SPAIN.

The quarrel between the United States and Spain is ripening for conflict. It is clearly the intention of the United States to seize Cuba, on some pretence, no matter what. In a political view the possession is desirable, and in the present state of political morals, any pretence will serve.

Besides several small occasions, the United States complain that Spain contemplates abolishing slavery in Cuba, and propose to seize the colony to prevent such a consummation.

It is now proposed to send two commissioners to Spain, to assist Mr. Soule in purchasing the Island, with the threat of taking it, trade or no trade. To give force to this proposition a large force of filibusters are preparing to advance against Cuba on their private account, and behind all is the army and navy of the United States. It is probable that Spain may be bullied into the sale of Cuba, in which case she will be knocking for admission as a slave State.

If it fails, war—but of the consummation of such a war we forbear to speak. Spain is a very weak and debased nation, but she has a marvelous power of mischief.

RUSSIAN POSSESSIONS IN AMERICA.

The British Government has notified the Government at Washington of its intention to seize the Russian possessions in North America. These possessions are so distant, and so little is known of them, that they have attracted little attention, but in the career of expansion on this continent, they must ere long be valuable in the hands of their possessor.

On the heels of the notification of the British Government, intelligence is brought by the last steamer that the Czar has despatched an agent (and he is named as the Count de Medem) to this country for the purpose of opening negotiations with our Government for the cession of all the Russian territory in the northwest coast of America.

Although, of course, Russian territory is the legitimate spoil for the Czar's enemies, and although we cannot properly interfere to prevent a seizure, yet we must feel a large interest in a movement which will add to British power on the American continent. It is to be hoped that Count de Medem will make haste in his mission, and transfer the territory to us before the British forces can reach it.—Det. Free Press.

The Count was for many years Russian ambassador to Persia, and more recently to Brazil. Three years since he visited Lake Superior, and we believe, made an extensive tour through Canada and the United States. He speaks English tolerably well, and is possessed of much general information and diplomatic talent.

A reciprocity commercial treaty has been negotiated between the United States and Great Britain, for the colonial trade. It extends to the North American continent except New Foundland, and will be submitted to the colonial government before its ratification.

Its provisions open the Saint Lawrence to United States vessels, and make the fisheries common, and give free trade in the production of furs, forests and waters, but not manufactures.

SAN JUAN ISLANDS.

Negotiations for the annexation of the San Juan Islands to the United States have been renewed, and are rapidly progressing. It is pushing this work forward. There is no apparent objection for slavery in that quarter.

Mr. Strang desires to express in this public manner his thanks to Gen. Stevens and to the Smithsonian Institution for numerous valuable books. Such as were bound are in the town library, at this place, and Mr. Strang intends to place the rest there as soon as returned by the binder. They are a very choice lot.

Indian hostilities are on foot on all the Texan frontier. Wild Cat is at the head of five hundred Seminoles and Camanches, devastating the frontier. The spirit of hostility is generally up. And good cause they have.

We learn verbally, by a gentleman, that a company of Missourians were looking land in Nebraska, a few weeks since, and coming to an untenanted Indian wigwam, in which was a quantity of jerked venison, burnt it up.

The Indians returning, stole some provisions belonging to the Missourians, when, being discovered, the Missourians gave chase, and taking several Indians halloed them, tied them to running horses, and RUN THEM TO DEATH.

We are assured this is a common sample of the treatment the Indians get.

Several newspapers, and some of them very respectable, predicted on the passage of the Nebraska bill, that another fugitive slave would be returned from the north.

We have recently noticed the return of several cases of kidnapping of negroes for the purpose of selling them to slavery. It is to be hoped the fugitive slave law will be enforced.

But the law of enforcing it by military force in Boston, and the making a posse comitatus of convicted felons and bullies, shows to what hands the government has fallen. It is a sad history of popular sovereignty.

A convention of the friends of temperance has just come off at Jackson. From the little we have been able to learn of it, we think they have learned little by experience. In the partial account we saw of it, a display was made of the act of two women in the lawless destruction of property owned in their neighborhood, and of the determination of the people of one of the townships to overrule and disregard the judicial determinations of the Courts. These things are dangerous. No law can be so bad as lawlessness. And if lawlessness is to be resorted to, where will the tapster and the drinker stop?

Mr. Head, of the firm of Head, Campbell & Head, Kenosha, Wis., is here with a small schooner, from Racine, saving the cargo of the Sovereign of the Seas, wrecked last fall on Isle le Galet. The cargo consisted of coal and pig iron, and forty-five tons merchandise. The merchandise was got off last fall, in a damaged state. Mr. Head will save nearly all the iron. It is supposed the coal will not pay the cost of saving.

Congress will take a recess from July to October. Cause, anxiety of the members to attend the August and September elections. Occasion, discomfort of the summer heats. Some of them will suffer other discomforts.

The sale of wood here is greater than the supply, and the stock is becoming short. Choppers get 63 cents per cord, with a tendency upward.

There has been a convention at Kalamazoo, and is to be another at Jackson, the sixth July, to get a Free Democracy ticket in the field. We don't know whether any strong demonstration is up or not.

The Buffalo "Sentinel" and the Saint Louis "Shepherd of the Valley" have been discontinued, for want of patronage. These papers have openly advocated persecution for conscience sake.

A MORMON IN LIMBO.—Bill Smith, the Mormon prophet, and brother of Joe Smith, the renowned founder of the Mormon church, which is becoming so noted, we might say throughout the civilized world—is now closely confined in jail at this place. He being indicted, gave bail for his appearance at the last Circuit Court, but, having got some presentiment—and we think it would hardly require any supernatural power to give it to him—that the case rather favored the side of the people, he vacated these parts. But owing to some disarrangement in the Mormon underground railroad, or the adroitness of the person in pursuit, he was brought to a halt in St. Louis, and marched back to Dixon. He had started, we are told, for Salt Lake City. "Jordan is a hard road to travel."—Dixon Telegraph.

There is no doubt whatever that William is a bad boy, and deserves chastisement. But he has a right to be legally dealt by. We do not doubt that at Dixon he is prejudged and foredoomed. Whatever offences he may have committed against law or gospel, this prosecution is merely trumped up, and rests for success on perjury.

Capt. Macomb, with a party of officers and the steamer Surveyor, have arrived in these waters, to enter upon the Lake survey. Lieut. Reynolds and his party have been here some weeks. Their first camp was on Hog Island, but now they are encamping on Garden. The work progresses rapidly.

We are behind time this week, and do not expect to get up till after the July Conference. A little book printing, which could not be delayed, and the impossibility of getting extra help is our excuse.

We have received "The Voice of the Captives, assembled at Zarahemla, in Annual Conference, April 6, A. D. 1854, to their brethren scattered abroad," which we have not yet found time to more than look into. We select the following sample:—

We know you have broken
The commandments of God,
For this hath been spoken,
And made known by his word.
But he can forgive you,
And make you all one,
In the stake Zarahemla—
We invite you to come.

Then return, scattered Israel,
Return to the fold,
And with God's chosen people,
Those wonders behold,
Of the latter day glory,
That now shineth forth,
From the stake Zarahemla,
That lies in the north.

If the reader can tell where Zarahemla is, he has the advantage of us. No name is attached to the work, and it has neither date or venue.

WANTED, in this city, a minister who has confidence enough in his own preaching, to believe that it can open the hearts of the people to supply his wants from day to day, without agreeing on a salary.

Such a minister would be sure of one hearer to commence with in this city, and I can tell him where to look for three meals and a spare bed for one night.—Portland Pleasure Boat.

Look for one that way next winter. There are a hundred such in this vicinity, and more than one have been in Portland.

The Propeller Bucephalus is reported sunk in twelve feet water, near Lexington, Lake Huron. We learn no particulars, but are sure Capt. Alexander will do all that man can do in saving vessel and cargo.

The U. S. armed steamer Michigan has paid a brief visit to this port.

MOVEMENTS OF FILIBUSTERS.

From our exchanges and other sources we learn that the available funds at the command of the friends of Cuban liberty amount to a little short of one million of dollars, while eight steamers and four sailing vessels have been placed at their disposal, and can be made ready for sailing at twenty-four hours notice.

They are also possessors of between eighty thousand and ninety thousand stand of arms, muskets and rifles inclusive; they also have, if we are rightly informed, about ninety field pieces, including cannon, howitzers and mortars, and are pretty well supplied with ammunition and side arms.

The resources have been placed in the hands of a committee, who are to hold it until the time set for the carrying into execution of their project.

The entire command of this expedition will be vested in a gentleman of known ability and skill, and whose name has already become a household word with the citizens of the United States, in consequence of his brilliant achievements and successful maneuvers while in command of a division of the American army during the late war between the United States and Mexico.

The second in command will, in all probability, be a "northern man with southern principles," and who was also a commander of a brigade in the same war, and who has since held the office of Governor, and who, if we mis-

the Voice d at Za ference,
o their ' which ime to e select who has ing, to be e people without ne hearer can tell a spare Boat.

y next ndred more rtland.

glus is et wa Huron. out are do all vessel teamer visit to

LId other availaof the amount lion of ers and been nd can ing at s of bed nines, musthey al-inform-es, ins and ell sup-d side

n placmittee, ne time execu-

of this a gen-d skill, dy beth the tes, in achievenvers ivision ing the States

l will, rthern pies," ander ar, and ice of e mistake not, still retains a prominent civil position.

Gen. Gonzalez, whose name has been associated with this movement from the first, will, without doubt, be third in command.

Col. Wheat, Col. Pickett, Col. Bell, Major J. A. Kelley, Major Moore, Capt. W. S. Edwards, Capt. King, Capt. J. W. Dement, and Lieut. Frank Onilnette, all of whom were intimately connected with the previous expedition, are, we are credibly informed, exerting themselves in preparation for the forthcoming struggle, and will "be in at the death."

The number of men that have enrolled their names and pledged their honor to support this cause, cannot be much less than fifty thousand, and they are men who are well skilled in the use of fire arms, and who are determined to avenge the cowardly massacre of Crittenden, Kerr and others, in Havana, on the 3d August, 1851.

This expedition will, in all probability, leave the shores of the United States about the middle of next month, and will land in the Vuelto Abajo country, and thence proceed to Havana.—There will be, perhaps, ten thousand men thrown into the Island the first effort, and immediately followed by reinforcements, until thirty or forty thousand soldiers are there, and with this force there cannot be much doubt as to which party will be the successful one.—Memphis Whig.

THE EUROPEAN WAR.

The drama in Europe opens in vast proportions. The slowness of the march and the momentary stillness that now precedes the general crash of action, inspire a sentiment of awe.

England has seventy thousand men on the Bosphorus and Euxine, and in the Baltic leads the largest fleet the world ever saw; France has more than a hundred thousand of her soldiers in the East; Turkey has some two hundred thousand under arms; Egypt and Tunis and Circassia are said to have contributed about a hundred thousand more; Austria and Prussia, with their united armies of six hundred thousand, are relied on, at least, to protect Western Europe from invasion. Nor are these the only parties. Sweden is to be coaxed, and Denmark forced, into the alliance.

The last news tells us of the compulsion of the prosperous little state of Sardinia into the Western Confederation. Spain also, is made to feel her dependence, and to contribute her quota to the cause of the invaders.—Greece is occupied by the hostile armies.

Nothing like this has been seen since the Crusaders; nor have England and France been allied since Philippe Augustine and Richard Cœur de Lion fought together for the rescue of "the holy shrine."

When the Crusades commenced, the Infidel was in Syria, but he turned the tide of war backwards, was soon a possessor of Constantinople, and of the south coast of the Mediterranean to the Atlantic; and even had crossed into Spain and thundered at the gates of Vienna.

The Crusades accomplished none of the purposes for which they were commenced. But they accomplished other and greater results, and European society and the system of modern states, grew out of the condition of things which they brought about.—Albany Atlas.

SPAIN.

There is something mournful in the decay of a once mighty nation. A fertile theme of meditation is afforded by the sight of a people whose very name was once emblematic of dignity and splendor, of power upon the land and on the sea—sinking sadly, though haughtily, into a mere melancholy memorial of departed greatness.

Such is Spain at the present day; and unless some important changes for the better occur, it is evident that her "course of empire" will soon be fulfilled.—Under the Moors, the population of Spain was thirty millions. The Calmer Publico, a Madrid newspaper, says:—

"Granada, before its fall, in 1487, contained 400,000 inhabitants, of whom 60,000 bore arms. It now contains but 60,000 souls all counted. Malaga, in the 17th century, contained 80,000 inhabitants; it now possesses only 50,000. Medina del Campo, in the 17th century, contained 60,000 inhabitants; it now contains 6,000. Merida, at the epoch, possessed 40,000 inhabitants; it now possesses only 5,000. In the 16th century, the diocese of Salamanca had one hundred and twenty-seven cities and villages; it now has thirteen only. Segovia, in 1725, had 5,000 families; now 2,000. Seville, in the 17th century, had a population of 300,000, of which 130,000 were employed in manufactories; it now contains 96,000 souls, all told. Toledo, in the 15th century, had 200,000 inhabitants; it now has 15,000. Valence, which in the year 1600, counted a population of 600,000, now hardly numbers 60,000. In 1778, there were counted 1,511 abandoned villages in Spain, and the number has been increased from that day to this.

RUMORED DIFFICULTY.

Intelligence from the Falkland Islands, states that the United States corvette Germantown had demanded from the British brig-of-war Express some prisoners who had been detained for trespassing on the British fishing grounds.

The captain of the Express refused, when the captain of the Germantown wrote an imperious demand for them, threatening, if it was not complied with, he would fire into the Express, and he beat to quarters and ran his guns out.

The captain of the Express, however, maintained his position, and delivered up the prisoners to the civil authorities, by whom they were fined. The affair is stated to have occasioned some acrid correspondence between the United States and British authorities, which has been forwarded to the respective Governments. This intelligence is brought to us in the latest English papers.—National Intelligencer.

SLAVERY FACETIE.

Let none of our readers give credit to Punch, or any other like wicked wag, for the following rich little bit of satire on "the peculiar institution." It is clipped from the Southwestern Episcopalian, a staid and respectable religious monthly, published at Charleston, S. C., and may be taken as "specimen books" of a catechism for slaves obtained in the April number, and sewed in all its bearings, and only out-punches Punch.

Who keeps the slaves? All bad things from God.

Who gave the slaves? God and a mistress?

God gave the slaves? Must obey them?

Who says that? Must obey God?

What book tells you these things?

The Bible.

How does God do all his work?

He always does it right.

Does God love to work?

Yes, God is always at work.

Do the good angels work?

Yes, they do what God tells them.

Do they love to work?

Yes they love to please God.

What does God say about your work.

He that will not work shall not eat.

Did Adam and Eve have to work?

Yes, they were to keep the garden.

Was it hard to keep that garden?

No it was very easy.

What makes the crops so hard to grow now?

Sin makes it.

What makes you lazy?

My own wicked heart.

How do you know your heart is wicked?

I feel it every day.

Who teaches you so many wicked things?

The Devil.

Must you let the Devil teach you?

No, I must not.

The humor of the questions and answers about work—particularly this:—What does God say about your work? That will not work shall not eat. becomes surpassing droll, and we remember, that this religious instruction proceeds from those who do all the work, by those who do all the eating.

Who after that says, that the spiritual welfare of the slaves is neglected by their masters?—Roch. Dem.

A writer in a New York journal has made a statement to the effect that among the 17,000 Israelites in the United States, not one is engaged in agriculture.—We presume it can hardly be necessary to say that this statement has no foundation whatever. One of the largest planters in Kentucky, Mr. Benjamin Gratz, an old personal friend of the late Henry Clay, is an Israelite, while in South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, and other States, there are many of that ancient faith extensively engaged in agriculture.

Senator Benjamin, of Louisiana, is extensively engaged in sugar planting, and has written a standard essay upon the culture and chemistry of that staple published in De Bow's Review.

PALESTINE MORTGAGED.

The Sultan has mortgaged the revenues of the Holy Land to the Rothschilds, in order to obtain the recent loan. The Jew bankers have long desired to obtain a lien on the land of their ancestors—so sacred in the estimation of every genuine Hebrew; and it would not be among the surprises of this most extraordinary war, if the Rothschilds should become the sovereigns of the Holy Land. These great bankers would consider this glory enough for the proudest house in Europe; and they would be willing to pay roundly for it, in the form of war loans to Turkey.—Ex. paper.

WEEKLY PAYMENTS FOR THE ISLANDER.

John Froot $1.00, to whole No. 71. H. G. Hall, for C. G. Hall, 95cts, to No. 74. J. Smith, for J. Prince, $2.00, to No. 87. C. E. Scott $1.00, to No. 74. Wesley Horton $2.55, to No. 94. S. S. Thornton $1.00, to No. 74. Jas. Smith 50cts, to No. 90. F. Johnson $2.00, to No. 80. H. D. McCulloch $2.00, to No. 80.

Official information has been received at Washington, that Santa Anna will accept and ratify the amended Gadsden treaty. This gives the United States a strip of territory south of the Gila, and extending west to the Pacific.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of Withdrawal of certain Lands in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, on the routes of the Oakland and Ottawa, and other proposed Rail Roads.

At the solicitation of a majority of the Delegation in Congress from the State of Michigan, the President of the United States, by his order bearing date the 1st of May, instant, has directed that the following named townships be withdrawn from sale or entry until further orders, except for valid pre-emption claims, to wit:—

IN THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.
In the district of lands subject to sale at Duncan:

North of the base line and west of the principal meridian, lower peninsula.

Townships thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range two.

Townships thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range three.

Townships thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range four.

Townships thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range five.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range six.

Townships twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range seven.

Townships twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range eight.

Townships twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range nine.

Townships twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range ten.

Townships twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range eleven.

Townships twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twelve.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirteen.

Townships twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range fourteen.

Townships nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range fifteen.

Townships eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range sixteen.

Townships seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range seventeen.

Townships sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range eighteen.

Townships fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range nineteen.

Townships fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty.

Townships thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-one.

Townships twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-two.

Townships eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-three.

Townships ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-four.

Townships nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-five.

Townships eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-six.

NEW VOLUME. GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK!

The July number commences volume xlix. Subscribers can commence with the new volume; or, if they wish, with the January number, as we can always supply back numbers. One hundred pages of reading each month! the oldest magazine in America, and the only one especially devoted to the wants of the Ladies of America.

We commence this volume with the largest list, by many thousand, that we have had since we commenced the work. We have, in addition to our many excellent features, another one to add—

A LIFE OF COLUMBUS.

For youth, to run through the volume, to be followed by other works of a like character, American in their nature. We think this new feature will be appreciated by our subscribers. All our celebrated corps of contributors will favor us as usual with those writings that have made the "Lady's Book" so celebrated throughout our country as a literary standard.

STEEL ENGRAVINGS.

In this department, we have always stood unrivalled, and the same attention will still be paid to it to enable us to sustain our proud superiority. Our FASHIONS, WITH DIAGRAMS. This department, which has given great satisfaction to our lady subscribers, will be continued.

DRAWING LESSONS FOR YOUTH.

We have at least one thousand designs still on hand to publish, therefore this department will be continued with unabated energy. Any child can learn drawing by these lessons.

PARIS, LONDON, AND PHILADELPHIA FASHIONS.

The only colored fashions upon which any reliance can be placed, received direct from Paris, and adapted to the taste of American ladies by our own "Fashion Editor," with full directions.

DRESSMAKING.—Our monthly description of dressmaking, with plans to cut by. None but the latest fashions are given. The directions are so plain, that every lady can be her own dressmaker. EMBROIDERY.—An infinite variety in every number.

DRESS PATTERNS.—Infants, and children's dresses, with descriptions how to make them. All kinds of crochet and netting work. New patterns for cloaks, mantles, talmas, collars, chemisettes, undersleeves—with full directions. Every new pattern of any portion of a lady's dress, appears first in the "Lady's Book," as we receive consignments from Paris every two weeks, having a resident Editor there. THE NURSERY.—This subject is treated upon frequently.

GODEY'S INVALUABLE RECEIPTS UPON EVERY SUBJECT.

Indispensable to every family, worth more than the whole cost of the book. MUSIC.—Three dollars' worth is given every year. MODERN COTTAGES.—Cottage plans will be continued as usual. In the various numbers for 1854, will be found the newest designs for Bonnets, caps, cloaks, evening dresses, fancy articles, head-dresses, hair-dressing, robes de chambre, carriage dresses, brides' dresses, wreaths, mantillas, walking dresses, riding habits, and morning dresses. Dresses for infants and young misses, Boys' Dresses, Caps and Cloaks of Fur in season. Patterns for Needlework of all kinds, and Patterns to Cut. Dresses by, are given monthly.

Orders for any of the above articles, or for clothing for ladies and children, patterns for ditto, furniture, jewelry, head ornaments etc. etc., will be attended to by remitting to the publisher. Splendid steel, line, and mezzotint engravings in every number. They are always to be found in Godey's "Godey's Lady's Book" contains precisely that for which you have to take at least three other magazines to get the same amount of information.

TERMS.

One copy one year, $3. Two copies one year, $5. Five copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $10. Eight copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making nine copies, $15. Eleven copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $20.

"Godey's Lady's Book" and "Arthur's Home Magazine" will both be sent one year for $3 50. Terms for six months—from July, 1854, to December, 1854, inclusive. We will furnish at the following rates for six months. Persons unacquainted with the "Lady's Book" can take it for that length of time, and renew their subscriptions or not, at their pleasure.

One copy six months, $1 50. Two copies six months, $2 50. Five copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $5. Eleven copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $10.

L. A. GODEY,

113 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

"The Lady's Book" is a periodical literary treasure to the fair sex of America. Every lady should be a subscriber—every citizen should see that it graces the table of his wife or daughter. It is a fountain of unexceptionably pure and instructive literature, and an unfailing source of the purest intellectual enjoyment.—Godey adopts for his motto "EXORTATION!"—more elevated—and his unrivalled enterprise is vindicating its propriety.—Easton Clarion.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a Conference at Brownstown, Wayne County, Michigan, the 17th and 18th days of June next.

Also at Colchester, Canada West, (if the weather is favorable a woods meeting,) at Charles Hutchins', the 24th and 25th of June next.

The General Conference will be held at Saint James, Beaver Island, the 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th of July next, at which sacrifices and offerings will be offered by the heads of families of all the congregation.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of the Establishment of an additional Land Office in the State of Michigan.

In pursuance of the act of Congress, approved April 20, 1854, entitled "An act Establishing a Land Office in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan," the District for which is to be called the "CHEROKEE LAND DISTRICT," it is hereby declared and made known, that the Land Office for said District has been located for the present, by the President of the United States, at the town of Duncan, in the northern part of the Southern Peninsula of said State.

Given under my hand, at the City of Washington, this sixteenth day of May, A. D. 1854.

JOHN WILSON,

Commissioner of the General Land Office.

BOOKS.

The following books are constantly for sale at this office:—

Ancient and Modern Michilimackinac, including an account of the controversy between Mackinac and the Mormons. Price, 25 cts.

A History of the Rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the discovery of Ancient American Records, &c., by George J. Adams. Price, 12½ cts.

A Discussion of the Roman Catholic Religion, between Charles Rafferty and James J. Strang. Price, 10 cts.

The Diamond: being the Law of Prophetic Succession. Price, 5 cts.

Money may be sent by mail at our risk from any part of the United States for these books. We will return the books by mail, free of postage.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Detroit, Nov. 1, 1853.

Pursuant to the Statute, in such case made and provided, I hereby appoint the third Tuesdays of July and January as the times for holding the Circuit Courts for the County of Emmet during the years 1854 and 1855.

SAMUEL T. DOUGLASS,

Circuit Judge, Third District.

POETRY.

THE SONG WITHIN.

There is music in the heart,
A lonely, deep refrain
That oft o'er memory's cord will start
Like Memnon's melting strain—
The noon-day carol of a bird,
The smile we cannot win,
A leaf by morning's zephyr stirred
May touch the heart within.

At times the heart appears all blight,
The future grows serene;
Within the soul gay thoughts unite
To charm the present scene.
'Tis then that care forgets to fly,
Where we in pleasure stray;
'Tis then some angel from the sky,
Would point to us the way.

The light would want its secret spell
If we no shade could find;
Nor should we love the spring so well
If winter's face were kind!
So if the soul has never known
What care and grief impart,
It cannot tell how rapture's tone
Steals o'er the longing heart.

SING ME A SONG.

BY FANNY FERN.

"Oh! sing me a song as I fall to sleep,"
Said a little one with a lustrous eye,
"Or tell me a tale of the flowers that peep
In the bright green woods that reach the sky;
That peep in the spring when the birds sing
And the heaven's blue as our Nelly's eyes;
Or tell me of the child with angel wing
Who walks in the garden of paradise!"

I sang him a song—I told him a tale,
And watched by his cradle till he thought he slept,
For his cheek was white as the moonbeams pale,
That stealthy and bright near his pillow crept;
Then my words grew faint and my voice sang low,
And I said, in my dreams let the seraphs sing,
But he whispered soft as I rose to go—
"Oh! tell of the child of the angel wing!"

Then I sang again—but he restless grew,
And tossed his young arms as he wildly spoke,
And a burning red on his forehead flew,
As the moon went down and the morning broke;
But he spoke no more of the bright spring flowers,
And he thought no more of his sister's eyes;
One name alone in his feverish hours,
Was breathed in a whisper that pierced the skies.

"My mother," he said, and his eyes grew dim,
For the sense with her wavering lustre fled,
And he never knew that she knelt by him
Whose sun went down at his dying bed!
He has gone where the seraphs sweetly sing—
His story was brief as the sunset dyes—
He walks with the child of the angel wing,
In the flowery gardens of paradise!

THE LAND OF DREAMS.

BY PROFESSOR WILSON, THE CHRISTOPHER NORTH OF BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

O dreadful is the land of dreams,
When all the world a chaos seems
Of thoughts so fix'd before!
When heaven's own face is tinged with blood
And friends crossed o'er our solitude,
Now friends of ours no more!
Or, dearer to our hearts than ever,
Keep stretching forth with vain endeavor,
Their pale and palsied hands
To clasp us, phantoms, as we go Along the void, like the drifting snow,
To far-off nameless lands!
Yet all the while we know not why
Nor where those dismal regions lie,
Half hoping that a course so deep
And wild can only be in sleep,
And that some overpowering scream
Will break the fetters of the dream,
And let us back to waking life,
Fill'd though it be with care and strife;
Since there at least the wretch can know
The meanings on the face of woe,
Assured that no mock shower is shed
Of tears upon the real dead;
Or that his bliss, indeed his bliss
When bending o'er the deathlike cheek
Of one who scarcely seems alive,
At every cold but breathing kiss,
He hears a saving angel speak—
"Thy love will yet revive!"

THE FOREST BURIAL.

BY SIDNEY DYER.

Rest thee, loved one; we have laid thee
Where the wild wood maketh sighs;
Tears perfume the bed we made thee,
Where the withering foliage lies.
Distant from thy native dwelling,
We must chant thy requiem;
Few the hearts with sadness swelling;
Few will join the funeral hymn.

On the morrow we must leave thee,
Lonely in thy woodland grave,
Where the vine a tomb shall weave thee,
Creeping where the branches wave,
All thy love, let Nature breathe it,
When the vernal hours return;
Write thy name with flowers and wreath it Round thy holy forest urn.

COWDERY'S LETTERS.

Oliver Cowdery was the earliest associate with Joseph Smith in the ministry of the dispensation of the fullness of times. The series of letters, one of which we insert in each number, till the publication is complete, give a most faithful history of the bringing in of the dispensation. They were written in answer to brief letters from Wm. W. Phelps, then a recent convert, and a seeker for further knowledge. The letters of Phelps consisting principally of brief inquiries, we omit, the answers being full without them.

LETTER III.

—, Oct. 4th, 1834.

DEAR BROTHER:—After a brief silence I proceed agreeable to my promise, upon the subject I proposed in my first letter. Perhaps an apology for brevity may not be improper here, as many important facts transpiring in the organization and establishing of a society like the one whose history I am about to give to the world, are overlooked or lost, and soon buried with those who were the actors; which will prevent my giving those minute and particular reflections which I have so often wished might have characterized the acts of the apostles, and the ancient saints. But such facts as are within my knowledge, will be given, without any reference to inconsistencies, in the minds of others, or impossibilities, in the feelings of such as do not give credence to the system of salvation and redemption so clearly set forth and so plainly written over the face of the sacred scriptures.

Upon the propriety, then, of a narrative of this kind, I have briefly to remark: It is known to you, that this church has suffered reproach and persecution, from a majority of mankind who have heard but a rumor, since its first organization.

And further, you are also conversant with the fact, that no sooner had the messengers of the fullness of the gospel began to proclaim its heavenly precepts and call upon men to embrace the same, than they were vilified and slandered by thousands who never saw their faces, and knew naught derogatory of their characters, moral or religious. Upon this unfair and unsaint-like manner of procedure they have been giving in large sheets their own opinions of the incorrectness of our system, and attested volumes of our lives and characters.

Since, then, our opponents have been thus kind to introduce our cause before the public, it is no more than just that a correct account should be given; and since they have invariably sought to cast a shade over the truth, and hinder its influence from gaining ascendancy, it is also proper that it should be vindicated, by laying before the world a correct statement of events as they have transpired from time to time.

Whether I shall succeed so far in my purpose as to convince the public of the incorrectness of those scurrilous reports which have inundated our land, or even but a small portion of them, will be better ascertained when I close than when I commence; and I am content to submit it before the candid for perusal, and before the Judge of all for inspection, as I most assuredly believe that before HIM I must stand and answer for the deeds transacted in this life.

Should I, however, be instrumental in causing a few to hear before they judge, and understand both sides of this matter before they condemn, I shall have the satisfaction of seeing them embrace it, as I am certain that one is the inevitable fruit of the other.

You will recollect that I informed you in my first letter, that this history would necessarily embrace the life and character of our esteemed friend and brother, J. Smith, one of the presidents of this church, and for information on that part of the subject, I refer you to his communication accompanying this. I shall, therefore, never that, till I come to the year of his life.

It is needful to premise this account by giving the situation of the public mind relative to religion, at the time. One Mr. Lane, a pious Elder of the Methodist Church, visited Palmyra, and Mr. Lane was a good shaman, a very endowment, and a great humility.

There was a great awakening, or excitement, based on the subject of religion, and much inquiry for the way of life. Large additions were made to the Methodist, Presbyterian, and Baptist churches.

Mr. Lane's manner of communication was peculiarly calculated to awaken the intellect of the hearer, and arouse the sinner to look about him for safety—much good instruction was always drawn from his discourses on the scriptures, and in common with others, our brother's mind became awakened.

For a length of time the reformation seemed to move in a harmonious manner, but, as the excitement ceased, or those who had expressed anxieties, had professed a belief in the pardoning influence and condescensions of the Savior, a general struggle was made by the leading characters of different sects, for proselytes. The strife seemed to take the place of that apparent union and harmony which had previously characterized the moves and exhortations of the old professors, and a cry—I am right—you are wrong—was introduced in their stead.

In this general strife for followers, his mother, one sister, and two of his brothers, were persuaded to unite with the Presbyterians. This gave occasion for further reflections; and as will be seen in the sequel, laid a foundation, or was one means of laying a foundation for the attestation of the truths, or professions of truth, contained in that record called the word of God.

After strong solicitations to unite with one of those different societies, and seeing the apparent proselyting disposition manifested with equal warmth by each, his mind was less seriously contemplating the importance of a move of this kind. To profess Godliness was a benign influence upon the heart, was a thing so foreign to his feelings, that he was not at rest day nor night.

To unite with a society professing to be upon the only sure foundation, that profession be a vain thing, was calculated, in its very nature, the more it was contemplated, the more to arouse the mind to the serious consequences of moving hastily, in a course fraught with eternal realities. To say he was right, and still be wrong, could not profit; and among so many, some must be built upon the sand.

In this situation where could he go? If he went to one he was told they were right, and all others wrong—if to another, the same was heard from those. All professed to be the true church; and if not, they were certainly hypocritical, because, if I am presented with a system of religion, and inquire of my teacher whether it is correct, and he informs me that he is not certain, he acknowledges at once that he is teaching without authority, and acting without a commission.

If one professed a degree of authority or preference in consequence of age or right, and that superiority was without evidence, it was insufficient to convince a mind once aroused to that degree of determination which at that time opened upon him.

And upon farther reflection, that the Savior had said that the gate was straight and the way narrow that leads to life eternal, and that few enter there; and that the way was broad, and the gate wide which leadeth to destruction, and that many crowded its current, a proof from some source was required to settle the mind and give peace to the agitated bosom.

It is not frequent that the minds of men are exercised with proper determination relative to obtaining a certainty of the things of God. They are too apt to rest short of that assurance which the Lord Jesus has so freely offered in his word to man, and which so beautifully characterizes his whole plan of salvation, as revealed to us.

A friend has just informed us that fruit and flowers may be preserved from decay and fading by immersing them in a solution of Gum Arabic in water two or three times, waiting a sufficient time between each immersion to allow the gum to dry. This process covers the surface with a thin coating of the gum, which is entirely impervious to the air, and thus prevents the decay of the fruit, or the withering of the flower. Our friend has roses thus preserved which have all the beauty and fragrance of freshly plucked ones, though they have been separated from the parent stem since June last. To insure success in experiments of this kind, it should be borne in mind that the whole surface must be completely covered; for if the air only gains entrance at a pin-hole, the labor will all be lost. In preserving fruit particular care should be taken to cover the stem, end and all, with the gum. A good way is to wind a thread of silk about the stem, and then sink it slowly in the solution, which should not be so strong as to leave a particle of the gum undissolved. The gum is so perfectly transparent that you can with difficulty detect its presence, except by the touch.

Here we have another simple method of fixing the fleeting beauty of nature, and surrounding ourselves ever with those objects which do most elevate the mind, refine the taste, and purify the heart.—Country Gentleman.

EARLY MARRIAGES.

A writer in the New Orleans Picayune says, in speaking of this interesting subject that:—The notion that it is imprudent for young persons to marry, is totally fallacious. Experience has proved this in innumerable cases. As soon as a young man is able to support himself he is able to support a wife, and the sooner he takes one the better. Let him select a sensible young woman, suited to himself in age, disposition and circumstances, win her affections and marry her; and if they are not happy, nothing on earth could make them so.

Dancing is the result of an instinct exclusively human, but capable, like all other instincts, of being improved and refined by cultivation. Mother Nature furnishes us with legs and feet, but they must be educated by a common step farther before they are presented on the floor of a ball room.

CHIP BASKET.

Sharp.—An Irishman, who was busily engaged in sweeping the floor of a grocery store up town, a few days ago, was interrogated as follows:—

"I say, Pat, what are you doing there sweeping out that room?"
"No!" exclaimed Pat, "I'm sweeping out the dirt and leaving the room."

Taking it easy.—A traveler in England, observing a peasant at work, and seeing that he was taking it remarkably easy, said to him:—
"My friend, you don't appear to sweat any."
"Why, no, master, six shillings ain't sweating wages!"

Act Right.—Would you be exempt from uneasiness, do nothing you know or suppose to be wrong; and if you wish to enjoy the purest pleasure, do every thing in your power, that you are convinced is duty.

If sensibility be our only happiness, we ought to envy the brutes; for instinct is a surer, shorter, safer guide to such happiness than reason. [Colton.

Quick wit.—One of the readiest replies we have heard lately, was made by an Irish laborer.

A gentleman traveling on horseback "Down East," came upon an Irishman who was fencing in a most barren and desolate piece of land. "What are you fencing in that lot for, Pat?" said he, "A herd of cows would starve to death on that land."

"And sure, your honor, wasn't I fencing it to kape the poor bastes out iv it!"

"You seem animated by this fine autumn scene my dear Annie," said a lover.

"No, said she, "I never shall be Anny-mated till I become your wife."

Significant.—A Connecticut minister having walked through a village churchyard, and observed the indiscriminate praises bestowed upon the dead, wrote upon the gate-post the following line:—
"Here lies the dead, and here the living lie!"

Don't be sentimental.—It's bad for digestion. Remember, the best tonic is fun, and the best physician is a joker. For giving a tone to the stomach, one good hearty laugh is worth all the pills that were ever paid for or patented. Cheerfulness is a moral armor. It protects the mind from the javelins of dyspepsia, and makes it as impregnable to the assaults of duns and unliquidated due-bills as Gibraltar is to pop-guns.

Rum is like death—it levels all distinctions. An Alderman with "a brick in his hat," would just as soon fraternize with a chimney sweep as with a foreign envoy.

If you wish to obtain a good wife, make no presents that cost more than a kindly expression or a moderate smile.

"Snuggs," said Muggs, as they two were reeling home late one night, "if I had my wife up I'll lick her, because she has no business to be burning up wood and candles for nothing, and if she's gone to bed I'll lick her, because she has no business to go to bed before I do."

Too Good to be Lost.—At a short distance from the city of Boston, there is now living a white-haired veteran, a soldier of the Revolutionary war, who is ninety-nine years of age—one in whom the fire of patriotism still sparkles brightly as it did of yore—and whose eye still sparkles with the vivacity of youth when he relates the events of those days "that tried men's souls." Among those he delighted to honor, was that of Gen. Jackson. That man he greatly revered; he admired the man for his heroism, and honored him for devotion to his country.

Admitting yourself out of Court is a legal phrase signifying a liberality of concession to your opponent by which you destroy your own cause. This excess of candor was well illustrated by the Irishman who boasted that he had often skated 60 miles in a day.

"Sixty miles!" exclaimed an auditor: "that is a great distance; it must have been accomplished when the days were longest."

"By the piper o' Moses! an' so it was; who told you honey?" said Paddy.

A woman is a great deal like ivy—the more you are ruined the closer she sticks to you.—A wife's love don't begin to show itself till the sheriff is at your heels. Fact. And more truth than poetry in it, too. If "brother man" had half the sterling devotion that is found in "sister woman," a widely different aspect would be exhibited on the surface of present society.

When we are young we are slavishly employed in procuring something whereby we may live comfortably when we get old; and when we are old, we perceive it is too late to live as we proposed. So said a learned author 100 years ago. And is the world any wiser yet? Not much, if any. It is still the grab game all over. "Get money if you can, honestly. At all events—get money!" Pretty lesson this, with all our would-be moral principles blushing around our necks. But these we contrive to hide in our pockets, and the only parade them at church on Sunday. The only parade them about "Man's inhumanity to man." How pious we go it at church, too! But let us not despair—the world is on the mend, however slow.

The only substitute for money is politeness. With three bows and a smile, a friend of ours last week traveled from this city to Niagara, and lived like a fighting cock at that. Cheap trip that.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 10.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JULY 13, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 57.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to Cooper & Chidester, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

DEBATE IN CONGRESS ON POLYGAMY.

(Continued.)

MR. CAMPBELL. I think the proper distinction is not made by gentlemen who argue in favor of striking out the proviso. This land proposed to be donated—is the public domain, and belongs to the people of the States in common. If then, we give them to actual settlers who will cultivate, we have a right to impose the terms; and we have the power. I hold, to say that "you shall not have this public domain as a gift, if you intend to use it to perpetuate that system which is recognized throughout all the States as a high offence against public morals."

I am opposed to the striking out of the provision referred to for the reason which I have given. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Stephens] assumes the ground that Congress is undertaking to define such acts as shall be regarded as crimes, and to punish them as such in the Territory of Utah. Such is not the fact.

I do not know that I should disagree with him very much as to the power of Congress to enact a criminal code for Territories, but I do contend that the people of that Territory, or those who would settle on our lands, have no right to ask of us a bonus in favor of extending a system of wrong doing or revolting crimes, in the shape of donation of public lands. If we donate the lands we have the right, and it is our duty to impose such terms and restraints as will lay deep and strong in that far distant land the foundation of sound morals.

As I said before, it is regarded as a high moral offence in every State of this Union, and we stand to these Territories, if there be any force in the authority of a high State paper which has appeared before the country this morning, (the veto message,) in the relation of guardian, or parent, or proprietor of the public domain, and we have a right to impose the terms on which that public domain shall be given either to corporations, associations, or individuals.

I will never agree, as one of the Representatives of the people who own the soil, to give it as a bonus for settlement to those who disregard all the moral restraints which they themselves enforce in their own State governments, through the instrumentality of strong penal enactments.

MR. GOODRICH. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Campbell] and let me say that I am not so much troubled about invidious distinctions as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Kerr] seems to be—while I say that I am, at the same time, ready to co-operate with him in any direct mode of striking at this crime, as he calls it. But strike at this crime directly as you may, you will not reach it so effectually as you will by retaining this proviso in the bill.

Annul by law the act authorizing polygamy, and how will you secure the practical enforcement of your law? Annulled as that act may be by the law of Congress, the people of Utah will still practice polygamy. I therefore want this proviso retained for the purpose of reaching that people, if they are not already beyond the reach of moral considerations, by carrying the moral power of this government there, so far as we have the power of legislating on the subject.

We derive that power just as we derive the power in the States to reach any evil. Polygamy, as all agree, is a great moral, social and political evil. I am ready to strike it down in any way, directly or indirectly. I would reach it by carrying the moral power of this nation out to Utah Territory, and saying to the people of that Territory, that any man who practices this crime of polygamy, shall not receive the government bounty—shall not have the land which we give to other people.

I would touch them through their interests in that way. I would reach this evil just as we reach the great evil of intemperance in the States. We legislate in the States upon the subject of intemperance, some by the application of the Maine law, and others by other means. I am for the Maine law; others are in favor of other measures. But we strike down intemperance as an evil, and so would I strike down this evil, if these people are not beyond the power and influence of moral considerations. I wish to put into this bill a moral power against polygamy. I want to say to the people of Utah that they shall not receive grants of the public lands as other people receive them, if they continue in the practice of this crime.

MR. TAYLOR. I am opposed to striking out this proviso; and as I expect soon to be called to vote upon it, I desire to give my reasons. I regard the proposition to strike out the whole proviso as offering a premium to the polygamists of the whole world to settle in that Territory. I desire to know if the American Congress intends, by its action, to offer a premium to bigamists and polygamists of the whole world, to come and take possession of a great, wide spread, and fertile Territory of this government?

While the position of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Stephens] may be correct, I will not stop to discuss the distinction he makes between mala prohibita and mala in se. Yet I submit to this committee whether the government, through this Congress, is to offer a bonus for the establishment and perpetuation of evil in that Territory? This is the point involved in controversy.

In a very few years, under the operation of the proposition to strike out this proviso, you will have that Territory peopled by polygamists, who will inevitably outnumber those who may settle there opposed to polygamy.—What then? The first step will be to apply for admission into the Union. If you admit them, what then? By your action, your ini-tiatory action, in encouraging settlements in that country, you, the American Congress, have virtually established there polygamy—this crime and vice of the dark ages. Is the American Congress prepared, for the sake of technicalities, to establish this principle? I cannot vote for the proposition to strike out this proviso.

MR. MILLSON. I oppose the amendment for the reason I have opposed the whole proviso. My idea is that we ought to treat the subject in a more solemn manner than we are disposed to treat it by the amendment under consideration.

I had prepared, Mr. Chairman, a further amendment to the proviso, declaring that every law, and every part of any law, that may have been heretofore passed by the Territorial Legislature of the Territory of Utah establishing or allowing bigamy or polygamy, is hereby disapproved, and declared null and void. But upon consideration, and a few moments reflection, it occurred to me that it would be better to proceed in this matter with more solemnity. The question is one which demands the solemn consideration of Congress; and the best way to effect this would be the introduction of a joint resolution or bill, having one single object only in view; and that, the annulling of any such laws or regulations in the Territory of Utah.

A bill to this end, and not connected with any other measure of legislation, will therefore command the almost unanimous assent of every member, perhaps, in both Houses of Congress. It was for these reasons, sir, and with the view to effect this purpose, that I conceived the idea of introducing such a proviso.

I first supposed that it was the appropriate duty of the committee on Territories to introduce such a joint resolution; but as they have failed to do so, and as no other gentleman has made a move in that direction, I determined to take the first opportunity of annulling this legislation, which has been hitherto allowed to take place in the Territory of Utah.

MR. READY. I move to amend by adding at the end of the proviso the following:—

And that any person who shall at any time have more than one living wife shall forfeit all right to any lands acquired under this act.

My object in presenting that amendment, sir, is to eradicate the evil of polygamy by the roots. [Great laughter.] I regard it as an excrescence on the body politic. [Renewed laughter.] The proviso to this bill does not reach the evil. You may pass the bill with the proviso, and still the polygamist may indulge in this practice with impunity, afterwards as before.

What is he to do? You say that if he has more than one wife he shall not be entitled to the benefit of this act. You permit him to avail himself of the benefits of this act, having but one wife, and when he has obtained his three hundred and twenty acres of land from the government—when he has perfected his title, then you allow him to go and marry fifty wives, if he can find so many to have him.

Therefore, I propose this amendment, with a view of making a forfeiture of his right to the land which he may have acquired by his grant from the government, if he shall afterwards indulge in this unlawful practice.

MR. CHAIRMAN. I differ with the gentlemen who seem to be of the opinion that Congress has no right or power to interfere with this subject. Certainly, so far as the constitutional right of this body is concerned, there can be no question. The constitution declares that "Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

What are we doing here? Are we not proposing, by legislation, to make certain needful rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States? We are proposing to dispose of a large portion of this territory.—We are making discriminations in disposing of that territory.—We are saying that a married man shall be entitled to three hundred and twenty acres, while a single man shall be only entitled to one hundred and sixty acres. And have we not the same right to provide that a man who has committed a crime shall not be entitled to the benefits of this law?

Suppose that a man had forfeited the right to the protection of his government by the commission of crimes; suppose that he had been convicted of infamous crimes, crimes which, in the language of law, rendered him infamous, deprived him of certain great rights, the right of citizenship, the right of suffrage, the right of testifying as a witness, the right of holding offices of honor and trust, would it not be as competent, under the constitution, for Congress, in passing laws to dispose of this territory, to say that such a man should not be entitled to the benefits of this law? Certainly, sir.

The question was then taken on Mr. Ready's amendment; and it was adopted.

MR. KEITT. I merely desire to throw out some suggestions for the consideration of the committee. You propose now to interfere in the domestic relations of these Territories. You say that no man shall have two wives.—Where do you get the power to do that? In fact, where do you get the power to legislate at all for Territories? The right to acquire carries with it the right to govern, you say. But to what limitation is the right to govern subjected? To all the restrictions and limitations contained in the Federal Constitution. The power to legislate is, at best, an implied power; and all such powers should be used with great caution. Now, if Congress has a right to say that no man in the Territories shall have more than one wife, may it not say that no man shall have a wife at all? If it can prescribe the number of wives, may it not altogether abrogate the marital relation?

I ask the question for information. If Congress can determine that there shall be no polygamy, may not Congress also determine that there shall be no marriage union whatever? Cannot Congress go a step further, and say that there shall be no parental relation? What power is involved in the decision of this question? Is not sovereignty necessarily implicated in the right to arrange and manipulate the vital relations of a community?

If so, where is sovereignty lodged? In the inhabitants of the Territory?

Sir, I have scarcely even contempt for the piebald doctrine of "squatter sovereignty." Is it in the Federal Government?—This assumption of power would aggrandize this government with a ruthless, overshadowing and awing central despotism. Where is it, then? In the people of the several sovereign States.

If, then, this exercise of power appertains to sovereignty, how will you reach the evil alluded to? The declamation of gentlemen may bubble up, but it will never moisten the roots of any constitutional right. In truth, sir, an exigency has arisen which was never contemplated by the framers of the constitution. To meet this, you propose to swell the powers of Congress by construction.

Do this, and you will soon burst the bands of a Federative Union, and weld the fragments of the constitution into a consolidated despotism. The first step in this always is an amplification of power by construction. Sir, I think polygamy a burning shame upon any community. I abhor all trifling with the marital tie; all conjugal licentiousness; and I will extirpate this disgraceful evil as quickly and as sharply as any man, if I but see the power in Congress to do it. All I ask is for gentlemen to show me this power.

Again, how do gentlemen propose to accomplish this purpose? By the enactment of laws?—How will they be executed?—By a jury of the vicinage?—Why, every inhabitant is a Mormon. He will screen the accused, instead of aiding in the execution of your laws. Government can only scourge out this evil by military tyranny. Sir, "to this complexion" your acts must come at last.

Now, sir, will this justify an assumption of power? I again ask for the power of Congress in this matter; and if it is shown to me, I will cheerfully act. I cannot legislate in blindness, both as to power and the mode of reaching an end. I advise gentlemen to look to these, and not to moral and social enormities, in the character of which we all agree.

SECOND DAY.—The House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Phelps in the chair.)

THE CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session it had under consideration the bill of the House No. 317, entitled "A bill to establish the office of surveyor general of Utah, to grant donations of lands to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes." The amendments pending were to strike out the last proviso of the third section, and to strike out all after the word "person;" the latter submitted by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Letcher.]

MR. LETCHER. I will modify my amendment so that, if adopted, the section will read thus:—

That the benefits of the second and third sections of this act shall not extend to any person.

MR. DISNEY. Yesterday I explained, Mr. Chairman, as far as this question was concerned, that I felt little or no interest in it.—I stated, that in the bill which I originally submitted to the Committee on Public Lands, there was nothing said in relation to Mormons. I felt it my duty to explain yesterday, as did the Delegate from Utah, that, by custom and statutory law of that Territory, polygamy was recognized there.

MR. LETCHER. Read the law, and let us hear what it is. Members would like to know it.

The Clerk read the law; which is as follows:—

"The homestead, occupied by the wife, or any portion of the family of the deceased at the time of his death, shall in all cases be held free to the use of the wife and family of the deceased, and shall not be liable to any claim or claims against said estate; and if there be other property remaining after the liabilities of the estate are liquidated, then it shall, in the absence of other arrangements by will, descend in equal shares to his children, or their heirs; one share to such heirs through the mother of such children, if she shall survive him, during her natural life, or during her widowhood; or, if he has had more than one wife, who either died, or survived in lawful wedlock, it shall be equally divided between the living and the heirs of those who are dead, such heirs taken by right of representation."

MR. DISNEY (who was very imperfectly heard, owing to the noise prevailing around the reporters' desk) then said: The committee will observe the peculiar phraseology: "a party who has had more than one wife, who survives him in lawful wedlock."

My object, however, in rising this morning, was to call the attention of the committee to the bill involved in the pending question. This bill contains the same proviso in relation to the Territory of Utah that has been made in relation to all other Territories. By it Congress practically says to the emigrant: If you remove to this Territory and settle there, we shall esteem it a service, and such a service that we will give you one hundred and sixty acres of land as a consideration for it. As I have already stated, polygamy is recognized by statutory law in this Territory. How far it may be competent for Congress to interfere with regard to the existence of that institution, is not the question now before us. We certainly cannot reach it in this way.—It is simply a question of policy, whether we will encourage the emigration of Mormons to this particular Territory. The refusal to make this donation cannot affect the existence of the institution itself.

With regard to the question of the power of Congress, every gentleman can see and examine the arguments on both sides.—The only point really involved in this question is, whether Congress will esteem it politic to offer donations of land to induce Mormons to emigrate to that particular Territory, or whether, by a refusal to grant them the same inducement that you hold out to other people, you will interpose a barrier, and, to that extent, discourage the emigration of Mormons into this Territory.

MR. PERKINS, of New York.—I think that this clause ought to remain as it is, or except from it the provision that excludes the poor man, if he happens to have but two wives, from having any land. If we are to give Governors, judges, and other Federal officers in that Territory, large salaries, to enable them to support thirty or forty wives, and allow the lords and the high spiritual dignitaries of the Mormon establishment, not only this large number of wives, but salaries of $3,000 or $4,000, I can see no reason for excluding the poor fellow who has been enticed there from enjoying any land, if he happens to have two wives instead of thirty or forty.

I have seen recently in the newspapers a statement declaring that no law shall be cited, except the statutes of the United States, in any court whatever in the Territory of Utah. Then the common law is not recognized there, and the spiritual law is recognized. If this statement in the newspapers is true, which gives the privilege and right to a person there to have as many wives as he can get. It seems to me utterly preposterous, and will be disgraceful to this Congress, to allow the Governors, judges, and other officers appointed by the Government of the United States, to hold their offices, at large salaries, and have just as many wives as they please, as their salaries will enable them to support, and yet prohibit the poor man from enjoying the benefit of land there, if they happen to have only two wives. [Laughter.]

(To be continued.)

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, JULY 13, 1854.

SALE OF SWAMP LANDS.

The State of Michigan receives, under the swamp land grant, upwards of 6,000,000 acres of land, most of which is of an excellent quality, and the whole probably averaging with the public lands of the State. These lands, under an act of the Legislature of 1851, are now being offered for sale, at seventy-five cents per acre; the proceeds going into the general fund, for the benefit of the State at large.—The propriety of this disposition of the lands has been and is being extensively discussed in the newspapers; and the standing reason for so disposing of them in the utmost haste, is, that, unless this is done, the next Legislature will squander them.

If this is a just reason, would it not be well to abolish the Legislature altogether? Our State officers (the past ones we mean, not the present) have not always proved invulnerable, and from past experience we imagine it will be about as much as they can do to guard the approaches of the treasury against the assaults of leeches generally, without a siege of the people and their Representatives. If the Representatives of the people are all a set of thieves and swindlers, why not abolish representation at once? And as the State officers are so careful to guard the interests of the State, why not create them a close corporation to rule the State forever?

The secret of the whole matter lies in this: Some years since the State received a half million acres of land to assist in internal improvements. This was all appropriated for the benefit of a few counties in the southern part of the State.

If the swamp lands remain on hand there is some rational probability that the Legislature may so dispose of them that the other three-fourths of the State, which had no share in the former grant, may be benefited by them. But the same counties (less than one-fourth the State) which received the whole of the former grant, also contracted a large debt for internal improvements; and if they can get these lands sold and the money paid into the general fund it will pay that debt, and thus both grants, amounting to some seven million acres of land, will be expended for the benefit of less than one-fourth of the State.

A straight forward proposition to dispose of these lands so unequally, is so monstrously unjust that it would never be entertained for a moment. The counties interested in such a disposition of the matter have yet a large majority of Representatives in both Houses, and could carry the measure, if they had the hardihood to do so. But the injustice is too barefaced. It can only be done by some round about process.

The only objection yet made to granting these lands or a portion of them for roads and schools in the counties in which they lie is that they would be improvidently squandered, as the five hundred thousand acre grant was when appropriated for internal improvements in a few of the old counties. But if the inhabitants of those counties could not be safely trusted with the management of small tracts of land for their local benefit, we would like to know what claim they have to the guardianship of the public interests of the State.

The whole move is a deeply laid scheme to give the benefit of this grant to the old and rich counties, in derogation of the rights of three-fourths of the State. Probably the new counties will be obliged to submit.—But shall we lick the hand which holds a blade to our throats? When compelled to swallow bitter pills, shall we swear that they are pleasant to the taste?

Mr. Brooks, of South Carolina, speaking upon the Pacific Rail Road bill, in favor of the extreme southern route, in the House of Representatives, June 14th, said:

Another consideration in the location of this road, and one of great moment, is, that we avoid the Mormons—a set towards which the religious sentiment of the country will never be reconciled, and which is destined to be the fruitful source of local and political annoyance and trouble. The further we are separated, the better for us and for them.

It would not be amiss for Mr. Brooks to widen the separation by going out of the United States.—Remember the estimate put upon Mormonism twenty-four years ago: contrast that with the present; consider that the progress is geometrical; and Mr. Brooks may live to dread what he first despised, and now hates. It would not be amiss for every Mormon paper to make a record of all such sayings as a book of remembrance for the future.—Then the day will not be long delayed that we can reward these men according to their works.

DISSOLUTION OF THE UNION.

A few days since we were reading an article from a South Carolina paper, warning the people of the northern States against any further opposition to the extension of slavery; threatening to dissolve the Union and make war upon the north, and that the streets of more than one northern city would run torrents of blood.

No one need fear, or, if he wishes it, need flatter himself that such threats will ever be realities. Of the sinews of war; of the elements of success in modern warfare; the south, as compared to the north, has nothing. They could not hold out in a single campaign. Either of the States of New York, Pennsylvania or Ohio could alone defeat and desolate all the slave States put together.

The best answer to all such threats is that made in Congress by Horace Mann, 17th August, 1852, from which we extract the following paragraph:—

Another reason, and it is a standing and continuous one, why there was no danger to the Union, consists in the fact that the south, according to their own estimate, are under bonds of $1,500,000,000 to keep the public peace.—Let them break up this Union, and their property in slaves, which they now value at this enormous sum, will not, at the end of a quarter of a century, be worth so many groats.—Does anybody imagine that this Union can be dissolved without civil commotion, without revolution by arms? Sir, this is a subject inconceivably painful; but it is a possibility spoken of and sported with by others with such levity, that I am constrained to invest it with some of its appropriate solemnities. Does any one believe there can be two border nations, one founded on the principle of freedom, and the other on the basis of slavery, having a contiguous frontier of three thousand miles, and daily traversing the same waters, with immunity from war? And in such wars, who will be the eager allies of the north?

Sir, there are ten thousand fugitive slaves in Canada to-day, capable of bearing arms, and their number is increasing faster than ever.—They are practicing the use of fire arms, and the manege of the horse. The story of their oppression is recounted every day, in every hamlet and at every fire side. The mothers nurse their children with milk and with vengeance together. The knowledge of a north star is penetrating further and further into the southern interior, and arousing new hearts to the effort of self-emancipation.

A dissolution of the Union repeats the accursed act of 1850. The free soil of Canada and the British Provinces—the only free soil there now is on the north-eastern part of this continent—is brought down to Mason and Dixon's line. We have in the northern States a population of two hundred thousand of African descent. In case of war between the two sections, thousands of this colored race will fly to the land of bondage, swift as they ever flew from it. They will go to make desolation of the realm that once made desolation of them, and of all they held dear. Under their avenging cry, insurgents will rise up like an exhalation over all the south. There are no motives more terrible than those which urge a bondsman to his revenge.

Perpetual proximity between master and slave, furnishes perpetual opportunity for retaliation. Every house is an arsenal of weapons; every tool on the plantation an instrument of death. Fire and darkness are allies which nature proffers him. In this warfare, the master does not go into the battle alone; his wife and children are at his side, whose weakness or whose beauty, in the presence of an imbruted foe, may provoke the first assault. Aye, sir, in a civil or a servile war, the south will be in a more perilous condition than if every kernel of gunpowder in all the magazines of an army, just on the eve of battle, should suddenly become animated and set itself on fire.

If the south wish to exhibit to the world, on a magnificent scale, the natural retribution of SLAVERY; if they wish to realize in their own fair land, and by Hyder Afis of their own, Burke's terrible picture of the desolation of the Carnatic, they have but one thing to do, and that is to dissolve this Union. But I do not fear any such madness will possess them. As I said before, they are under bonds of $1,500,000,000 to keep the peace, and their wives and daughters are sureties in the bonds.—ALL WEALTH THAT IS CONSUMABLE; ALL AFFECTION THAT IS DESTRUCTIBLE; ALL CHASTITY THAT IS VIOLABLE, ARE PLEDGED FOR THE FULFILLMENT OF THEIR VOWS.

EXCOMMUNICATION.

The Roman Catholic Church of Saint Louis, in Buffalo, has for some time been under interdict, the effect of which is to deny all sacraments and the ministrations of the priesthood to the members for the time being. Late Buffalo papers show that Bishop Timon has gone a step further, and pronounced the major excommunication upon the trustees.

The crime of the trustees is, controlling the temporalities of the church. Discipline of the Roman Church requires that all church property be held by the Bishop. The Church of Saint Louis was held by trustees, appointed by the congregation, who refused to convey it by deed to the bishop. For this crime the excommunication was pronounced upon them. It is as follows:—

By the authority of God Almighty, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and of the undefiled Virgin Mary, mother and patroness of our Savior, and of the celestial virtues, angels, archangels, thrones, dominions, powers, cherubims, prophets, and of all the apostles, evangelists, and of the holy innocents, who, in the sight of the Holy Lamb, are found worthy to sing the song of the holy martyrs and holy confessors, and of the holy virgins, and of all the holy saints together, with the holy and elect of God, may he be damned. We excommunicate and anathematise him, and from the threshold of the holy church of God Almighty we sequester him, that he may be tormented, disposed and delivered over with Dathan and Abiram, and with those who say unto the Lord God, depart from us, we desire none of thy ways. And, as fire is quenched with water, so let the light of him be put out for evermore, unless it shall repent him and make satisfaction for them. Amen.

May the Father, who created man, curse him. May the Son, who suffered for us, curse him. May the Holy Ghost, who was given to us in baptism, curse him. May the holy cross, which Christ, for our salvation, triumphing over his enemies, ascended, curse him. May the holy and eternal Virgin Mary, mother of God, curse him. May St. Michael, the advocate of holy souls, curse him. May all the angels and archangels, principalities and powers, and all the heavenly armies, curse him.

May the praiseworthy multitude of patriarchs and prophets curse him. May St. John the Baptist, and St. Peter and St. Paul, and St. Andrew, and all other Christ's apostles together, curse him; and may the rest of his disciples, and four evangelists, who, by their preaching, converted the universal world; and may the holy and wonderful company of martyrs and confessors, who, by their holy works, are found pleasing to God Almighty, curse him.

May the holy choir of the holy virgins, who, for the honor of Christ, have despised the things of the world, damn him. May all the saints, who, from the beginning of the world to everlasting ages, are found to be beloved of God, damn him. May the heavens and earth, and all the holy things remaining therein, damn him, or her.

May he be damned, wherever he be—whether in the house or the stables, the garden or the field, or the highway, or in the path, or in the wood, or in the water, or in the church.—May he be cursed in living, in dying. May he be cursed in eating and drinking, in being hungry, in being thirsty, in fasting, in sleeping, in slumbering, in waking, in standing, in sitting, in lying, in working, in resting in, in, and in blood letting.

May he be cursed in all the faculties of his body.

May he be cursed inwardly and outwardly. May he be cursed in the hair of his head.—May he be cursed in his brains, and in his vertex, in his temple, in his forehead, in his ears, in his eyebrows, in his eyes, in his cheeks, in his jawbones, in his nostrils, in his fore-teeth and grinders, in his lips, in his throat, in his shoulders, in his wrists, in his arms, in his hands, in his fingers.

May he be damned in his mouth, in his breast, in his heart and portenances, down to the very stomach.

May he be cursed in his and in his hips, and in his knees, his legs, and feet, and toe-nails.

May he be cursed in all his joints and articulations of his members, from the top of his head to the sole of his foot—may there be no soundness in him.

May the son of the living God, with all the glory of his Majesty curse him. And may heaven, with all the powers that move therein, rise up against him, curse and damn him, unless he repent and make satisfaction. Amen. So be it—so be it. Amen.

Conceding that that church has the power of blessing and cursing, we cannot well conceive of any thing more terrible. We do not know what its effect will be. The time has been that such excommunications dragged kings down from their thrones. And then this power of the priests was the shield of the people from the tyranny of their kings.

PAYMENTS FOR THE ISLANDER.

John McNutt $2.00, to No 89. Abel Galand $1.00, to 75. L. D. Hickey $2.00, to 91. Geo. L. Cole 50cts., to 57. Z. Butterfield $1.85, to 56. Joseph George $2.00, to 95. L. D. Hickey 2, for Chadburn, to 95. John Froot, money received, Books mailed.

WAR NEWS.

No important battles have been fought on the Danube. The Russians have retired upon Jassy.

It has been decided that 70,000 allied troops should go to Varna, and 50,000 to Sevastopol.

Immense exertions were making by the Turkish commanders for the relief of Silistria.

The Russians in Lesser Wallachia subjected it to pillage.

The Russians are collecting forces in Finland, apparently to threaten Sweden and Norway.

THE SIEGE OF SILISTRIA.

Silistria held out at our latest accounts to the 14th of June.—There was no truth in the statement that Mussa Pacha had been killed.

From May 28th to May 30th, six attempts to storm were made. All were repulsed with prodigious loss.

During the nights of the 28th and 30th the Turks made sorties, and committed fearful carnage on the besiegers.

THE BLACK SEA FLEETS.

The fleets are still engaged in conveying the Anglo-French force to Varna, but the matter seems to progress slowly.

THE BALTIC.

A telegraphic despatch dated Gothland, Sunday 11th, says that both the French and English fleets were at Bordsung, twenty miles from Sweborg, and it was expected they would attack the latter place on or soon after the 13th.

On the 30th of May three English steamers destroyed the ships, dock-yard and stores at Branestadt in the north of the Gulf of Bothnia.

Three hundred and fifty thousand rubles of damage was done.

On the 31st the steamers captured several off Uliaborg, and on the 1st of June the steamers destroyed the ships, dock-yard and stores at Whaborg, and 400,000 rubles damage was done.

A rumor prevails that the Emperor of Austria had said publicly to the Duke of Gotha:—"I will give you my word of honor, that if the Emperor of Russia does not evacuate the Principalities, I will declare war against him."

From Sweden we are informed that every military and naval preparation is being made. A general opinion is expressed that a declaration of war by Sweden against Russia may shortly be looked for.

A MAN BEFORE ADAM.

A conglomerate work, to use a geological phrase, has lately been published in Philadelphia, entitled "The Types of Mankind," made up of contributions from the late Dr. Morton, Agassiz, Usher, Nott and Gliddon. This work is destined to create something of a commotion in the religious world. The idea of the unity of the race of man is totally discarded by the authors, one and all. Dr. Usher makes the astounding statement in this work that a human fossil has been found in New Orleans, in the course of some excavations in that city, to which a pre-Adamite age is attributed. According to his authority, the skeleton of a man, of the conformation of our native Indians, was discovered at a depth of sixteen feet, lying below a succession of four fossil cypress forests, to each of which the age of 14,400 years is given. Agassiz is said to have accepted this as a fact, and based upon it his assertion that man existed upon the earth, at least 150,000 years ago. The theologian must either disprove this statement or be compelled to admit a new exegesis of Holy Writ.

The Evening Post is responsible for the above. We do not see how the fact that Dr. Usher makes an "astounding statement" about a "human fossil," to "which a pre-Adamite age is attributed," or even that said skeleton was found at a depth of sixteen feet, below "four fossil forests," to each of which the age of 14,400 "years is given," is an adequate basis for all that is here piled upon it. Considering the volume of the mighty Mississippi, the liberties it takes with its banks, the rapid growth and luxuriance of vegetation in that semi-tropical region, and the concurrence of natural convulsions in producing physical changes, we think he must be a bold rather than a safe generalizer who could deduce with any confidence from such data as are here given, the conclusion that man has existed on this earth 14,400 years, much less 150,000. We do not propose to dogmatize in turn; but we cannot believe that "the theologian" is "any compeled to admit a new exegesis" on any such grounds as these.—N. Y. Tribune.

We perfectly agree with what is said by the Tribune, and cannot dismiss the subject without adding that some of this class of scientific skeptics are the most credulous beings we ever met with, and very transparent humbugs.—There is a swamp within a mile of Saint James, grown over with a heavy growth of timber; and on which gigantic trees have grown, fallen down and rotted away; and all hollow under, and occasionally a hole through the floating soil, in which an ox could be thrust, and left to be discovered a century or two hence, as this human body has been near New Orleans. Seven years since an Indian woman was lost there, and has thus doubtless laid the foundation for another equally sound attack upon the integrity of sacred history.

We recollect of five similar discoveries by men of distinguished standing among the scientific world, each in its time exploding the Mosaic chronology, or the doctrine of the unity of the human race, and then more effectually exploding itself.

1. In the cavern at Durfort, in France, was found a large quantity of human bones, which it was insisted could not have been carried into it after the formation of the rock, in consequence of the narrowness of the passage.—This theory was exploded, and the bones proved modern by examining them and showing that they were only partially mineralized, or petrified, and still retained a portion of animal matter.

2. The skeleton of a man and dog were discovered in the fissure of the rock of Gibraltar, nearly imbedded in the rock, and where the fissure was much too narrow for them to have been put there since the rock was formed. It was, therefore, conjectured that the remains were older than the pillars of Hercules, and had been imbedded in the rock while it was a soft paste, thousands of ages since. A very little examination showed that the rock enclosing the skeleton was a stalactite, now in process of formation, filling up the fissure with considerable rapidity, and the skeleton rather encased than imbedded and petrified.

3. A vast mass of human remains have been found imbedded in solid, compact limestone rock, at Guadaloupe, W. I. When first discovered, the rock was set down by all geologists as more ancient than the Mosaic date of the creation. But, again, it has been most clearly demonstrated that these bones are not fossilized, but retain gluten and carbonate of lime, as all bones do before being mineralized. In other words, that they are modern bones.—It is ascertained too that the rock is now in process of rapid formation.

A battle was fought there between native tribes, within two centuries, and these bones are of the same race, and probably the bones of the slain. But if another fact was wanting to establish their modern origin, it was recently supplied in the discovery of a skeleton of a soldier, with his musket, deeply imbedded in this same rock, so as to seem a part of it, and even the metal buttons of his clothing sufficiently preserved to show the French manufacturer's mark. Land shells, pottery, arrow-heads and carved wooden ornaments are found in this rock.

4. Many years ago the prints of two human feet were found in the sand stone of a quarry at Saint Louis, Mo., which it was alleged must have been tracks in the soft sand before the rock was formed. These, though remarkably perfect, are finally proved to have been cut out with tools; the motive being probably only to humbug geologists, and make sport of science.

5. In the limestone used for the construction of the United States Court house at Detroit, is a figure which the celebrated Dr. Houghton determined was a fossilized human head. In this case there is no doubt whatever that the figure is actually mineralized, and that the rock in which it is imbedded is pre-Adamite.—But it certainly requires as lively a fancy to make it a human head, as it does to make angels with blue wings, and pearly white feet passing through the feathers, of the white and blue clouds that rise up of a summer afternoon, when the sun is hot and gentle breezes blow.

The stone containing this figure is handsomely dressed, and placed in the wall of the Court House in a prominent position, near the door, and of a thousand men whom we have seen examine it in succession, not one believed it human.

So will fall to the ground every attempt to overthrow the divine record.

[ED. ISLANDER.]

Conference commenced here the sixth, and continued till the tenth. The attendance was large and the interview one of great interest. Numerous sacrifices and offerings were made the 8th, but we have not a list of the names of those who offered, neither have we the Clerk's record of the proceedings, prepared for publication. Arrangements were made for sending out fifty Elders next winter. Some have already received their missions, and will leave in a few days; but most of them will not leave till October and November.

LATER FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

The Russians are evacuating the Turkish territory, carrying the Wallachian Archives with them, the only trophy of their disastrous invasion. Austrians are about to occupy the same territory, nominally, as allies of Turkey. They ought to be treated as invaders. The Turks are in more danger from friends than enemies.

The Propeller Michigan brought a considerable number of emigrants on her last trip down, and landed them at Galilee.

Small pox and Cholera are prevailing in Mackinac.

WAGES OF LABOR.

The average wages of agricultural laborers in England, last year, were forty cents a day. The wages of journeymen carpenters now, in Waterford, Ireland, are at the present eighty-three cents a day.

In Central India the wages of a field laborer are now six cents a day, he finding his own food; women receive four cents and a third, and boys receive three cents. House servants are better paid, and they are compelled to wear much better clothes.

Thirty years ago a field laborer cost his owner, in the southern States, less than a dollar a week, (interest on his price, and cost of keeping,) now the cost is twice as much.

In 1851, average wages at Lowell, Mass., in the factories, for females, thirty-three cents a day; for males, eighty cents, clear of board; or, fifty-two cents a day for females, and one dollar twelve cents for males, without board.—The wages in 1840, were precisely the same there.

The wages of labor at Greenwich Hospital, England, for carpenters, bricklayers and masons, doubled from 1735 to 1828, (from 2s. 6d. to 5s. per day.)

The weekly wages of husbandry labor in England, in 1700, were equal to the price of fifty-four pints of wheat; in 1790, to eighty-two pints; in 1832, to ninety pints. (Sixty-four pints make a bushel.)

From Wm. Penn's cash book, it appears that in 1699, it required 157 days of unskilled labor to earn a ton of flour—cash wages 33 cts. a day. In 1834, such a laborer at Philadelphia could earn a ton of flour in seventy-eight days—cash wages, 75 cents a day.—Flour was at the former period, $45.34; at the latter, $58.32 per ton.

Thus, in 134 years in England, the wages of unskilled labor, had nearly doubled, when estimated in wheat, in cash they had quite doubled, and in nearly all other commodities they had many times multiplied their nominal value. Even in the year 1813, a cottager's Sunday hat cost 20s., now 7s.; a shirt 10s. 6d. now 3s.; calico, 2s. 9d., now 6d.; brown sugar 10d., now 4d. In 14 years, from 1820 to '34, cotton cloth fell from 12½d. to 6d. In these years the price of cloth diminished 51 percent, wages remaining in money price the same.—But what is more remarkable, the money price of all the British and Irish productions and manufactures exported from England had fallen in these 14 years 40 per cent. This reduction continued steady till 1850. $41.63 would purchase as much of these articles which make up the multimillion exports of Great Britain, as $94 would have purchased 30 years before. The money wages remained the same, the real wages had more than doubled within 30 years in perhaps everything but wheat and house rent.

The wages of women in the United States, measured in the same way, have trebled since the year 1818—the period of the general introduction of machinery into manufactures.

The wages of husbandry in France have in like manner trebled in 130 years. While the process of doubling the wages of labor was going on in England, the population rose to fourteen millions.

The facts of political economy must have another and fairer hearing than the old school authorities could give them. Increase of population, and the unlimited multiplication of products by the use of machinery do not depress wages, but on the contrary, the improvement of the condition of the laborer everywhere keeps even pace with all such increase.

The laws which govern society are better than the disciples of the dismal science imagine. Life is not necessarily a battle, nor is humanity a failure. We have indeed, a great deal to learn, but we have as much to hope for, which will come the fullness of time.—The present good of this faith is, that we can thank God and take courage.

The business of steamboats at this place is steadily increasing. At the present time more boats stop here than at any other place between Sheboygan and Detroit. Scarcely a week goes by, but some boat comes in which has never been here before; and every new one becomes a regular customer. It is very important to increase our business transactions with these boats, and thus give prosperity to every kind of business in the Islands. The Harbor of Saint James is the natural commercial centre for all this end of the Lake. The present time is propitious for emigrants, who wish a permanent home in a new and growing place. Those who intend finally coming, should not delay for one year. Five hundred additional men would find steady employment at high prices next winter. An industrious man with a good span of horses, can do better at teaming than he can in the learned professions elsewhere.

BALTIMORE, June 29.—The Sun, of this A. M., has a letter containing late advices from Fort Leavenworth, stating that the citizens of the new Territory of Kansas had held a large meeting for the purpose of organizing into an association to protect the rights of the squatters.

Resolutions were adopted declaring it a bona fide right of the squatters on the soil of the Territory, also of every person of lawful age, or at the head of a family, who marks out a claim of 160 acres, to erect thereon a cabin or residence; the same to be the undisputed property of the settlers. The resolutions also recognize the institution of slavery as at present existing, and recommends slaveholders to introduce their slaves as soon as possible.—The resolutions further state that no protection will be afforded to abolitionists who may come out as settlers in the new Territory.—Already 2,000 claims have been made near Leavenworth, and applications are still going on.

Late reports indicate the success of the little speck of revolution which has some time prevailed in Mexico. The rising against Santa Anna is extending, and some of his troops are going over to the insurgents. It is not improbable that he may soon be an exile again. In the mean time, the $10,000,000 which Mexico received under the Gadsden treaty, is, or $7,000,000 at least, on deposit in the banks of this country, and the possession of it is likely to become the principal bone of contention in the coming struggle. Almonte, the Mexican minister to the United States, has charge of it now.

Private letters from Utah give a discouraging account of the state and prosperity of the Territory. At the same time some of the newspapers give a very flattering account of the state of affairs there. As the Deseret News does not exchange with us, we have no regular information from Brigham's people.—It appears, however, that the Indian hostilities drag their slow length along, but have ceased to be dangerous. The emigration to Utah is little if any greater than that from Utah to California.

The Brighamites at Salt Lake have appointed Jedediah M. Grant an Apostle, in the place of Willard Richards, deceased. Grant is superior to Richards, and is a preacher of established reputation. We need not say that he is a decided Brighamite, and will have no additional influence in his new calling.

Commodore Perry has affected a treaty of commerce with Japan. The treaty has been received at Washington, and is probably before the Senate ere this. We have not seen a copy, but it is likely to appear before the public soon. It is said that this treaty does not open Japan to the commerce of other nations. But all the commercial powers are likely to get admitted to the trade, if they pursue a judicious policy.

The price of steamboat wood has come up to $2.00 per cord, and at that price it is impossible to supply the demand. Choppers get 75 cents per cord, and haulers from 75 cents to $1.00; that which is near by realizing something handsome for the standing timber. Those who cannot sustain themselves at these rates, would be poor though gold eagles rained down their chimneys.

A press of book work, and the anxiety of the printers to attend Conference have delayed this issue two weeks. It is possible that we may yet occasionally be obliged to pass over a week to keep our book work in operation.—But a full force will be kept at work, and our subscribers will receive their full complement of papers, notwithstanding our occasional delay.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of Withdrawal of certain Lands in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, on the routes of the Oakland and Ottawa, and other proposed Rail Roads.

At the solicitation of a majority of the Delegation in Congress from the State of Michigan, the President of the United States, by his order bearing date the 1st of May, instant, has directed that the following named townships be withdrawn from sale or entry until further orders, except for valid pre-emption claims, to wit:—

IN THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.

In the district of lands subject to sale at Duncan:

North of the base line and west of the principal meridian, lower peninsula.

Townships thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range two.

Townships thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range three.

Townships thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range four.

Townships thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range five.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range six.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, and thirty-seven, of range seven.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, and thirty-four, of range eight.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, and thirty, of range ten.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, and thirty, of range eleven, twelve, and thirteen.

By order of the President:

JOHN WILSON,

Commissioner.

NEW VOLUME.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK!
The July number commences volume xlix. Subscribers can commence with the new volume; or, if they wish, with the January number, as we can always supply back numbers. One hundred pages of reading each month! the oldest magazine in America, and the only one especially devoted to the wants of the Ladies of America.
We commence this volume with the largest list, by many thousand, that we have had since we commenced the work. We have, in addition to our many excellent features, another one to add—

A LIFE OF COLUMBUS, for youth, to run through the volume, to be followed by other works of a like character, American in their nature. We think this new feature will be appreciated by our subscribers. All our celebrated corps of contributors will favor us as usual with those writings that have made the "Lady's Book" so celebrated throughout our country as a literary standard.

STEEL ENGRAVINGS.
In this department, we have always stood unrivalled, and the same attention will still be paid to it to enable us to sustain our proud superiority. Our fashions, with diagrams. This department, which has given great satisfaction to our lady subscribers, will be continued.

DRAWING LESSONS FOR YOUTH.
We have at least one thousand designs still on hand to publish, therefore this department will be continued with unabated energy. Any child can learn drawing by these lessons.
PARIS, LONDON, AND PHILADELPHIA FASHIONS.

The only colored fashions upon which any reliance can be placed, received direct from Paris, and adapted to the taste of American ladies by our own "Fashion Editor," with full directions.

DRESSMAKING.—Our monthly description of dressmaking, with plans to cut by. None but the latest fashions are given. The directions are so plain, that every lady can be her own dressmaker. EMBROIDERY.—An infinite variety in every number.

DRESS PATTERNS.—Infants, and children's dresses, with descriptions how to make them. All kinds of crochet and netting work. New patterns for cloaks, mantles, talmas, collars, chemisettes, undersleeves—with full directions. Every new pattern of any portion of a lady's dress, appears first in the "Lady's Book," as we receive consignments from Paris every two weeks, having a resident Editor there. THE NURSE.—This subject is treated upon frequently.

GODEY'S INVALUABLE RECEIPTS UPON EVERY SUBJECT.

Indispensable to every family, worth more than the whole cost of the book. Music.—Three dollars' worth is given every year. MONEY COTTAGES.—Cottage plans will be continued as usual. In the various numbers for 1854, will be found the newest designs for Bonnets, caps, cloaks, evening dresses, fancy articles, head-dresses, hair-dressing, robes de chambre, carriage dresses, brides' dresses, wreaths, mantillas, walking dresses, riding habits, and morning dresses. Dresses for Infants and Young Misses, Boys' Dresses, Cape and Cloaks of Fur in season, Patterns for Needle-work of all kinds, and Patterns to Cut Dresses by, are given monthly.

Orders for any of the above articles, or for clothing for ladies and children, patterns for ditto, furniture, jewelry, head ornaments etc. etc., will be attended to by remitting to the publisher. Splendid steel, line, and mezzotint engravings in every number. They are always to be found in Godey. "Godey's Lady's Book" contains precisely that for which you have to take at least three other magazines to get the same amount of information.

TERMS.
One copy one year, $3. Two copies one year, $5. Five copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $10. Eight copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making nine copies, $15. Eleven copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $20. "Godey's Lady's Book" and "Arthur's Home Magazine" will both be sent one year for $3 50. Terms for six months—from July, 1854, to December, 1854, inclusive. We will furnish at the following rates for six months. Persons unacquainted with the "Lady's Book" can take it for that length of time, and renew their subscriptions or not, at their pleasure.
One copy six months, $1 50. Two copies six months, $2 50. Five copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $5. Eleven copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $10.

L. A. GODEY,
113 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.
"The Lady's Book" is a periodical literary treasure to the fair sex of America. Every lady should be a subscriber—every citizen should see that it graces the table of his wife or daughter. It is a fountain of unexceptionably pure and instructive literature, and an unflinching source of the purest intellectual enjoyment. Godey adopts for his motto "EXCELSIOR!"—more elevated—and his unrivalled enterprise is vindicating its propriety."—Easton Clarion.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of the Establishment of an additional Land Office in the State of Michigan.

In pursuance of the act of Congress, approved April 20, 1854, entitled "An act Establishing a Land Office in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan," the District for which it is to be called the "CHEROKEE LAND DISTRICT," is hereby declared and made known, that the Land Office for said District has been located for the present, by the President of the United States, at the town of Duncan, in the northern part of the Southern Peninsula of said State.

Given under my hand, at the City of Washington, this sixteenth day of May, A. D. 1854.
JOHN WILSON,
Commissioner of the General Land Office.

BOOKS.

The following books are constantly for sale at this office:—
Ancient and Modern Michilimackinac, including an account of the controversy between Mackinac and the Mormons. Price, 25 cts.
A History of the Rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the discovery of Ancient American Records, &c., by George J. Adams. Price, 12½ cts.
A Discussion of the Roman Catholic Religion, between Charles Rafferty and James J. Strang. Price, 10 cts.
The Diamond; being the Law of Prophetic Succession. Price, 5 cts.
Money may be sent by mail at our risk from any part of the United States for these books. We will return the books by mail, free of postage.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Detroit, Nov. 1, 1853.
Pursuant to the Statute, in such case made and provided, I hereby appoint the third Tuesdays of July and January as the times for holding the Circuit Courts for the County of Emmet during the years 1854 and 1855.
SAM'L T. DOUGLASS,
Circuit Judge, Third District.

POETRY. THE STORM.

BY EULALIE.

Through the midnight darkness flashing,
Cometh streams of lurid light,
And the rain-drops madly dashing
'Gainst the sullen brow of night;
Earth trembles 'neath the raving
Of the storm-god on the sky,
And vain would shrink from braving
The brightness of his eye.

And now methinks the bounding waves
And troubled winds that sweep
Around the lonely mountain caves,
Have wakened from their sleep.
The spirits dark, that dwell within,
Such tumult wild outpour,
As if each den of woe and sin
Were keeping open door.

But why should mortals shrink aghast
At elemental strife,
Whose hearts have felt the seething blast
That sweeps the path of life?
Nay! let the child of hope and love,
The careless happy one,
Droop when the rising clouds above
Obscure the setting sun.

Not so the sorrow-laden heart,
Like freighted ship at sea,
It will not bound, and leap, and start,
When cross waves strike the lee!
But calmly look upon the sky
In clashing armor dress—
The Oak will never fear to die,
Whose leaves are seared at best.

New Richmond, August 16th, 1853.

BRILLIANTS. ADVERSITY.

You were used
To say Extremity was the trier of spirits;
The common chances, common men could bear;
That when the sea was calm, all boats alike
Show'd mastership in floating; Fortunes blows,
When most struck home, being gentle wounded, crave a noble cunning. [Shakespeare.]

Some, bowed and bent,
Wax grey and ghastly, withering ere their time,
And perish with the reed on which they lent;
Some seek Devotion, Toil, War, Good or Crime,
According as their souls were form'd to sink or climb. [Byron.]

In this wide world the fondest and the best,
Are the most tried, most troubled, and distress'd. [Crabbe.]

Ye good distress'd!
Ye noble few! who here unbending stand
Beneath life's pressure, yet bear up awhile,
And what your bounded view, which only saw
A little part deem'd evil, is no more:
And the storms of wintry time will quickly pass. [Thomson.]

The good are made by ill—
As odors crush'd are sweeter still! [Rogers.]
A thousand years scarce serve to form a state;
An hour may lay it in the dust; and when
Can Man its shatter'd splendor renovate, Recall its virtues back, and vanquish time and fate! [Byron.]

The Gods in bounty work up storms about us
That give mankind occasion to exert Their hidden strength, and throw out into practice

Virtues that shun the day, and lie conceal'd
In the smooth season and the calm of life. [Addison.]

Affliction is the good man's shining scene:
Prosperity conceals his bright ray;
As night to Stars, Woe lustrous gives to man.

THIRZA.

Sits she in the moonlight dreaming,
With her raven tresses streaming,
With her dark eyes brightly beaming.

Upward turneth she her glances,
And a wondrous world of fancies,
All her happy soul entrances.

Maiden, thou art young and blushing,
And the sweetest thoughts are gushing
In thy breast, and swiftly rushing.

Hope is gayly, gently singing,
And her melody is ringing—
Rainbows o'er thy spirit hanging.

Thou art fondly, fondly thinking
Of the Future—thou art drinking
From the well of Time unshrinking.

Maiden, in the moonlight dreaming,
With thy raven tresses streaming,
Life to thee is brightly gleaming.

Dream on, maiden, care defying,
Dream on, and dull sorrows flying—
Thou shalt live among the dying.

LOGAN'S CABIN, 1853. F. H. S.

THE LITTLE ONE IS DEAD.

Smooth the hair, and close the eyelids,
Let the window curtains fall,
With a smile upon her features,
She hath answered to the call.
Let the children kiss her gently,
As she lies upon the bed,
God hath called her to his bosom,
And the little one is dead.

LET US ALL HOPE.

"Behind the cloud the starlight lurks,
Through showers the sunbeams fall;
For God, who loveth all his works,
Has left his hope with all."

COWDERY'S LETTERS.

Oliver Cowdery was the earliest associate with Joseph Smith in the ministry of the dispensation of the fullness of times. The series of letters, one of which we insert in each number, till the publication is complete, give a most faithful history of the bringing in of the dispensation. They were written in answer to brief letters from Wm. W. Phelps, then a recent convert, and a seeker for further knowledge. The letters of Phelps consisting principally of brief inquiries, we omit, the answers being full without them.

LETTER IV.

Jan. 28th, 1835.

DEAR BROTHER:—In my last,
I apologized for the brief manner in which I should be obliged to give, in many instances, the history of this church. Since then yours of Christmas has been received.

It was not my wish to be understood that I could not give the leading items of every important occurrence, at least so far as would effect my duty to my fellow men, in such as contained important information upon the subject of doctrine, and as would render it intelligibly plain; but as there are in a great house, many vessels, so in the history of a work of this magnitude, many items which would be interesting to those who follow, are forgotten. In fact, I deem every manifestation of the Holy Spirit, dictating the hearts of the saints in the way of righteousness, to be of importance, and this is one reason why I plead an apology.

You will recollect that I mentioned the time of the religious excitement, in Palmyra and vicinity to have been in the 17th year of our brother J. Smith, Jr.'s age. This brings the date down to the year 1823.

I do not deem it to be necessary to write further on the subject of this excitement. It is doubted by many whether any real or essential good ever resulted from such excitements, while others advance their propriety with warmth.

The mind is easily called up to reflection upon a matter of such deep importance, and it is just that it should be; but there is a regret occupying the heart when we consider the deep anxiety of thousands, who are led away with a vain imagination, or a groundless hope, no better than the idle wind or the spider's web.

But if others were not benefited, our brother was urged forward and strengthened in the determination to know for himself of the certainty and reality of pure and holy religion. And it is only necessary for me to say, that while this excitement continued, he continued to call upon the Lord in secret for a full manifestation of divine approbation, and for, to him, the all important information, if a Supreme being did exist, to have an assurance that he was accepted of him.

This, most assuredly, was correct—it was right. The Lord has said, long since, and his word remains steadfast, that to him who knoveth it shall be opened, and whosoever will, may come and partake of the waters of life freely.

To grant a humble penitent sinner a refreshing draught from this most pure of all fountains, and most desirable of all refreshments, to a thirsty soul, is a matter for the full performance of which the sacred record stands pledged.

The Lord never said—"come unto me, all that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," to turn a deaf ear to those who were weary, when they call upon him. He never said by the mouth of the prophet—"Ho, every one that thirsts, come ye to the waters," without passing it as a firm decree, at the same time, that he that should after come, should be filled with a joy unspeakable.

Neither did he manifest by the spirit of John upon the isle—
"Let him that is athirst come," and command him to send the same abroad, under any other consideration, than that "whosoever would, might take of the water of life freely," to the remote ages of time, or while there was a sinner upon his foot-stool.

These sacred and important promises are looked upon in our day as being given; either to another people, or in a figurative form, and consequently require spiritualizing, notwithstanding they are as conspicuously plain, and are meant to be understood according to their literal reading, as those passages which teach us of the creation of the world, and of the decree of its Maker to bring its inhabitants to judgment.
But to proceed with my narrative:—

On the evening of the 21st of September, 1823, previous to referring to rest, our brother's mind was unusually wrought up on the subject which had so long agitated his mind—his heart was drawn out in fervent prayer, and his whole soul was as lost to everything of a temporal nature, that earth, to him, had lost its charms, and all he desired was to be prepared in heart to commune with some kind messenger who could communicate to him the desired information of his acceptance with God.

At length the family retired, and he, as usual, bent his way though in silence, where others might have rested their weary frames locked fast in sleep's embrace; but repose had fled, and accustomed slumber had spread her refreshing hand over others beside him—he continued still to pray—his heart, though once hard and obdurate, was softened, and that mind which had often flitted, like the wild bird of passage, had settled upon a determined basis not to be destroyed or driven from its purpose.

In this situation hours passed unnumbered—how many or how few I know not, neither is he able to inform me; but supposes it must have been eleven or twelve and perhaps later, as the noise and bustle of the family, in retiring, had long since ceased.

While continuing in prayer for a manifestation in some way that his sins were forgiven; endeavoring to exercise faith in the scriptures, on a sudden a light like that of day, only of a purer and far more glorious appearance and brightness, burst into the room.

Indeed, to use his own description, the first sight was as though the house was filled with consuming and unquenchable fire.
This sudden appearance of a light so bright, as must naturally be expected, occasioned a shock or sensation, visible to the extremities of the body. It was, however, followed with a calmness and serenity of mind, and an overwhelming rapture of joy that surpassed understanding, and in a moment a personage stood before him.

Notwithstanding the room was previously filled with light above the brightness of the sun, as I have before described, yet there seemed to be an additional glory surrounding or accompanying this personage, which shone with an increased degree of brilliancy, of which he was in the midst; and though his countenance was as lightning, yet it was of a pleasing, innocent and glorious appearance,

so much so, that every fear was vanished from the heart, and nothing but calmness pervaded the soul.

It is no easy task to describe a messenger from the skies—indeed, I doubt there being an individual clothed with perishable clay, who is capable to do this work.

To be sure, the Lord appeared to his apostles, after his resurrection, and we do not learn as they were in the least troubled to look upon him; but from John's description upon Patmos, we learn that he is there represented as most glorious in appearance; and from other items in the sacred scriptures we have the fact recorded where angels appeared and conversed with men, and there was no difficulty on the part of the individuals, to endure their presence; and others where their glory was so conspicuous that they could not endure. The last description of appearance is the one to which I refer, when I say it is no easy task to describe their glory.

But it may be well to relate the particulars as far as given.—
The stature of this personage was a little above the common size of men in this age; his garment was perfectly white, and had the appearance of being without seam.

Though fear was banished from his heart, yet his surprise was no less when he heard him declare himself to be a messenger sent by command of the Lord, to deliver a special message, and to witness to him that his sins were forgiven, and that his prayers were heard; and that the scriptures might be fulfilled, which say—God has chosen the foolish things of this world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, has God chosen; yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things which are, that no flesh should glory in his presence.

Therefore, says the Lord, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder; the wisdom of their wise shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent shall be hid; for according to his covenant which he made with his ancient saints, his people, the house of Israel, must come to the knowledge of the gospel, and own the Messiah whom their fathers rejected, and with them the fullness of the Gentiles be gathered in, to rejoice in one fold under one Shepherd.

This cannot be brought about until first certain preparatory things are accomplished, for so has the Lord purposed in his own mind. He has therefore chosen you as an instrument in his hand to bring to light that which shall perform his act, his strange act, and bring to pass a marvelous work and a wonder.

Wherever the sound shall go it shall cause the ears of men to tingle, and wherever it shall be proclaimed, the pure in heart shall rejoice, while those who draw near to God with their mouths, and honor him with their lips while their hearts are far from him, will seek its overthrow, and the destruction of those by whose hands it is carried.

Therefore, marvel not if your name is made a derision, and had as a by-word among such, if you are the instrument in bringing it, by the gift of God, to the knowledge of the people.

He then proceeded and gave a general account of the promises made to the fathers, and also gave a history of the aborigines of this country, and said they were literal descendants of Abraham.—
He represented them as once being an enlightened and intelligent people, possessing a correct knowledge of the gospel, and the plan of restoration and redemption.

He said this history was written and deposited not far from that place, and that it was our brother's privilege, if obedient to the commandments of the Lord, to obtain, and translate the same by the means of the Urim and Thummim, which were deposited for that purpose with the record.

Yet, said he, the scripture must be fulfilled before it is translated, which says that the words of the book, which were sealed, were presented to the learned; for thus has God determined to leave men without excuse, and show to the meek that his arm is not shortened that it cannot save.

A part of the book was sealed, and was not to be opened yet.—
The sealed part, said he, contains the same revelation which was given to John upon the isle of Patmos, and when the people of the Lord are prepared, and found worthy, then will it be unfolded unto them.

On the subject of bringing to light the unsealed part of the record, it may be proper to say, that our brother was expressly informed, that it must be done with an eye single to the glory of God;
if this consideration did not wholly characterize all his proceedings, in relation to it, the adversary of truth would overcome him, or at least prevent his making that proficiency in this glorious work which he otherwise would.

While describing the place where the record was deposited,
he gave a minute relation of it, and the vision of his mind being opened at the same time; he was permitted to view it critically; and previously being acquainted with the place, he was able to follow the direction of the vision, afterward, according to the voice of the angel, and obtain the book.

I close for the present by subscribing myself as ever, your brother in Christ.

OLIVER COWDERY.

CHIP BASKET.

Two men were conversing about the ill-humor of their wives.

"Ah!" said one, with a sorrowful expression, "mine is a Tartar!"

"Well," replied the other, "mine is worse—
she is the Cream of Tartar."

An enthusiast was once running on about the firmament, and praising the Deity for having ornamented it with stars.

"Nonsense, man," said one Velleios, an epicurean philosopher, "do you mean to say the Supreme Being is an ornament or scene-painter? Why, if he was, don't you think he would have arranged the heavenly bodies in circles, festoons or other symmetrical shape?"
Not bad for a pagan.

The truly great and good, in affliction, bear a countenance more princely than they are wont; for it is the temper of the highest like the palmtree, to strive most upwards when it is most burdened.—Sir P. Sidney.

The only fountain in the wilderness of life,
where man drinks of water totally unmixed with bitterness, is that which gushes for him in the calm and shady recesses of domestic life. That is a sweet idea. But where is it to be found? We answer, "like angel visits —few and far between!" Yet, "true, 'tis pity."

A late writer says that faith, like jackals, feeds among the tombs. This is unquestion-ably so. If a man ever believes that there is "another and a better world," it is while musing thoughtfully over the green little willows, beneath whose verdure are stranded the hearts and aspirations of our friends.

The Humane Magnanimity Society of Troy offers a reward of $50 for the best method of preventing sea-sickness on the canal. Jacobs recommends walking on the towpath.

A queer writer says, he has so high a regard for the religious notions of others, that if he should ever see a lot of ants worshipping a toadstool, he would certainly lift his hat and pass on, without casting a stone or a reflection at them. A liberal-minded man that!

A western writer, in speaking of a new play
just written by a gentleman of Cincinnati, says, "the unities are admirably observed—the dullness which commences in the first act never flags for a moment till the curtain drops."
That's a puff as is a puff.

A missionary, in speaking of the Sandwich islands, says "they have become very tractable of late." He is right—they are very tractable. A friend informs us, that eight out of ten are "broke to harness," and do the business of jackasses and oxen.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 11.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JULY 27, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 58.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

DEBATE IN CONGRESS ON POLYGAMY.

(Continued.)

MR. SEWARD. I insist that there is a necessity for the adoption of the amendment I have offered, for this reason: Congress has no power to disturb existing rights. If the people of the Territory of Utah were clothed with authority to pass a statute which recognizes the validity of these marriages, then polygamy is not a crime, and Congress has no power to declare that a crime which has been legalized in the Territory.

We might as well attempt, by legislation, to bastardize the issue of these marriages; and we might as well go still further, and change their law of inheritance, and say that the issue resulting from these marriages should not be entitled to inherit the property which belongs to their parents.

It is too late now, after the government of the United States has sanctioned the existence of this law of polygamy, and given to these people a Territorial organization, to fix upon them as a crime that which has been sanctioned by your government. I hold that the only way to treat this matter, is to bring up the question directly, and assert the power, if we possess it, of repealing the organic law under which polygamy is sanctioned in this Territory.

What right have we to fix upon these people as a crime that which has been sanctioned by law? The very highest authority we have declares that there can be no offence where there is no law. Such is the language of the Bible; and it is useless to talk about the existence of crime, when it receives the sanction of your laws. The marriages which have taken place under Territorial law are valid; and the rights of these parties cannot be disturbed by the action of Congress. All that we can do is to look to the future, and prevent these marriages, if we consider them immoral.

MR. KERR. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Seward,] for the reason, as I believe, that it will render the proviso a little more acceptable. I do not see that anything in the world is to be accomplished by the fling that is now being made at the Mormons.

Supposing polygamy to be a crime, as all of us pronounce it to be, what will be the effect of an attempt, at the present time, to strike at it? It will drive off the Mormons from Utah to some other portions of the Union, where the homestead bill that we have passed during the present session of Congress will enable them to settle down again comfortably and securely.

Congress will thus aid and abet in establishing them elsewhere by the authority given them to go there, and thus indirectly sanction this very institution of polygamy, and do injustice to other communities.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I was going on to observe that polygamy, whatever it may be, has not been legalized by Congress. It is confined to Utah; it is confined there almost exclusively. The effect of the present proposition, if adopted, will be to diffuse it through the vast extent of the public domain. For, if you virtually prohibit it in Utah by the provisions of this bill—which is a homestead bill on a very restricted scale—the effect will be to drive the Mormons from their present locality, and scatter them broadcast through all the rest of the public domain of this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as one who is sincerely and decidedly opposed to the prevalence of crime of every sort, and especially to the existence and prevalence of this particular crime, I am opposed to this amendment. If Congress has not got the fearless independence and determination to make a bold and direct onslaught on the institution of polygamy, by providing penalties for the punishment of those guilty of that crime—so long as Congress does not aim at its total suppression—then I say let it stay where it is. Let it be confined to Utah; and do not interpose any enactment of legislation here, the direct tendency of which will be to unsettle again that migratory horde of people—for they are a migratory people; start at a very short notice, and go to a very great distance, in order to secure a place where they can enjoy the exercise of their religious rights. I am in favor of giving these Mormons a title in the land, instead of having them cut off as they are by the restriction of this Territorial bill.

MR. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I am gratified to observe that there is, so far as I can learn, but one sentiment in this committee in reference to the crime of bigamy or polygamy. The faces of all of us are against it. I rather incline to the belief that there is not one exception to the rule. I believe even the gentleman from Utah himself is not an exception, for since he has occupied a seat upon this floor, he has not, to my knowledge, said one word in favor of it; and during this discussion he has not opened his mouth in its defence.

The question then simply is, in what shape shall we meet this crime. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. Kerr] objects to the adoption of this proviso, because it is meeting the question indirectly. He prefers marching directly up to it, and in the common parlance of the day, taking the bull by the horns. He is for declaring at once that polygamy shall be deemed a crime. Well, sir, suppose you do make that declaration, what will be the effect?

It has been tolerated in that Territory ever since the Territory was organized; and they do not deem it to be a crime there. It cannot be found in their statutes, and you cannot, by annulling any of their laws, reach it. You cannot reach it in any other way than through the organic law of the Territory; and if in that way you declare it a crime, and the crime is still committed there, how can you execute the law?

I say, then, that it is impossible to reach it directly by any law upon your statute book, and that it cannot be more effectually reached than in the form proposed in this section. It can be reached in this manner, and in this form it is perfectly legitimate.

MR. BOYCE. I move to add the following words: "More than one wife, or to be guilty of any irreligious practice."

No one can be more opposed to polygamy than I am. I have no idea of proceeding in any matter blindly. What right has this Government to interfere with the religious relations of the people in this Territory? The whole power which this Government exercises over the Territory is simply that of a constructive character. Where is it derived from? There is no express clause in the Constitution in relation to this matter. The authority which is derived from that clause which prescribes the right of making all needful rules and regulations for the Territories, clearly does not authorize a governmental power. It is said by the best writers on constitutional law, to be derived as an incident to the treaty-making power; they lay down the principle thus: because you have the right to acquire territory, you have also the right to govern it.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the right to govern the Territory is not an unlimited power of Government. It is subject to all the express limitations of the Constitution that may be applicable to the subject; and the subject is liable to all the implied limitations derivable from the nature of this Government. Sir, what is the object of the government of the Territory? The governments of Territories are organized merely for the purpose of protecting the Territories in their infant state, until they are able to become States.

The whole power of the Government over the Territories should be confined to that narrow sphere of protecting the rights of persons and things until they are able to become States. It by no means implies that Congress has a right to interfere with the domestic, the social, or the religious relations of the people. Their religious relations, I say, are not to be interfered with. This is a religious subject; and because it is a religious subject, it is one of great magnitude.

But, Mr. Chairman, if there is one thing in reference to the power of Congress, it is that it has no right to interfere with the subject of religion. That is the very first of the amendments to the Constitution; it stands at the head of all the amendments. Congress shall pass no law upon this subject. But it may be said that this religion of the Mormons is not a true religion—that it is a false religion. But I do not think that Congress has any right to say that this or that religion is true or false. Who made us judges over this matter? Who appointed us apostles, or bishops, or priests? Why, Mr. Chairman, if there is any one subject which this Congress does not understand practically, I expect it is this very subject of religion.

I ask you, sir, who set us up to be judges of other people's religion? Who gave us authority to legislate for them on the subject of religion? But it may be supposed that it is no great violation of the principles of the Constitution to interfere with the religion of the Mormons; but once you break in upon that principle, once you violate it in any regard, where will you stop? I am opposed to any infraction at all of the Constitution on this point. Let all religions be free. Let every man worship God according to his own heart and conscience.

Well, again, Mr. Chairman, the spirit of this bill is at war with another clause of the Constitution, which says that Congress shall pass no bill of attainder. I know that, legally and technically, the clause applies to the passage of acts of Parliament depriving a man of his life. But the Supreme Court have determined that the term contained in this clause of the Constitution applies to all kinds of legislation, by which any pains or penalties are inflicted upon persons.

It is to prohibit any kind of legislation by which Congress places itself in the condition of the judiciary to judge, and hear, and determine the cause itself. Now, I ask, what is the bill before us but a bill of pains and penalties against this people, against a whole nation? Why, sir, we have no parallel in our history—

[Here the hammer fell.]

MR. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I understood the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Boyce] to admit the constitutional power in Congress to donate these lands absolutely to actual settlers. Now, sir, I want to know from him, and I inquire for the sake of obtaining information, whether, if Congress has the power to make an absolute grant, it has not also the power to affix conditions to the grant?

A MEMBER, (in his seat.) Not if the provisions of the bill are unconstitutional.

MR. CAMPBELL. I was not inquiring of the honorable gentleman on my left; it was to his colleague [Mr. Boyce] that I propounded the question: "Not if the provisions are unconstitutional?" The honorable gentleman from South Carolina says that we would be interfering with the religious rights of the people of Utah by retaining this provision. Now, Mr. Chairman, I assume the position that if you can give away the land at all, you may affix such conditions to the grant as Congress may regard as wholesome and necessary for the protection of sound morals and the public good. To illustrate my views, Mr. Chairman—

MR. BOYCE, (interrupting.)—Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to make a remark?

MR. CAMPBELL. In a moment. I wish to put a case to the honorable member from South Carolina.

Suppose that, in the wildness of religious fanaticism in Utah, the Mormons should imagine that they had received a revelation from the prophet Joe Smith which required them to enact an ecclesiastical law to the effect that the eldest born of every woman in that Territory should, when it was one month old, be sacrificed and slaughtered; and suppose, further, that, under such circumstances, that people should come here and ask Congress to make a grant of lands to encourage settlement under a system of that kind; would not the honorable gentleman, acting in the capacity of a guardian, and representing a people having a joint interest with all the rest of the people of this land in that domain, deem it proper and advisable to provide that no person who subscribed to, and practiced upon, the principles of such a religion, or rather fanaticism, should have a grant of land? Now I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Boyce] to answer my question.

MR. BOYCE. I propose to ask the gentleman from Ohio—

MR. CAMPBELL. I propose that you answer the question, which I have already propounded, first.

MR. BOYCE. You put an extreme case, and I believe it is customary to answer one question by asking another.

MR. CAMPBELL. Answer the question first, and then propound yours.

MR. BOYCE. Then I will say that I would do nothing to recognize such a state of things.

Now, I will ask the gentleman whether Congress has the right to declare, in this bill, that no Presbyterian should have the privilege of taking a portion of this land?

MR. CAMPBELL. If a Presbyterian church in Utah, actuated by a wild fanaticism, should declare, by an ecclesiastical provision, the allowance of polygamy, or any other crime, as a tenet of its faith, I should say that no person subscribing to such a provision, or practicing under it, should have any portion of the public domain, and that it would clearly be the duty of Congress so to declare.

MR. WALBRIDGE. I move to amend the proviso under consideration, so that it shall read:—

And provided further, that neither the benefits of this or any other act donating public lands, shall extend to any person who shall now, or at any time hereafter, be the husband of more than one wife.

When I rose to address the chair, I stated that the views expressed by the gentleman from North Carolina were, that if we pass this restriction, the Mormons will pass out of Utah, and spread all over the vast valley of the interior of this continent.—The amendment which I now propose reaches that objection. I do not propose here to discuss the constitutional question. I touch the moral question only. If this Congress, acting as the donors of this land, has the right to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which they shall be given, it has the right to prescribe the condition that no individual who indulges in polygamy shall be entitled to the benefits of this act. If he prefers polygamy, he can leave the Union.

MR. PECKHAM. If he prefers more than one woman.

MR. WALBRIDGE. As my friend from New York says, if he prefers more than one woman he may leave the land. If we prescribe conditions, we must make them consistent with the laws of the land. If a single member of this House should take to himself more than one wife, he not only subjects himself to the frowns of the community, but to the penalties prescribed by the law; and he suffers for his crime in the penitentiary.

Do you ask, then, that these people shall have the benefits of this law? That your lands shall not be withheld from people guilty of this crime?

MR. KEITT. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask him a single question?—If it be unconstitutional to legislate upon the subject of polygamy itself, is it not unconstitutional, in donating the public lands, to impose a restriction which indirectly effects the same thing?

MR. WALBRIDGE. I stated at the outset of my remarks, that what I should now say upon this subject I should waive the constitutional question entirely. I do not propose to say whether it is constitutional or not. I am viewing this as a great moral question; and I say that it is the right and duty of Congress, in making donations of the public lands, to impose such limitations and restrictions as they may think proper, such as would be made in the States.

Such a restriction would not be necessary in the State of South Carolina, because the State itself has made the restriction, by forbidding polygamy. But wherever polygamy exists, the line is distinctly drawn; and I submit that Congress have the right, and that it is their duty, in making donations, to impose restrictions in reference to it. I therefore insist, as I said yesterday, upon retaining this proviso as a moral question, and leave the constitutional question for others to discuss.

MR. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman,

when in order, I purpose to offer, as an amendment, that the benefits of the bill shall not be extended to any one guilty of murder, arson, piracy, or robbery.

The objection which I originally urged against the proviso of the bill, it seems to me, has not been answered. It is true, sir, that I have not thought it necessary frequently to obtrude myself upon the House in answer to the several gentlemen who have taken the other side; but my colleague [MR. COBB] has no right to conclude from my silence, under these circumstances, that I have "backed out"—I believe that was his expression. Sir, when I have nothing to say which can throw additional light upon the subject under consideration, silence appears to me most becoming; and in the most friendly spirit, I suggest the propriety of this course to the grave consideration of my colleague.

The proviso excludes from the benefit of the bill all persons who have more than one wife. Why? Because it is said polygamy is a crime. Then the exclusion operates by way of penalty, and is intended to operate by way of discouraging crime. This, then, as I understand it, is the assertion of a collateral jurisdiction over the morals of the people of the country, which is inconsistent with the theory of our limited Federal Constitution.

Our only jurisdiction over crimes is to be found in those clauses of the Constitution which authorize Congress to "provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States." To define and punish piracies and felonies committed upon the high seas, and offences against the law of nations, "and to declare the punishment of treason."

In addition to this, then, there is a criminal jurisdiction arising out of that clause authorizing Congress to make all laws which may be necessary and prepare for carrying into execution the powers conferred by the Constitution. The common law rules being preserved in all cases of accusation.

Has Congress the right to say that no man who is a polygamist shall be permitted to purchase the public lands, or be entitled to the pre-emptor's right of settlement, or what is the same thing, to share in those grants made in the exercise of the power contained in the Constitution, authorizing "rules and regulations" for the disposal of the public lands?

If, through the exercise of the power "to dispose of" the public lands, Congress is to take this identical control over this particular crime, why not over every other? And if in this mode, why not in every other mode of disposing of the Territory? Why not extend the proviso so as to exclude from the benefit of the act all persons who are guilty of murder, arson, piracy, forgery, and, I might add, theft of slaves, if I were not afraid of shocking the sensibilities of some gentleman, and thus bring the influence of the Government to bear upon the whole dark catalogue of crime?

Sir, these considerations are not answered by sophomoric declaration as to the heinousness of the offence. That, sir, is not the question, but whether we shall, for the first time in the history of our legislation, link into our acts the discouragement or punishment of crimes which are appropriately referred to the local Legislatures.

If Congress possesses any power, acting as the Legislature of this Territory, then let them exert it in a direct manner, by virtue of that power, and we could then meet the question fairly when it is presented; but let us not struggle into this bill a jurisdiction not warranted by the clause of the Constitution under which it is framed.

MR. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to substitute for the words "provisions of this act," in the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, the words "donations of land made by this act."

Mr. Chairman, I had no desire to participate in this discussion, but simply to vote for the proviso as it has been amended; but I cannot pass with silence some of the remarks thrown out in the debate by gentlemen who are in favor of striking out this proviso. It seems to me they go aside from the fact, that by the bill to organize the Territory of Utah, which passed September, 1850, all the laws of that Territory passed by the Legislative Assembly and Governor are to be submitted to the Congress of the United States; and that, if disapproved, they are to be null and of no effect. I have the law before me.

Now, is it a fact that there are laws in Utah which establish the crime of polygamy, as asserted by gentlemen? My friend and colleague over the way, [MR. DISNEY], referred this morning to a law which he said countenanced or established polygamy in that Territory. I had no opportunity to examine it.

My friend from Alabama [MR. PHILLIPS] said that we might as well insert a provision here to exclude any man guilty of murder, perjury or any other crime. I understand that the Territorial Legislature of Utah denounce those crimes, and hold them to be crimes as they do in the States of this Union, whereas they tolerate the other crime, that of polygamy.

And here we have a beautiful specimen of this squatter sovereignty, so ably advocated by gentlemen in Congress; the leaving of the Territories to do as they please; the Territorial Legislatures to do what they please; establish any crime they choose. Whether we approve or not, we are to pass the laws unnoticed.

If I had the time I would read from the law organizing the Territory of Utah, a law for which I take this occasion to say I did not vote. I felt indisposed to give the people of Utah, whom I conceived at that time to be a set of strolling squatters, who had seized the public land, and defied the authority of the United States. I was indisposed to give the people of that Territory a Territory twelve times as large, I am told, as that of New York, the power to set up and justify a crime in defiance of the Congress of the United States.

MR. BOYCE. I am opposed to this wholesale legislation against a whole community. It reminds me of our revolutionary struggle. Sir, I well recollect what Burke said, when Lord North and his sovereign majority attempted to indict a whole province. He said, "I do not know how to draw up an indictment against a whole nation." And so with me. I do not know how to draw up an indictment against this whole people. I am for letting them alone.

It seems to me that this proviso is at war with that provision of the Constitution, which says that no man shall be bound to answer for any criminal offence unless upon the presentment of a grand jury. Here you require a whole people to answer for a criminal offence, and on what presentment? The presentment of the Congress of the United States. Is that in consonance with the Constitution?—Again: every man has a right to a trial by jury when he is charged with crime. Do you give the people of Utah this right? No, you do not. To whom do you give the power to decide this question? You give it to the surveyor general.

When a Mormon applies for a tract of land under the provision of this bill, the surveyor general will say to him, "you shall not have it." "Why?" "Because you have more wives than one." Who is to decide that question? This surveyor general. He is to decide whether the man has been guilty of this crime or not. Is that consistent with the Constitution? However good our motives may be, let us not trample the Constitution and this great provision of liberty under foot. Sir, these people are entitled to our sympathy and pity. Look at their history.

It is a history of misfortune and persecution, of disaster and suffering. They have never been able to live in peace in any community. They were driven from Missouri and from Illinois. Their beautiful city of Nauvoo was devastated, and they were compelled, with bleeding hearts, to bid adieu to the graves of their people and to their beautiful temple. Their prophet was taken and placed in jail in Carthage, and while there, was brutally murdered by assassins.—They were then driven into the wilderness. They went up on the western side of Iowa, and there at mid-winter, whilst they were in the midst of suffering, the United States called upon them to go and fight the battles of the country. And how did they respond to the call? They responded better than the people of many parts of the United States. They sent almost their whole militia force; and that people rallied around the star-spangled banner, and went out to fight the battles of the country. And yet you will not now permit those men to enjoy a home in that wilderness which they have rescued from barbarism and from the Indians.

The discussion was further continued touching the constitutional power of Congress, directly or indirectly, to arrest polygamy in the Territory of Utah.—The committee then rose, and the House adjourned, [affecting nothing.]

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, JULY 27, 1854.

With this No. we complete the publication of the Debate in Congress on Polygamy in Utah. If our recollection is right, the bill under discussion was laid by, and no further action taken upon it, and nothing further done concerning Polygamy.

But the discussion seems to have established—1. That Polygamy is a legal institution in Utah. 2. That Congress cannot abolish it.—3. That if Congress should prohibit Polygamy in the future, it cannot enforce the prohibition.—4. That the children of Polygamic marriages are legal heirs, and that it is not in the power of Congress to make a law corrupting their blood.

We believe the future discussion of the matter will result in establishing, as a legal principle, that the States cannot corrupt their blood; and, consequently, that all the children by different mothers of Polygamists will equally inherit the property of their father, in any of the States, as well as in Utah.

The question whether men, married in Utah to several wives, will be legally entitled to cohabit with them in places where Polygamy is prohibited, is the most embarrassing one as yet growing out of the matter.

The fear expressed by several members that if Congress discriminated against Polygamists in land grants in Utah, the Mormons would go to other Territories, where grants were made without any such discrimination, and thus extend the institution of Polygamy, implies a legal opinion in favor of a liberal solution of this question.

The doctrine of the law throughout the United States is, that marriage is a civil contract; and the general rule is, that if the contract is valid where made, it is valid everywhere. It would be necessary to strain a point and override this rule, to punish a man criminally for cohabiting with a wife to whom he was legally married.

The great anxiety to add to the number of slave States has induced the proposition to erect the tribes of civilized Indians south of Kansas and west of Arkansas, into a State, and admit it into the Union. Nearly all the wealthy men, and men of influence in these tribes, have several wives. Polygamy grows with their growing civilization, and cannot be abolished without exterminating the tribes. In order to induce them to become a State, they must be made to feel secure, in this institution.

The tendency of all these facts is to wink at Polygamy. It is now openly practiced to a considerable extent in most of the western States, and no attempt made to punish it.

s which barba-s. further constitudirectpolyg-Utah.—
e, and fecting

DER,

AND,

te the a Con-
h. If he bill y, and pon it, concern-to have amy is

ah. 2.
sh it.—
l proure, it tion.—
ygamic ed that ngress y their ussion

estab-that their at all others inher-her, in as in a, mars, will t with amy is arrass-

of the several scrimland mons stories, without thus LYGA-in fa-this ough-mar-

the tract d ev-ssary this nally whom o the duc-

the th of into the
the lthy these polycivshed ibes.
be-made on.

facts is sid-vest-made

Gen. Quitman was excused by the Grand Jury of the United States District Court at New Orleans from giving testimony against the Cuban filibusters, on the ground that he was as guilty as any body else. The Court required Quitman, Thrasher and Sanderson to give bail in $3,000 each to keep the peace towards Spain and her colonies, which they did, under protest, and were discharged.

The hard shell Democrats of New York refuse all accommodation with the soft shells, and have a separate ticket in the field for State officers, headed by Greene C. Bronson for Governor. This will throw that State into the hands of the Whigs, and the Seward Whigs will lead the Silver Grays.

The mass meeting which assembled at Jackson 6th July to organize a party opposed to the further extension of slavery, nominated a ticket for State officers headed by Kingsley S. Brigham for Governor. This nomination is opposed by the Detroit Advertiser, in favor of an oat and out old line Whig nomination. The most probable result of the scramble is the success of the Administration Democrats.

The Williams mills and the Irving house, at East Saginaw, were recently burned. There seems to have been a systematic effort to burn out the mills in that quarter of the State, for the last six months.

Wouldn't it be a good speculation for Barnum to bring a Pagan or Mussulman missionary into the old christian States to preach?—We doubt not half the churches would be deserted where he preached.

The Legislature of New Hampshire have passed resolutions condemning the repeal of the Missouri Compromise; strongly censuring the Senators and Representatives of that State who voted for it, and approving the Representatives who voted against it.

The Celestials in California have regular places of worship, where idols are as regularly set up and worshiped as at any place in Asia.

The Belligerents in the East.

Either the western powers yet hope and desire to bring Russia to terms without flooding Europe with the horrors of a fierce and protracted war; and therefore pursue this protective rather than offensive system; or appalled at the magnitude of their undertaking, and perhaps discouraged by the unreliable nature of the support which they may expect from Turkey herself, they are staving off the conflict that they may gain time for securing additional allies and resources.

There are some facts which favor the former supposition. All qualifying circumstances taken into an account, there yet is something inexplicable in the abstention of the western powers from effective warfare—from acts of war as distinguished from preparations therefor.

They have not done anything that would hinder an honorable arrangement, did the necessities or interests of Russia prompt her to that course. Each belligerent has prepared for war; the bombardment of Odessa could be attributed to a misunderstanding of the act of the Russian Governor, or at the worst be accounted a set off against the affair of Sinope.

The assaults on the Russian forts and troops on the Danube have all been made by the Turks. And then the surrounding of Russia by a cordon of powers allied with France, England and Turkey, might be interpreted into a very strong hint that Russia had better come to terms without compulsion by arms.

Still the second supposition is the more probable. England and France are evidently unwilling to commence offensive operations.—Great as have been their preparations, those of Russia have been upon an equal scale. While they supposed that their purpose was concealed from the Czar, he has either read it or concealed his proceedings from them, and has completed his belligerent provisions on a scale of commensurate magnitude.

The combined fleets and armies are therefore to be augmented, and new allies are to be obtained.—Some leaking of intelligence from Turkey also leads to the suspicion that the western powers have overestimated the reliability of the Turks as allies in war.

Private letters thence represent that there is little or no discipline in the camp; that the soldiers are idle, the officers tyrannical and overbearing; that the credit of the government is at the lowest ebb, and that emphatically Turkey is "sick" unto death. Public accounts show that the Turkish government evinces all the petulance of disease, and the jealousy and super sensibility of a dependant. It will not surprise us if for months the affairs on the Baltic, Black Sea and Danube remain in statu quo.

We have no idea that France and England will shrink from the task they have undertaken. They are probably now holding out renewed inducements to the Czar, and offering to Sweden terms—perhaps the restoration of her territory to Finland—that will secure her alliance. Poland flanked by Austria and Prussia, will be in arms. Spain in her present troubles would be glad to join the alliance. The small German states would be compelled to take sides with them.

In other words, it is quite possible—and we do not think it improbable, that England and France will refrain from real, earnest feeling—from offensive war—as long as possible, in the hope of throwing a much larger allied force upon the scene of action, and that they are conscious that with their present force they can do little more than keep the enemy's fleets within their harbors.—N. Y. Com. Advertiser.

The Price of Provisions.

Beef cattle sold yesterday at Bull's Head, in forty-fourth St., higher upon the average than at any time since the spring of 1839.

There is a general reluctance on the part of butchers to pay the high prices, and one of the heaviest of them failed the other day for some $30,000.

Cattle grow higher and higher. Whole droves sold yesterday at prices estimated equal to a shilling a pound for the beef in the quarters. The profit of the hide and tallow, after deducting expenses, is but small, leaving the quarters upon the stall at 12 1-2 cents a pound. How a lover of roast beef can expect to get a choice cut for less than 18 or 20 cents a pound is beyond our calculation; and how the majority of them can afford to pay that is beyond their own calculation.

If they resolve that beef is too dear and determine to fall back upon mutton, they will find themselves in equal difficulty. You can hardly get soup bones for a shilling a pound. As for lamb, that is quite out of the reach of every body that has to work to eat. Think of small lambs selling for $3 to $4 each, or 20c. a pound for the meat. The price of a fair quarter of lamb is $2; that is "very fine, weighing six pounds."

Nothing is cheap but pork, and nobody of common sense will eat fresh pork in warm weather, if ever. But it may be asked why not eat more vegetables? Simply because they too, are very dear. It is more economical to buy meat at high prices than any kind of esculents at present rates.

With a whole world's abundant productions flowing toward this great emporium, the poor here are pinched for food, and the middling class find great difficulty in providing their usual supply of such eatables as they have long been accustomed to use in their families. We have, in fact, no reason to expect that the price of beef will be materially reduced till after the arrival of grass-fed cattle from the western prairies.—N. Y. Tribune.

The War in Asia.

One of the most important items of intelligence by the Canada, is the intended attack by the renowned Schamyl upon Tiflis, the capitol of Georgia, and seat of government of the Russian Governor General of the province north and south of the Caucasus. If the expedition should prove successful, it will be a most important event in the war; will give control of the Caspian Sea and the Sea of Azoff to the Allies and unite in opposition to Russia, the twenty or more nationalities between the Caspian and Black Seas.

The extreme points of Anapa and Terek are already subdued, and the reinforcements and supplies which have been successfully transmitted to Gen. Guyon at Kars, render it highly probable that we may speedily hear of a road being opened across the Kuban into the very heart of south-eastern Russia.

The city of Tiflis, properly called Tiphissi, from the hot springs and mineral waters in its neighborhood, contains a mixed population of 30,000 inhabitants. The old city was built 455 years after Christ, upon the right bank of the river Kur, by Vachtanff, the founder of a dynasty which ruled the whole Isthmus. After its destruction by the Persian Shah, Aga Mahommed Khan, a new town was built on the opposite side of the river, where it has continued until the present day. The place is remarkably interesting, resembling Prague for the regularity of its buildings.

The Governor General's palace, built upon the ruins of the ancient residence of the Georgia Kings, is a magnificent edifice, and the cupolas and spires of no less than forty-three churches, add to the picturesque appearance of the city. Georgians, Circassians, Tartars, Jews, Russian warriors, French, English, and a large number of Germans, mingle together in their different garbs, and among them glide the crafty Armenians, of whom a Turkish proverb says, "to cheat an Armenian requires the united cunning of a Kopt, two Greeks, and three Jews."

If Tiflis be taken, it will crown Schamyl with glory, and peace will scarcely be concluded without the independence being recognized of the whole territory between the Kur on the south, and the Volga and the Don on the north.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

Numerous heavy failures have taken place in New York recently, principally among Rail Road stock brokers.

The English are to have an Episcopal church and the French a Roman Catholic at Constantinople.

The Mexican revolution is extending to most of the Republic, and is likely to result in the overthrow of Santa Anna.

There has been a Rail Road collision at Baltimore, in which forty lives were lost.

Congress is to adjourn on the 4th of August, the proposition for a recess being abandoned.

Payments for the Islander.

Wm. C. Calkins, 50cts., to No. 66. F. Bevier paid for Benj. Percell, $2.00, to 128. Thos. Sloan $2.00, to 91. Jas. Bethuran $2.00, to 91. Ichabod B. Gifford $2.00, to 91. R. T. Nichols, for M. H. Overton $2.00, to 55. S. G. Powers, $2.00, to 95. Michael Murphy $2.00, to 95. A. S. Kendall $2.00, to 95.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of Withdrawal of certain Lands in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, on the routes of the Oakland and Ottawa, and other proposed Rail Roads.

At the solicitation of a majority of the Delegation in Congress from the State of Michigan, the President of the United States, by his order bearing date the 1st of May, instant, has directed that the following named townships be withdrawn from sale or entry until further orders, except for valid pre-emption claims, to wit:—

IN THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.

In the district of lands subject to sale at Duncan:

North of the base line and west of the principal meridian, lower peninsula.

Townships thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range two.

Townships thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range three.

Townships thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range four.

Townships thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range five.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range six.

Townships twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range seven.

Townships twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range eight.

Townships twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range nine.

Townships twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range ten.

Townships twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range eleven.

Townships twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twelve.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirteen.

Townships twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range fourteen.

Townships nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range fifteen.

Townships eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range sixteen.

Townships seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range seventeen.

Townships sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range eighteen.

Townships fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range nineteen.

Townships fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty.

Townships thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-one.

Townships twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-two.

Townships eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-three.

Townships ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-four.

Townships nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-five.

Townships eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-six.

Townships seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-seven.

Townships six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-eight.

Townships five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range twenty-nine.

Townships four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirty.

Townships three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirty-one.

Townships two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirty-two.

Townships one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, twenty, twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirty-three.

Townships thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirty-four.

Townships thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirty-five.

Townships thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirty-six.

Townships thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirty-seven.

Townships thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirty-eight.

Townships twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range thirty-nine.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range forty.

Townships twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range forty-one.

Townships twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range forty-two.

A LIFE OF COLUMBUS, for youth, to run through the volume, to be followed by other works of a like character, American in their nature. We think this new feature will be appreciated by our subscribers. All our celebrated corps of contributors will favor us as usual with those writings that have made the "Lady's Book" so celebrated throughout our country as a literary standard.

STEEL ENGRAVINGS. In this department, we have always stood unrivalled, and the same attention will still be paid to it to enable us to sustain our proud superiority. OUR FASHIONS, WITH DIAGRAMS. This department, which has given great satisfaction to our lady subscribers, will be continued.

DRAWING LESSONS FOR YOUTH. We have at least one thousand designs still on hand to publish, therefore this department will be continued with unabated energy. Any child can learn drawing by these lessons. PARIS, LONDON, AND PHILADELPHIA FASHIONS.

The only colored fashions upon which any reliance can be placed, received direct from Paris, and adapted to the taste of American ladies by our own "Fashion Editor," with full directions.

DRESSMAKING.—Our monthly description of dressmaking, with plans to cut by. None but the latest fashions are given. The directions are so plain, that every lady can be her own dressmaker. EMBROIDERY.—An infinite variety in every number.

DRESS PATTERNS.—Infants, and children's dresses, with descriptions how to make them. All kinds of crochet and netting work. New patterns for cloaks, mantles, talmes, collars, chemisettes, undersleeves—with full directions. Every new pattern of any portion of a lady's dress, appears first in the "Lady's Book," as we receive consignments from Paris every two weeks, having a resident Editor there. THE NURSERY.—This subject is treated upon frequently.

GODEY'S INVALUABLE RECEIPTS UPON EVERY SUBJECT.

Indispensable to every family, worth more than the whole cost of the book. Music.—Three dollars' worth is given every year. MODEL COFFEES.—Cottage plans will be continued as usual. In the various numbers for 1854, will be found the newest designs for Bonnets, caps, cloaks, evening dresses, fancy articles, headresses, hairdressing, robes de chambre, carriage dresses, brides' dresses, wreaths, mantillas, walking dresses, riding habits, and morning dresses. Dresses for Infants and Young Misses, Boys' Dresses, Caps and Cloaks of Fur in season, Patterns for Needlework of all kinds, and Patterns to Cut Dresses by, are given monthly.

Orders for any of the above articles, or for clothing for ladies and children, patterns for ditto, furniture, jewelry, head ornaments etc. etc., will be attended to by remitting to the publisher. Splendid steel, line, and mezzotint engravings in every number. They are always to be found in Godey. "Godey's Lady's Book" contains precisely that for which you have to take at least three other magazines to get the same amount of information.

TERMS.

One copy one year, $2. Two copies one year, $3. Five copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $10. Eight copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making nine copies, $15. Eleven copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $20. "Godey's Lady's Book" and "Arthur's Home Magazine" will both be sent one year for $3 50. Terms for six months—from July, 1854, to December, 1854, inclusive. We will furnish at the following rates for six months. Persons unacquainted with the "Lady's Book" can take it for that length of time, and renew their subscriptions or not, at their pleasure.

One copy six months, $1 50. Two copies six months, $2 50. Five copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $6. Eleven copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $10.

L. A. GODEY,

113 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

"The Lady's Book" is a periodical literary treasure to the fair sex of America. Every lady should be a subscriber—every citizen should see that it graces the table of his wife or daughter. It is a fountain of unexceptionably pure and instructive literature, and an unflinching source of the purest intellectual enjoyment.—Godey adopts for his motto "EXCELSIOR!"—more elevated—and his unrivalled enterprise is vindicating its propriety.—Easton Clarion.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of the Establishment of an additional Land Office in the State of Michigan.

In pursuance of the act of Congress, approved April 20, 1854, entitled "An act Establishing a Land Office in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan," the District for which is to be called the "CHEBOYGAN LAND DISTRICT," it is hereby declared and made known, that the Land Office for said District has been located for the present, by the President of the United States, at the town of Duncan, in the northern part of the Southern Peninsula of said State.

Given under my hand, at the City of Washington, this sixteenth day of May, A. D. 1854.

JOHN WILSON,

Commissioner of the General Land Office.

BOOKS.

The following books are constantly for sale at this office:—

Ancient and Modern Michilimackinac, including an account of the controversy between Mackinac and the Mormons. Price, 25 cts.

A History of the Rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the discovery of Ancient American Records, &c., by George J. Adams. Price, 12 1/2 cts.

A Discussion of the Roman Catholic Religion, between Charles Rafferty and James J. Strang. Price, 10 cts.

The Diamond: being the Law of Prophetic Succession. Price, 5 cts.

Money may be sent by mail at our risk from any part of the United States for these books. We will return the books by mail, free of postage.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Detroit, Nov. 1, 1853.

Pursuant to the Statute, in such case made and provided, I hereby appoint the third Tuesdays of July and January as the times for holding the Circuit Courts for the County of E.

met during the years 1854 and 1855.

SAM'L T. DOUGLASS,

Circuit Judge, Third District.

POETRY.

A Man of His Word.

You may sing of the heroes of yore,
You may speak of the deeds they have done,
Of the foes they have slain by the score,
Of the glorious battles they've won;
You may seek to eternize their fame,
And it may be with goodly success
But it is not the warrior's name
That this heart and this spirit would bless;
Tho' oft at their mention my soul has been stirr'd,
Yet, dearer to me is the man of his word.

You may speak of the great ones of Earth,
Of prelates, and princes and kings;
I doubt not there's something of worth
In the bosom of all human things;
But dearer to me than the whole
Of pagentry, splendor and pride,
Is a man with a frank honest soul,
Who never his word hath belied;
Yea, prized above all that this earth can afford,
Though lowly and poor is the man of his word!

The Day Dream.

BY TOM MOORE.

They both were hushed, the voice, the chords;
I heard but once that witching lay;
And few the notes and few the words
My spell-bound memory brought away.

Traces remembered here and there,
Like echoes of some broken strain—
Links of sweetness lost in air,
That nothing now could join again.

E'en these, too, ere the morning fled,
And, though the charm still lingered on,
That o'er each sense her song had shed,
The song itself was faded—gone.

Gone, like the thoughts that once were ours,
On Summer days ere youth had set Thoughts bright, we know, as summer flowers,
Though what they were we now forget.

In vain, with hints from other strains,
I wooed this truant air to come—
As birds are taught, on eastern plains,
To lure their wilder kindred home.

In vain—the song that Sappho gave,
In dying, to the mournful sea,
No mutter slept beneath the wave,
Than this within my memory.

At length, one morning, as I lay
In that half-waking mood, with dreams
Unwittingly at last give way
To the truth of daylight's beams.

A face—the very face, methought,
From which had breathed, as from a shrine
Of songs and souls, the notes I sought—
Came with it, musing close to mine.

And sung the lost measures o'er—
Each note and word, with every tone,
And look that lent its life before—
All perfect—all again my own.

Like parted souls, when 'mid the blest
They meet again—each widowed sound
Through memory's realm had winged in quest
Of its sweet mate, till all were found.

Nor e'en in waking did the clue,
Thus strangely caught, escape again;
For never lark its matins knew
So well as now I know this strain.

And oft, when memory's wondrous spell
Is talked of in our tranquil bower,
I sing this lady's song and tell
The vision of that morning hour.

The Sickle and the Sword.

There went two reapers forth at morn,
Strong, earnest men were they,
Bent each at his appointed task,
To labor through the day.

One hied him to the vally where Ripe stood the golden grain;
He reaped and bound it into sheaves,
And sang a merry strain.

And lo! the other takes his stand
Where rolls the battle's tide;
His weapon, late so clear and bright,
With sanguine gore is dyed.

And furiously he tramples down,
And lays the ripe corn low;
He is death's reaper, and he gives
A curse with every blow.

To which of these two earnest men,
Most honor shall we give—
He who destroys, or works to save
The food whereby we live?

And by the mighty Judge of all,
Which think ye most abhorred—
Which deems the best for mankind's use,
The Sickle or the Sword?

Progress.

Would ye stand still when Nature's law is change?
All things move towards perfection or decay;
Man now is climbing to a higher range
Of thought, of action, of morals or display.
Ye would not stop him! Stand from out his way,
And see him soar in triumph to the sun.

Let him make knowledge as the light of day,
And conquer the world's evils one by one—
Cut down the hills to give his engines play,
And push his steamships to the farthest zone;
Lace the broad earth with thought's mysterious wires,
And do whatever else his destiny inspires.

N. Y. Tribune.

COWDERY'S LETTERS.

Oliver Cowdery was the earliest associate with Joseph Smith in the ministry of the dispensation of the fullness of times. The series of letters, one of which we insert in each number, till the publication is complete, give a most faithful history of the bringing in of the dispensation. They were written in answer to brief letters from Wm. W. Phelps, then a recent convert, and a seeker for further knowledge. The letters of Phelps consisting principally of brief inquiries, we omit, the answers being full without them.

LETTER V.

Feb. 28th, 1835.

DEAR BROTHER:—You will notice in my last, on rehearsing the words of the angel, when he communicated to our brother—that his sins were forgiven, and that he was called of the Lord to bring to light, by the gift of inspiration, this important intelligence, an item like the following—"God has chosen the foolish things of the world, and things which are despised, God has chosen," &c.

This, I conceive to be an important item. Not many mighty and noble, were called in ancient times, because they always knew so much that God could not teach them, and a man that would listen to the voice of the Lord and follow the teachings of heaven, always was despised, and considered to be of the foolish class. Paul proves this fact, when he says, "We are made as the filth of the world—the off-scouring of all things unto this day."

I am aware, that a rehearsal of visions of angels at this day, is as inconsistent with a portion of mankind as it formerly was, after all the boast of this wise generation in the knowledge of the truth; but there is a uniformity so complete, that on the reflection, one is led to rejoice that it is so.

In my last I gave an imperfect description of the angel, and was obliged to do so, for the reason, that my pen would fail to describe an angel in his glory, or the glory of God. I also gave a few sentences which he uttered on the subject of the gathering of Israel, &c.

Since writing the former, I have thought it would, perhaps, be interesting to give something more full on this important subject, as well as a revelation of the gospel. That these holy personages should feel a deep interest in the accomplishment of the work of the Lord, in the last days, is consistent, when we view, critically, what is recorded in the sayings of the holy Scriptures.

You will remember to have read in Daniel—"And at that time, [the last days,] shall Michael stand up, the great prince, who stands for the children of thy people;" and also in Revelations—"I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets."—Please compare these sayings with that singular expression in Heb. "Are the angels not all ministering Spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" And then let me ask nine questions:—

First: are the angels now in glory, the former prophets and servants of God? Second: Are thy brethren of those who keep his commandments on earth? and, third: have brethren and fleshy kindred, in the kingdom of God, feelings of respect and condescension enough to speak to each other, though one may be in heaven and the other on the earth?

Fourth: If angels are ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for those who shall be heirs of salvation, will they not minister for the heirs? and, fifth: if they do, will any one know it?

Sixth: Will Michael, the archangel, the great prince, stand up in the last days for Israel? Seventh: will he defend them from their enemies? Eighth: will he lead them, as they were once led? and, ninth: if so, will he be seen? These questions I leave without answering, because the reasoning is so plain, and so many might be brought, that they must be at hand in the heart and mind of every saint.—But to the gospel, and then to the gathering.

The great plan of redemption being prepared before the fall of man, and the salvation of the human family being as precious in the sight of the Lord at one time as at another, before the Messiah came in the flesh and was crucified, as after the gospel was preached, and many were found obedient to the same. This Gospel being the same from the beginning, its ordinances were also unchangeable.

Men were commanded to repent and be baptized in water, in the name of the Lord: and were then blessed with the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit being thus given, men were enabled to look forward to the time of the coming of the Son of Man, and to rejoice in that day, because through that sacrifice they looked for a remission of their sins, and for their redemption.

Had it not been for this plan of salvation, which God devised before the fall, men must have remained miserable for ever, after transgressing the first commandment; because in consequence of that transgression he had rendered himself unworthy the presence of his Maker. He being therefore cast out, the gospel was preached, and this hope of eternal life was set before him, by the ministering of angels who delivered it as they were commanded.

Not only did the ancients look forward to the time of the coming of the Messiah in the flesh, with delight, but there was another day for which they sought and for which they prayed. Knowing, as they did, that the fall had brought upon them death, and that man was sensual and evil, they looked for a day when the earth might again rest, and appear as in the beginning—when evil might be unknown upon its face, and all creation enjoy one undisturbed peace for a thousand years.

This being sought for in faith, it pleased the Lord to covenant with them to roll on his purposes until he should bring it to pass—and though many generations were to be gathered to their fathers, yet the righteous, those who should, in their lives, embrace the gospel, and live obedient to its requirements, rise and inherit it during this reign of peace.

From time to time the faithful servants of the Lord have endeavored to raise up a people who should be found worthy to inherit this rest, (for it was called the rest of the righteous or the day of the Lord's rest, prepared for the righteous;) but were not able to sanctify them that they could endure the presence of the Lord, excepting Enoch, who, with his people, for their righteousness, were taken into heaven, with a promise that they should yet see that day when the whole earth should be covered with glory.

Moses labored diligently to effect this object, but in consequence of the transgressions and rebellions of the children of Israel, God swore in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest; and in consequence of this decree, and their transgressions since, they have been scattered to the four winds, and are thus to remain till the Lord gathers them by his own power.

To a remnant of them the gospel was preached by the Messiah in person, but they rejected his voice, though it was raised, daily among them. The apostles continued to hold forth the same, after the crucifixion and resurrection of the Lord Jesus, until they would hear it no longer; and then they were commanded to turn to the Gentiles.

They however labored faithfully to turn that people from error, that they might be the happy partakers of mercy, and save themselves from the impending storm that hung over them. They were commanded to preach Jesus Christ night and day—to preach through him the resurrection from the dead—to declare that all who would embrace the gospel, repent, and be baptized for the remission of their sins, should be saved—to declare that this was the only sure foundation on which they could build and be safe—that God had again visited his people in consequence of his covenant with their fathers, and if they would they might be the first who should receive these glad tidings, and have the unspeakable joy of carrying the same to all people; for before the day of rest comes, it must go to all nations, kindreds and tongues.

But in consequence of their rejecting the gospel, the Lord suffered them to be again scattered; their land to be wasted and their beautiful city to be trodden down of the Gentiles, until their time should be fulfilled.

In the last days, to fulfill the promises to the ancient prophets, when the Lord is to pour out his spirit upon all flesh, he has determined to bring to light his gospel, to the Gentiles, that it may go to the house of Israel.—This gospel has been perverted, and men have wandered in darkness. That commission given to the apostles at Jerusalem, so easy to be understood, has been hid from the world, because of evil, and the honest have been led by the designing, till there are none to be found who are practicing the ordinances of the gospel, as they were anciently delivered.

But the time has now arrived, in which, according to his covenants, the Lord will manifest to the faithful that he is the same yesterday to-day and forever, and that the cup of suffering of his people, the house of Israel, is nearly filled; and that the way may be prepared before their face he will bring to the knowledge of the people the gospel as it was preached by his servants on this land, and manifest to the obedient the truth of the same, by the power of the Holy Spirit; for the time is near when his sons and daughters will prophesy, old men dream dreams, and young men see visions, and those who are thus favored will be such as embrace the gospel as it was delivered in old times, and they shall be blessed with signs following.

Farther on the subject of the gathering of Israel. This was perfectly understood by all ancient prophets. Moses prophesied of the affliction which should come upon that people even after the coming of the Messiah, where he said: and evil will befall you in the latter days; because ye will do evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger through the works of your hands. Connecting this with a prophecy in the song which follows—remembering the expression—"in the latter days" where the Lord foretells all their evil, and their being received to mercy, to such as seek the peace of Israel much instruction may be gained. It is as follows:—

"I will heap mischief upon them; I will spend my arrows upon them." They shall be burnt with hunger, and devoured with burning heat: I will also send the teeth of beasts upon them, with the poison of serpents of the dust. The sword without, and terror within, shall destroy both the young man and the virgin, the suckling with the man of gray hairs."

But after all this, he will judge their enemies and avenge them of theirs; for he says:

"If I whet my glittering sword, and my hand taketh hold on judgment, I will render vengeance to my enemies, and will reward them that hate me. I will make my arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall devour flesh."

After all this—after Israel has been restored, and afflicted and his enemies have also been chastised, the Lord says: "Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people; for he will avenge the blood of his servants, and will render vengeance to his adversaries, and will be merciful unto his land and to his people."

I will give a further detail of the promise to Israel, hereafter, as rehearsed by the angel. Accept assurance of my esteem as ever.

O. COWDERY.

Chip Basket

"Mike, why don't you fire at those ducks? Don't you see you have got the whole flock before your gun?"

"I know I have; but you see, when I gets a good aim at one, two or three others will swim right awtix it and me."

Veracity.—On the trial of a person in Boston for violating the liquor law, a witness who was put upon the stand to impeach another, swore that "the character of the witness for the State, might be good enough for common affairs, but on a fox hunt, he was the all firedest liar he ever did see."

The man who is one thing to-day, and another to-morrow—who drives an idea pell mell this week, while it drives him the next—is always in trouble, and does just nothing from one year's end to the other.

How romantic young people are when they court! Till girls get married, all they think necessary to happiness are moonlight evenings, a few hollyhocks, and a bird cage, surrounded by honeysuckles and grape vines.

The "Down East Debating Society" having dismissed the question, "where does fire go to when it goes out?" have got a new and more exciting one up: "When a house is on fire, does it burn up or burn down?"

A gentleman complimented a lady on her improved appearance.

"You are guilty of flattery," said the lady.

"Not so," said the gentleman, "for I vow you are as plump as a patridge!"

"At first," replied the lady, "I thought you guilty of flattery only, but now I find you actually making game of me."

Give up the Ghost.—A player performing the Ghost in Hamlet very badly, was hissed; after bearing it a good while, he put the audience in a good humor, by stepping forward and saying:—

"Ladies and gentlemen; I am extremely sorry that my humble endeavors to please are unsuccessful; but if you are not satisfied, I must give up the ghost."

"I have a good ear, a wonderful ear," said a conceited musician, in the course of conversation.

"So has a jackass," replied a bystander.

"A gentleman," it is announced, "is one who promptly pays for his newspaper." What truth and simplicity! how brief, and yet how complete!

A celebrated sculptor is now engaged on the bust of the Whig party. Cruel joke.

Who is the shortest man mentioned in the Bible? Kneehigh-miah.

"Madam," said a cross-tempered physician to a patient, "If women were admitted to paradise, their tongues would make it a purgatory." "And some physicians, if allowed to practice there," replied the lady, "would soon make it a desert."

Hard Drinking.—"I understand," said a person to his neighbor, "that you are becoming a hard drinker."

"That's slander," replied the neighbor, "for no one can drink easier."

"Will you open the service?" inquired a deacon of a brother, who was an oysterman by trade.

"No, thank you," said he, half waking from a doze, "I've left my oyster knife at home."

"What monsters those cotton factors must be," said Mrs. Parlington, "I'm told one of 'em has more than a hundred hands."

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 13.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, AUG. 17, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 60.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

Terms:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to Cooper & Chidester, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

COWDERY'S LETTERS.

Oliver Cowdery was the earliest associate with Joseph Smith in the ministry of the dispensation of the fulness of times. The series of letters, one of which we insert in each number, till the publication is complete, give a most faithful history of the bringing in of the dispensation. They were written in answer to brief letters from Wm. W. Phelps, then a recent convert, and a seeker for further knowledge. The letters of Phelps, consisting principally of brief inquiries, we omit, the answers being full without them.

LETTER VII.

—, April 28th, 1835.

DEAR BROTHER:—You will remember that in my last I brought my subject down to the evening or night of the 21st of September, 1823, and gave an outline of the conversation of the angel upon the important fact of the blessings, promises and covenants to Israel, and the great manifestations of favor to the world in the ushering in of the fulness of the gospel, to prepare the way for the second advent of the Messiah, when he comes in the glory of the Father, with the holy angels.

A remarkable fact is to be noticed with regard to this vision. In ancient times the Lord warned some of his servants in dreams: for instance, Joseph, the husband of Mary, was warned in a dream to take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt: also the wise men were warned of the Lord in a dream not to return to Herod; and when "out of Egypt the Son was called," the angel of the Lord appeared in a dream to Joseph again: also he was warned in a dream to turn aside into the parts of Galilee.

Such were the manifestations to Joseph, the favored descendant of the father of the faithful, in dreams, and in them the Lord fulfilled his purposes. But the one of which I have been speaking is what would have been called an open vision. And though it was in the night, yet it was not a dream. There is no room for conjecture in this matter, and to talk of deception would be to sport with the common sense of every man who knows when he is awake, when he sees and when he does not see.

He could not have been deceived in the fact that a being of some kind appeared to him; and that it was an heavenly one, the fulfillment of his words so minutely, up to this time, in addition to the truth and word of salvation which has been developed to this generation, in the Book of Mormon, ought to be conclusive evidence to the mind of every man who is privileged to hear of the same.

He was awake, and in solemn prayer, as you will bear in mind, when the angel made his appearance; from that glory which surrounded him, the room was lit up to a perfect brilliancy, so that darkness wholly disappeared: he heard his words with his ears, and received a joy and happiness indescribable by hearing that his own sins were forgiven, and his former transgressions to be remembered against him no more, if he then continued to walk before the Lord according to his holy commandments. He also saw him depart, the light and glory withdraw, leaving a calmness and peace of soul past the language of man to paint. Was he deceived?

Far from this; for the vision was renewed twice before morning, unfolding farther and still farther the mysteries of godliness and those things to come. In the morning he went to his labor as usual, but soon the vision of the heavenly messenger was renewed, instructing him to go immediately and view those things of which he had been informed, with a promise that he should obtain them if he followed the directions, and went with an eye single to the glory of God.

Accordingly he repaired to the place which had been thus described. But it is necessary to give you more fully the express instructions of the angel, with regard to the object of this work in which our brother had now engaged.—He was to remember that it was the work of the Lord, to fulfill certain promises previously made to a branch of the house of Israel of the tribe of Joseph, and when it should be brought forth must be done expressly with an eye, as I said before, single to the glory of God, and the welfare and restoration of the house of Israel.

You will understand, then, that no motive of a pecuniary or earthly nature, was to be suffered to take the lead of the heart of the man thus favored. The allurements of vice, the contaminating influence of wealth, without the direct guidance of the holy spirit, must have no place in the heart nor be suffered to take from it that warm desire for the glory and kingdom of the Lord, or, instead of obtaining, disappointment and reproach would most assuredly follow. Such was the instruction, and this the caution.

Alternately, as we could naturally expect, the thought of the previous vision was ruminating in his mind, with a reflection of the brightness and glory of the heavenly messenger; but again a thought would start across the mind on the prospects of obtaining so desirable a treasure—one in all human probability sufficient to raise him above a level with the common earthly fortunes of his fellow men, and relieve his family from want, in which by misfortune and sickness they were placed.

It is very natural to suppose that the mind would revolve upon those scenes which had passed; when those who had acquired a little of this world's goods, by industry and economy, with the blessings of health or friends, or by art and intrigue, from the pockets of the day laborer, or the widow and the fatherless, had passed by with a stiff neck and a cold heart, scorning the virtuous because they were poor, and lording over those who were subjected to suffer the miseries of this life.

Alternately did these, with a swift reflection of the words of the holy messenger—Remember, that he who does this work, who is thus favored of the Lord, must do it with his eye single to the glory of the same, and the welfare and restoration of the scattered remnants of the house of Israel—rush upon his mind with the quickness of electricity.

Here was a struggle, indeed; for when he calmly reflected upon his errand, he knew that if God did not give, he could not obtain; and again, with the thought or hope of obtaining, his mind would be carried back to its former reflection of poverty, abuse, wealth, grandeur and ease, until before arriving at the place described, this wholly occupied his desire; and when he thought upon the fact of what was previously shown him, it was only with an assurance that he should obtain, and accomplish his desire in relieving himself and friends from want.

A history of the inhabitants who peopled this continent, previous to its being discovered to Europeans by Columbus, must be interesting to every man; and as it would develop the important fact that the present race were descendants of Abraham, and were to be remembered in the immutable covenant of the Most High to that man, and be restored to a knowledge of the gospel, that they, with all nations, might rejoice, seemed to inspire further thoughts of gain and income from such a valuable history.

Surely, thought he, every man will seize with eagerness this knowledge, and this incalculable income will be mine. Enough to raise the expectations of any one of like experience, placed in similar circumstances. But the important point in this matter is, that man does not see as the Lord, neither are his purposes like his.—The small things of this life are but dust in comparison with salvation and eternal life.

It is sufficient to say that such were his reflections during his walk of from two to three miles—the distance from his father's house to the place pointed out. And to use his own words it seemed as though two invisible powers were influencing, or striving to influence his mind—one with the reflection that if he obtained the object of his pursuit, it would be through the mercy and condescension of the Lord, and that every act or performance in relation to it, must be in strict accordance with the instruction of that personage who communicated the intelligence to him first; and the other with the thoughts and reflections like those previously mentioned—contrasting his former and present circumstances in life with those to come.

That precious instruction recorded on the sacred page—they always—which was expressly impressed upon him, was at length entirely forgotten, and as I previously remarked, a fixed determination to obtain and aggrandize himself, occupied his mind, when he arrived at the place where the record was found.

I must now give you some description of the place where, and the manner in which these records were deposited.

You are acquainted with the mail road from Palmyra, Wayne Co. to Canandaigua, Ontario Co. N. Y., and also, as you pass from the former to the latter place, before arriving at the little village of Manchester, say from three to four, or about four miles from Palmyra, you pass a large hill on the east side of the road. Why I say large, is, because it is as large perhaps as any in that country. To a person acquainted with this road, a description would be unnecessary, as it is the largest and rises the highest of any on that route.

The north end rises quite sudden until it assumes a level with the more southerly extremity, and I think I may say an elevation higher than at the south a short distance, say half or three-fourths of a mile. As you pass toward Canandaigua it lessens gradually until the surface assumes its common level, or is broken by other smaller hills or ridges, water courses and ravines. I think I am justified in saying that this is the highest hill for some distance round, and I am certain that its appearance, as it rises so suddenly from a plain on the north, must attract the notice of the traveler as he passes by.

At about one mile west rises another ridge of less height, running parallel with the former, leaving a beautiful vale between. The soil is of the first quality for the country, and under a state of cultivation, which gives a prospect at once imposing, when one reflects on the fact that here, between these hills, the entire power and national strength of both the Jaredites and Nephites were destroyed.

By turning to the 529th and 530th pages of the Book of Mormon you will read Mormon's account of the last great struggle of his people, as they were encamped round this hill Cumorah. [1st edition.] In this valley fell the remaining strength and pride of a once powerful people, the Nephites—once so highly favored of the Lord, but at that time in darkness, doomed to suffer extermination by the hand of their barbarous and uncivilized brethren.

From the top of this hill, Mormon, with a few others, after the battle, gazed with horror upon the mangled remains of those who, the day before, were filled with anxiety, hope or doubt. A few had fled to the south, who were hunted down by the victorious party, and all who would not deny the Savior and his religion, were put to death. Mormon himself, according to the record of his son Moroni, was also slain.

But a long time previous to this national disaster, it appears from his own account, he foresaw approaching destruction. In fact if he perused the records of his fathers, which were in his possession, he could have learned that such would be the case. Alma, who lived before the coming of the Messiah, prophesied this. He, however, by divine appointment, a-bridged from these records, in his own style and language, a short account of the more important and prominent items, from the days of Lehi to his own time, after which he deposited, as he says, on the 529th page, all the records in this same hill, Cumorah, and afterwards gave his small record to his son Moroni, which, as appears from the same, he finished, after witnessing the extinction of his people as a nation.

It was not the wicked who overcame the righteous; far from this; it was the wicked against the wicked, and by the wicked the wicked were punished. The Nephites, who were once enlightened, had fallen from a more elevated standing as to favored privilege before the Lord, in consequence of the righteousness of their fathers, and now falling below, for such was actually the case, were suffered to be overcome, and the land was left to the possession of the red men, who were without intelligence, only in the affairs of their wars; and having no records, only preserving their history by tradition from father to son, lost the account of their true origin, and wandered from river to river, from hill to hill, from mountain to mountain, from sea to sea, till the land was again peopled, in a measure, by a rude, wild, revengeful, warlike and barbarous race. Such are our Indians.

This hill, by the Jaredites, was called Ramah: by it, or around it, the famous army of Coriantumr pitched their tents. Coriantumr was the last king of the Jaredites. The opposing army were to the west, and in this same valley, and near by, from day to day, did that mighty race spill their blood, in wrath, contending, as it were, brother against brother, and father against son. In this same spot, in full view from the top of this same hill, one may gaze with astonishment upon the ground which was twice covered with the dead and dying of our fellow men.

Here may be seen where once sunk to naught the pride and strength of two mighty nations; and here may be contemplated, in solitude, while nothing but the faithful record of Mormon and Moroni is now extant to inform us of the fact, scenes of misery and distress—the aged, whose silver locks in other places and at other times would command reverence; the mother, who in other circumstances would be spared from violence; the infant, whose tender cries would be regarded and listened to with a feeling of compassion and tenderness; and the virgin, whose grace, beauty and modesty would be esteemed and held inviolate by all good men and enlightened and civilized nations, alike disregarded and treated with scorn.

In vain did the hoary head and man of gray hairs ask for mercy; in vain did the mother plead for compassion; in vain did the helpless and harmless infant weep for very anguish, and in vain did the virgin seek to escape the ruthless hand of revengeful foes and demons in human form—all alike were trampled down by the feet of the strong, and crushed beneath the rage of battle and war.

Alas, who can reflect upon the last struggles of great and populous nations, sinking to dust beneath the hand of justice and retribution, without weeping over the corruption of the human heart, and sighing for the hour when the clangor of arms shall no more be heard, nor the calamities of contending armies no more experience for a thousand years? Alas, the calamity of war, the extinction of nations, the ruin of kingdoms, the fall of empires and the dissolution of governments! O the misery, distress and evil attendant on these! Who can contemplate like scenes without sorrowing, and who so destitute of commiseration as not to be pained that man has fallen so low, so far beneath the station in which he was created?

In this vale lie commingled, in one mass of ruin, the ashes of thousands, and this vale was destined to consume the fair forms and vigorous systems of tens of thousands of the human race—blood mixed with blood, flesh with flesh, bones with bones, and dust with dust.—When the vital spark which animated their clay had fled, each lifeless lump lay on one common level—cold and inanimate.

Those bosoms which had burned with rage against each other for real or supposed injury, had now ceased to heave with malice; those arms which were, a few moments before nerved with strength, had alike become paralyzed, and those hearts which had been fired with revenge, had now ceased to beat, and the head to think—in silence, in solitude, and in disgrace alike, they have long since turned to earth, to their mother dust, to await the august, and to millions, awful hour, when the trump of the Son of God shall echo and re-echo from the skies, and they come forth, quickened and immortalized, to not only stand in each other's presence, but before the bar of him who is Eternal.

With sentiments of pure respect, I conclude by subscribing myself your brother in the gospel,

O. COWDERY.

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, AUG. 17, 1854.

Every kind of business is prosperous at this place. Money was never as plenty as at this time.—Seventy-five cents per cord is freely offered for cutting wood in any quantities, and as high as one dollar has been sometimes paid, and yet the supply is far short of the demand.

Fishermen are taking more than the usual quantities of fish, for which they are realizing good prices.

Articles we are obliged to purchase bear a high price, but on an average they are not as high as those we sell. Every kind of crops are coming in well, and the quantity of land in crop is greater than at any previous time.

Several span of horses and numerous horned cattle, pigs, poultry, &c., have been brought on this season, so that now the supply of stock is good. Large quantities of feed are produced for their winter supply. The preparations for winter business are on a large scale.

We will not disguise that amidst all these signs of prosperity, there is occasionally a cloud of discontent. Two families have left here this season, for some better place. But against that a larger number more have come in than in any previous year.

Occasionally a man leaves here to get employment somewhere else, but all this time every kind of business here is seeking more hands than can be obtained. Two hundred additional hands would find constant employment.

Growth of Utah.

As unwilling as the public are to believe the truth in favor of the Mormons, we do not understand why they so readily coin and swallow any falsehood complimentary to them.

The settlement of Utah began in 1848, and as early as the fall of 1849 it was generally reported and stated in most of the leading papers that the population there was sufficient to justify establishing a State government. Papers of the character of the New York Tribune and Philadelphia Ledger rated them as high as fifty to sixty-five thousand inhabitants, and none put them below thirty-five thousand. But when the official census was taken the next year, it showed a population of but 11,380, (Census of 1850, p. 293).—And this included the emigration of that year, probably equal to either of the preceding years, and also the emigrants on the way to California (id. note.)

The returns do not show what portion of this 11,380 were California emigrants, but the Marshal was authorized to count all who left the States previous to the first day of June, and passed through the Territory, and the number has never been estimated at less than four thousand, making the settled population of Utah, as the result of three years emigration, a little over seven thousand; and less than five thousand when it was accredited at fifty thousand.

At the present time the newspapers are about equally divided as to whether Utah is populous enough for a State, or just about to be abandoned by its population.

Private letters coming from there represent the place as enjoying unexampled prosperity.—Both letters and papers assure us that many thousand emigrants go there every year, and that the present population is more than sufficient to justify forming a State government.

Against all this we are obliged to set down the official statement of the Conference, held at Salt Lake City last October.

This statement was made of detailed official returns, prepared by the resident authorities in every neighborhood, and added up at the Conference, and gives the population as follows:—

Salt Lake City,	5,979
“ “ County,	2,273
Utah County,	4,064
Juab “	229
San Pete “	765
Millard “	304
Iron “	847
Tooele “	215
Davis “	1,598
Webber “	1,932

Total, 18,206

This statement includes all missionaries, and their families, who have taken up their residence in Utah, even though absent on missions of several years duration, and all other persons whose stated residence is in the Territory, though personally absent, and is therefore something above the actual population.

This being an official document, from those who are in authority in Utah, and exceedingly anxious to make the best show possible, it ought to put a quietus on bragging upon the growth of Utah.

We rejoice in all the prosperity they really have, but don't see any sense in believing that they have many times the growth that they represent in their most boasting statements.

The same document showed that the whole number of missionaries which they had out in all the world was but 139. This number includes many who are known to have settled down, and either entirely quit preaching, or become mere local preachers in their own neighborhoods.

And their general epistle, subsequently published, represents that a large portion of their missions have been unsuccessful, particularly those to China, Hindostan, Italy, &c.

On our fourth page is an article from the Buffalo Democracy, in defence of the Mormons of Utah, in which the non-existence of slavery there is given as the reason for refusing them the common rights of citizens.

As this seems to contradict our former assertion that slavery does exist there, and that its establishment was the price paid the south for voting Utah a government, it is proper to explain, that the census of 1850 shows 26 slaves in Utah, and the number is considerably increased since that time.

There is also a law in Utah, passed by the Territorial Legislature, to protect the rights of masters to such slaves as shall have voluntarily consented to be removed there. The statute is the mildest form of slave law. But it is slave law, in its proper sense. It recognizes ownership in human beings.

This is a proper performance of the terms on which Utah was made a Territory. But, it is nothing more. It is the pound of flesh, but no blood.

The South are not satisfied, because the peculiar institution is not sufficiently extended to secure itself there. Unless nursed, it would run out, as it has in the northern States. It is now scarcely more secure there than in New Jersey.

Health of Mackinac.

An effect has been made to deceive the public into the opinion that Mackinac was a proper resort for health, the present season, and to deny the existence of small pox there.

We mentioned some time since the existence of both small pox and cholera in Mackinac, having the authority of one of the oldest and most respectable residents of the place.

The same facts are since stated in the Detroit Free Press, Green Bay Advocate, and Milwaukee Sentinel, on the authority of travelers in search of health and pleasure, who have been at Mackinac.

We take the present occasion to say, on the authority of one of the most respectable public officers in Mackinac, that there were three weeks ago twelve cases of small pox in Mackinac, and that citizens and strangers were, to a great extent, exposed to the contagion. The disease yet continues.

Of cholera, there have been more cases in Mackinac than in any other town along the Lakes, in proportion to the population.

In saying this, we do not speak of cases taken sick at other places, and removed to Mackinac, but of sickness among residents.

We can show the names of more residents of Mackinac, in proportion to the population, who have died of cholera, than have been reported by the board of health of any city or village along the Lakes, from Buffalo to Chicago.

We do not wish to be understood, however, that Mackinac is naturally or essentially a sickly place. It possesses the natural advantages of a pure atmosphere, and a soil free from morass.

But the houses are mostly built of timbers on the ground, or posts set in the ground. Not a few have timbered cellars. Kitchen slops and all manner of filth remain on the surface, for want of any sewerage to carry them off.—The effect of so many causes of disease is more or less felt every year, in both summer complaints and typhoid fevers.

Add to these the unequalled dissipation of Mackinac, and whenever cholera does appear there it must be very virulent. Once in a place, though the dissipated are its natural fuel, those of the best habits are liable to be consumed by its progress.

So much does the progress of cholera depend on a dissipated and unclean population to prey upon, that it has extended to all the fisheries trading with Mackinac; whereas, not a single case has occurred here, or at any of our fisheries.

The extraordinary efforts recently made in Congress to extend slavery over Kansas and Nebraska, are likely to prove a dead failure.

So successful have been efforts to send on free emigrants to occupy and mould the institutions of these new Territories, that the danger of slavery extension in that direction is nearly past.

A little good is likely to grow out of this attempt at mischief.—These Territories would not have been opened to settlement, but for the anxiety to extend slavery in that direction. But when settled, as they will be speedily, they must be received into the Union, even though their Constitution prohibits slavery. A few such results, and ambitious politicians will propitiate freedom instead of slavery.

An appropriation was made by Congress, at its recent session, for the construction of a Light House at this Harbor.—It will not probably be built till next year.

Terrific Hail Storm.

A terrific hail storm recently occurred in Perry county, Ohio, running from north-west to south-east. An account says:—

“Masses of ice fell weighing from an ounce to three-quarters of a pound. One piece was measured, and found to be eight inches in circumference. Chickens, geese, pigs, calves, lambs, dogs, &c., were killed in numbers, and the fruit trees were literally stripped of their twigs and leaves; the fences are battered as if they had been pelted with stones; the corn was cut down, and wheat fields ruined. The dwelling houses were riddled of their glass, and in many instances the sash of the windows were broken to pieces.—Cattle exposed to it were so beaten by the hail, as to be almost incapable of moving the next day, and the horns were broken entirely off of several of the sheep.”

The Lottery Circular Nuisance.

Leary and Company, of Frederick City, Maryland, inform us that “the Consolidated Lotteries of Maryland are strictly legal, being in all respects State Lotteries, governed and controlled by State Officers, and drawn by the State Lottery Commissioner.” It was unnecessary for Mr. Leary to print this information and circulate it through the North. The infamy of his State is known. She does authorize Lotteries, and appoints public officers to superintend the cheating, swindling business of taking money from the pockets of her citizens and strangers, in exchange for the remotest chances of drawing prizes. It is well known that that State, as well as that slave-breeding arrangement Virginia, and the sleepy North Carolina, do legalize the most dangerous and insidious form of gambling. And it is a shame and a wrong.

However, if their citizens see fit to endure it, we can endure it. But there is one thing about it we won't endure. In the scarcity of money down South, the Lottery ticket sellers are after our people's money here. Printed circulars, telling in huge type, and exclamation points, of the great fortunes buyers of their tickets are sure to get—recommending the unfortunate with type that leans forward and type that leans backward, to persevere and keep investing—are issued by houses in Baltimore, all over the North. Local agents direct these through our Post Offices, or furnish their principals in Maryland with full lists of names to be inscribed upon their letter envelopes. These circulars are distributed in this city by thousands.

Now, do our citizens have any doubt about the influence of Lotteries, and the speculating in tickets? Is not the purchase money worse than thrown away? Does not the buyer run the risk of becoming dissatisfied with steady employment, and being allured to chance for a livelihood? Are not the associations of Lottery Offices introductory to gambling of every description, and to the indulgence of passions that are sure to demoralize and to destroy the cheated and driven victim?

The records of our courts, and the history and traditions of every community in the North here, furnish abundant evidence that the purchase of lottery tickets is ruinous to the estate and body and soul of man. It is hard enough for the best organized of us, to go along through life justly and decorously, so many temptations to error do beset the path. It is just about as much as a nervous, impulsive, passionate organization can do, to carry the man sober through the thick inducements to become drunken, that now girt all round the journey of life, from majority to old age.

Why pile up fresh trouble upon the already troubled? Man's natural proclivity to evil is sufficiently great. Why should any one devise and mature cunning plans, to stimulate new passions, and decoy into artificial vices? It is cruel—it is wicked. The circulation of these Lottery advertisements should be suppressed, by some statute as effective as that of Virginia, which inhibits Anti-Slavery papers from a place in the Government mails even, and hands them over to the flames.—Buff. Democracy.

Payments for the Islander.

J. T. Pendleton $1.75, to No. 91. James Hartley 2.00, to 96. S. M. Thatcher 50 cts., to 61. Jacob McNutt 1.00, to 71.

CLERICAL DRONES.

I feel ashamed for humanity when I see ministers strutting or sauntering about the streets with gloves on, such weather as this, and their poor, duped hearers toiling and sweating to support them. Why do they not go into the fields and gardens and do their share of labor? It is almost impossible in the farming portions of our State, to hire a field hand. So many have gone to California, and to sea, and into mechanical and mercantile business, that land lies uncultivated for want of hands.

Poor widows who own small farms, find it out of their power to hire men at any price; provisions of all kinds are up to the highest notch, and yet a swarm of miserable, idle, proud, haughty drones are constantly sauntering up and down the streets, and throughout the country, eating up the little food that the poor are able to obtain, and begging their change.—They are the very same characters spoken of in scripture, as clouds without water, dumb dogs, barking only for their bread; hirelings who preach for hire and divine for money, looking from their quarters for gain. They devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers. Are so mean they would take the last dime of the widow or orphan, to buy summer gloves or silver-mounted canes, or some fancy article for their indolent wives and daughters. They dress better than the people, must have better food, better schools for their children, better everything.

Now if they would work enough to raise only the potatoes they consume, instead of begging and living in idleness, they would somewhat lighten the burdens of those who are bowed to the earth with toil, and would do a good deal more for the gospel. The true gospel is not a lazy doctrine; is not a begging doctrine; and a minister could do more in spreading it by laboring six days in the week, and preaching one day, than he could in sauntering about the streets of a village, or traveling from house to house in the country.

The clergy often preach very zealously about the old, misconstrued, Mosaic command, to keep the seventh day holy; but who ever heard them preach about that more important command—"Six days shalt thou labor?" That would condemn themselves. Out upon the louts.—Pleasure Boat.

Ignorance, Sin, and Misery.

Wherever we turn our eyes, we behold miseries caused by the ignorance, the vices and sins of men. We occasionally see a cheerful countenance, and hear a ringing, joyous laugh; but follow to the secret chamber, and we behold tears instead of cheerfulness, and sighs instead of musical words.—In yonder splendid mansion, whose inmates are surrounded by luxuries, one would expect to find peace in combination with plenty. But the canker worm is there, consuming all quiet, and increasing care. The only son is a spendthrift, a sot, and is bringing down the grey hairs of his parents in sorrow to the grave.

If we turn to yonder hovel, we find pinching want. Hunger and nakedness are there; not that its inmates are idle or dissolute, but because they have been defrauded of their substance by the crafty, who, instead of enjoying the booty, are tormented with the stings of an injured conscience.

In yonder dwelling, pines a young woman, who but a few months since bloomed in all the beauty of youth and vigorous health. Through ignorance of the laws of life, she violated her organization, and consumption, that fell destroyer of millions, is feeding on her vitals, and will soon prepare her for the tomb.

Aye, the world is weeping, the land mourns, on account of ignorance and sin. Not only do the guilty suffer, but the innocent become the victims of the vicious, and mourn the effects of vices which not themselves, but others have committed. See that lonely widow, bathed in tears. Harmless and innocent in spirit, her heart has been wrung by others, till she is almost ready to weep tears of blood. In early youth she gave herself to one whom she regarded worthy—one whom she expected to guide her in happiness here, and to bliss above. The tempter met him; woe to him that giveth his neighbor strong drink; let him visit the grave of his victim; let him listen to the sobs, witness the tears, and the black despair of her who now pines over her blighted hopes.

Yea, ignorance, wrong, violence and misery are on every hand.—The world, that might have been a paradise, is more like a purgatory; the earth is stained with the blood of man, shed in deadly hate, or in grasping avarice, by his brother man. Men, women and children are held in bondage, on a level with brutes; babies are sold like pigs, to the highest bidder; and the virtue of females exchanged by their pious owners, to purchase church fiddles and communion wine, in which to drink health and long life to Christ, while scourging, robbing and selling his spirit in the hearts of his brethren; and the nation making the highest profession of godliness of any on earth, sanctions all this, and church members, who whine about a dying Savior and his love, stand ready with sword and gun to execute the laws which commit these wrongs. Reader, pause, think, then act. Cleanse the skirts of the brothers' and sisters' blood.—Boat.

TEXAS—GEN. HOUSTON.

A correspondent of the N. Y. Times, writing from Galveston, gives the following picture of the life and habits of Gen. Sam. Houston. Just at this time the sketch will interest many readers:—

Traveling the entire territory of Texas, excepting a small part of Eastern Texas, one hears but little about old Sam. but what is highly denunciatory, but when the votes are taken he don't lack friends. I would wager that he could hardly be elected constable, judging from hearing people talk. You know the result when the trial comes.—After all, there are few but what have a sort of pride in the estimation in which the hero of San Jacinto is held at a distance. He now lives at the town of Independence, twelve miles from the Rio Brazos, on a little farm, in a log cabin with but four rooms, plainly, even cheaply furnished.

When at home, sitting in the raw-hide chairs, he entertains like or with the ease of an old English gentleman, the plainness of a frontiers-man, retaining some of the habits of a Cherokee. He talks with great freedom of his traducers, professing to utterly despise their malignity. He has only enough slaves for servants. His table for breakfast has bacon, sometimes eggs, corn bread, hominy and coffee; dinner, ditto, with greens; supper, ditto, without greens.

I judge his wife an intellectual woman, a church member, with plain habits, and is a good mother. They are both frugal to a degree. They have six children, all in good health, five girls and one boy, not one of whom has had a shoe on their feet during the last winter, and they are hearty as Camanches. Mrs. H. manages the farm, and instructs the children.

Though having had no particular way of making money, and having been poor a few years ago, he has husbanded some $12,000, mostly from his pay and mileage as Senator to Congress. He lives a long way from the Capitol. There are scores of tales touching his credit and business transaction, which might effect other men—not "old Sam." He sports a huge mustache, drinks no whiskey, but continues his usual gallantries to the other sex. He reads his papers and writes his letters on a pine table in the open gallery.

An Unfaithful Steward.

Kate Lawrence, the daughter of Hon. Abbot Lawrence, has been presented with a most magnificent service of plate, by Geo. Peabody, of London. It is to be manufactured in London, at a cost of $12,000. Miss Lawrence is about to be married. So say the papers; and if the report be true, Geo. Peabody is a monstrous unfaithful steward of the Lord's property. The gift may find favor with corrupt men, but not with good men, nor with Him who commands us to clothe the naked and feed the hungry. In all probability the $12,000 was earned by half starved men, women and children, in England, and filched from them by Peabody and other men; and more likely than not some of them have starved or been carried to the pauper house for want of it.

A man who can give so proud and worthless a thing, $12,000 worth of dinner dishes, must be in possession of more gold than he ever earned or obtained by honest means. I say proud and worthless thing, because a woman who will accept of such a present, or keep and use it, at any rate, while so many of her countrywomen are starving, must indeed be proud and worthless. That sum of money would give forty poor widows a house each, worth $300; and no woman who is what she should be, would sit down to a table in her own family, covered with $12,000 worth of dishes, while her sisters were sweeping streets, carrying hods, toiling in the fields and dark coal mines, or dying for want of bread.

Twelve thousand dollars

would supply one thousand two hundred widows with one barrel of flour each, at ten dollars per barrel; or twelve thousand poor families with one bushel of meal each; yet while the women who earned this money, or a part of it, are dying of hunger or wearing themselves into untimely graves, Miss Lawrence can put it on her table for herself and friends to admire, worship. And how much happier is she than the girls of older times, who could spin and weave their own clothes, and eat bean porridge from wooden bowls, with pewter spoons? She is not half so happy.—Ex. paper.

"Conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity." How true! How few marry because they possess a pure and innocent love for each other. Some marry for money, some for a home, some for honor, fame or popularity, some solely from lust. Can such parents, destitute of love, be the parents of perfect children?

Is it any wonder that there is so little genuine love, friendship and truth in the world? If parents do not possess these virtues, can they impart them to their offspring? If they marry from selfish motives, how can their children be otherwise than selfish? God made man upright, but he has sought out many inventions, and most of these inventions have proved a curse to him.

No longer ago than when I was a boy, children possessed natural affection for their parents; were happiest at home. But now this is true of very few.—J. Hacker.

Feast of First Fruits.

The Feast of First Fruits will be held at Saint James, and at all places of public worship, on Friday, the 1st day of September, at which solemn sacrifices and public thanks will be offered to Almighty God for his countless blessings.

The electors of the Democratic party in the Counties of Emmet, Cheboygan and Grand Traverse, making the northern half of the Newagoy District, are requested to assemble at the Court House, in Saint James, the 1st day of September, to appoint a suitable delegate to represent them in the State Convention, to be held at Detroit Sept. 14th, for the nomination of State officers.

NEW VOLUME.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK!

The July number commences volume xlix. Subscribers can commence with the new volume; or, if they wish, with the January number, as we can always supply back numbers. One hundred pages of reading each month! the oldest magazine in America, and the only one especially devoted to the wants of the Ladies of America.

We commence this volume with the largest list, by many thousands, that we have had since we commenced the work. We have, in addition to our many excellent features, another one to add—

A LIFE OF COLUMBUS,

for youth, to run through the volume, to be followed by other works of a like character, American in their nature. We think this new feature will be appreciated by our subscribers. All our celebrated corps of contributors will favor us as usual with those writings that have made the "Lady's Book" so celebrated throughout our country as a literary standard.

STEEL ENGRAVINGS.

In this department, we have always stood unrivalled, and the same attention will still be paid to it to enable us to sustain our proud superiority. OUR FASHIONS, WITH DIAGRAMS. This department, which has given great satisfaction to our lady subscribers, will be continued.

DRAWING LESSONS FOR YOUTH.

We have at least one thousand designs still on hand to publish, therefore this department will be continued with unabated energy. Any child can learn drawing by these lessons.

PARIS, LONDON, AND PHILADELPHIA FASHIONS.

The only collected fashions upon which any reliance can be placed, received direct from Paris, and adapted to the taste of American ladies by our own "Fashion Editor," with full directions.

DRESSMAKING.—Our monthly description of dressmaking, with plans to cut by. None but the latest fashions are given. The directions are so plain, that every lady can be her own dressmaker. EMBROIDERY.—An infinite variety in every number.

DRESS PATTERNS.—Infants, and children's dresses, with descriptions how to make them. All kinds of crochet and netting work. New patterns for cloaks, mantles, talmas, collars, chemisettes, undersleeves—with full directions. Every new pattern of any portion of a lady's dress, appears first in the "Lady's Book," as we receive consignments from Paris every two weeks, having a resident Editor there. THE NURSERY.—This subject is treated upon frequently.

GODEY'S INVALUABLE RECEIPTS UPON EVERY SUBJECT.

Indispensable to every family, worth more than the whole cost of the book. Music.—Three dollars' worth is given every year. MODEL COTTAGES.—Cottage plans will be continued as usual. In the various numbers for 1854, will be found the newest designs for Bonnets, caps, cloaks, evening dresses, fancy articles, headdresses, hairdressing, robes de chambre, carriage dresses, brides' dresses, wreaths, mantillas, walking dresses, riding habits, and morning dresses. Dresses for Infants and Young Misses, Boys' Dresses, Caps and Cloaks of Fur in season, Patterns for Needlework of all kinds, and Patterns to Cut Dresses by, are given monthly.

Orders for any of the above articles, or for clothing for ladies and children, patterns for ditto, furniture, jewelry, head ornaments etc. etc., will be attended to by remitting to the publisher. Splendid steel line, and mezzotint engravings in every number. They are always to be found in Godey's "Godey's Lady's Book" contains precisely that for which you have to take at least three other magazines to get the same amount of information.

TERMS.

One copy one year, $3. Two copies one year, $5. Five copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $10. Eight copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making nine copies, $15. Eleven copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $20.

"Godey's Lady's Book" and "Arthur's Home Magazine" will both be sent one year for $3 50. Terms for six months—from July, 1854, to December, 1854, inclusive. We will furnish at the following rates for six months. Persons unacquainted with the "Lady's Book" can take it for that length of time, and renew their subscriptions or not, at their pleasure.

One copy six months, $1 50. Two copies six months, $2 50. Five copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $5. Eleven copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $10.

L. A. GODEY,

113 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

"The Lady's Book" is a periodical literary treasure to the fair sex of America. Every lady should be a subscriber—every citizen should see that it graces the table of his wife or daughter. It is a fountain of unexceptionably pure and instructive literature, and an unfailing source of the purest intellectual enjoyment.—Godey adopts for his motto "Excelsior!"—more elevated—and his unrivalled enterprise is vindicating its propriety.—Easton Clarion.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of Withdrawal of certain Lands in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, on the routes of the Oakland and Ottawa, and other proposed Rail Roads.

At the solicitation of a majority of the Delegation in Congress from the State of Michigan, the President of the United States, by his order bearing date the 1st of May, instant, has directed that the following named townships be withdrawn from sale or entry until further orders, except for valid pre-emption claims, to wit:—

IN THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.

In the district of lands subject to sale at Duncan:

North of the base line and west of the principal meridian, lower peninsula.

Townships thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range two.

Townships thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range three.

Townships thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range four.

Townships thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range five.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range six.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, and thirty-seven, of range seven.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, and thirty-four, of range eight.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, and thirty, of range ten.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, and twenty-nine, of ranges eleven, twelve, and thirteen.

By order of the President:

JOHN WILSON,
Commissioner.

BOOKS.

The following books are constantly for sale at this office:—

Ancient and Modern Michtimackinae, including an account of the controversy between Michtimackinae and the Mormons. Price, 25 cts.

A History of the Rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the discovery of Ancient American Records, &c., by George J. Adams. Price, 12 1/2 cts.

A Discussion of the Roman Catholic Religion, between Charles Rufferty and James J. Strang. Price, 10 cts.

The Diamond: being the Law of Prophetic Succession. Price, 5 cts.

Money may be sent by mail at our risk from any part of the United States for these books. We will return the books by mail, free of postage.

POETRY.

The Two Incendiaries.

BY REV. JOHN PIERPONT.

The fire alarm!—the cry of "fire!"
Swells the night wind, higher, higher,
"Touched by the lightning, every bell
Swings in its tower, the tale to tell,
Forth rush firemen, one and all,
At duty's or at danger's call,
The peril and the praise to share;
The engines rush, their torches flare;
The light of the devouring fire,
Reflected from the church's spire,
Piercing the clouds with ruddy glow,
Tells of the ruin wrought below.
Why sounds that midnight tocsin dread?
Why towers that column black and red,
That, leaning to the leeward, shows
The way that the destroyer goes!

Let your imagination stretch,
And you shall see a dastard wretch
Skulking away from human sight,
And wrapped up in the cloak of night,
Putting the lucifer match
Where he is sure the flame will catch,
That when the crowd is thither drawn
He may, before "the peep of dawn,"
With his fingers force a loan,
From other pockets to his own.

What are to him the larum bell,
The blazing roof, the fearful yell
Of horses roasting in their stalls,
Or firemen, crushed by falling walls?
What are to him the crash and din
Of slates and rafters falling in;
The shrieks of houseless women flying,
The feeble gasp of infants dying,
And the loud wailing of despair,
That loads the suffocating air?
What are all these things to him? His turn
By them is served—let others burn!
What is all this to him?—Why, sir,
He wakes up people, and they stir;
And if they catch the villain he Is tried, and hanged—or used to be;
Laws may, but justice does not alter;
He escapes, though he deserves the halter;
And were he doomed to it again,
The people would all say "Amen!"

And yet, how coolly let's inquire—
What does the villain set on fire?
Boards, shingles, timber—wood, hay, stubble,
A vapor, that is seen a day,
Or hour; "then vanishes away;"
That's all. The incendiary felon Does nothing more we need to tell on.

But he that fills his neighbor's cup,
With liquid fire, is burning up,
Not edifices framed of wood,
Not princely mansions, fair and good,
But that for which such mansions rise:
The heir apparent of the skies;
Man; who from heaven deserves his birth,
Man, God's vicegerent here on earth,
A house that only God can build,
A temple with his spirit filled;
A tenement indeed of clay,
That holds its dweller for his day;
A house that falls, in time, in dust,
As other earthly dwellings must;
But one that holds—if not burnt down,
The heir of an immortal crown.
But let the fire that fills the cup,
Be, in that house well kindled up,
And strength, and peace, and pure desire,
And mainly purpose feel the fire:
And Reason stumbles on and gropes, Darkling 'mid the smothered joys and hopes,
And faith, and every upward aim,
And heavenward impulse feeds the flame.
And Virtue falls, and Courage flags,
And Childhood roams in tattered rags,
And haggard Want makes earth his bed,
And homeless Hunger begs his bread,
And selfish Dullness mopes along,
And mirthless Mirth bawls out his song,
And frenzy stands with vacant stare,
And madness rends his matted hair,
And murder stabs his weeping bride,
Then dies himself, a suicide.

And yet, what is all this to him
Who fills up to his sparkling brim,
The glowing glass of liquid fire,
Drowned in whose poisonous depths, expire
Wit, wisdom, common manhood even,
All earthly joy; all hope of heaven;
"Aye," to his inmost self, says he,
"What is the consequence to me?
What is, to me, the depth of woe
That follows where my liquors flow,
So long as I the march can get,
So long as I the fire may set,
So long as I can have my way,
So long as those who drink can pay,
So long as they can serve my turn,
What is't to me how much they burn?"

These two incendiaries stand
Before you, neighbors, torch in hand;
Both ply their trade,—both fill their purses;
Tell me—which of the two, the worst is?

Horizontal Musings of a Loufer.

Leaves have their time to fall,
And so likewise have I;
The reason too's the same—it all Comes from our getting gay.
But here's the difference 'twixt leaves and me,
I fall "more harder" and more frequently.

"So poor Mrs. Prim is dead at last."

"Oh, yez, poor critter, she couldn't bear to hear how Dr. Squibs was sliding up to widder Wimple; so she jist fill'd wid grief and sunk under it—she did."

"Poor, unfort'nate creature! Pray, how does my new cap look?"

Utah and the Mormons.

UTAH lies North of 36, 30—till last week a hated line—and UTAH has not adopted the patriarchal institution of Slavery. These two circumstances are going to bear oppressively upon the Territory, when she asks to be admitted into the Union of the States.

There is a scoundrelly preparation of the public sentiment of the country now in progress, to exclude UTAH from the Union. An effort is making to excite a religious and a moral prejudice against the Mormons, which shall be sufficiently strong in connection with the Slavery Power, to continue them in their Territorial dependence, unless they will consent to incorporate the principles of Human Servitude into their constitutional law. We will do our share of the labor at heading and repelling this dishonorable effort.

The Mormons are alleged to be Polygamists, and it is thence argued that they are unfit to be members of a Christian and Republican Confederacy. Though our laws profess entire toleration of religious belief, the peculiarity of the Mormon Creed as a species of gross Hethanism, is also dwelt on, and tacked to the Polygamy as an additional incentive to Orthodox hate.

But very few of the Mormon men have more wives than one. The number of females in the Great Salt Lake Valley, is vastly less than that of males. The plurality of wives there, is an expensive and burdensome system, regulated by laws, and surrounded with difficulties. Only wealthy men can indulge in it, and but a very small portion of these, can or do avail themselves of this most afflict-ive privilege. Here where laws punish biga-my, men frequently marry two, three, four, five women, though they have the sense not to undertake to live with them all at once.—
In UTAH where the laws sanction a plurality of wives, the force of habit, and the influence of education will for ever confine the vast majority of men to one woman as marriage connection. Polygamy amongst the Mormons practically amounts to nothing. It is a fully recognized principle, but only a partially exercised right. And that right will speedily drop into desuetude. There are Newspapers in the Salt Lake Valley, a thorough system of Public Instruction in force, and the Mormons are begirt on all sides by an enlightened American population. How can Polygamy or any other legally constituted wrong, endure against such influences?

It is the Slavery Propagandists who excite this clamor against the Mormons. It lies well in the mouths of these fellows to preach of the unchristian and demoralizing tendency of polygamy! Why, what is Slavery in its relations between the sexes, but a wide spread, vast system of concubinage, enforced by the master—enforced for his own gratification, and enforced for his own profit? Slavery repudiates and scorns at the rights and obligations of marriage. It compels connexions between the slaves. It notoriously violates every right of modesty and virtue, as it violates the dictates of humanity, in full force and vigor in every other quarter of the globe—where polygamy or concubinage exist. The Slave-holder sells his children, and sells the companion of his pleasures! When the Mormons have reached this pitch of villainy, it will be time for the Slavery Propagandists to carp at their characters.

The people of the Salt Lake Valley have been grossly abused and misrepresented.—
They were drove out of Missouri, by an ignorant and brutal a population as disgraces this continent. Whatever Eastern man owned land in the neighborhood of Hancock county, in Illinois, in the year 1842, or sold goods there, knows to his cost the unprincipled and ravenous character of the people that surrounded the Mormons in their new home at Nauvoo.—
They were a doomed people from the outset.
Had they been a colony of angels, they could not have stayed there. Fleeing before the murderous rifle, abandoning their property, and braving the rigors of a wintry desert,
these much-abused Mormons crossed the Mississippi upon ice in February, 1846, and began their march of exile to the Valley of the Great Salt Lake. They went there poor—the landsharks and thieves of Illinois, having literally peeled them. Now they are rich.—
They went there a flying band of fugitives.—
They have created a State, and established a model civil society. There is no example in the history of man, of such rapid colonization of a wilderness into a rich, well constituted, and moral State, as has been furnished by the Mormons in the Salt Lake Valley. The evidence in proof of this is abundant, and of the highest character. Captain STANBURY, of the Corps of United States Topographical Engineers, who wintered among the Mormons, while prosecuting a Government Survey of the Valley, speaks of them as follows:—

"The revenue of the new State seemed to partake of the same double character, the treasures of the church being freely devoted, when necessary, to the promotion of the temporal prosperity of the body politic. These are derived from a system of tithing, similar to that of the ancient Israelites. Each person, upon profession of his faith, and consequent reception into the bosom of the church is required to pay into the treasury of the Lord one-tenth of all that he possesses; after which he pays a tenth of the yearly increase of his goods; and in addition contributes one-tenth of his time which is devoted to labor on the public works, such as roads, bridges, irrigating canals or such other objects as the authorities may direct. The whole amount thus collected goes into the coffers of the church, and is exacted only from its members. A tax is also laid upon property as with us, which is levied upon all, both saint and gentile, and which constitutes the revenue of the civil government. All goods brought into the city pay as the price of a licence, a duty of one per cent, except spirituous liquors, for which one-half of the price at which they are sold is demanded;

the object of this last impost being avowedly to discourage the introduction of that article among them. It has, indeed, operated to a great extent as a prohibition, the importer to save himself from loss, having to double the price at which he could otherwise have afforded to sell. The result of this policy was, when we were there, was to bring up the price of brandy to twelve dollars a gallon, of which the authorities took six; and of whiskey to eight dollars, of which they collected four.—
The circulating medium is principally gold of their own coinage, and such foreign gold as is brought in by converts from Europe.

Notwithstanding this heavy, and as it would be to us, insupportable burthen upon industry and enterprise, nothing can exceed the appearance of prosperity, peaceful harmony, and cheerful contentment that pervaded the whole community. Ever since the first year of privation, provisions have been abundant, and want of the necessaries and even the comforts of life is a thing unknown. A design was at one time entertained (more, I believe, as a prospective measure than any thing else,) to set apart a fund for the purpose of erecting a poorhouse; but after strict inquiry, it was found that there was in the whole population but two persons who could be considered as objects of public charity, and the plan was consequently abandoned.

This happy external state of universally diffused prosperity is commented on by themselves, as an evidence of the smiles of Heaven, and of the special favor of the Deity. But I think it may be most clearly accounted for in the admirable discipline and ready obedience of a large body of industrious and intelligent men, and in the wise counsel of prudent and sagacious leaders producing a oneness and sameness of action, the result of which has astonished even those by whom it has been effected. The happy consequences of this system of mental and well directed action, under one leading and controlling mind, is most prominently apparent in the erection of public buildings, opening of roads, the construction of bridges, and the preparation of the country for the speedy occupation of a large and rapidly growing population, shortly to be further augmented by an emigration now on their way from almost every country in Europe.

Upon the personal character of the leader of this singular people, it may not perhaps be proper for me to comment in a communication like the present. I may nevertheless, be pardoned for saying, that to me, president Young appeared to be a man of clear, sound sense, fully alive to the good name and interests of the people over which he presides, sensitively jealous of the least attempt to undervalue or misrepresent them and indefatigable in devising ways and means for their moral mental and physical elevation. He appeared to possess the unlimited personal and official confidence of his people; while both he and his two counselors forming the Presidency of the Church, seemed to have but one object in view, the prosperity and peace of the society over which they preside.

In their dealings with the crowds of emigrants that pass through their city, the Mormons were ever fair, upright, taking no advantage of the necessitous conditions of many, if not most of them. They sold them such provisions as they could spare at moderate prices, and such as they themselves paid in their dealing with each other. In the whole of our intercourse with them which lasted rather more than a year, I cannot refer to a single instance of fraud or extortion to which any of the party was subjected, and I strongly incline to the opinion that the charges which have been published against them in this respect, arose either from interested misrepresentation, or erroneous information. I certainly never experienced any thing like it in my own case, nor did I witness or hear of any instance of it in the case of others, while I resided among them. Too many that pass through their settlement, were disposed to disregard their claim to the land they occupied, to ridicule the municipal regulation of their city, and to trespass wanton upon their rights. Such offenders were promptly arrested by the authorities, made to pay a fine, and in some instances were imprisoned or made to labor on the public works, a punishment richly merited, and which would have been inflicted upon them in any civilized community. In short, these people presented the appearance of a quiet, orderly, industrious and well organized society, as much so as one would meet with in any city of the Union, having the rights of personal property as well defined and as religiously respected as with ourselves; nothing being further from their faith or practice than the spirit of Communism, which has been most erroneously supposed to prevail amongst them."

Compare these people with the brigands of Erie, compare UTAH with Pennsylvania, with Texas and Mississippi, compare President Young "indefatigable in devising ways and means for the moral, mental and physical elevation" of the citizens of UTAH, with President Pierce indefatigable in general mischief, and then say if any question about the admission of UTAH into the Union, should be permitted to rise—particularly when that question is pushed upon us, from the debt-repudicating, slavery-propagating and generally scoundrelly States of Texas and Mississippi; and from the men who have just repealed the Missouri Compromise, and deliver over Kansas and Nebraska to Slave Breeding.—Buff.

Democracy.

Prince Murat's Defence.

Prince Murat, one of the Bonaparte family, lived near Bordertown, in New Jersey, and being in a false position among republicans, the lower class of his neighbors, when employed by him, took great pains to let him know that every one could do just as they pleased with him.

Murat was a very good-natured man, of enormous size, some six feet two, and stout proportion, and accustomed to severe exercise:
He would shoot all day in a monstrous pair of boots, going through morasses that would appear any sportsman but himself and Dr. De-weese, who used often to shoot with him.

The Prince had employed a worthless fellow to groom his horses. One day he very civilly requested him, as was his constant custom, for he was very polite, to do something.
The man flatly refused, and was so very insolent that Murat, with his awful boot, suddenly helped him to the middle of a barn-yard pool.
As a matter of course, the fellow sued him for assault and battery, confidentially anticipating a handsome sum of damages. The court-room was filled with a very select audience, including many ladies; for Murat was highly esteemed for his elegant manners and commanding person. It was understood that he was to plead his own case, and as he was extremely acute and quite learned, great sport was anticipated. The fellow, too, was provided with killing evidence, as was supposed, and Murat, it seemed, had little to hope for.

On examination he was confident of having received as many as six violent kicks from Murat, and, in short, of having been grievously afflicted and misused. Murat demanded that he should show the precise spot where the bodily injury was inflicted; he endeavored to evade the demand, but the Prince insisted;
he accordingly indicated the very lowest possible part of the spine, and again and again asserted that Murat kicked him six times.—
Here the defence rested, and the prosecuting attorney made a powerful appeal, filled with
"the sacred rights of the meanest citizen,"
"monarchical oppression," "starspangled banner," &c., &c., but not a word of the vulgar insolence nor dishonesty of the laborer, who always demands his full pay whether a thief and a liar or as indolent as a sloth. Mu-rat addressed the jury in the following conclusive style, which we cordially recommend to our doctors, lawyers, jurymen, for its convincing use of anatomical knowledge and its humor.

Bowing profoundly to the bench and jury-box, which happened both to be filled with excellent common sense: "My lord, do judge, and gentlemen of do jury, dere has been great efforts and much troubles to make everybody believe me a very bad man; but dat is no consequence. De man tells you I kick him six times! six times! so low down as possible.
I very sorry of de necessity to make him show how low down it vas, but I could not help it.
Now, my lord, and gentlemen of do jury, you see dis part of de human skeleton, (taking from the enormous pocket of his hunting-coat a human pelvis with the os coccygis complete and articulated with wires;) here are de bones; dere leetle bones vot you see here (shaking them to the jury like the end of a rattlesnake's tail,) dere leetle bones are in de very place vot de tail of de animal shall grow; dat is to say, if de man who sue me vere to be a veritable jack—vot you call it—ah! jack-horse, and not only a very much resemble dat animal, vy you see dere leetle bones, it dey vere long enough, 'ould be his tail!" The court was convulsed with laughter, and the Prince being extremely acute and knowing he had the best of it, drew his speech to an end by stretching out his enormous leg, armed with his shooting boot up to his knee, and clapping his hand on his massive thigh so that it resounded through the court-room, exclaimed, "My lord, and gentlemen, how absurd to say I could give him even von kick vid dat, and not break all to pieces his tail!" It was some time before the judge could gather enough dignity to sum up, when the fellow got six cents damages, and the Prince three cheers.

E. H. DIXON, M. D.

A Cure for Hydrophobia.

The infallibility of the following remedy is certified to by Wm. Hoffman, Esq., of Pennsylvania. Let it be remembered:—
Take of the root of elecampane one ounce and a half, cut it fine, then boil it in one pint of new milk down to half a pint, take this three mornings, fasting, and eat no food till four o'clock in the afternoon. It should be taken every other morning; the two last doses must weigh two ounces each. This remedy will have the desired effect if taken any time within twenty-four hours after the accident.

We would not advise any one to get "bit"
just to try the above receipt.

"Lawyer's Houses are said to be built with fools money. People who have had a taste of the Law can judge of the truth of the statement.

Chip Basket.

"Judge, you say that if I punch a man, even in fun, he can take me up for assault and battery?"

"Yes, sir, I said that, and what I said I se-peat. If you punch a man, you are guilty of a breach of the peace, and can be arrested for it."

"Ain't there no exceptions?"

"No, sir; no exceptions whatever."

"Judge, I think you are mistaken. Suppose, for instance, I should brandy-punch him;
then what?"

"No levity in court, sir! Sheriff, expose this man to the atmosphere. Call the next case."

Stole His own Boots!—An old-fashioned wealthy codger, was never known to have anything in the line of new apparel but once, then he was going on a journey, and had to purchase a new pair of boots. The stage left before day, and so he got ready and went to the hotel to stop for the night. Among the whole row of boots, in the morning, he could not find the old familiar pair. He had forgotten the new ones—he hunted and hunted in vain.—
The stage was ready, and so he looked carefully around to see that he was not observed, put on a nice pair that fitted him, called the waiter and told him the circumstances, giving him a V for the owner of the boots when he should call for them. The owner never called; the old gent had bought his own boots.

The New Haven Journal is answerable for the following:—

"The Bloomer costume brings advantages sometimes to the sterner sex. One of our exchanges tells a story of a husband and wife, who in traveling in haste through the woods, met with a melancholly accident, which is thus recorded:—

And while retreating through the woods,

And through the tangled fern,

He tore his must n't-mention 'ems,

And had to put on hern!"

A Happy Man.—We have read of an Eastern caliph who was sorely afflicted with ennui, and for relief was advised to exchange shirts with a man that was perfectly happy. After a long and vexatious search he found such a person, but to the caliph's chagrin was informed that the happy fellow had no shirt!

Pomposity.—Dentist, (looking wise and speaking with careful accent,) "Well, navigator of the seas, which is the tooth you wish extracted? Is it a molar or an incisor?" Jack, throwing overboard his quid, (and speaking tartly,) "it is in the second tier, star board side, near the hatches. Bear a hand, you land lubber, and heave away, for it is nipping my jaw like a sea turtle."

The dentist composed himself to his task.

Law is a country dance—people are led up and down in it till they are fairly tired out.— Law is like a book of surgery—there are a great many terrible cases in it. It is like physic too—they take the least of it are best off. It is like a scolding wife—very bad when it follows us. Law is like a new fashion—people are bewitched to get into it; "and like bad weather," most people are glad to get out of it.

Men are taught sciences—they are not taught science. Not one man in a hundred knows what is evidence; not one in a thousand restrains the errant impulse of his thought within the limits of evidence. Thus, not being aware of the source of fallacy, or the direct bearing of evidence, what wonder if we are not sufficiently on our guard.—Leader.

Washington Irving is a very great man and not calculated to shine or create a sensation on any public occasions—such as public dinners, &c. This feature was admirably described by Moore, who described him as "a very poor lion, but a capital domestic animal."

Good.—Rev. J. A. James said at a late Congregational Convention in England: "We need a better world; and we need a better ministry to make a better church."

The love of country produces good manners, and good manners also a love of country. The less we satisfy our particular passions the more we love our general.—Montesquieu.

He who learns the rules of wisdom, without conforming to them in his life, is like a man who labored in his fields, but did not sow.— Persian Poet.

Peace shows itself more in patience than in judgment; so it is better to be unjustly accused than to accuse others, even with justice.
—Saint Martins.

A German professor had collected a valuable cabinet of curiosities, which he highly prized. One morning a friend came to tell him of a very unpleasant circumstance—that he had seen a man get up a ladder into the professor's house.

"Into which window?" cried the philosopher.

"I am very sorry to say," replied the friend,
"it was your daughter's."

"Oh, man!" said the other, "you almost frightened me; I thought he had been into the cabinet!"

"Sir, I want to speak to you," said a lady to a clergyman who was burying a corpse.
"Please wait, madam, till I have done."
"No, sir, I must speak to you immediately."
"Well, then, what is the matter?" "Why, sir, you are going to bury a man who died with the small-pox, near my poor husband who never had it!"

Truth is a rock of strength sufficient to bear the universe; error, a mire in which bodies sink in proportion to their gravity.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 14.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, AUG. 24, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 61.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$9.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter, the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

CHARACTER.

We have selected the above caption, in order to call attention to the charge that is so frequently urged against the Latter Day Saints. It is said by many, both in high and low places, that the doctrines of the Latter Day Saints are not so objectionable in the abstract, but their character is not praiseworthy—but even immoral, impure, and unrighteous. Let us then join issue, and meet the charge fairly and honorably.

We do not shrink from a fair and rigid trial. We even court investigation, and boldly challenge a comparison with any other body of people of the same magnitude and notoriety, either in ancient or modern times. The difficulty is, that while our enemies prefer many heinous charges against us, they rarely venture to appear in defence of their charges. In the first place, it does not furnish the least presumption that our character is bad, because that "all manner of evil is said against us," for the same has been said against Jesus Christ and the whole body of private believers.

It is well known that Jesus Christ was ostensibly put to death for his notorious crimes; and most of the prophets were slain for alleged crimes which were said to be so black and notorious as to render them unfit to live on the earth. But none of us now believe that these charges were true: on the contrary, we believe them to have been malicious, false and damnable wicked.

Mere accusations, then, are not sufficient to justify the shadow of a decision against us.—Some proof must be furnished, or we shall never plead guilty. If it is a crime to be at direct, settled and immutable variance with the contradictory system of modern christianity, then we are guilty, and never expect to be penitent while eternity endures. If it is good, and pure, and virtuous fully to believe, and practically to concur with, all the revelations that ever came from the only true and living God, that made the sea and dry land, then we are a good, and pure, and virtuous people.

If keeping the commandments of God with all sincerity, and diligence, and sacrifice, entitles us to a good, and unsullied character, then we claim a good character, in defiance of all proof to the contrary. We claim that no people of any age of the world ever kept the commandments of God more faithfully, under circumstances as trying and difficult.

And while it is utterly impossible for any man to show up any manifest discrepancy between the doctrines and ordinances of the Latter Day Saints, and the doctrines and ordinances of the Primitive Saints, it is equally impossible to show that the former have not maintained these doctrines and ordinances more faithfully than any other people on the face of the whole earth.

They have maintained them by preaching the word, without purse or scrip, on every continent, and many islands of the sea. They have also done it by the sacrifice of their homes and the allurements of business, and the ties of kindred and friendship. They have been driven from country to country by persecution, over a distance of territory unparalleled in the records of any other persecuted people.

That unity which Jesus sent gifts from heaven to secure has been maintained by them to the astonishment of even their enemies. Governor Thomas Ford once avowed to the writer, that he considered the unity of the Saints so great and indissoluble as to render them formidably powerful in the midst of any other people. And the message of the same governor to the State Legislature of Illinois, contains a positive exculpation of their character. Strange that the American governor, acting under the national motto of E pluribus unum, "all as one," should decry so cardinal a virtue. But the sweet is called bitter, and virtue, vice; and union is discarded for division.

The only true standard of character is conformity to the revealed will of God. When men compare themselves among themselves they are not wise.—It is only when they compare their faith and conduct with the revelations of God that they are wise. If men speak not according to this standard, there is no light in them, "to the law and the testimony." Before men can successfully traduce and impeach the character of the Latter Day Saints, they have to demolish the only Bible standard of character.

Having consigned to oblivion the great and distinguishing doctrines and ordinances of Christ and the Apostles through their traditions, they then begin to make war upon the Saints, and say, there goes a deluded, unrighteous and immoral Latter Day Saint. But if the Saints shall do the will of God, who shall lay anything to their charge? Is it not enough that God shall justify them? Let him that is without sin cast the first stone.

But let us look around a moment and see who are our accusers, and what is the attitude they occupy. Our accusers are indeed the devoted advocates of modern christianity; but are they any better for all this?—No, by no means. Modern christianity is a libel on the Bible. It strips the Bible of all that makes it savory to the souls of men, for this world and the next. Many of the abettors of christianity do this, like Paul, ignorantly in unbelief.

But the evil of modern christianity is not lessened on account of their unbelief. The friends of modern christianity are the last people that should talk against the character of the Latter Day Saints; but still they talk the most, and are the most virulent opposers. Of all people that can be named on the footstool, they have the least claim to morality, righteousness or purity of character.

Be patient, and I will show you wherein they do more harm than any other people, the skeptic not excepted; and a more awful retribution awaits them than any other people, the heathen not excepted. I write advisedly—I know what I say.—My reasons for such an imputation on their character are, because they make the word of God of none effect. When God says that certain miraculous signs shall follow believers, they, with no higher authority than the opinions of men, contradict and set aside the same. When God makes solemn and unqualified promise that he will give the Holy Ghost to all whom he calls to repentance and salvation, they, by the same mere power of opinion, flatly and blasphemously deny—saying, that that supernatural Holy Ghost alluded to is not promised, neither is it needed.

God says that baptism is for the remission of sins. Many, with no authority but opinion, make this saying of no effect, and say, baptism cannot remit sins; some say they know their sins were remitted before they were baptized—thereby they charge the all-wise God with folly.

God says, "except a man be born of the water and the spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God;" but christian coxcombs stand up and give him the lie: and some say the water is not needed—and the great mass of christians say the supernatural spirit is not needed. But God has no spirit, but a supernatural spirit; and if a man is not born of a supernatural spirit, which gives revelation of things past, present and future, he is not born of God's spirit; and if he is not born of God's spirit, he is a child of the devil, and in his sins; and if he dies in his sins, where Christ is he cannot come.

God says that he has set in the church apostles and prophets, and for a specific object which has never yet been accomplished, neither will be until the last Saint has been born into the kingdom, and been perfected like unto Jesus Christ; but modern christians say, in the face of all this, they are not needed.—Oh, shameful contempt of the authorities that God has put in his church.

God has said that little children are members of the kingdom of heaven; modern christians, casting contempt upon their citizenship, and neutralizing the force of God's word, have the temerity and impudence to sprinkle little children for baptism, thereby showing them forth in the character of sinners that have need of being born of the water. As well might they baptize the angels that come down from glory, as little innocent children that know not good from evil; but the same children, when they grow up and transgress the laws of God, and God commands such universally to repent, the same they refuse to baptize.

God has instituted the ordinance of healing, by anointing with oil and laying on hands of elders; but they have discarded this ordinance, and sought out many medical inventions. Millions of the human family have not lived out half their days, as a consequence. Awful guilt.—The blood of millions will be found on their garments.

God has explicitly shown, in the person of his Son, what kind of being he is—declaring that Christ is the brightness of his glory, and express image of his person; but they have made the word of God of none effect, by calling him a spirit, that hath neither body, parts nor passions—thereby the true God is done away, and a mere invention is substituted in his stead. Many other such like things, too numerous to mention, has modern christianity done.

Now, who can think of these things, and entertain for a moment the baseless claim which modern christianity sets up to righteousness, morality and purity? From the scriptures are supposed to be drawn the highest and strongest incentives to sound morality and righteousness; but modern christianity has done away the great and fundamental truths of scripture, as we have shown above; apostles and prophets are done away; a supernatural call to the priesthood is done away; the supernatural gifts of healing, tongues, interpretation, prophesying, &c., which the apostolic church was never without, are done away; revelations, visions, dreams, and the supernatural inspiration of the Holy Ghost, which the primitive church could not do without, are done away; the miraculous signs that follow believers, and by which they know that they are the true believers and the true kingdom of Christ, are done away; the ministry of angels, another very important distinguishing feature of the primitive dispensations, are done away. Thus we see that every exhibition of the supernatural power of God is done away.—The alarming crisis has fully arrived when men deny the power of God.

But take away the supernatural power of God from religion, and you have nothing but the natural power left; or, in other words, the human family is adrift from their only safe moorings, with no guide but human wisdom, which is folly with God.—The ancient revelations have no power to baptize, or to minister in the place of angels, or to anoint with oil and lay on hands for healing. However much good the scriptures did in the day when they were communicated from heaven, no man now can dispense with the gift of the Holy Ghost any better for all that; neither can he do without the ministry of angels any better for it; neither is it possible to get the remission of sins without an order of priesthood endowed with supernatural gifts, to administer baptism.

Here we make a solemn pause and ask, what, Oh what, must be the character of those who so unsparingly and continuously make the word of God of none effect? What must be the feelings of a sin-avenging God to see his own word parried, perverted, and made of no effect in accomplishing that salvation to which he has sent it? The visits of his holy angels are derided as much as they ever were by the Sodomites. The visions and power of the Holy Ghost are sneered at as much as they were on the day of pentecost.

The only officers of the church by which the work of the ministry can be commenced or carried on, or by which the Saints can be brought to unity, and the body of believers be edified, are rejected, and their aid arrogantly disclaimed. Blush for thy character, Oh thou advocate of modern christianity. Thou art robbing the souls of men of the most precious blessing ever revealed to man. Thou art taking from men the proffered power of God—the healing mercy of heaven—the light of immediate revelation—the communion of angels in a day of famine, and war, and sore distress.

Thou art substituting a false and strange God in the place of the true and living God. And in the midst of all thy rebellion against God, and angels, and apostles, and prophets, and contempt of the supernatural gifts of God, thou hast the hard hood to call thyself righteous and moral, and hast need of nothing! Whereas thou art cherishing, aiding, and abetting an apostasy, whose foundation was attained with the blood of apostles.—Thou art taking from the word of God its most sacred powers, officers, and ordinances, and abrogating its most solemn and precious covenants, that have been purchased with the blood of Christ. Thou hast so mutilated and garbled the ancient gospel, for more than seventeen hundred years, and darkened the pathway to heaven, by commentaries and the precepts of men, that many generations have lived and perished under thy deceivings without God in the world.

Many ages have witnessed the cries of countless millions that have died in your blind and obstinate delusion. In the absence of apostles, and spiritual and supernatural gifts, thou hast proudly boasted of thy moral purity. Thou hast compared thyself with the heathen, and haughtily thanked God that thou art not like the wicked heathen. But stop a moment. Compare Glasgow, or London, or Rome, the local point and strength of modern christianity, with Pekin, or any large pagan city, and then see how the result stands. In the former, witness the pitiful beggary, filth, and demoniac drunkenness of not a few, but rather swarms of immortal beings, basking in the sunshine of modern christianity, in dark cellars, lanes, and avenues, where there is not a window above ground to lighten the gloom that follows their obscene revelings, or alleviate the distress of their haggard penury! Witness the maimed heads and black eyes resulting from nocturnal broils; and the tattered nudity of little children (for of such is the kingdom of heaven) trained up to beggary, thieving, and obscenities too gross to be mentioned.

See that female, the primrose of creation, and "the glory of man," gathering the very horse manure that falls in the streets for a livelihood. Look at this picture, thou boaster of modern christianity, and find a parallel case of abominable degradation in idolatrous Pekin if you can. Next, walk above ground and pass through the streets of the great christian city, enter the spirit vaults and gin shops, and see humanity outraged in features; and reason and passion galloping across lots, as in a steeple chase, and the name of your strange God bandied about like a foot-ball.

At night a stranger would think as he passed the streets that all sexual virtue was the most notorious article of merchandise. Next, go to the exchange and place of merchandise where the business of buying and selling is transacted.—There you will witness duplicity, and oily smoothness, and honied flattery, artfully mingled with the most deceptive bargains compared with which pagans are mere novices. From thence go to courts and halls of state, and there the spirit of invasion, oppression, conquest, and bloody ambition are more rife than ever known in China.

Again, compare the unity of the disciples of the Shaster with that of the professed christians of England, and the balance is greatly in favor of the former. Peace reigns more uninterruptedly (so far as our knowledge extends,) among the former than among the latter.—And as to the stability and strength of christian governments and institutions, they are like vessels at sea, subject to continual storms and tempests—pronounced unseaworthy, dismasted, sunk, wrecked, or captured by pirates. And to crown the climax of this most ridiculous farce, the priests of modern christianity stretch out their hands with surplised gravity and Jehuic zeal, to arrest this fearful tendency to universal desolation and ruin.—And how do they do it?

They seek to do it with a half done-away bible, and a self-made modernized priesthood. Struggling like a horse disabled in two legs, without supernatural powers, to carry burthens that angels would shrink from, and the Son of God himself could not perform without the constant intervention and aid of the Almighty Father, they multiply seminaries and wax hot in theological combats, flutter with alarm, and call the world into convention in order to bring about an "evangelical union."—From the days of Luther and Knox down to Ann Lee and the Ranters, there have been Reformers and Schismatics enough to make even Satan ashamed of a half done-away bible, and a half done-away God. Can modern priests reform the people or unite them with a half done-away bible and a natural Holy Ghost, and with no better angels than Cambridge and Andover Parsons? Shame! shame! Can they lay claim to character who rob God of his attributes, and do away his word by the precepts of men?

You might as well steer and stop locomotives when breakmen are done away with, and fire cannon to do execution without powder, as to think of guiding the ship of salvation without apostles, or of checking the wickedness of mankind, without the supernatural light and power of God! The character of modern christianity is abominable every where. The very heathens are ashamed of her vices, and dread to come in contact with her polluted breath.—Her drunkenness and debaucheries—her thievings and cheatings—her robberies and wars—her blasphemies of God and his kingdom, have reached the ears of Jehovah. When a few more of the servants of God have sealed their testimony with their blood, the shame of her nakedness will not only be made manifest, but she will be burned with fire.—Millennial Star.

Stay Away from the City.

Young men in the country who look with longing eyes upon a city life, will do well to ponder upon the facts given below by the editor of the New York Sunday Times. A young man of Danbury, Ct., came to New York in search of employment as a clerk or book-keeper, but not being able to find a situation, after weeks of fruitless endeavor, wrote to the Times man for advice what to do. The reply will suit the meridian of every large city in the Union:—

There are hundreds of young men in the city waiting, Micawber-like, for something to "turn up," and the majority of them will wait until their resources are all exhausted, when they will be forced to return to their homes, poorer but wiser men. This is no place for country-bred youths, and it is time they found it out. Every profession and business here is overcrowded, and where one person does well, nine others barely make a living. A young man from the country has heavy odds against him.

He is surrounded by all the vices peculiar to large cities, and, if he escape the Sycilla of poverty, he stands a pretty good chance of being wrecked upon the Charybdis temptation. New York is not what it seems to a new comer. One would suppose, on seeing the immense amount of business transacted here, that all could find something to do; but that idea is obtained by looking at the surface of affairs, and not at the substrata. There is an immense number of young men whose parents reside in the city, and they can afford to take less salaries than those who are compelled to pay the highest prices at present charged for board. There are various other considerations too, which should weigh in a calm review of the reasons both for and against coming to New York, that will more or less readily suggest themselves to all.

If we could reach every young man who contemplates removing to the city, we would say, "Stay away as long as you can find anything to do elsewhere." We advise our correspondent to pack up his clothes, and, without more delay than a good locomotive will cause, get back to the pleasant village of Danbury. He can probably make a living there, which is more than he can hope to do here, unless he has extraordinary good luck.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, AUG. 24, 1854.

TRADE WITH MACKINAC.

Since the people of Mackinac have, by a long course of criminal conduct, destroyed the trade between that place and the Beaver Islands, they begin to be conscious of the extent of the injury they have done themselves, and are anxious in some degree to repair it.

Last spring Mr. Scott, a merchant of that place, engaged in the fishing trade, applied to Mr. Strang for permission to send ten boats and the usual complement of men, to fish on Big Beaver—a permission which Mr. Strang could no more give or refuse than any other citizen—and offered to pay one hundred dollars for the privilege.

This was sufficiently ridiculous; but to give it the infamy of the true Mackinac stamp, Mr. Scott asked in return that Mr. Strang should exempt his fishermen from legal prosecution and private revenge, for any violation of law, for any past injury done to the Mormons; as though a Mormon Prophet could dispense the laws of the State, and suspend the due course of legal administration, or would debase himself to the infamy of making merchandise of revenge, and bartering in the vile passions of lawless men.

This proposition was rejected with the indignation it deserved, and Mr. Scott went away wondering why Mr. Strang was not willing to make $100, when it came so easy. A man who was never scrupulous as to his ways and means, can never understand why another should be.

Since Scott's failure, Mr. Avery has tried his hand at opening trade here. He has got himself in charge of the little Propeller Stockman, to run in the fishing trade. As she necessarily passes here on her regular trips, it is a matter of much interest with him to wedge in and get a little business here.—The additional expense will be next to nothing, and what business he can get here is clear gain.

Avery professes to be a very good friend to the Mormons, and anxious to keep up intercourse with them, on the same terms as other good citizens.

This we know to be all humbug; a mere false pretense.—Avery has been engaged, heart, soul and purse, in the persecution of the Mormons of Beaver Island from the beginning.

There has been no mean act done, no wickedness concocted against us, but he has had a share in it.

Avery was concerned with O'Malley and Granger in getting up Granger's foray against the Mormons in 1851, in which a large body of armed and drunken Irish and Indians were quartered on Beaver Island for months, going about threatening and abusing peaceable inhabitants, plundering them of their property in open daylight, and driving women from their homes with the fear of debauchery, and children with the threat of death.

When, the same year, a fund was raised and offered as a reward to any one who would murder Mr. Strang, Avery contributed to the fund, and did his share of the wind work in persuading the quarrelsome Irish and ignorant French half breeds that the killing would be lawful, because the Sheriff offered the reward. His position as an officer of the United States gave importance to his opinions of the legality of such a homicide.

These measures failing to drive out the Mormons, Avery joined with others in Mackinac in getting up those famous prosecutions against us, which cost the United States $30,000, in an attempt to convict a whole community of crimes punishable with perpetual imprisonment and death, which they had neither committed or dreamed of; deliberately going about the work of drumming up witnesses to swear to prepared lies, without one word of truth to build them on, for the purpose of delivering over Mr. Strang and numerous others, some to judicial murder, and others to perpetual imprisonment; all for no greater end than the monopoly of the fishing business, and the destruction of a rival to the trade of Mackinac.

When Mr. Burke, keeper of the Isle le Galet Light House, carelessly left the government boat without fastening, so that it drifted off with two or three hundred dollars worth of property, Avery, as Collector, reported and circulated the story from Buffalo to Chicago that the Mormons had stolen it; all the time so perfectly assured that such was not the case, and that the boat had not been stolen, that when he was informed that the boat had been found afloat, after several days absence, drifted ashore on an uninhabited Island, with not so much as an article of the property aboard turned over, he laughed outright, and said he never thought the boat was stolen; but Burke must have some excuse for losing it.

Avery advised, and with others procured, the seizure by the United States of 30,000 feet of timber belonging to the Mormons at Beaver, which, after long and expensive litigation, was discharged. After it was fully discharged, and Mr. Strang contracted to sell a cargo of it, Avery broke up the contract by giving an official notice to the Captain of the vessel which was to transport it, that it was government property, and his vessel would be seized and forfeited if he removed it.

Avery and his associates, the Burchards, have been in the habit of keeping up at the front of their store a large blackguard signboard, putting upon the Wendells for refusing to join in the crusade against the Mormons; and asking the fishermen to trade with and patronize them in preference, as the constant and reliable enemies of the Mormons; endeavoring to ruin the business of the Wendells, for no other offense than refusing to join in deeds of lawlessness against us.

Avery and his partners were all engaged in giving the guaranty of military aid to the outlaws at Pine River, and the fishermen at Gull Island in resisting the due execution of the law in Emmet County, in the process of which a murderous assault was made on the Sheriff of Emmet, and six men shot, three of them very dangerously. And after this deed was done, Avery attempted to shield the guilty from public indignation, by asserting times untold what he knew to be utterly false—that they were provoked to the aggression.

We are informed also, and think it exceedingly probable, that he did shield many of them from legal punishment, by helping them to escape.

From the beginning of our troubles till now, when we look back and laugh at the impotence of the hand raised to destroy us, there has been no wrong done us but Avery has assisted in it, encouraged it, or first hearing of it after it was consummated, has applauded it. And yet, now, he professes to be, and to have always been, friendly to us.

Such a man cannot trade here. There may be some, and among recent emigrants doubtless are many, who have not personally suffered by his misdoings. But we understand too well that when any member suffers, the whole body suffers. We shall not by our patronage build up and increase the business and influence of those who seek our destruction. Nor will we even do such business with them as might be a convenience to us without specially benefiting them. For their only object in doing such business, is as an entering wedge to something else.

Aside from any objection to patronizing particular men, there are strong reasons why we cannot do business with Mackinac at all. If there is trade between the two places, the advantages must be reciprocal.

Now it is well known that citizens of this place cannot go to Mackinac without going armed, or subjecting themselves to danger of personal violence.

If we send vessels there, they are in danger of being pirated.—So often have our property been seized on some false pretense, or on no pretense at all, and our vessels pirated, and only delivered up after long detention or great injury, that we have been obliged to seek business connections elsewhere.

We will not retaliate by similar acts upon them. But we will have nothing to do with either the guilty parties or those in the front guard in the join in Mor-fisher-tronize the con-s of the o ruin ndells, refus-lawless- were guar- out- the fish- resist- of the in the ous as- rific of , three . And Avery guilty by as- at he —that he ag- of our re look im-po- to de- en no y has it, or t was led it. ses to been, e here. among ss are sonally . But l that rs, the shall ld up is and ek our e even em as to us nefiting ject in an en- g else. on to , there e can- ckinae tween ntages at cit- go to rmed, o dan- e, they ted.— y been tense, and our deliv- on. or been onnic- y sim- t we ith ei- those who having the power take no measures to punish the guilty.

These things have not been done seldom, or in a corner.—Twenty different cases have occurred where the property of citizens residing here has been seized by mobs or combinations of the men of Mackinac, without the pretense of law or right.—The more respectable citizens could have prevented these deeds of villainy in most cases, or failing to prevent, punished the guilty, if they had desired to; but they did not. We can only conclude they approved of or were indifferent to the offense, and hold them all responsible together. To these remarks the brothers Wendell are the sole known exceptions.

The only terms on which we can consent to have any intercourse with them are, that they will cease their warfare against us, and produce such a state of affairs there that we can go to Mackinac in our own boats with our property, without danger to person or property.

And as this is the undivided feeling of the whole people here, and we are not dependent on Mackinac for anything whatever, they might as well talk against the east wind as undertake to break through it.

SCANDALOUS.

We learn with mortification and sorrow, that intoxicating liquors were furnished for the entertainment of a party of young people, at the house of a respectable lady of this place, this week.

And we are seriously discouraged and disheartened in our efforts to ameliorate and improve the condition of the human race, when we hear that of the numerous and respectable company there assembled, not one was found to remonstrate against, or resent such an insult.

The effort to put an end to the use of intoxicating liquors here has cost us years of struggle, in the course of which some of us have put our lives in peril.

Our supposed success in this measure has done much to redeem us from the prejudice which falsehood and folly had heaped up against us; and but for the folly of some few men, who, however temperate at home, will be induced to occasionally drink with friends in public places, we have no doubt would have entirely accomplished that work.

Never were we more discouraged in any efforts in doing good. We have had the thing to look in the face all along, that in spite of our utmost efforts, a few among the most influential men will occasionally drink on board steamboats and at public places; and in the certain and inevitable course of nature must endure this additional fall, and entail it upon their posterity.

What an idea—the fall of man. How many have wondered that Adam, in a state of happiness, should be tempted to do what God said was not good; that he should bring wo and death on himself and his posterity, to enjoy a little luxury in eating, which God had warned him against.

Complain not of Adam. We, too, have comparative happiness. If our possessions are less than his, we have experience which he lacked. We know how painful the fruits of sin are. God has told us, as he did Adam, what is not good for us, and what will be the consequence of disobedience.

Did you ever think of it, reader? Adam's sin was only indulging in a forbidden luxury—eating that which in his present state corrupted his flesh. And the corruption of the flesh is entailed on his posterity.

Every transgression of the law of life and happiness is a new fall of man; it is an additional corruption of the flesh, which we bring to ourselves, and entail upon our posterity.

Notwithstanding the first fall, which "brought death into the world," but not all nor half our wo, men lived almost to one thousand years. But they have continued to fall. When Noah became a husbandman he got drunk, and we hear nothing of the long life of the children afterwards born to him. Several centuries later, one hundred and twenty years of life was very common, and two hundred years was not unusual.

This is now dwindled down to the poor pittance of some forty years, not by any extraneous cause; not by the unprovoked wrath of the Almighty, but by the subsequent fall of fallen man, in which he has been going down step by step, from age to age, from generation to generation.

The man who drinks his moderate daily or occasional glass, wipes his lip and says, I have done no evil. But his child, unbegotten, reaps the reward in weakness, trembling, fear and an early death. Hence the public men of the nations, continually tempted by forbidden fruits, usually die childless, or are cut off in the next generation.

We confess ourselves discouraged and disheartened. The thoughtless freak of a woman can undo in an hour the labor that a hundred strong men have been years in accomplishing; and every man, every woman, who sips tea, pours down coffee, chews and smokes tobacco, or indulges in intoxicating drinks, never so rarely, says she did right.

Reader, do you know what it is to be utterly disheartened? to feel your plans of life defeated? to have hope sink?

It would be good to die then; to flee away and be at rest, though worms devour us. There is no anger then. The heart can feel no resentment. Its sole wish is forgetfulness: death.

Michael Douseman, of Mackinac, died a few days since at Milwaukee. Douseman came to Mackinac in 1796, as an armorer of the United States, and has resided there ever since, being a period of 58 years.

He was among the most wealthy men of the State, having accumulated in his long life nearly a million of dollars. He has been an enemy of the Mormons, from their first settlement at this place, and but for his influence it is doubtful whether the government of the United States could have been enlisted against them.

The failure of all the prosecutions on that occasion moderated his opposition, but it did not entirely cease before his death.—Douseman's personal habits were excellent, and preserved his physical strength and intellectual acuteness to the end of his long life unimpaired, amidst a scene of dissipation, premature decay and early prostration and death, no where else witnessed in the State.

General Cass visited this place last Tuesday, and paid his addresses to King Strang. The national steamer Michigan conveyed him here, and remained till his departure. Some years since, General Cass won to himself distinguished honors as ambassador to St. Cloud. The only advancement beyond that in the diplomatic line is to the Court of Saint James. And the President could do no less than send a national vessel with so distinguished a public servant. We were happy to see the kindest expressions pass between the diplomat and the King; and doubt not that hereafter a better understanding will prevail between the United States and His August Majesty.

New Light Houses.

We mentioned in our last that an appropriation had been made for a Light House at this place.

We have since seen the appropriation bill. It grants $6,000, for a Light House here; $6,000, for one at Old Fort Mackinac, and $6,000, for a Light House and fog bell at the south point of Mackinac.

That at Old Fort Mackinac is for the convenience of vessels making the short channel south of Bois Blanc. It will also make that place, instead of Saint Helena, the refuge of vessels bound down, and meeting adverse winds in the Straits. In both respects, it is important to the interests of this place, and was granted on our petition.

A Light has long been needed at Mackinac.

WOOD.

We are sorry to observe that, in this season of favorable sales of wood, many are getting out wood of an inferior quality, and short in length. This is criminal, and worse than foolish.

The wood got out here last winter was of a superior quality, and has given us a favorable position in the wood trade. Now when a supply can be got no where else, we can sell anything. But if we take advantage of that fact to impose upon them, by and by, when competition is done, and business dull, we shall lose our customers.

The best policy, therefore, is to do the business fairly. Cut the wood of full length and pile it snug.—There can be but one cord of wood put in 128 feet space, and to try to put in less is dishonest. Short sticks and open abutments, are a fraud, so transparent that they never escape detection.

It behooves the wharf owners, who would be the principal sufferers by any dishonesty and unfairness in the business, to protect their reputations by refusing to receive any wood on their wharves except such as they would be willing to buy for their own use.

The Indians on Garden Island are remarkably improved in morals and material comforts during the last three years. This is attributed to the absence of all grogeries in their vicinity.

Home Manufactures.

No people can be really and permanently prosperous, except they produce the principal part of the raw material used among them, and do the large share of their own manufacturing. In this view we are glad to see a shoemaker's advertisement in our columns, and cheerfully recommend him as a far better workman than poet. Make it a pay-as-you-go-shop, and all will be right. Pay a little higher price for home made work, and get that which is good, and it is still the cheapest.

Some attempts have been made lately to introduce a little whiskey. In consequence the Indians have determined to destroy any whiskey that shall be brought on the Island. The legal remedy has been sufficient to keep away all regular traders, but does not prevent an occasional fisherman disposing of a few gallons, and getting off before he can be arrested.

Feast of First Fruits.

The Feast of First Fruits will be held at Saint James, and at all places of public worship, on Friday, the 1st day of September, at which solemn sacrifices and public thanks will be offered to Almighty God for his countless blessings.

The electors of the Democratic party in the Counties of Emmet, Cheboygan and Grand Traverse, making the northern half of the Newaygo District, are requested to assemble at the Court House, in Saint James, the 1st day of September, to appoint a suitable delegate to represent them in the State Convention, to be held at Detroit Sept. 14th, for the nomination of State officers.

SHOEMAKING.

THE subscriber wishes to inform the citizens of Beaver Island and vicinity that he is prepared to wait on those who may wish to have work done in his line of business, near the Steam Mill, where, by good work and strict attention to business, he hopes to be liberally patronized by the public.

I'll make and mend your boot and shoe, Mend, if you please, your harness too; Come, all who're wanting good work done, And call on J. T. FENDELTON. August 31, 1854. 61—1.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of the Establishment of an additional Land Office in the State of Michigan. In pursuance of the act of Congress, approved April 30, 1854, entitled "An act Establishing a Land Office in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan," the District for which is to be called the "CHEBOYGAN LAND DISTRICT," it is hereby declared and made known, that the Land Office for said District has been located for the present, by the President of the United States, at the town of Duncan, in the northern part of the Southern Peninsula of said State.

Given under my hand, at the City of Washington, this sixteenth day of May, A. D. 1854. JOHN WILSON, Commissioner of the General Land Office.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Detroit, Nov. 1, 1853. Pursuant to the Statute, in such case made and provided, I hereby appoint the third Tuesdays of July and January as the times for holding the Circuit Courts for the County of Emmet during the years 1854 and 1855. SAM'L T. DOUGLASS, Circuit Judge, Third District.

NEW VOLUME.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK!

The July number commences volume xlix. Subscribers can commence with the new volume; or, if they wish, with the January number, as we can always supply back numbers. One hundred pages of reading each month! the oldest magazine in America, and the only one especially devoted to the wants of the Ladies of America.

We commence this volume with the largest list, by many thousand, that we have had since we commenced the work. We have, in addition to our many excellent features, another one to add—

A LIFE OF COLUMBUS,

for youth, to run through the volume, to be followed by other works of a like character, American in their nature. We think this new feature will be appreciated by our subscribers. All our celebrated corps of contributors will favor us as usual with those writings that have made the "Lady's Book" so celebrated throughout our country as a literary standard.

STEEL ENGRAVINGS.

In this department, we have always stood unrivalled, and the same attention will still be paid to it to enable us to sustain our proud superiority. Our FASHIONS, WITH DIAGRAMS. This department, which has given great satisfaction to our lady subscribers, will be continued.

DRAWING LESSONS FOR YOUTH.

We have at least one thousand designs still on hand to publish, therefore this department will be continued with unabated energy. Any child can learn drawing by these lessons.

PARIS, LONDON, AND PHILADELPHIA FASHIONS.

The only colored fashions upon which any reliance can be placed, received direct from Paris, and adapted to the taste of American ladies by our own "Fashion Editor," with full directions.

DRESSMAKING.—Our monthly description of dressmaking, with plans to cut by. None but the latest fashions are given. The directions are so plain, that every lady can be her own dressmaker. EMERALD.—An infinite variety in every number.

DRESS PATTERNS.—Infants, and children's dresses, with descriptions how to make them. All kinds of crochet and netting work. New patterns for cloaks, mantles, talmas, collars, chemisettes, undersleeves—with full directions. Every new pattern of any portion of a lady's dress, appears first in the "Lady's Book," as we receive consignments from Paris every two weeks, having a resident Editor there. THE MURRAY.—This subject is treated upon frequently.

GODEY'S INVALUABLE RECEIPTS

UPON EVERY SUBJECT.

Indispensable to every family, worth more than the whole cost of the book. MUSIC.—Three dollars' worth is given every year. MONET. Cottages.—Cottage plans will be continued as usual. In the various numbers for 1854, will be found the newest designs for Bonnets, caps, cloaks, evening dresses, fancy articles, head-dresses, hairdressing, robes de chambre, carriage dresses, brides' dresses, wreaths, mantillas, walking dresses, riding habits, and morning dresses. Dresses for Infants and Young Misses, Boys' Dresses, Caps and Cloaks of Fur in season, Patterns for Needle-work of all kinds, and Patterns to Cut Dresses by, are given monthly.

Orders for any of the above articles, or for clothing for ladies and children, patterns for ditto, furniture, jewelry, head ornaments etc. etc., will be attended to by remitting to the publisher. Splendid steel, line, and mezzotint engravings in every number. They are always to be found in Godey's "Godey's Lady's Book" contains precisely that for which you have to take at least three other magazines to get the same amount of information.

TERMS.

One copy one year, $3. Two copies one year, $5. Five copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $10. Eight copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making nine copies, $15. Eleven copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $20. "Godey's Lady's Book" and "Arthur's Home Magazine" will both be sent one year for $3 50. Terms for six months—from July, 1854, to December, 1854, inclusive. We will furnish at the following rates for six months. Persons unacquainted with the "Lady's Book" can take it for that length of time, and renew their subscriptions or not, at their pleasure.

One copy six months, $1 50. Two copies six months, $2 50. Five copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $5. Eleven copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $10. L. A. GODEY, 113 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

"The Lady's Book" is a periodical literary treasure to the fair sex of America. Every lady should be a subscriber—every citizen should see that it graces the table of his wife or daughter. It is a fountain of unexceptionably pure and instructive literature, and an affording source of the purest intellectual enjoyment.—Godey adopts for his motto "Excelsior!"—more elevated—and his unrivalled enterprise is vindicating its propriety.—Easton Clarion.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of Withdrawal of certain Lands in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, on the routes of the Oakland and Ottawa, and other proposed Rail Roads.

At the solicitation of a majority of the Delegation in Congress from the State of Michigan, the President of the United States, by his order bearing date the 1st of May, instant, has directed that the following named townships be withdrawn from sale or entry until further orders, except for valid pre-emption claims, to wit:—

IN THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.

In the district of lands subject to sale as Duncan:

North of the base line and west of the principal meridian, lower peninsula.

Townships thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range two.

Townships thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range three.

Townships thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range four.

Townships thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range five.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range six.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, and thirty-seven, of range seven.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

BOOKS.

The following books are constantly for sale at this office:—

Ancient and Modern Michilimackinac, including an account of the controversy between Mackinac and the Mormons. Price, 25 cts.

A History of the Rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the discovery of Ancient American Records, &c., by George J. Adams. Price, 19 cts.

A Discussion of the Roman Catholic Religion, containing Charles Rafferty and James J. Strang. Price, 10 cts.

The Diamond; being the Law of Prophetic Succession. Price, 5 cts.

Money may be sent by mail at our risk from any part of the United States for these books. We will return the books by mail, free of postage.

POETRY.

Evening Solace.

BY CURRIER BELL.

The human heart has hidden treasures,
In secret kept, in silence sealed;
The thoughts, the hopes, the dreams, the pleasures,
Whose charms were broken if revealed.
And days may pass in gay confusion,
And nights in noisy riot fly,
While, lost in Fame's Wealth's illusion
The memory of the past may die.

But there are hours of lonely musing,
Such as in evening silence come,
When, soft as birds their pinions closing,
The heart's best feelings gather home,
Then in our souls there seems to languish
A tender grief that is not woe;
And thoughts that once wrong groans of anguish,
Now cause but some mild tears to flow.

And feelings, once as strong as passions,
Float softly back—a faded dream;
Our own sharp griefs and wild sensations,
The tale of other's sufferings seem.
Oh! when the heart is freshly bleeding,
How longs it for that time to be,
When through the mist of years receding,
Its woes but live in reverie.

And it can dwell on moonlight glimmer,
On evening shade and loneliness
And, while the sky grows dim and dimmer,
Feel no untold and strange distress—
Only a deeper impulse given
By lonely hour and darkened room,
To solemn thoughts that soar to heaven,
Seeking a life and world to come.

A Home Picture.

BY J. C. MILLER.

A mother sat one afternoon
Among her children sewing;
And pleasantly through the open door,
The fresh, cool breeze was blowing.
One little darling, at her side,
With a blue-eyed doll was playing,
While brightly o'er her sunny face,
The transient smiles were straying.

Her elder sister on a chair
Was very quietly sitting;
And her tongue with her needle kept good time,
While all so busily knitting.
The breeze blew in, and the breeze blew out,
With the breath of roses laden;
And whispered of butterflies and flowers,
In the ears of little maiden.

A little boy with golden curls,
And cheeks like a rosy apple,
Was merrily swinging to and fro,
Beneath the sugar-maple.
Now high, now low, now up, now down,
He swung with a constant motion;
And he called himself a sailor, rocked
By the waves of the stormy ocean!

A little dog, with a curly head,
In the shade of the tree was lying,
And the busy bees, with a drowsy hum,
To their hives close by, were flying.
The snow-white apple blossom, borne
On the breeze so freshly blowing,
Fell round the boy so thick and fast,
He almost thought 'twas snowing!

A tear of joy and love rolled down
The cheek of the happy mother,
As she said, "Now go, my daughters dear,
And play awhile with brother."
They swung and played till the sun went down,
And the cool night-dews descended;
Then bade good night to the stars and flowers,
Nor sighed that their sport was ended.

Mulberry, Geauga Co., O.

Song.

BY E. M. SPENCER.

Oh, what matters it if my numbers are sad,
If they affect not those who are gay,
If they find out their course to hearts that are glad,
Nor allure them from gladness away—
'Tis true it but poorly accords with our youth,
Nor in unison beats with our prime,
But it teaches in sternness the dictates of truth,
And looks for fulfillment to time.

We judge by the clouds if a storm be at hand,
By its surface, the depths of the sea;
But the heart with its smiles that come at command,
Can never be fathomed by thee,
Unless you have sown of the prospects of earth,
And enjoying its hopes and its fears,
You dash from your lips its goblet of mirth,
And gather your harvest in tears.

Twilight.

BY RICHARD EVERETT

The sun's last rays are fading from the trees,
And all is still,
Save the low murmur of the dying breeze
On yonder hill.

A few dark shadows o'er the valleys fly,
While in the west,
Faint tints of azure stain the gloomy sky,
And mountains' crest.

The whippoorwill begins his evening hymn
As sunlight fades;
The night-birds venture, as the day grows dim;
From out the glades.

The evening star, with all her brilliant train,
Will soon appear,
And gathering darkness warns us that the reign
Of night was near.

Cincinnati, Feb. 9, 1853.

COWDERY'S LETTERS.

Oliver Cowdery was the earliest associate with Joseph Smith in the ministry of the dispensation of the fulness of times. The series of letters, one of which we insert in each number, till the publication is complete, give a most faithful history of the bringing in of the dispensation. They were written in answer to brief letters from Wm. W. Phelps, then a recent convert, and a seeker for further knowledge. The letters of Phelps, consisting principally of brief inquiries, we omit, the answers being full without them.

LETTER VIII.

May 28th, 1835.

DEAR BROTHER:—In my last I said I should give, partially, a description of the place where, and the manner in which these records were deposited the first promise I have fulfilled, and must proceed to the latter:—

The hill of which I have been speaking, at the time mentioned, presented a varied appearance: the north end rose suddenly from the plain, forming a promontory without timber, but covered with grass.
As you passed to the south you soon came to scattering timber, the surface having been cleared by art or by wind; and a short distance further left, you are surrounded with the common forest of the country.

It is necessary to observe, that even the part cleared was only occupied for pasturage, its steep ascent and narrow summit not admitting the plow of the husbandman with any degree of ease or profit.
It was at the second mentioned place where the record was found to be deposited, on the west side of the hill, not far from the top down its side; and when myself visited the place in the year 1830, there were several trees standing —enough to cause a shade in summer, but not so much as to prevent the surface being covered with grass—which was also the case when the record was first found.

Whatever may be the feeling of men on the reflection of past acts which have been performed on certain portions or spots of this earth, I know not, neither does it add or diminish to nor from the reality of my subject. When Moses heard the voice of God, at the foot of Horeb, out of the burning bush, he was commanded to take his shoes off his feet, for the ground on which he stood was holy. The same may be observed when Joshua beheld the Captain of the Lord's host by Jericho. And I confess that my mind was filled with many reflections; and though I did not then lose my shoe, yet with gratitude to God did I offer up the sacrifice of my heart.

How far below the surface these records were placed by Moroni, I am unable to say; but from the fact that they had been some fourteen hundred years buried, and that too on the side of a hill so steep, one is ready to conclude that they were some feet below, as the earth would naturally wear more or less in that length of time.
But they being placed toward the top of the hill, the ground would not remove as much as two-thirds, perhaps.

Another circumstance would prevent a wearing of the earth: in all probability, as soon as timber had time to grow, the hill was covered, after the Nephites were destroyed, and the roots of the same would hold the surface. However, on this point I shall leave every man to draw his own conclusions, and form his own speculations, as I only promised to give a description of the place at the time the records were found in 1823.

It is sufficient for my present purpose, to know that such is the fact:
that in 1823, yes, 1823, a man with whom I have had, the most intimate and personal acquaintance, for almost seven years, actually discovered by the vision of God, the plates from which the book of Mormon, as much as it is disbelieved, was translated. Such is the case, though men rack their very brains to invent falsehoods, and then waft them upon every breeze, to the contrary notwithstanding.

I have now given sufficient on the subject of the hill Cumorah—it has a singular and imposing appearance for that country, and must excite the curious enquiry of every lover of the Book of Mormon:
though I hope never like Jerusalem, and the sepulchre of our Lord, the pilgrims.

In my estimation, certain places are dearer to me for what they now contain, than for what they have contained. For the satisfaction of such as believe I have been thus particular, and to avoid the question being a thousand times asked, more than any other cause, shall proceed and be as particular as heretofore. The manner in which the plates were deposited.

First, a hole of sufficient depth
(how deep I know not) was dug.
At the bottom of this was laid a stone of suitable size, the upper surface being smooth. At each edge was placed a large quantity of cement, and into this cement, at the four edges of this stone, were placed, erect, four others, their bottom resting in the cement at the outer edges of the first stone. The four last named, when placed erect, formed a box, the corners, or where the edges of the four came in contact, were also cemented so firmly that the moisture from without was prevented from entering.

It is to be observed, also,
that the inner surface of the four erect, or side stones, was smooth.
This box was sufficiently large to admit a breastplate, such as was used by the ancients to defend the chest, &c., from the arrows and weapons of their enemy. From the bottom of the box, or from the breastplate, arose three small pillars, composed of the same description of cement used on the edges; and upon these three pillars was placed the record of the children of Joseph, and of a people who left the tower far, far before the days of Joseph, or a sketch of each, which had it not been for this, and the never failing goodness of God, we might have perished in our sins, having been left to bow down before the altars of the Gentiles, and to have paid homage to the priests of Baal.

I must not forget to say that this box, containing the record, was covered with another stone,
the bottom surface being flat and the upper crowning. But those three pillars were not so lengthy as to cause the plates and the crowning stone to come in contact. I have now given you, according to my promise, the manner in which this record was deposited; though when it was first visited by our brother, in 1823, a part of the crowning stone was visible above the surface, while the edges were concealed by the soil and grass, from which circumstance you will see, that however deep this box might have been placed by Moroni at first, the time had been sufficient to wear the earth
so that it was easily discovered, when once directed, and yet not enough to make a perceivable difference to the passer by.

So wonderful are the works of the Almighty, and so far from our finding out are his ways, that one who trembles to take his name into his lips, is left to wonder at his exact providences, and the fulfillment of his purposes in the event of times and seasons. A few years sooner might have found even the top stone concealed and discouraged our brother from attempting to make a further effort to obtain this rich treasure, for fear of discovery; and a few later might have left the small box uncovered, and exposed its valuable contents to the rude calculations and vain speculations of those who neither understand common language nor fear God. But such would have been contrary to the words of the ancients, and the promises made to them: and this is why I am left to admire the works and see the wisdom in the designs of the Lord in all things manifested to the eyes of the world: they show that all human inventions are like vapors, while his word endures forever and his promises to the last generation.

Having thus digressed from my main subject to give a few items for the special benefit of all, it will be necessary to return, and proceed as formerly. And if any suppose I have indulged too freely in reflections, I will only say, that it is my opinion, were one to have a view of the glory of God which is to cover Israel in the last days, and know that these, though they may be thought small things, were the beginning to effect the same, they would be at a loss where to close, should they give a moment's vent to the imaginations of the heart.

You will have wondered, perhaps, that the mind of our brother should be so occupied with the thoughts of the goods of this world, at the time of arriving at Cumorah, on the morning of the 22d of September, 1823, after having been wraped in the vision of heaven during the night, and also seeing and hearing in open day;
but the mind of man is easily turned, if it is not held by the power of God through the prayer of faith, and you will remember that I have said that two invisible powers were operating upon his mind during his walk from his residence to Cumorah, and that one urging the certainty of wealth and ease in this life, had so powerfully wrought upon him, that the great object so carefully and impressively named by the angel, had so entirely gone from his recollection that only a fixed determination to obtain now urged him forward.

In this, which occasioned a failure to obtain, at that time, the record, do not understand me to attach blame to our brother: he was young, and his mind easily turned from correct principles, unless he could be favored with a certain round of experience. And yet, while young, untraditionated and untaught in the systems of the world, he was in a situation to be led into the great work of God, and be qualified to perform it in due time.

After arriving at the repository,
a little exertion to move the soil from the edge of the top of the box, and a light pry, brought to his natural vision its contents. No sooner did he behold this sacred treasure, than his hopes were renewed, and he supposed his success certain; and without first attempting to take it from its long place of deposit, he thought, perhaps, there might be something more, equally as valuable, and to take only the plates, might give others an opportunity of obtaining the remainder, which could he secure, would still add to his store of wealth. These, in short, were his reflections, without once thinking of the solemn instruction of the heavenly messenger, that all must be done with an express view of glorifying God.

(Letter viii. to be continued.)

OBEYING ORDERS.—"I wish you would pay a little attention," exclaimed a carpenter to his careless apprentice. "Well, sir, I am paying as little as I can," was the calm reply.

Chip Basket.

Tom Moore says in his diary, "In talking of cheap living, Jekyll mentioned a man who told him his eating cost him almost nothing, for on Sunday, said he, I always dine with an old friend, when I eat enough to last me till Wednesday, when I buy some tripe, which I hate like the devil, and which, accordingly, makes me so sick, that I cannot eat again until Sunday."

An old toper, who lately attended an exhibition where a learned professor caused several explosions to take place among gasses produced from water, said, "You don't catch me putting much water in my liquor after this; I had no idea that water was so dangerous, though I never take much of it."

Fubbs, while recently engaged in splitting wood, struck a false blow, causing the stick to fly up. It struck him on the jaw and knocked out a front tooth. "Ah," said Bill, (meeting him soon after,) "you have had a dental operation performed, I see." "Yes," replied the sufferer "are-dental!" And by such a pun he revenged himself upon fate.

"Pie or pudding, sir," said a waiter to one of the innumerable guests at a hotel, during the spring season. "What kind of pie have you?"

"Rhubarb," said the waiter, as he started for a plate.

"Hold on," said the stranger as he rose from the table, "never mind it. I always take my medicine in the morning!"

Logic.—"Mind John, if you go out in the yard you will wish you had stayed in the house."

"Well, if I stay in the house I will wish I was in the yard—so where is the great difference, dad?"

"Let us remove temptation from the path of youth," as the frog said, when he plunged into the water, as he saw a boy pick up a stone.

"I wonder what makes my eyes so weak?"
said a loafer to a gentleman.

"Why, they are in a weak place," replied
the latter.

A Parishioner inquired of his pastor the meaning of this line of Scripture—"He was clothed with curses as with a garment." "It signifies," said the divine, "that the individual had got a habit of swearing."

The woman who was "bored in grief," is alive and doing well. It was a case of premature interment.

Modesty is a handsome dish-cover, that makes us fancy there must be something good underneath it.

A popular writer, speaking of the proposed oceanic telegraph, wonders if the news transmitted through salt water would be fresh.

"Ratat Beef!" said a boarder to a waiter.—
"How will you have it, sir?" "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

The man who "fell into raptures" with a pretty girl, was taken out with considerable difficulty.

If watermelons can be purchased for twenty-five cents a piece, how much will a whole one cost?

Beware, if you are in a hurry, of getting into an empty omnibus.

A man famous for hunting up enigmas philosophizes thus: What strange creatures girls are. Offer one of them good wages to work for you, and ten chances to one if the old woman can spare any of her girls—but just propose matrimony, and see if they don't jump at the chance of working a life-time for their victuals, and clothes. A queer way of estimating things.

A bon vivant one night told a friend that he intended to leave twenty pounds to be spent at his funeral, which induced the other to ask him if the money was to be spent going or returning.

"Going to be sure," replied he, "for when you return I shan't be with you!"

What do you think?—A young buck of the soap-lock order, who wore an unshaven face because, he said, it "looked foreign," lately decoated a Yankee as follows:—

"I say fellow, some individuals think I am a Frenchman, and some take me for an Italyean—now what do you think I am?"

"I think you are a damned fool!" replied Jonathan.

Marriage.—When youth weds youth for love, it is beautiful; when youth weds age for money it is monstrous, and only hate, misery, criminality, can come from it. Of these "thrice sordid fools" who marry their grandfathers and grandmothers, old Thomas Fuller says with equal truth and wit: "They that marry ancient people merely in expectation to bury them, hang themselves in hopes some one may come and cut the halter."

The Youth of Great Men.—I think of the works of young Pope as I do of the actions of young Bonaparte or young Nelson. In their common life you will find frailties and meanness as great as the vices and follies of the meanest men. But in the presence of the greatest occasion, the great soul flashes out and conquers transcendent. In thinking of the splendor of Pope's young victories, of his merit unequalled as his renown, I hail and salute the achieving genius, and do homage to the pen of a hero.—Thackeray.

A rogue is a roundabout fool; a fool is surrounding, said Coleridge.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 51.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, SEPT. 7, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 61

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

COWDERY'S LETTERS.

Oliver Cowdery was the earliest associate with Joseph Smith in the ministry of the dispensation of the fulness of times. The series of letters, one of which we insert in each number, till the publication is complete, give a most faithful history of the bringing in of the dispensation. They were written in answer to brief letters from Wm. W. Phelps, then a recent convert, and a seeker for further knowledge. The letters of Phelps, consisting principally of brief inquiries, we omit, the answers being full without them.

(Letter viii. Concluded.)

On attempting to take possession of the record, a shock was produced upon his system, by an invisible power, which deprived him in a measure, of his natural strength. He desisted for an instant, and then made another attempt, but was more sensibly shocked than before. What was the occasion of this he knew not—there was the pure, unsullied record, as had been described—he had heard of the power of enchantment, and a thousand like stories, which held the hidden treasures of the earth, and supposed that physical exertion and personal strength was only necessary to enable him to yet obtain the object of his wish.

He therefore made the third attempt, with an increased exertion, when his strength failed him more than at either of the former times, and without premeditating he exclaimed, why can I not obtain this book? Because you have not kept the commandments of the Lord, answered a voice, within a seeming short distance. He looked, and, to his astonishment, there stood the angel who had previously given him the directions concerning this matter.

In an instant all the former instructions, the great intelligence concerning Israel and the last days, were brought to his mind: he thought of the time when his heart was fervently engaged in prayer to the Lord, when his spirit was contrite, and when his holy messenger from the skies unfolded the wonderful things connected with this record. He had come, to be sure, and found the word of the angel fulfilled concerning the reality of the records, but he had failed to remember the great end for which they had been kept, and in consequence could not have power to take them into his possession and bear them away.

At that instant he looked to the Lord in prayer, and as he prayed darkness began to disperse from his mind, and his soul was lit up as it was the evening before, and he was filled with the Holy Spirit; and again did the Lord manifest his condescension and mercy: the heavens were opened, and the glory of the Lord shone around about and rested upon him.

While he thus stood gazing and admiring, the angel said, Look, and as he thus spake he beheld the prince of darkness, surrounded by his innumerable train of associates. All this passed before him, and the heavenly messenger said: All this is shown, the good and the evil, the holy and the impure, the glory of God and the power of darkness, that you may know hereafter the two powers, and never be influenced or overcome by that wicked one.

Behold, whatever entices and leads to good and to do good, is of God, and whatever does not is of that wicked one: it is he that fills the hearts of men with evil, to walk in darkness and blaspheme God; and you may learn from henceforth that his ways are to destruction, but the way of holiness is peace and rest. You now see why you could not obtain this record; that the commandment was strict, and that if ever these sacred things are obtained they must be by prayer and faithfulness in obeying the Lord.

They are not deposited here for the sake of accumulating gain and wealth for the glory of this world: they were sealed by the prayer of faith, and because of the knowledge which they contain; they are of no worth among the children of men, only for their knowledge.—On them is contained the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, as it was given to his people on this land, and when it shall be brought forth by the power of God it shall be carried to the Gentiles, of whom many will receive it, and afterwards will the seed of Israel be brought into the fold of their Redeemer, by obeying it also.

Those who kept the commandments of the Lord on this land, desired this at his hand, and through the prayer of faith obtained, the promise, that if their descendants should transgress and fall away, that a record might be kept and in the last days come to their children. These things are sacred, and must be kept so, for the promise of the Lord concerning them must be fulfilled.

No man can obtain them if his heart is impure, because they contain that which is sacred; and besides, should they be entrusted in unholy hands, the knowledge could not come to the world, because they cannot be interpreted by the learning of this generation; consequently they would be considered of no worth, only as precious metal. Therefore, remember, that they are to be translated by the gift and power of God.

By them will the Lord work a great and marvelous work: the wisdom of the wise shall become as naught, and the understanding of the prudent shall be hid; and because the power of God shall be displayed, those who profess to know the truth, but walk in deceit, shall tremble with anger; but with signs and with wonders, with gifts and with healings, with the manifestations of the power of God, and with the Holy Ghost, shall the hearts of the faithful be comforted.

You have now beheld the power of God manifested, and the power of Satan: you see that there is nothing that is desirable in the works of darkness; that they cannot bring happiness; that those who are overcome therewith are miserable, while on the other hand the righteous are blessed with a place in the kingdom of God, where joy unspeakable surrounds them. There they rest beyond the power of the enemy of truth, where no evil can disturb them. The glory of God crowns them, and they continually feast upon his goodness and enjoy his smiles.

Behold, notwithstanding you have seen this great display of power, by which you may ever be able to detect the evil one, yet I give unto you another sign, and when it comes to pass, then know that the Lord is God, and that he will fulfill his purposes, and that the knowledge which this record contains will go to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, under the whole heaven.

This is the sign: When these things begin to be known, that is, when it is known that the Lord has shown you these things, the workers of iniquity will seek your overthrow: they will circulate falsehoods to destroy your reputation, and also will seek to take your life; but remember this, if you are faithful, and shall hereafter continue to keep the commandments of the Lord, you shall be preserved to bring these things forth; for in due time he will again give you a commandment to come and take them.

When they are interpreted, the Lord will give the holy priesthood to some, and they shall begin to proclaim this gospel and baptize by water, and after that they shall have power to give the Holy Ghost by the laying on of their hands. Then will persecution rage more and more; for the iniquities of men shall be revealed, and those who are not built upon the Rock will seek to overthrow this Church; but it will increase the more opposed, and spread farther and farther, increasing in knowledge till they shall be sanctified, and receive an inheritance where the glory of God will rest upon them; and when this takes place, and all things are prepared, the ten tribes of Israel will be revealed in the north country, whither they have been for a long season; and when this is fulfilled, will be brought to pass that saying of the prophet—And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord.

But, notwithstanding the workers of iniquity shall seek your destruction, the arm of the Lord will be extended, and you will be borne off conqueror, if you keep all his commandments. Your name shall be known among the nations, for the work which the Lord will perform by your hands shall cause the righteous to rejoice and the wicked to rage: with the one it shall be had in honor, and with the other in reproach; yet, with these it shall be a terror, because of the great and marvelous work which shall follow the coming forth of the fulness of the gospel.

Now, go thy way, remembering what the Lord has done for thee, and be diligent in keeping his commandments, and he will deliver thee from temptations and all the arts and devices of the wicked one. Forget not to pray, that thy mind may become strong, that when he shall manifest unto thee, thou mayest have power to escape the evil, and obtain these precious things.

Though I am unable to paint before the mind, a perfect description of the scenery which passed before our brother, I think I have said enough to give you a field for reflection which may not be unprofitable. You see the great wisdom of God in leading him thus far, that his mind might begin to be more matured, and thereby be able to judge correctly, the spirits.—I do not say that he would not have obtained the record had he went according to the direction of the angel—I say that he would; but God knowing all things from the beginning, began thus to instruct his servant.

And in this it is plainly to be seen, that the adversary of truth is not sufficient to overthrow the work of God. You will remember that I said, two invisible powers were operating upon the mind of our brother while going to Cumorah. In this, then, I discover wisdom in the dealings of the Lord: it was impossible for any man to translate the Book of Mormon by the gift of God, endure the afflictions, and temptations, and devices of Satan, without being overthrown, unless he had been previously benefited with a certain round of experience: and had our brother obtained the record the first time, not knowing how to detect the works of darkness, he might have been deprived of the blessing of sending forth the word of truth to this generation.

Therefore, God knowing that Satan would thus lead his mind astray, began at that early hour, that when the full time should arrive, he might have a servant prepared to fulfill his purpose.—So, however affecting to his feelings this repulse might have been, he had reason to rejoice before the Lord and be thankful for the favors and mercies shown: that whatever other instruction was necessary to the accomplishing this great work, he had learned, by experience, how to discern between the spirit of Christ and the spirit of the devil.

From this time to September, 1827, few occurrences worthy of note, transpired. As a fact to be expected, nothing of importance could be recorded concerning a generation in darkness. In the mean time our brother, of whom I have been speaking, passed the time as others, in laboring for his support. But in consequence of certain false and slanderous reports which have been circulated, justice would require me to say something upon the private life of one whose character has been so shamefully traduced.

By some he is said to have been a lazy, idle, vicious, profligate fellow. These I am prepared to contradict, and that too by the testimony of many persons with whom I have been intimately acquainted, and know to be individuals of the strictest veracity, and unquestionable integrity. All those virtually agree in saying, that he was an honest, upright, virtuous, and faithfully industrious young man. And those who say to the contrary, can be influenced by no other motive than to destroy the reputation of one who never injured any man in either property or person.

While young, I have been informed, he was afflicted with sickness; but I have been told by those for whom he has labored, that he was a young man of truth and industrious habits.—And I will add further, that it is my conviction, if he had never been called to the exalted station which he now occupies, he might have passed down the stream of time with ease and in respectability, without the foul and hellish tongue of slander ever being raised against him.

It is no more than to be expected, I admit, that men of corrupt hearts will try to traduce his character and put a spot upon his name; indeed, this is according to the word of the angel; but this does not prohibit me from speaking freely of his merits, and contradicting those falsehoods—I feel myself bound so to do, and I know that my testimony on this matter will be received and believed, while those who testify to the contrary are crumbled to the dust, and their words swept away in the general mass of lies when God shall purify the earth.

Connected with this is the character of the family: and on this I say as I said concerning the character of our brother—I feel myself bound to defend the innocent always, when opportunity offers. Had not those who are notorious for lies and dishonesty, also assailed the character of the family I should pass over them here in silence; but now I shall not forbear. It has been industriously circulated that they were dishonest, deceitful and vile.

On this I have the testimony of responsible persons, who have said and will say, that this is basely false; and besides, a personal acquaintance of seven years, has demonstrated that all the difficulty is, they were once poor, and have now, by the help of God, arisen to note, and their names are like to be handed down to posterity, and had in remembrance among the righteous. They are industrious, honest, virtuous and liberal to all.

This is their character; and though many take advantage of their liberality, God will reward them; but this is the fact, and this testimony shall shine upon the records of the saints, and be recorded on the archives of heaven to be read in the day of eternity, when the wicked and perverse, who have vilely slandered them without cause or provocation, reap their reward with the unjust, where there is weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth—if they do not repent.

Soon after this visit to Cumorah, a gentleman from the south part of the State (Chenango Co.) employed our brother as a common laborer, and accordingly he visited that section of the country; and had he not been accused of digging down all, or nearly so, the mountains of Susquehanna, or causing others to do it by some art of necromancy, I should leave this for the present, unnoted. You will remember, in the mean time, that those who seek to vilify his character, say that he has always been notorious for his idleness.

This gentleman, whose name is Stowell, resided in the town of Bainbridge, on or near the head waters of the Susquehanna river. Some forty miles south, or down the river, in the town of Harmony, Susquehanna County, Pa., is said to be a cave or subterraneous recess, whether entirely formed by art, or not I am uninformed, neither does this matter; but such is said to be the case—where a company of Spaniards, a long time since, when the country was uninhabited by white settlers, excavated from the bowels of the earth ore, and coined a large quantity of money; after which they re-

oured the cavity and evacuated, leaving a part still in the cave, purposing to return at some distant period.

A long time elapsed, and this account came from one of the individuals who was first engaged in the mining business. The country was pointed out, and the spot minutely described.—This, I believe, is the substance, so far as my memory serves, though I shall not pledge my veracity for the correctness of the account as I have given. Enough, however, was credited to the Spaniard's story, to excite the belief of many that there was a fine sum of the precious metal lying coiled in this subterraneous vault, among whom was the employer; and accordingly our brother was required to spend a few months, with some others, in excavating the earth in pursuit of this treasure.

While employed here, he became acquainted with the family of Isaac Hale, of whom you read in several of the productions of those who have sought to destroy the validity of the Book of Mormon. It may be necessary, hereafter, to refer you more particularly to the conduct of this family, as their influence has been considerably exerted to destroy the reputation of our brother, probably because he married a daughter of the same, contrary to some of their wishes, and in connection with this, to certain statements of some others of the inhabitants of that section of country. But in saying this I do not wish to be understood as uttering aught against Mrs. Smith, (formerly Emma Hale.)

She has most certainly evinced a decidedly correct mind and uncommon amount of talent and judgment, and a manifest willingness to fulfill, on her part, that saying in sacred writ,—"and they twain shall be one flesh"—by accompanying her husband against the wishes and advice of her relatives to a land of strangers; and however I may deprecate their actions, can say in justice, her character stands as fair for morality, piety and virtue, as any in the world.

Though you may say, this is digressing from the subject proposed, I trust I shall be indulged, for the purpose of satisfying many who have heard so many slanderous reports that they are led to believe them true, because they are not contradicted; and besides, this generation are determined to oppose every item in the form or under the pretense of revelation, unless it comes through a man who has always been more pure than Michael the great prince; and as this is the fact, and my opposers have put me to the necessity, I shall be more prolix, and have no doubt, before I give up the point, shall prove to your satisfaction, and to that of every man, that the translator of the Book of Mormon is worthy the appellation of a seer and a prophet of the Lord.

In this I do not pretend that he is not a man subject to passions like other men, beset with infirmities; and encompassed with weakness; but if he is, all men were so before him, and a pretence to the contrary would argue a more than mortal, which would at once destroy the whole system of religion of the Lord Jesus; for he anciently chose the weak to overcome the strong, the foolish to confound the wise, (I mean considered so by this world,) and by the foolishness of preaching to save those who believe.

On the private character of our brother I need add nothing further, at present, previous to his obtaining the records of the Nephites; only that while in that country, some very officious person complained of him as a disorderly person, and brought him before the authorities of the county; but there being no cause of action he was honorably acquitted. From this time forward he continued to receive instructions concerning the coming forth of the fulness of the gospel, from the mouth of the heavenly messenger, until he was directed to visit again the place where the record was deposited.

For the present I close, with a thankful heart that I am permitted to see thousands rejoicing in the assurance of the promise of the Lord confirmed unto them through the obedience of the everlasting covenant.

As ever, your brother in the Lord Jesus,

O. COWDERY.

Autobiography of a Thorough Bred Yankee.

J. E. Johnson, the editor of the Council Bluffs Bugle, gets off the following autobiographical sketch of himself. He was born in Fredonia, Chautauqua county, New York, which place he left when about 13 years of age.—His subsequent history we will tell in his own words:—

Up to the age of eighteen our energies were directed and employed in Agriculture. Possessed of a feeble, and rather feminine constitution, and having the care of a mother and younger members of the family, we concluded to look about for lighter employment. We resided in Ohio, found the country decidedly too small, started with an ox team towards sundown, but did not reach that point, for our funds gave out, and brought us up at the Capital of the Sucker State all standing.

When, after passing through the various degrees of sickness, poverty, and a "power" of ague shakes, wood sawing, soap making, peddling, etcetera, we obtained a situation with 60 little suckers, and commenced teaching the idea "how to shoot," with so much success that the "Yankee Schoolmaster" was considered "some punkins."—Our education, however, being limited, we had to scratch hard to keep ahead of the scholars.

Here we staid a year, made a raise, came up into the then unsettled Iowa, was offered a share in the Keokuk landing claim, (now the city of Keokuk,) for a week's work, but "didn't take," spent our funds in the ague shaking business, and returned home to our mother sick and out of heart. The tears and words of encouragement of that excellent mother determined us. By the next season we were again headed toward the far West, and made a halt near the Mississippi river, where we assisted in laying off and building a new town.

Here we staid about five years, in which time we had accumulated quite a property, when the difficulties and persecutions of the Mormons commenced. After the exile of the Saints, our affairs, from thousands, terminated in the merest pittance. Having received a slight intimation that our presence was not required, by a band of armed ruffans, who surrounded our house at midnight, and we were allowed a week to wind up our affairs and "Puckerchee."

Thinking that a warm head and whole hide were preferable to our traps, we sloped with little effects, but only removed to the desolate city of the Saints. We were Postmaster at the time of our expulsion, and also had commenced to keep and sell drugs; we, therefore, opened a four-penny drugstore in the desolate city of Nauvoo. From which in a general exterminating war of new citizens, Mormons, and all, we were again, after being defeated in a hard fought battle, with the mob on short time.

For two years we floundered about from Galena to St. Louis, (we didn't know when or where,) having nothing at first, we had less at last. We again brought up at Montrose, at the head of the Lower rapids, on the Mississippi, pledged our face for a stock of goods, staid a year, and made clear about $2,000, lost near half of which in the great fire in St. Louis. Started again towards sundown with 50 head of cattle, etcetera. Sent a friend forward to California on a spec. Taking a liking to this country, we halted, and entered the mercantile list in earnest, with a capital of—of—of—nothing of course, but our face and a few friends.

The California speculation proved a rich one, no doubt, for the friend never sent back for more funds, which he would of course, have done, under other circumstances, and we were never further troubled about the matter. We heard, however, that the fellow escaped a running fight of a week, traveling over the mountains for hundreds of miles, and subsisting on the flesh of mules that died from starvation—that however was a lucky escape and we didn't cry.

In 1850, being in feeble health we started in July to cross the mountains; stopped at Salt Lake near two months and returned in the winter; and visited the Atlantic cities, same winter.—The next winter we took a Delegation of Omaha Indians to Washington City, who wished to make arrangements for future subsistence—staid there through the winter, and returned them home in the spring. Had accumulated a handsome property, supposed to be worth $20,000, which was almost totally lost in the great fire.

We had at various times, and under various circumstances, followed and carried on many and various kinds of business, enumerated below, viz: House-building and painting, cabinet and chair-making, and turning, brick-making, and school-teaching, saloon-keeping, drug-business, and am the inventor of patent nostrums, farming, a public showman, merchandising, baking and manufacturing confectionaries, have twice been postmaster, notary public, trustee of an incorporated town, alderman, &c., have carried on coopering, wagon-making, blacksmithing, shoe making, saddle and harness business, have had three in operation at once, carried on the daguerrian business, been a sub-editor, and, to wind up, am now the unfortunate but not discouraged editor of the Council Bluffs Bugle, and expect in a few years to be as rich as we may wish—am 35 years old, have a better half, and supposed to be the father of six children, three of whom are living—am six foot in high heeled boots, and weigh 140 lbs.

If any body should wish to learn more of our history let them ask our brothers, two of whom are in Utah, and another on the Sandwich Islands. They are much smarter men than ourself, and could write a far more intelligible and interesting article. We trust, however, this will satisfy the most curious, especially when they learn that we sometimes grind poetry, write tales, &c., are the redoubtable "Amicus" of the West, and would be a Mormon, if we were smart enough.

There must soon be a Reaction.

We find bitter complaints in the eastern papers of the high prices of all kinds of provisions.

Flour is very high; beef and pork are higher; butter and cheese are higher still; and vegetables are out of all character. The New York papers ask how far the distressing state of things extend. We can respond that it extends all the way to Buffalo, and Detroit, and Chicago can say the same of their localities. And what seems singular enough is the fact that there is a completely reversed order of things in this respect. Flour and beef are higher in Chicago than they are here; they are higher in New York than they are in Liverpool; and they are probably higher at Liverpool than they are at Constantinople. A table in the Tribune or Times, we do not now remember which, showed that the price of flour at New York is more than one dollar higher than at Liverpool. At this rate it would pay very well to reship there and bring it back.—Buffalo Republic.

Hireling Clergy.

If the clergy could be induced to raise their own food, they might, perhaps, learn that it is easier and pleasanter for the willing soul to support himself by farming, than by preaching when he has nothing to say, and every word comes as hard as water through a force pump. Real ministers of the real gospel, always find it pleasant to labor with their hands; and when they preach, the words flow freely, like water from a living fountain, because there is a fountain of life in them, from which the words issue. Christ spake of living water, which should be in those who receive it as a fountain of water springing up into life.

This is the gospel. The gospel minister has the fountain in him, and that is mouth and matter, tongue and utterance—his words flow freely; he is under no necessity of studying what to say, and can work as much as any other man, and take pleasure in working; but the hireling, who has chosen preaching as a trade, instead of being chosen by the Author of the gospel, is destitute of the power, has only words without life, and it is as dry work for him to preach an hour, as it would be for a man to keep an old pump brake going, where the well has no water, and try to imagine he is watering his flock, because the pump makes a noise.—Pleasure Boat.

A Fact.

It is an undeniable fact that the government of this nation make every individual a pauper at twenty-one years of age. It claims the land which they need to raise bread, and turns them into the highway, and taxes their heads; and if they do not have to retire to the pauper house, it is only because it is for the interest of others to hire them. The government makes them paupers; and if no one can make money by hiring them, as they are robbed by government of their birthright to the soil, they must either become inmates of pauper houses, or starve. Now, who, after reading this undeniable fact, will attend a celebration on the fourth of July, and hurrah for liberty?—J. Hacker.

Synopsis of the Homestead Graduation Bill.

The first section provides that the minimum price of the public lands of the United States shall be reduced after the first of July, 1855, and sold according to the following scale: For lands which shall have been offered at public sale, and remained unsold five years, one dollar per acre; for land which shall have been offered at public sale and remained unsold ten years seventy-five cents per acre; for lands which shall have been offered at public sale and remained unsold twenty years, twenty-five cents an acre; and for lands which shall have been offered at public sale and remained unsold thirty years, twelve and a half cents an acre; providing that the graduating process, fifty to twenty-five cents an acre, shall not take place until the lands in the fifty cent class shall have been exposed to sale for a period of at least two years, at the price of fifty cents per acre, after which the price of the said lands shall be reduced to twenty-five cents per acre.

At a meeting of the Democratic Electors of the Counties of Emmet, Cheboygan and Grand Traverse, held pursuant to previous notice, at the Court House at Saint James, in the County of Emmet, the 1st day of Sept., Samuel P. Bacon was called to the Chair, and Geo. Brownson chosen Secretary.

Hon. Jas. J. Strang was chosen Delegate to the State Convention, to be held at the city of Detroit, the 14th inst., to represent in part the Newaygo District.

Marvin M. Aldrich, Esq., Delegate to the Congressional Convention for the 4th Congressional District. And Benjamin G. Wright, Esq., Delegate to the Senatorial Convention, for the 29th Senate District.

Dennis Chidester, Geo. T. Preston and Gilbert Watson, were appointed committee of Vigilance.

Resolved, That the Committee of Vigilance have power to appoint substitutes for any of the Delegates who may be unable or fail to attend. Adjourned sine die.

SAMUEL P. BACON, Ch'n.

Geo. Brownson, Clerk.

BOOKS.

The following books are constantly for sale at this office:—

Ancient and Modern Michilimackinac, including an account of the controversy between Mackinac and the Mormons. Price, 25 cts.

A History of the Rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the discovery of Ancient American Records, &c., by George J. Adams. Price, 12 1/2 cts.

A Discussion of the Roman Catholic Religion, between Charles Rafferty and James J. Strang. Price, 10 cts.

The Diamond: being the Law of Prophetic Succession. Price, 5 cts.

Money may be sent by mail at our risk from any part of the United States for these books. We will return the books by mail, free of postage.

ower, and it reach man roing, and his akes a t the make wen-

the raise
the ads;
etire y be-oth-ernnd if ring gov-
the in-urve.
uncele-and r.

ation that blic ll be uly,
the rich blic ars, rich blic ars for fer-un-five ich ale ars, re;
pro-an
the hall a
the fter nds
five

s of rand y, at conn. P.
Geo.

s to y of the Con-G. est-and of ne of
to ale in-ens.

is-by igtic on ts.
at-

The following article has just been published as an appendix to a small work entitled "The Epistles of Oliver Cowdery, on the bringing in of a New Dispensation," which will, perhaps, be interesting to a large portion of our readers:—

The Book of Mormon is not a text book among the Saints of the last days. In all their public controversies the Bible is the universal standard; but in their domestic affairs, the Book of the Law of the Lord is the end of controversy.

The Book of Mormon is not a book of doctrine, but of history.—Its subject is a branch of the house of Israel, who left Judea in the times of the Kings, coasted along the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean, passed through Eastern Asia, crossed the Northern Pacific to the North-west coast of America, migrated by slow stages through Mexico and Central America, and spread over the Continent from the Lakes to the Equator.

The last scenes in its history are in the State of New York, very remote from most of the important events mentioned in it.

The Book of Mormon was first published in 1830, and a large edition immediately put in circulation. Its style is exceedingly simple, indicating inferior literary attainments in its authors, but the most excellent morals, and a high regard to religious duties and obligations, and considerable knowledge of theology.

The translation into English, evidently has not improved or embellished the original. The English is exceedingly barbarous and ungrammatical, evidencing extreme want of literary qualifications in translator and editor. The proof-reading of the first edition was worse done than is usual with country newspapers, and occasionally the most gross errors were designedly committed by the printers.

The grossest of these were corrected in the subsequent editions, to some limited extent. But the stereotyped edition, which it was intended to make an accurate standard, having been executed by men who had no interest in the faithfulness of the work, abounds with numerous and gross inaccuracies.

But, aside from literary defects and editorial and mechanical blunders, the Book of Mormon is the most extraordinary book of this productive and progressive age. It traces, for a period of one thousand years, the history of a semi-civilized population, extending over half the American continent, with such minuteness that the student in modern geography finds no difficulty in locating their nations and cities, and all the events in their history.

Their cities, fortresses, temples and numerous public works, form the same prominent feature in their history which such works usually do in the history of a people in a low state of civilization, and in some instances are minutely described. Such a work should have commanded the attention of antiquarians and historians in all the world. Prejudice has shut the eyes of the learned to this vast fund of knowledge.

A few years after the American government sent the distinguished traveler and learned savan, John L. Stevens, as Ambassador to Central America, accompanied by the artist, Mr. Catherwood, with permission to inquire into and examine the antiquities and aboriginal monuments of that country. These learned gentlemen, after a sojourn of less than two years, returned and published, as the result of their labors, a minute account of cities, temples, altars, fortresses, kingly palaces and national monuments, of gorgeous grandeur, scattered in vast and rich profusion over all that sunny region; desolated and without inhabitant, over which the ancient forest had grown in gigantic majesty, which the prying curiosity of man had penetrated for countless ages. These cities, these towers, these temples, these palaces, were all the same that the Book of Mormon had before described. The same rivers water them, and the same mountains surround them, which the believing student had read of ten years before, in the writings of the Seer of Palmyra.

Even the pictures painted upon the walls of palaces, temples and dwellings are a faithful illustration of the history contained in the Book of Mormon, and as plainly record the great events there written out as the pictures and statuary in the Capitol at Washington do the written history of the United States. The correspondence between the monumental and pictorial history, as discovered by Stevens and Catherwood on the one hand, and the written history as translated by Joseph Smith on the other, was perfect.

Yet learned men, antiquarians, and historians still close their eyes to its consequence. Concede for once what is claimed by all but Mormons, that the Book of Mormon is an imposture, no matter by what means got up, how did its authors discover the secrets of past history, and make their writing correspond with the since discovered monuments? The power to do it is essentially a divine power, quite as much so as that of prophecy.

This fact alone, sustained as it is by an overwhelming mass of evidence, is enough to vindicate the prophetic character of the Book of Mormon, the Apostolic character, and true witness of Oliver Cowdery, and to vindicate the Mormon institution as the institution of heaven, the new Dispensation as a Dispensation of life from the Almighty.

If the Book of Mormon was an imposition, it could scarcely fail to contain modern figures, modern forms of speech, allusions to modern facts and modern discoveries in the arts and sciences, and ten thousand other evidences of its modern origin. So certain was this, that the sincere unbelievers in its divinity made this the ground of their attack upon it, and based their unbelief on the assumption of the existence of such evidences of a modern origin.

In searching for such evidence, it was discovered that the Book of Mormon mentions the use of steel several centuries prior to the Christian era, and history was appealed to, to show that the manufacture of steel was a modern art, invented since the Roman Republic.—Against this it appears from the Bible that steel was used in the time of King David, he having a bow of that material.

It is now a well known fact, that the art of making steel of an excellent quality is one of the ancient arts of the Hindoos, practiced by them as early as the prophet Isaiah, by a process different from that in use among the western nations. Their art and that of the Hebrews are doubtless the same. It is only the European process which is modern.

An imperfect compass was in use among the nations, whose history is written in the Book of Mormon. Such is now proved to have been in use among the Chinese, from the earliest antiquity. The Book of Mormon shows the existence of herds of horses and cattle in America in early periods, whereas the present stocks are supposed to have all originated with the European stocks, brought over since the time of Columbus.

The lama and the buffalo are beasts of burden and draft, which might with propriety be called by those names. The buffalo is as truly an ox as the European bos. And the evidence that the wild horses all sprang from European stocks is anything but satisfactory.

Dr. Leidy, of Philadelphia, has proved, in a very interesting work, published by the Smithsonian Institute, that there existed in America in ancient times two species of ox of great size and value, which have disappeared so recently that several specimens of their bones and horn cores are in existence. These were the oxen spoken of in the Book of Mormon, and have become extinct for want of attention. Thus every objection fell to the ground.

Also the following as a preface to the above work:—

Twenty-four years have elapsed, and nearly a generation have passed away, since the bringing in of the Dispensation of the Fulness of Times, and twenty years since the Epistles of this volume were written; and if the little stone, cut out of the mountain without hands, has not become a great mountain, and filled the whole earth, it has, nevertheless, stirred up the nations at its presence, and become a power which the great ones among men fear and dread.

Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, schooled only in the school of the Almighty; educated only by that spirit of intelligence, which God gives in rich abundance to all who seek unto him for knowledge, have stamped their foot print upon time, and the ages as they roll by shall not obliterate it. Mormonism is now a moral, a philosophical and a national element which impresses itself on the face of society every where, and men cannot pass it by if they will.

Mormonism has ceased to be despised by any but fools, and men of a past age. The generation rising up, have to look it in the face. It will meet them at all times—in all places. With its two or three hundred thousand believers, its full predominance in several national communities, its numerous and successful missions in all parts of the world, and its divine intelligence, what shall prevent its filling the whole earth? Who shall stop its progress, till it realizes in its history the wildest vagaries in the dreams of the instruments in its founding?

Religious men, and they make up the great body of the human race, all acknowledge revelation from God, in past ages.—Is there any reason why God, who revealed himself to his creatures in past ages, should not in this?

The same state of facts which rendered a communication of the divine will necessary for the salvation of mankind in the days of Jesus Christ, equally exist, and render such a communication equally necessary to the present generation.

The Jews, who were possessed of the oracles of God, had divided into a great variety of sects and parties, each having its own peculiar faith and its own peculiar religious ceremonies and practices, sustained by its sectarian interpretation of the scriptures; and they were unable to come together in the unity of the faith, or the knowledge of the law of God. They were tossed about by every wind of doctrine; carried away by novel and strange interpretations, and unfounded theories; separating farther and farther from the faith delivered to the saints, and substituting the wildest opinions for the true faith.

If, amid all the contending sects and factions, a single one had preserved the true faith, and the regular administration of the sacraments and ordinances pertaining thereto, the heaven that was in them might have leavened the whole lump, and secured the salvation of such as were enlightened in the truth, and took pleasure in righteousness.

But the whole world being gone out of the way; and not one that knew God, or understood his law, it was necessary for the salvation of man that a dispensation of the Law of God and the Gospel of the Resurrection and life everlasting should be given, to bring man to God.

Such a dispensation was given to Prophets, Apostles, Evangelists and Teachers, accompanied with spiritual gifts, inspiration, healings, miracles and prophecy.

So in the present age, previous to the institution of Mormonism, the Christian nations were divided into more than six hundred different sects, each having its own faith, and its own diverse and peculiar institutions as a substitute for the law of God; and no two in the six hundred able to see eye to eye.

Among all these sects there was not one which knew or understood that God's law was a full and final rule of right in all cases. So blind they could not see the light of the sun, to be guided by it, they each attempted to make a lamp of their own to light their footsteps.

Laws confessedly human were established to guide men, in all the substance of their actions. It was only in shadows and forms that they pretended to be governed by the Law of God, according to their several interpretations of it.

In the midst of this darkness the divine light was poured out upon mankind as of old, by the revelation of God through the voice of Prophets and Apostles. God devised a new mode of communication, and selected no new character of instruments. He chose simple and unlettered men from the field, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, to be witnesses of the same gospel which Christ received.

According to the prediction of John the Revelator, (Rev. xiv. 6.) he sent his angel through the midst of heaven unto them which dwell on the earth, with the everlasting Gospel, of which he made them witnesses to all nations, and to every kindred, tongue and people.

This little work, consisting of eight letters to William W. Phelps, on the bringing in of a new dispensation, is Oliver's testimony, by which he, being dead, yet speaketh. It will live when the nations of the earth are broken. Though the language in which it is written shall be forgotten, it shall be fresh in the courts of heaven while truth remains and God lives.

JAMES J. STRANG.

Senator S. A. Douglass attempted to address the people of Chicago last Friday, in defence of the Nebraska-Kansas Bill. Eight thousand people turned out to meet him, but refused to hear. He was met with groans, hisses; every form of disapprobation, for a full hour, when he retired.

NEW VOLUME.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK!

The July number commences volume xlix. Subscribers can commence with the new volume; or, if they wish, with the January number, as we can always supply back numbers. One hundred pages of reading each month! the oldest magazine in America, and the only one especially devoted to the wants of the Ladies of America.

We commence this volume with the largest list, by many thousands, that we have had since we commenced the work. We have, in addition to our many excellent features, another one to add—

A LIFE OF COLUMBUS,

for youth, to run through the volume, to be followed by other works of a like character, American in their nature. We think this new feature will be appreciated by our subscribers. All our celebrated corps of contributors will favor us as usual with those writings that have made the "Lady's Book" so celebrated throughout our country as a literary standard.

STEEL ENGRAVINGS.

In this department, we have always stood unrivalled, and the same attention will still be paid to it to enable us to sustain our proud superiority. OUR FASHIONS, WITH DIAGRAMS. This department, which has given great satisfaction to our lady subscribers, will be continued.

DRAWING LESSONS FOR YOUTH.

We have at least one thousand designs still on hand to publish, therefore this department will be continued with unabated energy. Any child can learn drawing by these lessons.

PARIS, LONDON, AND PHILADELPHIA FASHIONS.

The only colored fashions upon which any reliance can be placed, received direct from Paris, and adapted to the taste of American ladies by our own "Fashion Editor," with full directions.

DRESSMAKING.—Our monthly description of dressmaking, with plans to cut by. None but the latest fashions are given. The direct-tions are so plain, that every lady can be her own dressmaker. EMBROIDERY.—An infinite variety in every number.

DRESS PATTERNS.—Infants, and children's dresses, with descriptions how to make them. All kinds of crochet and netting work. New patterns for cloaks, mantles, talmas, collars, chemises, undersleeves—with full directions. Every new pattern of any portion of a lady's dress, appears first in the "Lady's Book," as we receive consignments from Paris every two weeks, having a resident Editor there. THE NURSERY.—This subject is treated upon frequently.

GODEY'S INVALUABLE RECEIPTS UPON EVERY SUBJECT.

Indispensable to every family, worth more than the whole cost of the book. MUSIC.—Three dollars' worth is given every year. MODEL COTTAGES.—Cottage plans will be continued as usual. In the various numbers for 1854, will be found the newest designs for Bonnets, caps, cloaks, evening dresses, fancy articles, head-dresses, hair-dresses, robes de chambre, carriage dresses, brides' dresses, wreaths, mantillas, walking dresses, riding habits, and morning dresses. Dresses for Infants and Young Misses, Boys' Dresses, Caps and Cloaks of Fur in season, Patterns for Needle-work of all kinds, and Patterns to Cut Dresses by, are given monthly.

Orders for any of the above articles, or for clothing for ladies and children, patterns for ditto, furniture, jewelry, head ornaments etc. etc., will be attended to by remitting to the publisher. Splendid steel, line, and mezzotint engravings in every number. They are always to be found in Godey. "Godey's Lady's Book" contains precisely that for which you have to take at least three other magazines to get the same amount of information.

TERMS.

One copy one year, $3. Two copies one year, $5. Five copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $10. Eight copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making nine copies, $15. Eleven copies one year, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $20.

"Godey's Lady's Book" and "Arthur's Home Magazine" will both be sent one year for $5. Terms for six months—from July, 1854, to December, 1854, inclusive. We will furnish at the following rates for six months. Persons unacquainted with the "Lady's Book" can take it for that length of time, and renew their subscriptions or not, at their pleasure.

One copy six months, $1.50. Two copies six months, $2.50. Five copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making six copies, $5. Eleven copies six months, and an extra copy to the person sending the club, making twelve copies, $10.

L. A. GODEY,

113 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

"The 'Lady's Book' is a periodical literary treasure to the fair sex of America. Every lady should be a subscriber—every citizen should see that it graces the table of his wife or daughter. It is a fountain of unexceptionably pure and instructive literature, and an unending source of the purest intellectual enjoyment.—Godey adopts for his motto 'Excelsior!'—more elevated—and his unrivalled enterprise is vindicating its propriety."—Eastern Clerion.

ELECTION NOTICE.

Sheriff's Office, Saint James,
September, 6th, 1854.

A GENERAL ELECTION will be held in the County of Emmet, State of Michigan, on Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, (November 7th.) A. D. 1854, at which will be chosen the officers named in the following notice from the Secretary of State; also for County Officers, one Sheriff, one County Clerk, one Register of Deeds, one County Treasurer, one Prosecuting Attorney, one Circuit Court Commissioner, one Judge of Probate, (to fill vacancy,) one County Surveyor, and two Coroners.

J. L. MILLER, Sheriff.

Office of the Secretary of State,
Lansing, Mich., August 14th, 1854.

To the Sheriff of Emmet County:

You are hereby notified, that at the General Election, to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, in the State of Michigan, the following officers are to be elected, viz: A Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of State, Auditor General, State Treasurer, Commissioner of the State Land Office, Attorney General, Superintendent of Public Instruction, one member of the State Board of Education, in place of Chaucey Joslin, whose term of office will expire January 1st, 1855, one other member of the State Board of Education, for the residue of the term of the Hon. Isaac E. Cray, deceased, and a Representative in Congress for the fourth Congressional District of this State, to which your County is attached.

Also a Senator for the twenty-ninth Senatorial District, consisting of the Counties of Leapeer, Saginaw, Tuscola, Midland, Gladwin, Arnette, Roscommon, Ogemaw, Isoc, Alcona, Osceola, Crawford, Otsego, Montmorency, Alpena, Presque Isle, Wyandot, Emmet, and Cheboygan.

Also one Representative for the District consisting of the Counties of Newaygo, Oshtan, Lake, Mason, Manistow, Grand Traveres, Wexford, Missaukee, Rosconmng, Ogemaw, Isoc, Alcona, Osceola, Crawford, Kalamazoo, Ogemaw, Leelanau, Antrim, Otsego, Montmorency, Alpena, Presque Isle, Wyandot, Elnet and Cheboygan.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and affixed the Great Seal of the State of Michigan, at Lansing, this fourteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

W. GRAVES,

Secretary of State.

*There are no such counties in the State.

BUFFALO AND CHICAGO.

THE SLENDID UPPER CABIN.

STEAMER BUCCEPHALUS.

S. ALEXANDER, MASTER.

LEAVES BUFFALO. LEAVES CHICAGO.

August 23 August 24

September 13 September 14

October 4 October 5

October 25 October 26

November 15 November 16

LEAVES DETROIT. LEAVES CHICAGO.

August 25 September 1

September 15 September 22

October 6 October 13

October 27 November 3

November 17 November 24

Touching at Beaver Island each way.

AGENTS.

HOLT, PALMER & CO., Buffalo.
D. A. EDDY & CO., Cleveland.
WALTER CHESTER, Detroit.
DOUSMAN & CO., Milwaukee.
RUMSEY, BRO. & CO., Chicago.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of the Establishment of an additional Land Office in the State of Michigan.

In pursuance of the act of Congress, approved April 20, 1854, entitled "An act Establishing a Land Office in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan," the District for which is to be called the "CHEBOYGAN LAND DISTRICT," it is hereby declared and made known, that the Land Office for said District has been located for the present, by the President of the United States, at the town of Duncan, in the northern part of the Southern Peninsula of said State.

Given under my hand, at the City of Washington, this sixteenth day of May, A. D. 1854.

JOHN WILSON,

Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SHOEMAKING.

THE subscriber wishes to inform the citizens of Beaver Island and vicinity that he is prepared to wait on those who may wish to have work done in his line of business, near the Steam Mill, where, by good work, and strict attention to business, he hopes to be liberally patronized by the public.

I'll make and mend your boot and shoe. Mend, if you please, your harness too. Come, all who're wanting good work done. And call on J. T. PENDLETON.

August 21, 1854.

61-1.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Detroit, Nov. 1, 1853.

Pursuant to the Statute, in such case made and provided, I hereby appoint the third Tuesday of July and January as the times for holding the Circuit Courts for the County of Emmet during the years 1854 and 1855.

SAM'L T. DOUGLASS,

Circuit Judge, Third District.

POETRY.

The Home of my Childhood.

BY TERESA.

The home of my boyhood, my own country home,
I love it, I love it, wherever I roam;
Though long since my foot on its threshold was prest,
'Neath the roof of the homestead in spirit I rest,
While memory recalls all its beauties to me,
And tints with her pencil the picture I see.

There stands the old barn where in childhood
I played,
The forest where oft with my brother I strayed;
There lies the green meadow; where on the fresh hay,
The long dawn of summer passed swiftly away;
There bubbles the brook, as freshening and cool
As when on its borders I loitered from school.

There wave the green oaks, in the depths of whose shade,
The forms of my father and mother are laid!
But vain is the effort to think of them there:
My dear gentle mother is in her arm chair,
While hearty and hale as the autumn of life,
My father is sitting beside "the auld wife."

Time softens the picture I look upon now,
And few are the snow-flakes that rest on each brow;
While round the old hearth-stone my brothers
all stand,
E'er death on the fairest had laid his cold hand;
One sister I see through the vista of years,
But the glass of my mem'ry is darkened with tears.

In the evening of life, these scenes of my youth Come back to my mind with freshness and truth,
As stars that are hid by the light of the sun, Shine bright when his course in the heaven is run;
Then I look to the future for comfort and cheer
Now hope has departed, and mem'ry is dear.

All, all have gone, the fair and the brave,
And lonely I stand on the brink of the grave,
Where the wife of my youth, her babe on her breast,
My mother and sister have gone to their rest;
Not one in the homestead my coming shall greet,
Of those who were wont around this hearth-
stone to meet.

One only desire still lives in my breast,
To see that old homestead before I depart,
To stand by the grave where my mother is laid,
And point out the spot where my own shall be
made,
And in the old house where I first drew my breath,
Sit quietly down till the coming of death.

AN EPISTLE.

Addressed to a Young Lady just Married.

On matrimony's sickle sea,
I hear thou'lt venture fairly;
Though young in years, it may not be Thy bark is launched too early.

Each wish of mine to heaven is sent,
That on the stormy water
Thou'lt prove a wife obedient,
As thou hast been a daughter.

If every wish of mine were bliss,
If every hope were pleasure,
Thou would'st with him find happiness,
And he in thee a treasure:

For every hope and wish of mine,
Add every thought and feeling,
Is for the weal of thee and thine,
As true as my revealing.

Be prudent in thy thought of dress,
Be sparing of your parties;
Where fashion riots in excess,
O, nothing there of heart is:

And can its palling sweets compare
With love of faithful bosom?
Then of the fatal tree beware,
There's poison in its blossom.

Bear and forbear, for much thou'lt find
In married life to tease ye;
And should thy husband seem unkind,
Averse to smile or please ye,

Think that amid the cares of life
His troubles fret and tease him:
Then smile as it becomes a wife,
And labor well to cheer him.

Aye, answer him with loving words;
Be each tone kindly spoken,
For sometimes is the holy chord
By angry jarring broken:

Then cure thy temper in its rage,
And fretful be thou never;
For broken once a fearful change
Frowns over both forever.

Upon thy neck light hang the chain,
For hymen now hath bound ye;
O'er thee and thine may pleasure reign,
And smiling friends surround ye.

Then fare ye well, and may each time
The sun smiles, find ye wiser;
Pray, kindly take the well meant rhyme
Of thy sincere adviser.

I see it trembling on the mountain height,
And stealing softly down the shadowy vale.
Each ray prophetic of perennial light,
And promise sure that truth shall yet prevail.

There's no more need to work or beg,
Events turn up so funny—
The goose that laid the golden egg,
Is hatching paper money.

THE CATHOLICS ON PERSECUTION.

Answer to "the letter from a Professor in a Catholic College."

SIR:—I avail myself of the opportunity you offer to any one to reply to the article under the above caption, which appeared in The Tribune of the 13th inst. I shall endeavor to be brief.

First: The Professor denies that it is the doctrine or practice of the Catholic Church (by which he means the Popish Church) that faith is not to be kept with heretics, or that she is intolerant, unprogressive, and inimical to liberty.

He asserts that a lie is looked upon by every enlightened Catholic as a mortal sin, deserving everlasting flames.

That allegiance to the Pope is purely spiritual. He admits that the Pope is supreme above all the governments and nations of the earth, but in no other light than a spiritual one.

In regard to the first proposition, I assert that the Popish Church is intolerant, unprogressive, inimical to liberty, and keeps no faith with heretics. First, her very assumption of infallibility of necessity makes her intolerant. Her arrogant claim of supremacy above all the governments and nations of the earth, in things spiritual, must also of necessity make her intolerant. In relation to this, however, we shall look for authority of a higher order and more conclusive than the ipse dixit of the Professor in a Catholic college. Let us, therefore, first open their own infallible Rhemish Testament. Here we read that "the blood of heretics is not called the blood of saints, no more than the blood of thieves, man-killers and other malefactors, for shedding of which, by order of justice, no commonwealth shall suffer."—(Rhem. Test. Annot. upon Rev. xvii. 6.)

"Experience teaches," says Cardinal Bellarmine, that there is no other remedy for the evil but to put heretics to death; for the Church proceeds gradually, and tried every remedy. At first, she merely excommunicated them; afterward she added a fine; then she banished them; and finally they were constrained to put them to death."—(Bellarm. de Laicis, lib. iii. c. 21.)

Then comes the decree of the General Council of Lateran on the subject, which, at once, stamps the doctrine with the seal of infallibility. The decree runs as follows:—"Let the secular powers be compelled, if necessary, to exterminate to their utmost power all heretics denoted by the Church."—(Gen. Coun. Lat. A. D. 1215.)

We see now that this Infallible Church both sanctions and commands the putting of heretics to death. That these sanctions have been gratified, and these commandments obeyed, the pages of history, stained with the blood of the martyrs, fearfully portray. As it is claimed to be the Infallible and Unchangeable Church, what, then, will be our destiny should that Infallibility ever predominate in this country? Heretics denoted by that Church would, perhaps, never again be publicly burnt to death; not for want of will, but because even the secular powers now begin to hate the monstrosity of such sanguinary intolerance, or, as the scripture expresses it, the "ten horns [the kingdoms of the earth] shall hate the whore, and make her desolate." (Rev. xvii. 16.)

To be convinced that the Popish Church is unprogressive, or at least, unprogressive in good, we have only to visit those countries where Popery prevails, and where there are but few Protestants to be found. Look at Cuba, for instance, or Mexico, or South America! A more ignorant, degraded, superstitious and vicious race are not to be found, at least, among nations claiming to be civilized. For proof, I refer to every tourist who has visited those parts of the world, and published an account of his travels.

In regard to lying, let us read what Saint Ligor says on the subject, in his work entitled, "the moral Theology of the illustrious and Most Reverend Lord Alphonsus de Ligor."—He was enrolled among the Saints, as the title of his book declares, by Pope Pius vii. on the 15th of September, in the year 1816, and his book was declared to be "sound, and according to God," (sana ac securum Deum.)

"To answer," says this great saint, "with equivocation, where there is a good reason, and equivocation itself is lawful, is not wrong. And if a person swears without a good reason, it is not to be considered a perjury: since, in one sense of the word, and according to a mental restriction, he swears what is true. Thus, also, if any one is interrogated in regard to anything that it is expedient to conceal, he can answer, 'I say No;' that is, I say or utter 'the word No.'" (Ligor. lib. iii. n. 152.)

"A culprit or a witness," continues the Saint, "who is interrogated by a judge, unlawfully, can swear that he is ignorant of a crime, which, in truth, he knows." (Ligor. lib. iii. n. 154.)

The saint asks the question, "can an adulterer, who is questioned by the woman's husband, deny that he committed adultery with his wife? I answer: he can, by equivocally asserting that he did not break the matrimonial tie, which, in fact, is true. And if he has sacramentally confessed the adultery, he can answer, 'I am innocent of this crime,' because by confession it has been removed." (Ligor. lib. iii. n. 162.)

"It is asked," says St. Ligor, "whether a servant, by the command of his master, can say that his master is not at home? It is admitted," says he, "by card, that he can strike his feet against a stone, and answer, 'he is not here.' But to this," says the Saint, "I do not agree, if the one who asks the question could by no means notice this—I would rather grant that the servant could answer, 'he is not here,' that is, he is not in this door, or at this window—he is not here so far as to be seen!" (Ligor. id. ib. n. 165.)

"Is it lawful," asks the Saint, "to swear to anything false by adding in a whisper, a circumstance that is true? Some divines say it is; and their reason is, because, in order that an assertion be true, it is sufficient that there be an outward accordance with the mind, whether this concordance be expressed by signs, or by a whisper, which may so happen that the other may not hear it. But it is better to say that it is lawful if these signs or this whisper could by any means be perceived by the other, although his senses do not perceive them." (Ligor. lib. iii. n. 168.)

Lastly, in regard to whatever the Pope's supremacy over all the governments and nations of the earth (as is admitted by the Professor), is to be considered in no other light than a spiritual one.

To elucidate this point, we shall have to consider what the Inquisition is—who established it, and for what purpose.

Popish devotees are made to believe, and Protestants, too, are told over and over again, that the Inquisition was not established by the Catholic Church, and that, therefore, the Church is not accountable for any of its acts, be they what they may. We shall now, again quote from Ligor:—

"Pope Paul III," says the Saint, "established the General Inquisition at Rome, in the year 1542, by his Bull 34, commencing with the words 'Licet ab initio.'" (Ligor. De Probib. Libro, p. 238.) "In the General Congregation," continues the Saint, "of the Holy Roman and Universal Inquisition, held in the Apostolical Quirinal Palace, before our most holy Lord, Lord Benedict, by Divine Providence the fourteenth Pope, and before the most eminent and most serene doctors, the Cardinals of the Holy Roman Church, specially deputed by the holy Apostolic See, General Inquisitors against heretical pravity," &c. (Ligor. De Rom. Pont., Dec. iii, p. 85.)

By the above we see,

Firstly: That the bloody Inquisition was established by the Romish Church, and not at all by the secular power, as the Popish clergy themselves know, but are ashamed and afraid to acknowledge it.

Secondly: That it was instituted to exercise its powers "against heretical pravity."

Thirdly: That these powers extended even to the taking of the lives of heretics, "whose blood," as their Rhemish Testament asserts, "is no more than the blood of thieves, man-killers, and other malefactors; for the shedding of which, by order of justice, no commonwealth shall suffer."

It is generally pretended by the defenders of Popery, that the Inquisition is solely a political institution; that the crimes it punishes are only crimes against the State: Be it so, for argument's sake, that the crimes punished by it are only crimes against the State; still, the fact remains the same, the penalty is against heretics, and heresy the Popish church makes to be a crime against the State. The ultimatum is this, that wherever Popery has the power of enforcing her sanguinary laws, heretics must be put to death.

Lastly: What does the Professor mean when he asserts that allegiance to the Pope is purely spiritual? The proposition is vague. The meaning, I presume is, that we are not bound to obey the Pope in our temporal concerns. This involves the proposition in a dilemma from which there is no escape, which is, that Popish subjects are not bound to obey the Pope at all. Why so? Simply because the spiritual authority in Popery pervades all. It rarely pervades all and over all, when a man is compelled to renounce his heretical opinions or be put to death. Vain and evasive then is the distinction in Popery between temporal and spiritual, since all is engulfed in the maelstrom of infidelity.

Now for the conclusion: And let me warn you, fellow-citizens, if ever this Bohon-Upas spreads her deleterious shades over this now flourishing Republic, farewell to Liberty, to Virtue, and to Happiness!

A CONVERT FROM POPERY.

P. S.—Lest any one should suppose that any of the quotations above made are incorrect or mutilated, I hereby invite the Romish Bishop of this city to deny them. This, I presume, he is too wary to attempt. Should it be done, however, I will then call upon him to appoint with me a committee of six individuals, three to be chosen by himself, and three by me.—To this committee I am willing to leave the issue, whether my quotations are correct or not. I am willing also that the examination of the passages I have quoted be made in their own books. The bishop doubtless has the Moral Theology of the great St. Ligor, as the Rev. Father Varela, so called, in a controversy he had some years ago, stated that "the works of Ligor are in the hands of almost every priest." (See New York Weekly Register and Diary of March 28, 1835.)

ADD-ED-KADER TO OMER PACHA.—The Arab chief Abd-el-Kader has written the following letter to the victorious Omer Pacha, dated Broussa, June 18. It is decidedly Arabesque:—

MY VERY DEAR BROTHER:—The gates of Paradise opened themselves for me when I spoke with the Only Prophet, in a dream, on the eve of the 1st Ramadan. I heard all the great and holy souls who repose on Abraham's bosom, proclaim your name with shouts of joy, and I saw a halo of glory spread around the ranks of the holy souls when they uttered your name. God is with you, my brother. Whenever you go glory and victory will attend you. I envy you. Carry off the camps of your enemies! Blessings accompany you. May the enemy fly before you like jackalls, and our children's children glorify your name. Forward and draw not back! The Prophet wills it. The day of expiation is arrived for the ghouls of Moscow. My blessing on you, brother.

A good one.

Gov. Gorman is ex-officio Indian Agent for the Minnesota Indians. At a recent Council with the Chippewas, the Governor threatened the Indians with the loss of their annuity if found drunk, and any Indians portion thus forfeited, was to be divided equally among the sober. Hole-in-the-dark, a distinguished Orator, remarked in reply, that it was just, but that the same rule ought to be applied to the Agent, who was a great man, and had a great annuity. It ought to be taken from him and divided, like the others. For he got drunk very often. The Governor must have felt rather streaked about that time.

Baron Rothschild is said to have contributed a sum of 20,000f. (£2,000) to the support of his co-religionists at Jerusalem.

Chip Basket.

A certain Sunday school teacher was in the practice of taking up a collection in his juvenile class for missionary objects every Sunday, and his box received scores of pennies which might otherwise have found their way to the draw of the confectioner and toy man. He was not a little surprised, however, one Sunday, to find a bank bill crushed in among the coppers. He was not long in finding it to be of a broken bank; and on asking the class who put it there, the donor was soon pointed out to him by his class mates, who had seen him deposit it, and thought it a very benevolent gift. "Didn't you know that this bill was good for nothing?" said the teacher. "Yes," answered the boy. "Then what did you put it in the box for?" "I didn't," said the little heathen would know the difference, and so it would be just as good for them."—Knicker.

"Forgot Her other Name."—"Tom, who did you say our friend B. married?" "Well, he married forty thousand dollars. I forgot her other name."

Better be alone than in bad company.—True, but are you quite certain that you are in good company when you are alone? "Think of that, Master Brooks!"

A Hand-saw is a good thing, but not to have with—Clear as mud. The men who would shave with a hand-saw would probably father with aquaforte, and wipe his face with a brickbat. As the critics say, "there is no such man."—Boston Post.

The more a man goes to law, the less real justice he is apt to get. Justice is about as sacred in a court-house, as toddy is in a temperance meeting, or roses in snow banks.

Shun a man who doesn't pay his compliments to the ladies. He who is wanting in honor towards curls and corsets, will invariably attempt to dodge the grocer, tailor and butcher. Faithfulness to the dimity institution is a sure sign of a want of principle, piety and a good "bringing up."

Sim high in life. If you don't hit the stars, you can land in the mud. Anything is better than stupid inaction. Even a muddy man is worth a half dozen lazy ones.

Everything may be mimicked by hypocrisy, but humility and love united. The humblest star twinkles most in the darkest night. The more rare humility and love united, the more radiant when they meet.

It is easier to forgive an ancient enemy than the friend we have offended. Our resentment grows with our undesert, and we feel indignant in due degree with our own doubts of the chance of finding forgiveness.

Pontenelle was to have kept his centenary, and all the wits of France and England were to have celebrated the completion of his hundredth year; but the black angel called him and prevented it.

Eliza Cook very truly says: "To appreciate the value of newspapers, we have only to suppose that they were to be discontinued for a month." The idea is horrible.

To decide against one's self, is a trick of delicate minds. Dr. Johnson warned his friends to beware of it. "Scruples tempters," said he, "make few people good, and many miserable."

The vulgar mind fancies that judgment is implied chiefly in the capacity to censure; and yet there is no judgment so exquisite as that which knows properly how to approve.

Quebec was selected as the site of a city and colony by Samuel Champlain, in 1608. Lake Champlain was named after this great pioneer.

Philosophy does not regard pedigree; she did not receive Plato as a noble, but she made him so.—SENeca.

A late writer says that there are two classes of people in England—poor devils and fox hunters. The former spends his existence in chasing after a living, and the latter in chasing after blood-hounds.

Compliments cost us nothing, and yet there is nothing more provocative of esteem. Tell a pug-nosed woman that she is beautiful, and you can have all the run, not only of her affections, but the pantry in which the cold turkeys are kept.

"John, I fear you are forgetting me," said a bright eyed girl to her lover, the other day. "Yes, Sue, I have been for getting you, these two years."

Love and esteem are the first principles of friendship, which always is imperfect where either of these two is wanting.—[Buddell.]

You may have hot enemies without a friend; but not a fervid friend without a bitter enemy. The qualities of your friends will be those of your enemies; cold friends, cold enemies; half friends, half enemies; fervid enemies, warm friends.

The people should spend hundreds of dollars annually in visiting sulphur springs, is one of those follies which we could never unravel. Why waste the contents of a pocket-book on a jaunt to Sharon, when a beverage equally as pleasant as the one obtained there could be made by chopping up iceo-foe matches, and mixing them with bilge water? For five dollars we will furnish a person with a recipe for making all the most celebrated waters of the country. For the sparkling offering of the far famed Congress Springs, we offer a very cheap substitute—drink weak pork pickle out of an old boat.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 16.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, SEPT. 21, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 63.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

From Ford's History of Illinois.

CHARACTER OF THE PEOPLE.

In 1816 and '17 the country was overrun with horse thieves and counterfeiters. They were so numerous, and so well combined together in many counties, as to set the laws at defiance. Many of the sheriffs, justices of the peace, and constables, were of their number; and even some of the judges of the county courts; and they had numerous friends to aid them and sympathize with them, even among those who were the least suspected.

When any of them were arrested, they either escaped from the slight jails of those times, or procured some of their gang to be on the jury; and they never lacked witnesses to prove themselves innocent. The people formed themselves into revolutionary tribunals in many counties, under the name of "Regulators;" and the governor and judges of the territory, seeing the impossibility of executing the laws in the ordinary way, against an organized banditti, who set all law at defiance, winked at and encouraged the proceedings of the regulators.

These regulators in number generally constituted about a captain's company, and they gave a military organization, by the election of officers. The company generally operated at night. When assembled for duty, they marched, armed and equipped as if for war, to the residence or lurking place of a rogue, arrested, tried and punished him by severe whipping and banishment from the territory. In this mode most of the rogues were expelled from the country; and it was the opinion of the best men at the time, that in the then divided and disorganized state of society, and the imperfect civilization which required such proceedings, were not only justifiable, but absolutely necessary for the existence of government.

There yet remained, however, for many years afterwards, a noted gang of rogues in the counties of Pope and Massac, and other counties bordering on the Ohio river. This gang built a fort in Pope county, and set the government at open defiance. In the year 1831, the honest portion of the people in that region assembled under arms in great numbers, and attacked the fort with small arms and one piece of artillery. The fort was taken by storm, with the loss of one of the regulators and three of the rogues killed in the assault. The residue of the rogues were taken prisoners, tried for their crimes, but I believe were never convicted.

At a later time, a number of rogues who had located themselves in the county of Edgar, were broken up, whipped, and expelled by a company of regulators from the Wabash valley, the present Governor French being a distinguished member of the regulators. In 1837 a series of mobs took place in Alton, which resulted in the destruction of an abolition press, and in the death of one of the rioters, and one of the abolitionists.

* * * * *

After the violence of feeling had somewhat subsided, both parties were indicted for their crimes arising out of these transactions, and all were acquitted; making it a matter of record, that, in fact, the abolitionists had not provoked an assault; that there had been no mob; and that no one had been killed or wounded.

Previous to the year 1840, other mobs were rife in the northern part of the State. The people there had settled without title, upon the public lands of the United States, which were then neither surveyed nor in market, and they had made valuable improvements on these lands, by building mills worth ten thousand dollars, opening farms, frequently of four or five hundred acres, and whole villages of six or eight hundred inhabitants, were built on them.

By a conventional law of each neighborhood, the settlers were all pledged to protect each other in the amount of their respective claims. But there were mean men, who disregarded these conventional arrangements. Such as these belonged to that very honest fraternity, who profess to regulate all their dealings by the law of the land. Such men had but little regard for public opinion, or abstract right; and their consciences did not restrain them from "jumping" a neighbor's claim, if they could be sustained by law and protected against force.

It soon became apparent to every one, that actual force was the only protection for this description of property. And although the most of the settlers were from the eastern States; from the land of steady habits, where mobs are regularly hated and denounced, and all unlawful fighting held in abhorrence; yet seeing themselves left without legal protection, and subject to the depredations of the dishonorable and unscrupulous, they resolved to protect themselves with force. Many were the riots and mobs in every county, arising from this state of things. Every neighborhood was signalized by some brawl of the kind.

The old peaceful, staid, puritan Yankee, walked into a fight in defence of his claim, or that of his neighbor, just as if he had received a regular backwoods education in the olden times. It was curious to witness this change of character with the change of position, in emerging from a government of strict law to one of comparative anarchy. The readiness with which our puritan population from the east adopted the mobocratic spirit, is evidence that men are the same everywhere, under the same circumstances. That which any man will do, depends more upon his position upon the laws and government, and upon the administration of the laws, than to mental or physical constitution, or any peculiar trait of character or previous training.

Then again the northern part of the State was not destitute of its organized bands of rogues, engaged in murders, robberies, horse-stealing, and in making and passing counterfeit money. These rogues were scattered all over the north; but the most of them were located in the counties of Ogle, Winnebago, Lee and De Kalb. In the county of Ogle they were so numerous, strong and well organized, that they could not be convicted for their crimes.

By getting some of their numbers on the juries, by producing hosts of witnesses to sustain their defense by perjured evidence, and by changing the venue from one county to another, and by continuances from term to term, and by the inability of witnesses to attend from time to time at a distant and foreign county, they most generally managed to be acquitted. At the spring term, 1841, seven of them were confined in the Ogle county jail for trial. The judge and the lawyers had assembled at the little village of Oregon, preparatory to holding the court.

The county had just completed a new court house, in which court was to be held for the first time the next day. The jail stood near it, in which were the prisoners. The rogues assembled in the night, and set the court house on fire, in the hope that as the prisoners would have to be removed from the jail, they might, in the hurry and confusion of the people attending to the fire, make their escape. The whole population were awakened at a late hour of a dark and stormy night, to see the lurid flames bursting from the roof and windows of their newly erected temple of justice. The building was entirely consumed, but none of the prisoners escaped.

This produced a great excitement in the country; three of the prisoners were tried, convicted and sent to the penitentiary for a year. But they managed to get one of their confederates on the jury, who refused to agree to a verdict, until the eleven others had threatened to lynch him in the jury room. The other prisoners obtained changes of venue, and were never convicted. They all broke out of jail, and made their escape. The honest and substantial portion of the people were now determined to take the law into their own hands; they were determined that delays, insufficient jails, changes of venue, hung juries, and perjured evidence, should no longer screen the rogue from punishment.

And here it is to be remarked that the new counties, such as Ogle, were so poor in revenue, and so much in debt, their orders at so great a discount, that they were not able to build good jails; and the other counties which had them, refused to receive prisoners from the new counties, unless the cost of their keeping was paid in advance. The people formed themselves into regulating companies, both in Ogle and Winnebago counties, and proceeding in a summary way, they whipped some of the most notorious rogues, and ordered others into banishment. Among those who had been ordered away, were the family of the Driscolls—the old man and several of his sons.

The old man and some of his sons had been in the Ohio penitentiary, and made their escape from it. The old man was a stout, well built, hardened, deliberate man, and his sons had more than common boldness in the commission of crime. This family were determined not to be driven away, and to this end they and several of their confederates held a private meeting, in which they resolved to strike terror into the regulators, by threatening death to all the leading men in their ranks, and by assassinating their captain.

Some of the Driscolls went to the house of Capt. Campbell, who was a captain of the regulators, just after dark, of a Sunday evening, just as the family had returned from church, and pretending to be strangers inquiring their way, they called Capt. Campbell out into his dooryard, and there deliberately shot him dead in the presence of his wife and children. Before day next morning the news of the murder had run over the country like lightning. The people early assembled at the house of the murdered man, in White Rock Grove, in great numbers; and there seeing the dead victim of this assassination, his blood yet fresh upon the ground, his wife and children in frantic agony, they were thrown into a wild uproar of excitement and frenzy, somewhat like that which seizes upon a herd of cattle, upon seeing and scenting the blood of a slaughtered bullock. They spread out all over the country, in search of the murderers.

The actual murderers who had done the deed had escaped, but they seized upon the old man Driscoll, and the people of Winnebago county, coming down next day afterwards, had seized upon two of his sons. The prisoners were taken to Washington Grove, in Ogle county, for trial. The old man and one of his sons were convicted as being accessories to the murder, and the other was acquitted.

The trial occupied nearly a whole day before the whole band of regulators, composed of about three hundred men, many of them being magistrates, and some of them ministers of the gospel; and is described as having been conducted with much solemnity and seriousness. The condemned were sentenced to be shot within an hour; a minister of the gospel, who was present, prayed with them, and administered to them the consolations of religion; and then they were brought out for execution. They were placed in a kneeling position, with bandages over their eyes, and were fired upon by the whole company present, but that there might be none who could be legal witnesses of the bloody deed. About one hundred of these men were afterwards tried for murder and acquitted.

English vs. American Beauty.

Mrs. Stowe's new work, "Sunny Memoirs of Foreign Ladies," is attracting very general attention, and is received with much favor by the American press and people. The following extract will be worth a little reflection on the part of our American ladies. It is really a practical question of great importance to us, to settle satisfactorily the reason why American women so soon fade, and lose their personal beauty, in comparison with the ladies of England, and indeed of Europe generally. But hear what Mrs. Stowe has to say about it:—

"A lady asked me this evening what I thought of the beauty of the ladies of the English aristocracy; she was a Scotch lady, by the by, so the question was a fair one. I replied, that certainly report had not exaggerated their charms. Then came a home question—how the ladies of England compare with the ladies of America. 'Now for it, patriotism,' said I to myself; and invoking to my aid certain fair saints of my own country, whose faces I distinctly remembered, I assured her that I had never seen more beautiful women than I had in America. Grieved was I to be obliged to add, 'but your ladies keep their beauty later and longer.' This fact stared one in the face in every company; one meets ladies past fifty, glowing radiant and blooming, with a freshness of complexion and fullness of outline refreshing to contemplate. What can be the reason? Tell us, Muses and Graces, what can it be? Is it the conservative power of sea-fogs and coal smoke—the same causes that keeps the turf green, and makes the holly and ivy flourish?"

How comes it that our married ladies dwindle, fade, and grow thin—that their noses incline to sharpness and their elbows to angularity, just at the time of life when their island sisters round out into a comfortable and becoming amplitude and fullness? If it is the fog and the sea coal, why, then, I am afraid we shall never come up with them. But perhaps there may be other causes why a country which starts some of the most beautiful girls in the world produces so few women. Have not our close-heated stove rooms something to do with it? Have not the immense amount of hot biscuits, hot corn cakes, and other compounds got up with the acid poison of saleratus, something to do with it? Above all has not our climate, with its alternate extremes of heat and cold, a tendency to induce habits of indoor indolence? Climate certainly has something to do with it; ours is evidently more trying and more exhausting; and because it is so, we should not pile upon its back errors of dress and diet which are avoided by our neighbors. They keep their beauty because they keep their health. It has been as remarkable as anything to me, since I have been here, that I do not constantly, as at home, hear one and another spoken of as in miserable health, as very delicate, &c. Health seems to be the rule, and not the exception. For my part, I must say, the most favorable omen that I knew of for female beauty in America is the multiplication of water-cure establishments, where our ladies, if they get nothing else, do gain some idea as to the necessity of fresh air, regular exercise, simple diet, and the laws of hygiene in general."

UTAH.

Government in most of the new States of our Union, has been, (and for the matter is yet, in most of the old) a business of getting into office, of living at the public expense, and in all ways promoting private advantage at the cost of general good. It has been refreshing to witness in UTAH, a glorious exception to this fact. The Territory was founded by a common movement for the common good. Its population was not an aggregation of selfish individuals, selfishly pursuing diverse interests. The colonists of the Salt Lake Valley generously and wisely merged their personality in the commonwealth. They labored most harmoniously and from the start, for the public weal. Mr. President Young gave evidence of statesmanship, in his first message to the Territorial Legislature. He distinctly and thoroughly indicated the direction which the industry of the people should steadily pursue—to independence of all other communities, for the supply of every necessary and luxury of civilized life, which their climate, their soil, and its mineral resources, would enable them to produce. This was an act of true statesmanship, refreshing and encouraging contrast with bulky and involved paragraphs, in which a President of the United States wraps up an evil purpose to obstruct the construction of a national railroad to the Pacific States, and to carry Slavery wherever the Slave Power wishes. The UTAH Government too at an early hour, decided for its citizens and for future ages, the most favorable circumstances for the moral life of the inhabitants of its cities and villages. It established wide streets, large and roomy lots of land for dwelling, and made it a State care to irrigate the highways, and conduct streams of running water wherever the levels of the soil would admit of it, and man needed the element for use or for pleasure. All visitors to the Great Salt Lake City, agree in calling it "magnificent" in its plan, and its site. This is the testimony of numerous engineer officers of the U. S. Army, and of the emigrants to California and Oregon. The city is the fruit of the overseeing care of the Mormon Government.

Hardly had the colonists rested from the labor of putting into the ground their first sowing of grain, when they turned their attention to providing for the children of UTAH forever, a complete system of public instruction. The plan contemplates a University, in which the highest branches of scholastic learning shall be taught.

Within four years from their entrance into the Salt Lake Valley, the people of UTAH had founded a State, had erected and put in operation sawmills, gristmills, potteries, cotton factories, woolen factories, blastfurnaces, foundries, and had under way rolling mills for bar iron, and manufactories of the best root sugar. Rich as is American history, in extraordinary results of the application of energy and intelligence, to the advancement of man's social condition, there is nothing in it, to match the rapid, solid, and hopeful growth of UTAH. Contrast it with the growth of Texas, crawling these eighteen years through robbery, bankruptcy, mendicancy, and repudiation, till it stinks in the nostrils of all honest men, and is an offence at home and abroad. Contrast it with the growth of any of the States, and see how in the first four years of its life it infinitely exceeds the growth of all of them for a corresponding period in material, social, and political development.

The Territory of UTAH is included between the parallels of 37 and 39 degrees North, and the meridians of 109 and 113 degrees West of Washington. It is about 350 miles broad from North to South, and about 650 miles long from East to West, and contains an area of some 225,000 square miles. It has already a population of 35,000. The soil is thus spoken of by ELDER PRATT in his second letter to

"the Saints scattered throughout the United States and British Provinces."

"Grain and vegetables of every description that are produced in the same latitudes in the States, grow in the most luxuriant abundance. Young fruit trees seem to be thrifty and doing well; some peaches have been produced for two or three years past. It is one of the best grazing countries in the world; the fine bunch grass will fatten the cattle and horses equal to grain; it is seldom that farmers cut much hay, for the cattle can generally find good grazing the year round."

Of the mineral resources of the country he speaks as follows:—

"Coal and iron ore abound in the southern counties, and probably in many other places where they are not yet discovered. And most happily gold, silver, and other precious metals do not to any great extent trouble Utah's soil; or at least the people have not been so unfortunate as to discover them, during the infancy of their settlements."

Consider the growth of the Territory thus far, its wealth, the unity of purpose and spirit which animates all their life—and then consider that there are steadily in operation influences to increase the numbers of the people, and to advance in every way their material, and moral, and social well being, such as are characterized by the following extracts from Mr. Pratt's letters, and we shall have no difficulty in foreseeing the existence of a State in the Salt Lake Valley, which shall be equal to any, and superior to most of those now in the confederacy.

"Independent of the tithing, another fund has been raised by the voluntary donations of the Saints throughout the world, called 'the perpetual emigrating fund.' This fund is intended to assist the poor among the Saints in gathering out from all nations. Those whom the agents assisted through the medium of this fund, are required to give a written bond or obligation, that they will refund by their labor of otherwise, after they arrive in Utah, the amount which has been expended for their benefit. By this policy, hundreds of the poor are gathered annually, and still the fund in the end is not diminished. It now amounts to upwards of thirty thousand dollars, and will no doubt, through the liberality of the Saints, shortly be swelled to ten times that sum."

"Let all the Saints use every exertion to gather to Utah next season."

"Supply yourselves plentifully with every variety of useful school books for your children, together with historical and scientific works of every description, but leave novels and fictitious works behind to satisfy the perverted appetites of the children of darkness, whose souls delight in lies and fiction, far above the good truths of Heaven."

"The Saints should take with them every variety of choice garden seeds; and the seeds of all kinds of good fruit; and also the chestnut, hickorynut, black walnut, butternut, and various other kinds of nuts. Among other things, do not forget the different kinds of the best grass and cloverseed. The seeds of the various kinds of useful herbs should be remembered. And finally, everything in the vegetable department that would be useful for food or medicine, or that would please the eye, the taste or the smell, or adorn and beautify your habitations, your gardens, or your fields, should be taken along and planted in the soil of Utah."

We think that government in Utah is considerably in advance of the business in those States, where it is mainly occupied with the Resolutions of '98, and has been noisy over the Compromises of the Constitution. Even about so apparently an ungovernable subject as the 'Spiritual Rappings,' the authorities of Utah seem disposed to apply a corrective to an evil, which for the want of Law in the Eastern and older States, has afflicted thousands with insanity, and destroyed numerous families. Mr. Pratt's circular letter charges the brethren to "have nothing to do with those persons who deal with familiar spirits, under the names of 'Mesmerism,' 'Electro-Biography,' 'Spirit Rappings,' 'Table-Movings,' 'Writing Mediums,' &c.; for they will darken your minds and bring you to destruction; they are the spirits of darkness let loose upon this generation because of their wickedness; and they will increase more and more upon the earth until the coming of Christ, as the Scriptures predict."

The Commercial of this city in an article published on Saturday last, says, "we cannot believe that the Congress of the United States will consent to the admission of Utah as a State, while its inhabitants continue the practice of polygamy." The Richmond Examiner one of the most violent and reckless journals in the interest of Slave Power, on the other hand, holds the following views of the matter:

"Laws relating to marriage, divorce, &c., belong to the States, and whilst Congress, as a guardian, may provide laws and regulations for the territories, the power does not extend to an interference with the religious regulations and morals of the citizens. We have Chinese in California worshipping idols, and polygamists in Utah with sixty wives, but they claim the protection of the same constitution, under the battlements and barriers of which we repose in the secure enjoyment of our own peculiar rights."

The idea of direct interference with polygamy in Utah is glaringly unconstitutional. Appropriations of public lands to emigrants ought not to be made, but if made, should be made without qualifications or discriminations against or in favor of any class of emigrants. Whenever Congress talks about settling a question of doubtful constitutionality by appealing to popular prejudices and passions, the people of the south should recollect that they have more than once been the victims of that species of demagoguery, and that the preservation of their property and rights depends upon their clinging tenaciously, under all circumstances, to the letter of the Constitution."

Most true, Sir. Slavery can't afford to have any such domiciliary intermeddling, as is proposed to be applied to the people of Utah. The power to abrogate by Congress the right to a plurality of wives, claimed by a few of the leaders of the Mormon Church, and enforcing it aggressively and as an insult upon the whole territory, is the power to disfranchise a citizen on account of allegiance to the Pope, on account of his faith in the power of another man styled Priest, to remit sins—on account of his selling men, women, and children for money—on account of his upholding and participating in so anti-republican and unchristian an institution as human Slavery. The Richmond Examiner does well to let the Mormons alone. It would do better, if it took the trouble to ascertain the fact, that Utah is already a more civilized and promising State than Virginia.—Buffalo Democracy.

Iron Houses.

If Cast Iron can be used in the construction of houses, to the exclusion of Wrought, we may expect to see this valuable material freely used, in the preparation of fire-proof, and water-proof edifices. We specially commend the following articles to some of our large Iron manufacturing establishments—to Jewett & Root—the Eagle Iron Works—Swartz & Brothers—or the Shepards. The building of Iron houses here for Banks, Public Offices, and Government buildings, for Federal and State use, could immediately be inaugurated. Ultimately, Iron will be the material used in the construction of warehouses, wheat and flour depots, and stores for the sale of costly goods and merchandise. Dwellings for families will last be built of metal—but that they will be so constructed by and by, is certain.

This is the first notice of the malleable glass, that has fallen under our notice. If the article is what it is described to be, it is invaluable. It must immediately be made the subject of profitable manufacture at Lancaster.—The employment of the words "new and valuable invention," would hit a patent right, and intimate a monopoly—but there is not an invention that goes through our Patent Office that cannot be either improved on, or disregarded for its invalidity, in case the holder refuses a fair price for his property.

We attended yesterday evening an informal meeting of business men, at the Auction Rooms of M. N. Croft, Court street, Brooklyn, at which Mr. Sexton, the inventor of a new plan of iron buildings explained his system.—He constructs the framework of his buildings entirely of cast iron, in sections, which are made to interlock by very close fitting and ingenious joints, secured by keys. This method of building avoids the labor of drilling and bolting, which has been a great inconvenience of iron buildings. It also allows the house to be taken down in sections, and removed at a very little expense. He covers the frame work on the outside with plates of iron, by a similar system of interlocking, without any bolts or other fastenings, the joints being packed with gutta-percha, so as to exclude water under hydraulic pressure.—To finish the dove-tailing of the joints he has invented a machine that can perform the work of forty men. The walls are made hollow, and the enclosed space is filled with a non-conducting composition of beach sand and other substances, so that, as Mr. S. observed, his house becomes, when finished, a perfect fire-proof safe.

The roofs and floors are made of cast iron frames, resembling heavy window sashes, the interstices being occupied, as in the case of windows, with plates of glass, of any required thickness and transparency. The glass used is not our common glass, but is in itself a new and valuable invention, being called malleable glass, from its wonderful property of toughness allowing it to bend freely without breaking. It can be drawn out into threads of any fineness, and so strong and flexible that they are said to be commencing the manufacture of piano and violin strings from their material. Mr. S. handed round a piece of this glass string for inspection. It was as small as the E string of a violin, and could be bent around the finger or tied in a knot apparently like catgut.

Plates of this glass being let into the frame work of the floors, the whole is then covered over with a peculiar transparent cement of Mr. S.'s invention, which makes the whole floor look like one solid plate of glass. The cost of roofing with this material, is 75 cents per square foot. The walls inside can be covered with plaster, or finished with iron or glass, at the option of the builder. All the interior ornamentation, such as mantle-pieces, panels, etc., may be of malleable glass.

The advantages claimed for this style of building are, first, its great cheapness, and the rapidity with which it allows of construction. It effects a saving of one-third its cost, and three-fourths in labor, over every other method. Mr. S. stated that he could complete an ordinary dwelling house in forty days. Second, the variety of style and finish that can be obtained at small cost, by different combinations of the same pattern. The inventor remarked that in the construction of the whole Crystal Palace, but six different patterns were required. Third, the facility with which such a building can be taken down and removed.—Fourth, its security from damage by fire or lightning—thus saving all the expense of insurance. Other incidental advantages are, its durability, freedom from vermin, etc.—N. Y. Leader.

The Largest Steamer in the World.

The immense screw and paddle steamer, building by Scott Russell, at Millwall, England, for the Eastern Steam Navigation Company, is to be completed in twelve months.—Her keel has been laid down, and several of her bulwarks, or compartments, are raised, and the works are proceeding with energy and expedition. A railroad has been laid down the entire length of her ways, to facilitate the conveyance of the material from the factory to the different parts of the vessel. The exact dimensions of the ship are as follows:—Tonnage, builder's measurement, 22,000 tons; tonnage, burthen, 10,000 tons; extreme length, 680 feet; extreme breadth, 83 feet; extreme depth, 58 feet; power of engines, (screw paddle,) 2,600 horse. Her engines are in the course of construction, and will be fitted in the vessel before she is floated off. The hull will be entirely of iron, and of more than usual strength, the magnitude of her size enabling Mr. Brunell, the architect, to introduce many precautionary measures conducive to support and security. From her keel up to six feet above her water line is double, of cellular construction. The upper deck will also be strengthened on the same principle, and will form a complete beam, similar to the tube of the Britannia Bridge, so that any external injury will not affect the tightness or the safety of the ship. She is divided into ten separate, water-tight compartments, each being sixty feet in length, enabling her to take out sufficient fuel for a voyage to Australia and back to England, without stopping.

Wearing the Beard.

It may be safely argued as a general physiological principle, that whatever evinces a free and natural development of any part of the body is by necessity beautiful. Deprive the lion of his mane, the cock of his comb, the peacock of the emerald plumage of its tail, the ram and deer of their horns, and they not only become displeasing to the eye, but lose much of their power and vigor. And it is easy to apply this reasoning to the hairy ornaments of a man's face. The caprice of fashion alone forces the Englishman to shave off those appendages which give to the male countenance that true masculine character, indicative of energy, bold daring, and decision. The presence or absence of the beard, as an addition to the face, is the most marked and distinctive peculiarity between the countenances of the two sexes. Who can hesitate to admire the noble countenance of the Osmanli Turk of Constantinople, with his un-Mongolian length of beard? Ask any of the fair sex if they will not approve and admire the noble countenance of Mehmet Ali, Major Herbert Edwards, the hero of the Punjab, Sir Charles Napier and others, as set off by their beard? We may ask, with Beatrice, "What manner of man is he? Is his head worth a hat, or his chin worth a beard?" I have noticed the whiskers and beards of many of our most eminent physicians and merchants encroaching upon their former narrow boundaries, while it is well known that not a few of our divines have been convinced of the folly of destroying one of nature's fixed laws; but hitherto, their unwillingness to shock the prejudices of their congregations has prevented them from giving effect to their convictions. The beard is not merely for ornament, it is for use. Nature never does any thing in vain; she is economical, and wastes nothing. She would never erect a bulwark were her domain unworthy of protection, or were there no enemy to invade it.—Rowland on the Human Hair.

A SHORT PIECE On Long Skirts.

It was my fortune to be in the city of New York on the 14th of May last. The rain and mud did not prevent me, did not prevent many others of the ladies even, from attending church. A little after noon the rain ceased, and towards night there was considerable promenading.

The beauty (?) of long skirts was very manifest. It seems the fashion now is to have "the skirts long and sweeping." Some ladies made a faint and altogether unsuccessful attempt to keep their skirts out of the mud. If they lifted them before, their fullness caused them to trail deeper in the filth behind. If they raised one side, the other was still dragging in the nastiness. Many seemed to consider it indelicate to hold them up at all, except where the mud was the deepest. When they did raise them, what disgusting revelations of street-mud were to be seen on clothes and stockings! And such sights belong to the class which one will look at, just because they are disgusting.

How many constitutions were weakened by mopping through the mire those heavy skirts, and by the dampness they gathered upon feet and ankles! What a mean waste and spoiling of costly garments took place on that one day! What moral debasement, from the attention of the whole street being turned to see how ladies would manage with their lower extremities in a different case! Oh! how long will women be so infatuated in relation to dress? How long will manufacturers, merchants, and milliners enslave and befooled them! How long will respectable publishing-houses furnish villainous fashion-plates for them to look at? If I were publishing a periodical or sheet of any kind, I would as soon advertise a drinking saloon or house of ill-fame, as to herald one of the customary fashion-plates.

Too True.

Remarkable Discovery in Italy.

It is stated in a letter quoted by the Parliament of Turin of June 2, that the tomb of Odeacer, King of the Heruli, has been discovered at Ravenna by some workmen, who, it appears, found the body encased in a suit of armor of gold, which they broke into pieces and secretly sold. The matter was, however, soon divulged, and further investigation has led to the discovery of some precious articles which had escaped the rapacity of the culprits, and of a monumental inscription enforcing the fact of its being the tomb of Odeacer. Odeacer was king of the barbarians who overthrew the western Roman Empire in the year 476.—He was murdered by his conqueror, Theodore the Great, A. D. 493, and was buried at Ravenna, where, after the lapse of 1360 years, his remains have been found.

A late number of the Charleston Mercury contains an account of the celebration of the 4th of July, at Orangeburg Court House.—Among the sentiments we notice the following:—

"The Free Negro States.—We envy them not—they are institutions whose fruits are mob violence, murder, and every crime which disgraces humanity."

"The Nebraska and Kansas Bill.—Though right in principle, the only benefit we expect from it is the Union of the South to resist the aggressions to which we hope it will excite our enemies."

But it was left to Capt. Moss to develop the theory of freedom. Hear his language, and be astonished at the brazen impudence of this true representative of the empire of South Carolina:—

"The Institution of Slavery.—The strongest element in Republican Government; the one is absolutely essential to the existence of the other."

Illiterate Persons in Massachusetts and New-England.

According to the census of 1850, there were then in Massachusetts 28,346 persons upwards of twenty years of age, who could not read or write; of whom, 11,578 were white males, and 15,961 white females; 375 colored males, and 431 colored females; 1,861 natives, and 26,484 foreigners. In all the rest of New England there were 24,449 persons who could not read or write, as follows: Maine, 6,282; New Hampshire, 3,009; Vermont, 6,240; Rhode Island, 3,607; Connecticut, 5,306. Of this number 6,266 were natives, and 18,208 foreigners.

Horace Greely, it is well known, has taken to farming. Last year, when in Massachusetts attending the poultry show, he bought half a dozen pure Cochins China eggs, $6 a dozen, which produced him six ugly ducks.—An editor from Maine however fared still worse. He bought half a dozen eggs of "a new variety," which the dealer assured him would produce very rare birds. So they did, for they were put under the very best hen, and in due time came out—"what do you think?" "I could not guess," said his friend—"what were they?"

"LAND TURTLES, and what was worse, as soon as they were hatched they seized upon the old hen, and such a squalling never was heard in any other hen's nest."

Is Judge Douglas a Jesuit?

When Judge Douglas visited Rome, during the year 1853, it was announced that "A distinguished American Senator, belonging to the Democratic party," had given in his adhesion to Romanism, and had received the benediction of the Pope.—The authority came from a correspondent at Rome to no less distinguished organ of the Catholic Church than the Freeman's Journal. As Bishop Hughes, whose organ the Journal is, was then in Rome, the statement was attributed to him, and its truth not for a time questioned.

A year has passed away, since the announcement of Judge Douglas' connection with Romanism was made, and generally discredited through the instrumentalities, and for the purposes, mentioned, and what do we now see? We answer:—The fullest confirmation of what was first stated in the Freeman's Journal, by Bishop Hughes.—The Jesuit party and the Romish Church, in every State in the Union, give him a support marked by a unanimity never before manifested towards a person who was not one of them.—Every where, his cause is not only sanctioned by them, but they give him active aid. He sustains the principle of Slavery on which their existence is based, and they sustain him.—They act with a most perfect understanding. They seek the establishment of slavery, with its concomitants, ignorance and religious superstition, as a means of sustaining and building up their power, and he seeks their votes for the Presidency. The bargain is struck—he becomes a Jesuit, and the oath creates confidence. They move together as one body, he working for Jesuitical ascendancy by the establishment of certain principles, and they pushing him forward to the Presidency, where his power in their favor can be exercised more potently.—Chicago Tribune.

Facts in Human Life.

The number of languages spoken in the world amounts to 3,064. The inhabitants of the globe profess more than 1,000 different religions. The number of men is about equal to the number of women. The average of human life is about 33 years. One quarter die previous to the age of seven years; one half before reaching 17; and those who pass this age enjoy a felicity refused to one half the human species. To every 1,000 persons only one reaches 100 years of life; to every 100 only 6 reach the age of 65; and not more than one in 500 lives to 80 years of age. There are on earth 1,000,000,000 inhabitants, and of these, 333,333,333 die every year, 91,824 every day, 3,730 every hour, and 60 every minute, or one every second. These losses are about balanced by an equal number of births. The married are longer lived than the single, and above all, those who observe a sober and industrious conduct. Tall men live longer than short ones. Women have more chances of life in their favor previous to being fifty years of age, than men, but fewer afterwards. The number of marriages is in proportion of 75 to 100 individuals. Marriages are more frequent after the equinoxes; that is during the months of June and December. Those born in the spring are generally more robust than others. Births and deaths are more frequent by night than by day. The number of men capable of bearing arms is calculated at one fourth of the population.

The difference of elevation of the valleys of the Missouri and Mississippi has been determined. The level of the Missouri at Council Bluffs is one thousand and twenty feet above the Mexican Gulf; that of the Mississippi at Rock Island, in the same latitude, only five hundred and twenty-eight feet. At Port Pierre, in latitude 44.24, the elevation is one thousand and fifty-six feet, while at the lower end of Lake Pipin, in the same latitude, the elevation is only seven hundred feet above the Gulf.

There are in the Missouri 215 islands between the Yellow Stone and its mouth; one half of them produce forest trees, chiefly cottonwood and plane tree, below the Platt, and above it intermingling gradually with trees and shrubs peculiar to higher regions, until the predominating growth is stunted cedar and pine. The number of its tributaries within the same space is over two hundred.—Very few of them are of any size or length. The Kansas and the Platt are the only ones west of the States of any value for navigation.

them.—
is not em, but aid. He Slavery ence is him.— perfect seek the ry, with ance and a means iding up ks their
y. The becomes creates together for the es-principles, forward here his be ex-Chicago ages spo-
to
of the an 1,000 ne num-to the ne aver-about 33
e previ-
years; 17; and enjoy a half the ry 1,000
hes 100 00 only and not res to 80 on earth ts, and e every 3,730
minute.
These
d by an
The
ed than l those l indusmen live
Women life in eing fit-en, but number rtion of Marria-ter the ing the ember.
ing are man othare more by day.
able of ed at one ation of uri and rmined.
ouri at ousand
he Mex-issippie same red and t Port
4, the and and e lower e same is only ve the Missouri
Yellow
ne half trees, plane above y with iar to e pretunted umber
e same red.— of any as and s west ue for

"A sweet little girl in New Haven, only three years old, was promised one evening that she should accompany her parents to Boston the next morning. She was much elated by the prospect of the journey, and when she had finished repeating her little prayer that night, she said with the most exquisite simplicity, 'Good bye, God—good bye, Jesus Christ—I am going to Boston in the morning.'"

"The New Orleans Bulletin adds, that it is not simply children, but grown people as well may feel that they bid good bye to all expectations of divine influence on going to Boston."—Etc. paper.

REMARKS.—And not only in going to Boston do grown up children often bid their Maker good bye, but a great many do it every Sunday night when they lay aside their go-to-meeting clothes. We see them on Monday morning wide awake for trade, and ready to jew a customer out of the last farthing if they can; and if you trade with them day after day, you would not suppose from their dealings that they ever thought of God or religion. When Sunday comes round again they say "good morning" to the Majesty on high, draw down their faces and go to church, apparently as self-satisfied as though they had been working righteousness all the week; but when night comes it is "good bye," and six days more are spent in fibbing over their wares and cheating their customers.

There are many such people in the world; but none need take what I have said home to themselves, unless it belongs to them. But I took up my pen to notice the pernicious influence of teaching children to utter words of prayer like parrots, without understanding what they say. It appears that this child, though it had been in the habit of repeating its little prayers, was as ignorant of the character of God and of Christ, and of the true nature of prayer, as the beasts that perish.—True prayer is the desire of the heart; the breathing of a pure spirit to its Father for good, and frames its own words, when words are needed, or is breathed out in silence when words are not needed. It is a living desire begotten of God.

You may teach a child to utter words of prayer at set times, and that child may go on uttering such prayers from the cradle to old age, and yet never once will the true spirit of prayer be breathed forth in a single word uttered; but the prayer will be words and nothing more, no faith, no life, no true godly breathings of the soul will be in them. And here is where nearly all the hireling priests and their dupes are now—uttering words which they call prayer, while they possess no more sense of a true spiritual prayer than did this child. Teaching children to repeat prayers is therefore an injury, inasmuch as they are taught to put sound for substance, and words for spirit.—J. Hacker.

The Albany Journal is responsible for the following:—

Twenty-eight years ago, "Jo Smith," the founder of this sect, (the Mormons,) and "Harris," his first convert, applied to the senior editor of the Journal, then residing in Rochester, to print his "Book of Mormon," then just transcribed from the Golden Bible, which "Jo" had found in the cleft of a rock, to which he had been guided by a vision.

We attempted to read the first chapter, but it seemed such intelligible jargon, that it was thrown aside. "Jo" was a tavern idler in the village of Palmyra. Harris, who offered to pay for the printing, was a substantial farmer. Disgusted with what we deemed a weak invention of an impostor, and not caring to strip Harris of his hard earnings, the proposition was declined.

The manuscript was then taken to another printing office across the street, from whence, in due time, the original Mormon Bible made its advent.

"Tall trees from little acorns grow." But who would have anticipated, from such a bald, shallow, senseless imposition, such world-wide consequences? To remember the contrast, "Jo Smith," with his loafer look, pretending to read from a miraculous slate stone placed in his hat, with the Mormonism of the present day, awakens thoughts alike painful and mortifying. There is no limit, even in this most enlightened of all ages of knowledge, to the influence of imposture and credulity. If knaves, or fools, invent creeds, nothing is too monstrous for belief. Nor does the fact—a fact not denied nor disguised—that all the Mormon leaders are rascals as well as impostors, either open the eyes of their dupes or arrest the progress of delusion.

The senior editor of the Journal we take to be Thurlow Weed, who, at or soon after the time alluded to, published an Anti-Mason paper at Rochester. Twenty-eight years ago was 1826, when the Book of Mormon was not transcribed. This was accomplished in 1829—three years too late for Mr. Weed.

We do not understand why so respectable a gentleman as Thurlow Weed should indulge in such a falsehood; an assertion the falsity of which can be shown by thousands of witnesses in the State of New York, having no connection with Mormonism, we are unable to divine.

The statement following after, that Harris took the manuscript to another office "across the street, from whence, in due time, the original Mormon Bible made its advent," is equally false, and equally foolish in falsehood.

The Book of Mormon was not printed in Rochester, but in Palmyra. It came off the press of E. B. Grandin & Co., Palmyra, N. Y., 1830.

If men of Thurlow Weed's standing will publish such absolute falsehoods in immaterial matters, to make their case against the Mormons, when will there be an end of imposition?

We shall send this article to Thurlow Weed, marked. If he will undertake to defend his assertions, we undertake to prove them false in every material point, to the satisfaction of any respectable gentleman as sole judge whom he will name, in the State of New York.

If Mr. Weed has anything to say in excuse or correction of his error, or in defence of his assertion, we will cheerfully publish it.

Saint James, Sept. 18, 1854.

MR. EDITOR:—Having a few leisure moments, I improve them in penning a few lines, which, if you think proper, you may insert in the Islander.

I wish it distinctly understood that I am no preacher, (that being entirely out of my line of business,) but I will give your readers a short sketch of my experience. It is not very lengthy, but to the point.

Mormonism (so called) having become quite a topic in this generation, I concluded to investigate it for my own satisfaction. As there was a great deal said derogatory to the character of the Mormons as a people, my curiosity was excited to know the truth of all these reports. I accordingly settled with them, and for six years have been very intimately acquainted with them; and from the acquaintance I have formed in that time, I can say, that for pure morals, chastity and virtue they exhibit a far greater amount than any community in which I have ever lived.

Now, to those of your readers who stand off and are continually barking about and berating the Mormons, I would say, acquaint yourselves with them, and not take the tales of those who are so corrupt themselves that they think no one is to be respected. Examine for yourselves, and by a thorough investigation I am satisfied that you will, if you judge impartially, say with me, the Mormons have been misused, slandered and belied beyond endurance.

It is alleged that the Mormons will skin a man alive, as regards property. When I settled among them these stories were continually in my mind, but the result was I did not lose one cent's worth.—It is also alleged that the Mormons get other men's wives. Well, they have not got mine, and I know of no such custom among them; and I know, furthermore, that the allegation is false. I am not going to take up the thousand different stories and falsehoods against the Mormons, to show others that they are all lies without the least shadow of foundation, for they have the same chance to prove them that I had. Judge not without a proper investigation, and you will arrive at the same conclusion that I have, viz: "what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

He may gain friends, property, and everything that his heart can wish in this life, but he cannot exchange it all for an inheritance in the kingdom of God. Every man who investigates Mormonism thoroughly, will say,—I will be a Mormon.

Yours, &c.,

KEYES.

St. Louis, Sept. 1.

The Salt Lake mail arrived today.

Peace had been established between the people of Salt Lake City and all the tribes of Utah. Governor Young having concluded a treaty with all the Chiefs.

The health of the country was good. Rains had been more abundant than ever before, and a much larger quantity of land was under cultivation.

Grass was scarce, owing to the large amount of cattle driven over the plains to California—estimated at 150,000 this season.

Four thousand persons had gone to Salt Lake this season.

The Drouth.

The dry weather in Ohio set in about the first of June. The corn and potato crops are destroyed beyond remedy. Late planted corn is but two or three feet high, dry and dead.—The pasture fields, even the lower meadows, afford no nourishment to cattle, but give forth dust beneath their tread. Fruit less than half a crop. Garden vegetables are a total failure. And, to crown all, fires are breaking out in every direction, sweeping over fields, destroying fences, and periling dwellings and barns.—Alton (Summit Co.) Beacon.

Many dare not express their honest opinions, for fear of persecution. Such are slaves; they feel that they are slaves; they are regarded by others as slaves; are despised for their cowardice, by the very persons whose persecuting spirits they feared. The better way is to be bold and independent; speak out honestly, when occasion requires; strength to bear persecution, will be received in such a course.—Boat.

Payments for the Islander.
J. T. Pentleton, $3.00, to No. 96. David B. Alvord, 1.13, to 74. Isaac Van Tassel, 1.13, to 74. Warren Post, 2.00, to 100. A. J. Porter, 50 cts., to 70. F. Bevier, 62 cts., to 77. Joseph Winders, 2.00, (by J. Smith,) to 115. Samuel Williams, 2.00 to 94.

SHOEMAKING.

THE subscriber wishes to inform the citizens of Beaver Island and vicinity that he is prepared to wait on those who may wish to have work done in his line of business, near the Steam Mill, where, by good work and strict attention to business, he hopes to be liberally patronized by the public.

I'll make and mend your boot and shoe, Mend, if you please, your harness too; Come, all who're wanting good work done, And call on J. T. PENDLETON.
August 21, 1854. 61—1.

ELECTION NOTICE.

Sheriff's Office, Saint James, }
September, 6th, 1854. }
A GENERAL ELECTION will be held in the County of Emmet, State of Michigan, on Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, (November 7th,) A. D. 1854, at which will be chosen the officers named in the following notice from the Secretary of State; also for County Officers, one Sheriff, one County Clerk, one Register of Deeds, one County Treasurer, one Prosecuting Attorney, one Circuit Court Commissioner, one Judge of Probate, (to fill vacancy,) one County Surveyor, and two Coroners.

J. L. MILLER, Sheriff.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Lansing, Mich., August 14th, 1854.

TO THE SHERIFF OF EMMET COUNTY:

You are hereby notified, that at the General Election, to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, in the State of Michigan, the following officers are to be elected, viz: A Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of State, Auditor General, State Treasurer, Commissioner of the State Land Office, Attorney General, Superintendent of Public Instruction, one member of the State Board of Education, in place of Chauncey Joslin, whose term of office will expire January 1st, 1855, one other member of the State Board of Education, for the residue of the term of the Hon. Isaac E. Crary, deceased, and a Representative in Congress for the fourth Congressional District of this State, to which your County is attached.

Also a Senator for the twenty-ninth Senatorial District, consisting of the Counties of Leapeer, Saginaw, Tuscola, Midland, Gladwin, Aracac, Roscommon, Ogemaw, Isocoe, Alcona, Osceola, Crawford, Osego, Montmorency, Alpena, Presque Isle, Wyandot, Emmet and Cheboygan.

Also one Representative for the District consisting of the Counties of Newaygo, Oceana, Lake, Mason, Manistee, Grand Traverse, Wexford, Missaukee, Roscommon, Ogemaw, Isocoe, Alcona, Osceola, Crawford, Kalamazoo, Oceana, Leelanau, Antrim, Osego, Montmorency, Alpena, Presque Isle, Wyandot, Emmet and Cheboygan.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and affixed the Great Seal of the State of Michigan, at Lansing, this fourteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

W. GRAVES,
Secretary of State.

*There are no such counties in the State.

[ED. 1854.]

FRUITS AND FARINACEA.

THE ORIGINAL AND

PROPER FOOD OF MAN.

Proving that the natural and best human diet is derived from the vegetable kingdom.

From the second London edition, with notes and engraved illustrations.

BY R. T. TRALL, M. D.

Published by Fowlers and Wells, 308 Broadway, New York. Complete in one volume, substantially bound, price $1.25.

It discusses the question of Dietetics in all its aspects and bearings. The philosophy of the subject is presented in a remarkably clear and comprehensive manner. Reason, Revelation, Human Experience, Natural History, Chemistry, Anatomy and Physiology have been searchingly investigated, and their evidences lucidly recorded; while an immense amount of important statistical data has been compressed and presented in an admirably systematic manner. It is precisely such a text book as the age, the times and the state of the public mind in reference to diet demand. We give a brief abstract from the table of contents.

Introduction—Fruits and Herbs bearing Seed appointed to Man for Food—Longevity of the Antediluvians—Man created in the Divine Image—Opinion that Man is progressive in Mental and Moral Qualities—Natural Food of Man not determined by Climate, but by Structure—General Characteristics of Carnivorous and Herbivorous Animals—Intermediate Character of Man's Digestive Organs—The Gastric Juice varies according to the Food—Organs in which Man differs from other Animals—Opinions of Linnæus, Cuvier, Lawrence, Bell, and others—Objections answered—Animals trained to live upon and relish Improper Food—Difference between Adaptation and Adaptability—Slaughtering of Animals opposed to the exercise of Benevolence—Cruelty to Animals—Demoralizing Influence of Torturing and Killing Animals—Cases in which Man is justified in Destroying Animals—Processes of Decay and Nutrition—A Mixed Diet—Food should vary according to the Character of the Digestive Organs—Time in which various Articles are converted into Chyme—Experiments—Variety of Food not so necessary as a due Admixture of Nutritious and Innutritious Matter—Best kind of Bread—Vegetable Diet—Opinions of Pythagoras, Plutarch, etc.—In what Health consists—Food Nutritive and Stimulative—Stimulation not Strength—More Oxygen required when Animal Food is taken—Protracted Labor endured better on a Vegetable than on an Animal Diet—A greater Degree of Cold may be sustained on Vegetable Diet—On what the States of Health and Disease depend—Opinions of Medical Writers on the Production of Disease—Recent Origin of Certain Diseases—Direct Injuries caused by the Flesh and Milk of Animals—Decay of the Teeth—Dyspepsia cured by a Fruit and Farinaceous Diet—Effects of different kinds of Food on the Lower Animals—Development most Regular when the Processes are Slow—Effects of a Full Meal of Animal Food—Temper and Dispositions of Carnivorous and Herbivorous Animals—Nations living principally on Flesh more Cruel than others—The Propensities prematurely Developed by Animal Diet—Injurious Effects of Animal Diet on Children—Period of Perfect Development the only one that can be indefinitely extended—Chyle and Blood from Vegetable Food more Pure—General Comparison of the Effects of Animal and Vegetable Food—View of the Subject as regards Economy—Immense Resources of Food in the Vegetable Kingdom—Best Mode of commencing Vegetable Regimen—Rules for the Preservation of Health—Fruit, Grain, Tubers for Human Food.

Contents of Notes.

Absurd Experiments on Animals—A Clergyman on Butchering—All Nutrient formed by Vegetables—Bathing Invigorates the Skin—Bible Authority—Common objections to Vegetarianism—Diet in relation to Toxopache—Digestive Apparatus—Effects of Cooking on Flesh—Effects of Tea and Coffee—Experimental Evidence—Food in relation to Animal Heat—Fruits in Flesh and Poultry—Herbivora taught to eat Flesh—Illustrations of the Teeth—Iron in the Blood—Making Food into Blood—Milk Sickness—Modus Operandi of Stimulants—Nutritive Quality of Fat—Organization in relation to Diet—Permission to eat Flesh—Physiological Cook Book—Pictorial Illustrations—Prevalence of Consumption—Salt as a Dietetic Article—Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism—Vegetarians best endure Fasting—Hard Water.

This work will be prepaid by mail. Complete in One Volume, handsomely bound, for $1.25. Address, post paid, FOWLERS & WELLS, 308, Broadway, New York.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of Withdrawal of certain Lands in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, on the routes of the Oakland and Ottawa, and other proposed Rail Roads.

At the solicitation of a majority of the Delegation in Congress from the State of Michigan, the President of the United States, by his order bearing date the 1st of May, instant, has directed that the following named townships be withdrawn from sale or entry until further orders, except for valid pre-emption claims, to wit:—

IN THE STATE OF MICHIGAN.

In the district of lands subject to sale at Duncan:

North of the base line and west of the principal meridian, lower peninsula.

Townships thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range two.

Townships thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range three.

Townships thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range four.

Townships thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range five.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, and thirty-seven, of range seven.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, and thirty-four, of range eight.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

POETRY.

Influence and Retribution.

BY DAVID BARKER.

Ye cannot send the simplest line,
Abroad from off your pen,
But ye must meet in future hour
That very line again.

The slightest word ye cannot speak
Within a mortal ear,
But that the echo of such word
Ye must forever hear.

Ye cannot stir one single step,
While journeying here below,
But that some brother takes your path
For happiness or woe.

Unholy thoughts ye cannot think,
Though never once expressed,
But that some Demon plucks those thoughts
To fill another's breast.

Then watch your pen with miser care,
And let its labors be,
Fount of solace to the soul
And not of misery.

And guard your lips, nor let them speak
A word which future years,
Can by some magic process change
To bitter burning tears.

And mark the road on which ye stand,
And note your footsteps well,
And shun that broad frequented track
That leads away to hell.

And check your vain unholy thoughts,
As much as in you lies;
Nor let them rob you of that bliss
Beyond the starry skies.

The Head and Heart.

BY JOHN G. BAKE.

The head is stately, calm and wise
And bears a princely part;
And down below, in secret, lies
The warm impulsive heart.

The lordly head that sits above,
The heart that beats below,
Their several office plainly prove,
Their true relation show.

The head erect, serene and cool,
Endow'd with Reason's art,
Was set aloft to guide and rule
The throbbing, wayward heart.

And from the head, as from the higher,
Comes all directing thought;
And in the heart's transforming fire,
All nobler deeds are wrought.

Yet each is best when both unite
To make the man complete—
What were the head without the light?
The light without the heat?

Julia's Letter.

BY LORD BYRON.

One of the most passionate effusions in the whole range of poetry.

They tell me 'tis decided; you depart;
'Tis well—'tis well, but not the less a pain;
I have no further claim on your young heart,
Mine is the victim, and would be again:
To love too much has been the only art
I used—I write in haste and it is stain
Be on this sheet, 'tis not what it appears;
My eyeballs burn and throb, but have no tears.

I loved, I love you, for this love have lost
State, station, heaven, mankind's, my own esteem,

And yet cannot regret what it hath cost,
So dear is still the memory of that dream;
Yet, if I name my guilt, 'tis not to boast:
None can deem harsher of me than I deem:
I trace this scroll because I cannot rest—
I've nothing to reproach, or to request.

Man's love is of man's life a thing apart,
'Tis woman's whole existence; man may range
The court, camp, church, the vessel, and the mart,

Sword, gown, gain, glory, offer in exchange,
Pride, fame, ambition, to fill up his heart;
And few there are whom these can not estrange;

Men have all these resources, we but one,
To love again, and be again undone.

You will proceed in pleasure and in pride,
Beloved, and loving many, all is o'er
For me on earth, except some years to hide
My shame and sorrow deep in my heart's core!

These I could bear, but cannot cast aside
The passion which still rages as before,—
And so farewell—forgive me, love me—No,
That word is idle now, but let it go.

My breast has been all weakness, is so yet;
But still I think I can collect my mind;
My blood still rushes where my spirit's set,
As roll the waves before the settled wind;
My heart is feminine, nor can forget—
To all, except one image, madly blind;
So shakes the needle, and so stings the pole,
As vibrates my fond heart to my fix'd soul.

I have no more to say, but linger still,
And dare not set my seal upon this sheet,
And yet I may as well the task fulfill,
My misery can scarce be more complete;
I had not lived till now, could sorrow kill;
Death shuns the wretch who fain the blow
would meet,

And I must even survive this last adieu,
And bear with life to love and pray for you!

Many a tender tie is broken,
Many a gentle heart distressed,
By a careless sentence spoken,
Spoken only as a jest.

CHARACTER.

The characters of individuals are, undoubtedly, in a very great measure formed by surrounding circumstances; and the statement that man is the creature of circumstances, is not altogether without foundation.

Though if man were altogether the creature of circumstances, his free agency would be completely lost, and his responsibility annihilated, he would be as a sheet of paper that has lain perfectly passive under the hand of the writer, and is completely filled with matter. While on the other hand, if man were not affected by circumstances, his free agency could not be called into exercise, and he would cease to act and be as a blank sheet, that has received no impression from the hand of the writer.

In the benighted condition of society consequent upon the introduction of sin into the world, man is not only in a great degree the creature of circumstances but far too much the slave thereof, while one great object of salvation is to impart the spirit of God unto man, by which he shall be emancipated from the shackles of sin, and be made free with the glorious liberty of the sons of God, or, in other words, to make him master of those circumstances to which he had formerly been subject.

If then the formation of character be influenced so much by surrounding circumstances, what should be the standard of excellency aimed at by a member of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints? His first act after he becomes a partaker of the illuminating influence of the spirit of God, will certainly be to shake off the spirit of selfishness that obtains so much among mankind, and being no longer desirous of living for himself, he will become God-like in procuring happiness for himself by ministering to the well-being of others.

But again, must not the Saint of God in the last days become ennobled by the contemplation of the position which he occupies, and of the relationship in which he stands to the God of heaven, and to his Son Jesus Christ?—To have been introduced into the family of God, to have taken upon himself legally the name of the family of heaven, and to be employed in, and associated with the Almighty, in carrying out his mighty schemes in relation to the human family, are certainly reflections that are calculated to ennoble and dignify every one that truly reflects upon the position which he occupies.

How necessary then is it, that we should seek to put away every thing that is paltry, little, or mean; and on the contrary, seek to be possessed of, and have a real manliness of spirit, a transparency of character in which is no guile, where the heart and the lip harmonize together, and in their bearing upon others, beget the same noble principles.

How many unworthy suspicions, and paltry jealousies would be for ever buried were these principles acted upon. Exercising that charity which thinketh no evil, we should be ready to give to all credit for seeking, according to their best ability, the general well-being and prosperity of the cause of God. In the kingdom there must be order and discipline, and it is impossible for all to occupy the same position. There must necessarily be presidents over branches and conferences.

Upon them rests a responsibility which others have not; they need our faith and prayers to uphold and encourage them; it is their duty to watch over and direct others according to the light and intelligence which they have received, for the good of the cause of truth; it is the duty of others to encourage and assist them in the same—to be of one spirit with them in executing measures to carry on the work of the Lord. Let no unworthy jealousies intrude themselves upon us, let us never watch for iniquity, or seek to fasten upon persons so situated the charge of partiality.

They are responsible for the plans which they seek to put in operation, and we are answerable for the carrying out of the same in righteousness. It is true, men may err, and do so, as we have too frequently cause to regret. Presidents may get out of order as well as others who do not preside, but it is not the duty of their councils to become their teachers, and thus reverse the position of the order of government,—by no means, they are responsible to higher powers, and when necessity demands appeals can be made to the right quarter for redress.

We make these remarks because we have often seen the evils resulting from such a course of procedure.

Individuals may indulge a captious, suspicious, and accusing spirit, until they entirely cease to honor either their president or his office, and ere they are aware they will have their minds disturbed, their spirits soured, and if they do not speedily retrace their steps they will find, that they have become the servants of Satan, in seeking continually to be the accusers of the brethren.

It is written, that "the heart is deceitful above all things," and in many respects it is so.—But let a person become thoroughly imbued with a spirit of finding fault, and being in darkness, his heart will persuade him that he is the champion of truth, of purity, and correct principles, at the same time that he is led by a false spirit, and is neither more nor less than the servant of the devil. But what would the spirit of the Lord dictate? Has his brother failings and weaknesses,—he would pray for him—were he convinced that his brother's natural qualifications did not equal his own, he would recognize his brother's calling of God, and look to him as a channel through which the Lord would be pleased to communicate intelligence and wisdom.

But when individuals are ready to accuse, all things are wrong. Perhaps the idea of seniority in the priesthood may be made a temptation unto them, until they kick against every measure in which they consider they are not duly honored in this respect.

But these things are failings, and let one and all seek to put them away; all contrariness, all bickerings, are calculated to retard the progress of the work of God, and most assuredly one characteristic of the Saint of God ought to be, to endure injury rather than by our opposition to throw an obstacle in the way of the progress of truth.

But not only ought the contemplation of our present position to benefit us, but there lies before us the illimitable future, the reward, the glory and exaltation of the Redeemed of God. If we are in possession of the spirit of God; if by a faithful walk and conversation that holy principle increases within us, how can it be otherwise than that we should improve in moral character, as we are continually approximating towards Deity itself, and look forward to the period when that unction from the Holy One shall enable us to know all things?

We have made the foregoing remarks not for any particular branch, or section of the Church, but for all, being convinced by the spirit of the Lord, that an adherence to these few hints will be found beneficial to every one, and cause them to attain to that elevation of character which shall prove that they have been ennobled and dignified by the spirit of God.—Millennial Star.

Woman and Her Mission.

Now, when the bubble of "Woman's Rights," has exploded, and the excitement that it engendered has subsided, it would not be ill-timed to consider, dispassionately, the merits of this reform movement, and the motives of its advocates. This latter class, its name was "Legion," was composed partly of those ladies who, through the want of personal attraction, the possession of some unamiable quality, were jogging along down the shady side of life, in "single blessedness," and who had waited, with commendable patience, for their "heart's idol" to "come to their bowers," and bear them away on the wings of love and happiness to some "secluded cottage home," where kisses and jessamine, affection and honey-suckles, would be blended in "most sweet confusion;" and though each day saw the prospect of the accomplishment of their desires

"Grow small by degrees, and beautifully less," and though Youth and Youth's feelings were fast departing, yet

"Hope, the charmer, lingered still behind," till at last, even the charmer grew weary of so uninteresting a habitation, and flew away to some younger bosom.

"Again to woo sweetly, again to betray." Our disconsolate friends, thus beholding all their anticipated pleasures

"Swept into wrecks anon, By Time's ungentle tide," and having reached that certain age, (which is like Mahomet's Loto-tree in the seventh heaven, "beyond which there is no passing,") have "unsexed them there;" and, casting to the winds all the woman's nature, and steeling their hearts against all "compunctious visitings," have joined eagerly in the crusade against our unfortunate sex, dilating upon the perfidiousness of man and his utter unworthiness, with all the zealous acerbity and bitterness of temper naturally resulting from long disappointment and final despair.

And here a word or two, to our very young, and consequently susceptible, gentleman readers. In the same cautious spirit that "Tomy Weller" conjures his dutiful son to "beware of the vidders," so do we entreat them to shun all romances. Your very impressive misadventure—your love of moonlight and poetry, who consider "Claude Melnotte" the model lover, and who see in every hirsute-looking gentleman, with his throat bared, a "Conrad" and a hero; who esteem the "Pirate's Serenade" a "love song," and who would willingly comply with the aforesaid Pirate's polite invitation to proceed in his "boat by the tower" to his "bark on the bay," and join him on "the deck of the gallant," in one of those peaceful excursions for which gentlemen of his benevolent profession are proverbial,—invariably degenerate either into the most hum-drum of "common-places;" or, finding in a closer contact with the materialities of this world, that it is not all couleur de rose, are transformed into the most unmitigated tergiversants; and the unlucky youth who has been ensnared by their charming juvenilities, will find that, as delightful as was their sauveur in mode in girlhood, as correspondingly disagreeable in after life will be their fortiter in re.

But we are digressing. We have spoken of one grand division of this great army that was laying siege to the citadel of our rights. Leaving this invincible maiden phalanx so perfectly shielded from all harm,—in the mail of their antiquity, let us contemplate the larger and more dangerous portion of their forces. These were those who had once enlisted under thy banner of Hymen, and who, having, by dint of shrowd generalship, accomplished the subjugation of their respective husbands, were (like Alexander looking for other worlds) seeking a more extended arena for the development of their peculiar talents, when the hand of Fanaticism started the movement of Social Reform. Throwing themselves into the breach, (did not modesty prelude, we might say breeches,) they were carrying on the unequal combat with a heartiness and pertinacity that was worthy of every commendation. Earnestly and sincerely did we congratulate the meek and dutiful husbands who owned these somewhat eccentric "movables," upon a probable cessation of domestic hostilities; as their Xantippes were reserving all their energies for the laudable purpose of awakening in the minds of their own sex a sense of their wrongs, and consequently indulging their "liege lords" with temporary silence, that they might more vigorously rail at mankind generally.

But we fear our lady readers will deem us excessively ungallant, and sadly wanting in respect towards the sex; and yet it is our very love and veneration for woman in her proper province, that leads us to declaim so warmly against those who, in elevating her (as they misname it,) to so unnatural a standard, would rob her of her chiefest charm—her purity of mind and thought, and of that

"Modest demeanor—that's the jewel of a." Her very familiarity is, to man, her principal attractiveness; and her total dependency, engendering in him a solemn obligation to protect and cherish her, is the great moral balance that prevents his erring nature from running into a thousand excesses. While the attributes of her mind, in a few isolated cases, have elicited our admiration, the qualities of her heart and her utter unselfishness will always win our affections. But it requires but a word to point out her province—and to direct her mission—home, the home of which she should be the essence and the soul; there, and there only, whether as the affectionate sister, the kind and filial daughter, the trusting loving wife, or, in the sacred name of mother, as the sweet instructress of her children, is she fulfilling her destiny; and there only can she rightfully claim the title of "God's best gift to man."

New York Leader.

Chip Basket.

Simon says there is no place like home, except the home of the girl you are courting.—Cute chap, that Simon.

A mathematician being asked by a stout fellow, "If two pigs weigh twenty pounds, how much will a large hog weigh?" he replied, "Jump into the scales, and I will tell you immediately."

"My son, take that jug and fetch me some beer."

"Give me some money, then, father."

"My son, to get beer with money, anybody can do that; but to get beer without money, that's a trick."

So the boy took the jug and out he goes, shortly he returned and placed the jug before his father.

"Drink," said the son.

"How can I drink," said the father, "when there is no beer in the jug?"

"To drink beer out of a jug," said the son, "when there is beer, anybody can do that, but to drink beer out of a jug when there is no beer, that is a trick."

Talking of well-bred ladies: we passed a certain house, a day or two since, and our eyes wandering where they had no business, looked in upon a woman who held a child under one arm; while with the other she was kneading bread. Here was a case in point.

English 'Appiness—Compliments.—"Ere wishin' you good 'ealth, Jim, had a 'appy life." (Drinks.)

"Think ye, Bill, think ye. I 'ad hought to be as 'appy a dog as ever lived, for I 'ave got a wife as can thrash any man of 'er weight, and 'ave a child of o'ly two 'ears and a 'alf, as can eat two pounds of beefsteak at a sittin', besides I hown the smallest black terrier in the world, as has no equal on a 'unt."

To GOOD TO BE LOST.—A correspondent of the New York Times relates the following story:—

As for advice, I doubt whether anybody—newspaper editors excepted—get so much of it, and care so little for it, as do publishers.—Many of them can tell good stories of their experience this way.

A number of years ago a brace of very virtuous and somewhat elderly ladies formed themselves into a committee to remonstrate with a prominent publisher respecting the character of the books which he issued. Bulwer's novels, if I remember rightly, were the special objects of their indignation. The worthy publicope, who was at first taken aback by the vivacity of their assault, put in as plea in mitigation that the greater portion of his publications were unexceptionable to even the severest criticism on the score of moral character.

The ladies looked dubiously over their spectacles. "Have you read this, or this, or this?" he asked, pointing out the titles of works on theology, and history, and biography, and poetry, and every department of literature which graced his extensive catalogue. Not one of them had the committee perused. "Then, perhaps," hinted the publisher, "you are not certain of the character of the works you object to; perhaps you may have not read them." "Yes we have," answered the spokeswoman, "we know their character perfectly well; we have read every word of them. Why will you publish such objectionable works?" "Madam," replied the sly bibliope, with a smile, "we publish them for ladies like yourself, who will never read anything else."

A rejoinder equal to that of Dr. Johnson to the lady who said to him, "Oh, Doctor, I am so glad that you have left all the naughty words out of your dictionary." "Madam," replied the gruff lexicographer, "you have, I see, been looking for them."

A lick back.—Four lawyers practiced in the same court in North Carolina—their names were Hilmon, Swain, Dews and Dodge.—While the last named was making a speech in a case, the first three wrote on a strip of paper an epitaph, and cast it directly before Mr. Dodge, where he must necessarily see it, as follows:—

Here lies Dodge, who dodg'd all good

And dodg'd a deal of evil;

Who, after dodg'd all he could,

He could not dodge the devil.

He raised the paper, read it, and instantly composed the following:—

Here lies a Hilson and a Swain,

Whose lot let no man choose;

They lived in sin and died in pain,

And the devil got his Dews (dews.)

"Do you believe in second love, Minister McQuade?"

"Do I believe in second love? Humph, if a man buys a pound of sugar, isn't it sweet? and when it's gone, don't he want another pound? and isn't that sweet, too? Troth, Murphy, I believe in second love."

The young lady who fell in love has just been pulled out by the daring fellow who struggled successfully with the word.

To keep your secret is wisdom, but to expect others to keep it is folly.

"Charlie, have you set her?"

"Yes, grandma."

"Fixed the nest all up nicely?"

"Mighty fine, grandma."

"How many eggs did you put under her?"

"One hundred and twenty grandmas."

"Why Charlie, what did you put so many under her for?"

"Grandma, I wanted to see her spread herself."

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 17.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, SEPT. 28, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 64.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

DIALOGUE

Between a Saint and an Enquirer after Truth.

Enquirer. Sir, I understand you are a member of the Church called Latter Day Saints. Why is the Church called by that name?

Saint. The term Saint is as old as Adam, and has been in use in all ages and dispensations as a sacred name applied to the people of God by inspiration, but more especially applied by the sacred writers to the people of God in the last days. Enoch, speaking of the latter day glory, says, "The Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints." Daniel, in speaking of the latter day glory, often uses the term "saints." The Psalms speak of the people of God in the latter day, saying, "Gather my saints together unto me;" and John the Revelator, in speaking of the latter day events, says, "Here is the patience and faith of the saints." For all these and many other reasons we consider that the people of God should be distinguished by no other name but that of Saints, the term Latter Day being appended as merely expressive of the age or dispensation in which we live.

E. But there are millions who profess to be the people of God, who are called various names, such as Roman Catholics, Methodists, Episcopalians, Protestants, and many others. Is it wrong for the children of God to be distinguished by these several names?

S. It doubtless is very erroneous, in as much as they are nowhere known in scripture, except in a prediction of John, where he describes Babylon as full of names of blasphemy.

E. What! are these names blasphemy?

S. It would seem they are, as they are a great insult to Christ, and a mockery of godliness.—Would it not be an insult or mockery for a wife to refuse to take the name of her husband, and to take the names of several other men? Or, rather, for several women who were not called by his name to profess to be his wives?

E. It certainly would. But what are the principles of the Latter Day Saints? For certainly the name alone cannot constitute them Saints.

S. No; the name alone can never make them Saints. In order to be a Saint, a person must keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, and also take the name.

E. Do the Saints consider it essential to salvation to keep the commandments of God?

S. Certainly. "He that heareth these sayings of mine," says Christ, "and doeth them, is like a man who built his house upon a rock," &c. Again, Christ has said, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things that I say?"—And again, "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven."

E. What must we do to come into his fold, and to keep his commandments?

S. We must believe in Jesus Christ, repent of our sins, and be baptized in his name, and then he has promised to forgive our sins, and grant us his holy spirit, by the aid of which we shall be enabled to understand and do our further duties.

E. What is it to believe in Jesus Christ?

S. It is to believe his word and promises, and the testimony of his servants.

E. What is it to repent?

S. It is to turn from our sins and humbly confess, and forsake them, and also to make restitution to those whom we have wronged.

E. What is it to be baptized in his name?

S. It is to be buried in the water in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and rise again out of the water, and this to be administered to us by one sent of God, and having authority to administer in holy things.

E. How do we prove that baptism is a burial?

S. Christ has said we must be born again of water and the Spirit, in order to our admission into the kingdom of God. Now, our first birth was a change of element.—We came forth from being immersed in water into the world, and began to breathe the air for the first time. This was our natural birth, and no one can be born again of water short of being again immersed in it, and coming forth from it, as in the natural birth.—Nothing short of an actual immersion and again coming forth into a change of element can possibly be considered a birth, by any one who knows anything of nature, or of language. Again, Paul calls baptism a burial in his writings to the Romans. He tells them they were "buried with him in baptism."

E. Admitting baptism to be a burial, still would not infant baptism answer every purpose?

S. No; because faith and repentance are necessary before baptism, without which the ordinance is of no manner of use; and not only so, but Christ has commissioned his servants to preach to them, to teach them, and then baptize them; and has promised that "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned."

Now if this commission is to be applied to infants, they will all be damned, both baptized and unbaptized; for all that this commission applies to must be damned except they believe, and this will apply to baptized ones and unbaptized ones. Now, no one will hold that all infants are damned; therefore no one will consistently apply this commission or any part of it to infants.

E. You seem to make this matter very plain, yet it not for one thing, and that is, the reflection arises that millions of people have had no other baptism but infant sprinkling, and it is painful to think that they are all in error, and that those who have died will not enter the kingdom of God. What then will become of them?

S. Those who have not had the gospel in its purity and fullness in this world, must have it preached to them after they are dead, that they may be judged according to men in the flesh, and live according to God in the Spirit. This objection might be made with equal propriety by the hundreds of millions of Pagans, for there have many millions more died in the faith of Paganism than those who have died in the faith of perverted Christianity in all its various forms. Now these Pagans were quite as precious in the sight of God as those who have lived and died in error under the perverted forms of the Christian religion. Now the same answer will apply to both.—They must have the gospel in the life to come, or they cannot enjoy the presence of God in the celestial glory. (See Peter's epistles.)

E. But how came all Christendom to be so long in error on these subjects?

S. The Roman Catholic Church (the whore of all the earth) handed down this error of infant baptism for many ages, and the Protestants never reformed it, therefore it still exists.

E. But could not ministers who are sent of God in the different sects have detected this error, seeing that they are sent to minister salvation, and salvation depends on the gospel in its fullness and purity?

S. The fact that they continued in this error proves to a demonstration that God did not send them, for when he sends them he reveals to them his truth, and they know the truth, and are made free by it, and are sent to bear witness of the truth. "He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." "But if more proof was wanting that they are not sent of God, we may have it from their own doctrine; for their doctrine is that God has given no revelation for many hundred years. Now if this be the case, how could he send them?—He can only send men by revelation. And the Roman Catholic Church being once corrupted, could not hand down a true priesthood any more than a thistle can produce a fig.

E. It appears, then, that the whole Church has been in the wilderness of apostacy and corruption for many centuries. But pray, sir, tell me how did the Latter Day Saints first originate, or from what source did they first obtain their priesthood and ordinances? Have they come down in purity from the days of the Apostles, and been hid up in some detached or secluded part of the earth, where, unknown and undisturbed, they were enabled to keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus unmixed and uncontaminated by the dark mists of Popery which over spread the rest of the world? Have they now burst forth from this retirement, as the champions of truth, to arouse the world from its long slumber, and to usher in the latter day glory?

S. Some of those who held the holy priesthood in ancient times, the priesthood which is after the power of an endless life, without beginning of days or end of years—some of those, I say, being raised from the dead, and others translated, still hold the Apostleship and priesthood; and it has pleased God to send them as holy angels to earth to reintroduce the pure gospel, and to commission and ordain the first instruments of the Latter Day Saints; and thro' this means the Church has been raised up, the ordinances and gifts restored, and thus the latter day glory has dawned upon the world, to prepare the way for the restoration of Israel, and the second coming of the Messiah.

E. This is indeed glorious news, if it be really true; but what are the evidences on which these important matters rest?

S. The ministering of angels, the visions and the revelations made to the founders of the Church of Latter Day Saints, are well established by the testimony of many witnesses, the greater part of whom are yet alive, but some are fallen asleep. These all testified that they had heard, and seen, and handled of the things which are now revealed; and, moreover, the Holy Spirit attends the ministering of the Saints, and confirms the word with signs and wonders, and gifts and mighty blessings, by the enjoyment of which the Saints who hearken to the testimony of these witnesses are enabled to come to the knowledge of the truth, and to add their testimony to those of the first witnesses; and thus a great and marvellous work is rolling forth among the children of men; and thus many things which were revealed and published some ten or twelve years since, are now being fulfilled in the eyes of every candid observer who has paid any attention to these things.

E. But is it not possible that these thousands of Saints who testify to visions, angels, revelations, and gifts, are all deceived by imagination or by some vain and delusive spirit?

S. The same question might be asked with propriety in regard to all the angels, visions and revelations which were enjoyed by the ancients, and recorded in the Bible, as these modern manifestations are quite as well authenticated as the ancient, and a modern man is no more liable to be deceived, or to deceive others than were the ancients. But if there be need of caution in this matter when so well authenticated, then how much need have we to be cautious how we embrace those systems which do not even profess to be revealed from heaven, and which offer no testimony whatever of their being true; for instance, the Church of England, Methodists, and other modern sects, can neither bring scripture, nor angels, visions, revelations, or anything else, to prove that God has instituted their churches or systems of worship; on the contrary, they declare that God has revealed nothing to any man for more than a thousand years past, and that the scripture order of things is done away forever, and their senseless forms without power instituted in its stead.

E. Really, sir, I must say that the great truths you have set before me are reasonable and evident; and I am inclined to embrace the truth, and to cast my lot among the Saints. But is there no preparation on my part which will make me more fit to repent and be baptized? Or must not God first do something to make me worthy?

S. No; God has done all on his part, and has sent you the gospel of reconciliation; and the first thing he requires of you is to repent and be baptized in his name for the remission of sins, and then he has promised to remit your sins and give you the gift of the Holy Ghost. Now, if you believe him, come now, and take him at his word; for if you tarry till you are better, you will never come at all.

I must now close this conversation, by forewarning you that the day of the Lord is at hand, and not many years hence the Son of God will be revealed from heaven; and then all the wicked will be destroyed from the earth, and the Saints of the Most High will possess the whole earth, and reign for ever and ever. Amen.

LAW OF THE UNITED STATES.
AN ACT to graduate and reduce the price of the public lands to actual settlers and cultivators.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all the public lands of the United States which shall have been in market for ten years or upwards, prior to the time of application to enter the same under the provisions of this act, and still remaining unsold, shall be subject to sale at the price of one dollar per acre; and all of the lands of the United States that shall have been in market for fifteen years or upwards, as aforesaid, and still remaining unsold, shall be subject to sale at seventy-five cents per acre; and all of the lands of the United States that shall have been in market for twenty years or upwards, as aforesaid, and still remaining unsold, shall be subject to sale at fifty cents per acre; and all of the lands of the United States that shall have been in market for twenty-five years and upwards, as re- said, and still remaining unsold, shall be subject to sale at twenty-five cents per acre; and all lands of the United States that shall have been in market for fifty years or more, shall be subject to sale at twelve-and-a-half cents per acre: Provided, That this section shall not be so construed as to extend to lands reserved to the United States, in acts granting land to States for railroads or other internal improvements, or to mineral lands held at over one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That upon every reduction of price under the provisions of this act, the occupant and settler upon the lands shall have the right of pre-emption at such graduated price, upon the same terms, conditions, restrictions and limitations, upon which the public lands of the United States are now subject to the right of pre-emption, until within thirty days preceding the next graduation or reduction that shall take place; and if not so purchased, shall again be subject to right of pre-emption for eleven months as before, and so on, from time to time, as reductions take place: Provided that nothing in this act shall be so construed as to interfere with any right which has or may accrue by virtue of any act granting pre-emption to actual settlers upon public lands.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That any person applying to enter any of the aforesaid lands shall be required to make affidavit before the register or receiver of the proper land office, that he or she enters the same for his or her own use, and for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation, or for the use of an adjoining farm or plantation, owned or occupied by him or herself, and together with said entry, he or she has not acquired from the United States, under the provisions of this act, more than three hundred and twenty acres, according to the established surveys; and if any person or persons taking such oath or affidavit shall swear falsely in the premises, he or she shall be subject to all the pains and penalties of perjury.

Approved Aug. 4th, 1854.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The following letter, from Pres. Strang, is in reply to one by a talented lady in Salt Lake City, to her sister in Saint James. Her letter is ably written, and we should publish it with pleasure, but we hardly feel at liberty to do so without permission, though it was not intended to be strictly private. She requests an answer from Pres. Strang, and the answer contains the substance of all the points mentioned by her:—

Saint James, Sept. 26, 1854.

Mrs. ————:—
DEAR SISTER—Your good sister, Mrs. ————, has done me the kindness to show me your letter of July 31st, in which you ask the "vain usurper," meaning me, "to write to you, and show forth his strong reasons," &c., and promise to "answer me according to my arguments."

I rejoice in reading this promise, believing it is made in all sincerity. I have never yet obtained such a promise from a Brighamite, but God has given me a soul; and I hope for none more worthy than the chronicler of the martyred prophet.

I shall not complain of you, dear sister, for calling me a vain usurper, when in the same line you acknowledge you "know not what claims" I "dare to urge," meaning that you know not what evidence God has vouchsafed, that he has given me a dispensation of the kingdom.

And as David of old was a fugitive from the wrath of Saul, long and tedious years after God gave him the kingdom, and made him King by his holy anointing; in his company I can endure the name of "fugitive King," with neither crimson nor blush on my cheek, remembering that Jesus Christ, the heir of David and heir of God, the King of Kings, was also a fugitive from the face of wicked men, and hid himself in dens and caves, and mountains, and desert places.

But, God's name be praised, though fugitive once, fugitive no longer. It has pleased God, by whose voice I was called, and whose angels anointed me, to give me the kingdom, and to commit to my hands deliverance for the oppressed. The little flock fear no longer. But the fear of us is on those that hate us.

God has been too good to me, for me to be resentful for any such unkindness. But, would it not be commendable, for a noble woman, the beloved historian of a much beloved prophet, to learn from the example of Michael, the Archangel, who durst not bring a railing accusation even against the Devil? (Jude 9.) It is said, of old, "be mindful to entertain strangers, for so some have entertained Angels." In this dispensation, the fault of men has not been so much shutting the doors against Angels, as falsely accusing the prophets and Saints, of whom the accusers "knew not."

Dropping this subject as one which, from your sensitiveness on the character of the prophet Joseph, I know you will not misappreciate, allow me to tell you that if you "know not what claims I dare to urge," it is no fault of mine that you remain uninformed; and if I am called on now to show my strong reasons, it is not because I have not shown them often enough already.

My strong reasons were shown more than ten years ago, and as often as any occasion arose from that time to this; and no man who follows Brigham Young has ever attempted to answer them.—None ever will. They know they are unanswerable. More than that, sister: to dispute my prophetic calling, is to say that Joseph Smith is an impostor, and Mormonism a lie. Probably you are not now prepared to take my word for this. I only ask you to take Joseph's.

Joseph gave numerous revelations concerning the law of prophetic succession, establishing most distinctly this rule:—"That whenever Joseph ceased to act on earth in the prophetic office, whether removed by death, by transgression, or by whatever means, another should be raised up in his stead, who should be called by revelation of God given unto Joseph, and be ordained as he was, by the hand of angels."

Among the multitude of testimonies which Joseph has given that this is the law of God, I will now refer you to the following:—

I have sent forth the fullness of my gospel by the hand of my servant Joseph; and I have given unto him the keys of the mysteries of those things which have been sealed, even things which were from the foundation of the world, and the things which shall come from this time until the time of my coming, if he abide in me, and if not, another will I plant in his stead. D. & C. Sec. xi., p. 4.

But, behold, verily I say unto thee no one shall be appointed to receive commandments and revelations in this church excepting my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., for he receiveth them even as Moses. And thou (Oliver Cowdery) shalt not command him who is at thy head, and at the head of the church; for I have given him the keys of the mysteries and the revelations which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead. Sec. li., p. 2.

Verily I say unto you, the keys of this kingdom shall never be taken from you while thou art in this world, neither in the world to come; nevertheless through you shall the oracles be given to another, even unto the church. Sec. lxxxv., p. 2.

And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. Sec. xiv., p. 1.

But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments; and this I give unto you that you may not be deceived; that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the gate, and be ordained as I have told you before. Sec. xiv., p. 2. (Given Feb., 1831.)

Wherefore marvel not, for the hour cometh that I will drink of the fruit of the vine with you on the earth;—also with John the son of Zacharias;—which John (an angel) I have sent unto you, my servants, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Oliver Cowdery, to ordain you unto this first priesthood which you have received, that you might be called and ordained even as Aaron:—also with Peter, and James and John, (angels) whom I have sent unto you, by whom I have ordained you and confirmed you to be apostles and especial witnesses of my name, and bear the keys of your ministry; and of the same things which I revealed unto them: unto whom I have committed the keys of my kingdom, and a dispensation of the gospel for the last times; and for the fullness of times, in the which I will gather together in one all things, both which are in heaven and which are on earth. Sec. i., p. 2 & 3. (Given Sept., 1830.)

Nothing plainer than this is contained in the English language; nothing clearer has been spoken by the voice of prophets, or written by the finger of God.

Joseph no longer stands a prophet on earth. He is not standing among us to guide us as he was when these revelations were given, for God has taken him, and he wears the crown of King and Martyr.

What follows? Either Joseph has given the word of God appointing another in his stead, or those revelations have fallen to the ground, and Joseph has proved himself a false prophet, and Mormonism an imposture.

Neither you or I can take the latter alternate. We are both obliged, by our faith in Joseph as a true prophet, to say that "through him God has appointed another in his stead."

Who has been so appointed?—It is needless to say that there is not a person on earth who pretends to have received such an appointment, except myself. During the ten years since the martyrdom of Joseph, I, and I alone, have stood up as a prophet of God, claiming to have been appointed by revelation of God through Joseph, and to have been sent by the hands of Angels, as he was.

Therefore there is no escaping the conclusion that either I am a true prophet, and his lawful successor, or Joseph is a false prophet, and Mormonism an imposture. This is the only alternate with you. With me there is none. Called by the voice of God, and ordained by the hand of angels, since the day of his death I have known my calling, as he did his in the days of his ministry.

So forcible is the position I have above stated, that for years after Brigham Young assumed to stand at the head of the Church, the promise was held out continually that a prophet was yet to rise, who had been appointed by Joseph. Knowing the attachment of the Saints to the family of the martyred prophet, it was skillfully insinuated that one of the sons of Joseph had been so appointed, and that Brigham, to save him from being murdered by the Gentiles, as his father had been, was standing ostensibly in his place and governing by his authority, until the Church, being delivered from the fear of the Gentiles, should be able to acknowledge and defend their prophet. Any one who was in Nauvoo in 1846 and 1847, knows that a majority of those who started on the western exodus, started in this hope.

In the mean time the papers issued by Mormons in Nauvoo, New York and Liverpool, were continually preparing the minds of the Saints to expect a prophet for a leader, no more; telling them, "let no man for a moment think his place is to be filled by another," as though a successor would rob him of his crown; and claiming that the Twelve had power to dictate all the affairs of the Church in all the world, not under the direction of the Presidency, as they did in Joseph's time, but independently, as sectarian priests do.

This was the burden of their argument continually, till the great mass had got up as far as the Missouri River, and a little beginning made at Salt Lake; when, at the October Conference at the Tabernacle at Council Bluffs, they suddenly turned and acknowledged that the argument had all the time been against them, because the Strangites had adhered to the original constitution of the Church, and they had departed from it; and in order to mend their case so that we should have the best of the argument no longer, they then elected Brigham Young, Prophet, Seer, Revelator, First President, Successor to Joseph Smith, by whatever name the office may be called.

If an election by a local assembly of the Saints, called together without any such purpose, and authorized by no law to do such an act, is sufficient to make a man a Prophet of God, a Seer and a Revelator, the representative on earth of the name and power of the Almighty, then, and then only, have they helped their case.

To pretend that such an election is a fulfillment of that law which requires the leader of this Church to be called by the voice of God, and ordained as Joseph was, by the hand of Angels, is so utterly bald that it needs only to be stated, not answered.

And I have the assurance now of Benjamin Clapp, an Elder so much in the confidence of Brigham Young that he has entrusted to him the important mission of selecting locations and establishing stakes in various States, that at this day, though publicly sustained in the papers and official documents as Prophet, Seer, &c., Brigham disclaims himself any such office, and looks for a prophet yet to rise; thus yet playing fast and loose, to retain his actual position as leader, and hold on to those who are not blind enough to be deceived by a popular election to the Prophetic office.

(To be continued.)

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, SEPT. 28, 1854.

STATE NOMINATIONS.

Democratic Ticket.

For Governor,

JOHN S. BARRY.

For Lieut. Governor,

WILLIAM A. RICHMOND.

For Secretary of State,

WILLIAM L. BANCROFT.

For State Treasurer,

HINMAN.

For Auditor General,

JOHN SWEGLES, JR.

For Com. Land Office,

GOODRICH.

For Attorney General,

WITHERELL.

For Supt. Public Instruction,

For Board of Education,

To fill Vacancy,

PILCHER.

Independent Ticket.

For Governor,

KINSLEY S. BINGHAM.

For Lieut. Governor,

GEORGE A. COE.

For Secretary of State,

JOHN McKINNEY.

For State Treasurer,

SILAS M. HOLMES.

For Auditor General,

WHITNEY JONES.

For Com. Land Office,

SEYMOUR B. TREADWELL.

For Attorney General,

JACOB M. HOWARD.

For Supt. of Public Instruction,

IRA MAYHEW.

For Board of Education,

JOHN R. KELLOGG.

To fill Vacancy,

HIRAM L. MILLER.

The Chicago Tribune of August 26th contains a communication, signed C. D., purporting to be written by a passenger on the steamer Queen City, but apparently the work of some hotel runner, or penny-a-liner of the most ignorant class, which calls for a passing notice, rather on account of the respectability of the paper in which it has found a place than any force in the article itself.

We should suspect C. D. of being a servant of "little Douglass," from his presuming on the ignorance of the people of Chicago; for like man, like servant, who but the "little Giant" would imagine the readers of a Chicago Daily so ignorant as to believe the north end of Lake Michigan its "head?" and the big pump which supplies the Illinois and Michigan Canal its outlet?

We can conceive of nothing more gross than a correspondent of a leading Chicago Journal speaking of Mackinac as at the head of the Lake, and Chicago at the foot. After getting through that, forty errors in the geography of the country at this end of the Lake are but a small slice.—And yet we cannot but think the readers of the Tribune would rather have facts than falsehood.

That C. D. never made the trip he writes is sufficiently evident, when he states that he slept quietly every night for a week on the Queen City, on a trip from Chicago to Mackinac, only a short two day trip.

t at ined docu-
Brig-
h of yet and ition
those be a to

ER,
D,

ugust ation,
be stea-ently r, or orant
g nore-which force

belass," ignoago;
o but ngine y so orth ad?"
plies al its hing dent urnal

the o at ough grad of e.—
the athtrip lent, qui-

the ica-
two

This week's time may, however, have been spent in ascertaining that "the Sleeping Bear" was an Island—a new discovery in natural geography, for which C. D. will be entitled to the Swedish medal, granted annually by the King to whoever has made the greatest addition to geographical knowledge. The Mormon King ought to grant him a leather medal for the discovery that Beaver Island forms a County. It has always been supposed here that Beaver Island was in Emmet County, consisting of some twenty-five or thirty Islands, and some twenty townships of the Lower Peninsula. Certain it is that the County seat of Emmet County is at Saint James, on Beaver Island, and if the Island is a County by itself, Emmet must have been hard put to it to go there for a County seat.

After all these discoveries, who shall be surprised at the following?—

"At Beaver Island the boats have no fancy for stopping, as the Mormons are said to have a peculiar way of running through all the state-rooms and making particularly free with things generally. This is some 300 miles or more from Chicago, and took the 'Queen' one day and two nights, including landings, to reach it."

To this we wish to make a serious reply, which we hope the Tribune will do us the justice to copy.

Our reply is this: More boats stop at Beaver Island than at any other place north of Milwaukee, and that for the period of the last two years, during which the wharves here have been owned and controlled by Mormons, we have never heard one complaint of the kind here stated.

In the number of calls made by steamboats, the amount of fishing and passenger business, and of wood and other supplies purchased, the increase of business has, since the Mormons located here, been greater than at any other place between Buffalo and Chicago.

Beaver Island, so far from being avoided by the boats, has become a favorite resort. The number of boats which are regular customers here has doubled this season, and among the number are two boats on the same line with the Queen City. Others have applied, which the supply of wood here was not sufficient to accommodate.

If any one has the slightest doubt as to the facts, we would be happy to furnish him a list of the boats stopping here, and to refer him to those steamboat Captains who know most, of the business done, here both for the amount and growth of the business, and the character of the people.

There is an itching among people to hear something against the Mormons. Will not papers of the standing and character of the Tribune do us justice?—So doing, they would do much for our peace, and something to quiet the apprehensions of our fellow men.

INTERESTING RELIC.

A distinguished Mormon preacher has discovered what he represents to be a fragment of the material out of which Books of Mormon, Golden Bibles and all that sort of thing are manufactured.

We suppose there can be no doubt of the authenticity of the relic, as it was found in the house of the prophet. Who could possibly put a fragment of brass plate in the prophet's house but the prophet? And what could he possibly have it for, unless it was to manufacture a new Book of Mormon?

To us the evidence is as satisfactory as that in favor of infant sprinkling, contained in the passage, "And Balaam arose and saddled his ass." "What could the poor, dear man saddle his ass for, unless it was to carry his dear little infant to the priest to be sprinkled?"

We caution the reader against all suspicion of any imposition, except the imposition of prophets.—Of course prophets will forge ancient records on brass or gold, and of course they will put their chips where some intruding hand will find them—of course they will—why not?

Certainly, nobody could do such a thing as to forge the chips and impose them secretly on the weak minded, or the weak in faith.—No, no; there is no imposition in the world, except that of prophets. They are the only men that forge brass plates, or brass chips.

This is quite as conclusive as the brass kettle story. By the way, reader, did you ever learn the story of the brass kettle?—Well, if not, we feel bound to inform you. It is necessary to hear both sides, and then judge.

Benjamin Perce had an old brass kettle, with a notch in the side of it. Perce was uncle to Strang's wife. Strang had plates looking a little like brass, which somebody dug up from under an old oak tree, cased in an antique porcelain box. Therefore Strang must have made the plates out of the kettle. What could be more obvious? What else could uncle Ben's brass kettle have been cut up for?

Surely Mormonism will perish under all these assaults. That is as obvious as the soundness of the foregoing logic.

WAGES OF LABOR.

The wages of labor is every where high, but not so high in proportion as many things that laborers have to purchase. It should be observed that in all the fluctuations of prices, labor is the last thing to rise, and the first to fall. This is not the consequence of any merely speculative contrivance. It is a natural law of trade.

For no man can hold on to his labor for a better price. Each day passes with equal fleetness and equal certainty, whether the laborer toil or idle. If he refuses the present prices, he throws his time away—consumes it.

Hence strikes are futile. They waste the strength of those who undertake them, rather than those against whom they are undertaken. They are as if the merchants, because their goods would not sell at the asking prices, were to burn up each day the ordinary amount of a day's trade, and so continue, till the reduced stock would sell at the demanded price.

But in regard to property, a different rule prevails. If it cannot be sold to-day at the price asked, the owner holds on till to-morrow, next week, next month, or next year, for a better price than he is now offered.

Property can thus be preserved for a better market at a future time, but labor cannot.—For this reason there never was and never can be any real competition between capital and labor. Hence the capitalist is master of the laborer.

The reason why laborers have been less dependent in the United States than in European countries, is the abundance of cheap lands. The greatest independence they can have, grows out of the inalienable possession—of sufficient land for self-support.

But as many persons lack the economy and prudence to make productive farms out of wild land, though given to them, so in every place there must be more or less dependent on the wealthy for employment and sustenance.

But this is not what we intended to say. We commenced for the purpose of saying, that laborers' wages were higher here than at any place within our knowledge; and yet laborers are so scarce here, that one of the wealthiest employers is now off on a trip to hire help.

Why is it that our poor brethren who are scattered abroad, dare not come here for fear of suffering, when employers here are obliged to go away and hire Gentiles, at higher wages than they can get where they are?—And why do capitalists hang off on some scarcely living business, when those here are thriving beyond all previous example?

There is room here for fifty thousand, without crowding each other. The new comers would benefit instead of injure those here. And there is a better opening for those yet to come, than there was for those already here.

From seventy-five cents to a dollar a cord is now paid for cutting cord wood, and we cannot get half enough at that.—And at these prices the owners of wharves are making from twenty-five to fifty cents per cord on all the wood.

Mechanics wages are the same as in the large cities, and the expense of supporting families little if any more than half as high. If any one wishes to be with the Saints, what more could he look for? Those who are not satisfied, would not be if golden eagles rained down their chimneys, and would take the roof off the houses to catch more, and die of a cold taken by the exposure.

The Sept. No. of the Lady's Book, published by L. A. Godey, Philadelphia, is on our table. It is very neatly got up, and in its fashion plates and all that sort of thing, is far ahead of all competition. Those who wish to be always up to the latest style, and neat at that, can scarcely do without it.

Probably no publication in America exerts as much influence over the style and quality of female wardrobe as the Lady's Book.

As an evidence of its influence on style, there is scarcely a neighborhood where it is read but has witnessed more than one death, by compressing the body in unnatural forms, and too small space, to conform to Godey's fashion plates.

As there are numerous ladies sighing for an opportunity to become martyrs to fashion, we have no doubt this is a first rate puff. In our own house we present the Lady's Book to the young ladies, as certain ancient Greek republicans, we believe the Athenians, presented drunken slaves to their children—as a warning against the degradation of such vices. It is worth twice the cost for that use.

ELECTION NOTICE.

Sheriff's Office, Saint James, September, 6th, 1854. A GENERAL ELECTION will be held in the County of Emmet, State of Michigan, on Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, (November 7th,) A. D. 1854, at which will be chosen the officers named in the following notice from the Secretary of State; also for County Officers, one Sheriff, one County Clerk, one Register of Deeds, one County Treasurer, one Prosecuting Attorney, one Circuit Court Commissioner, one Judge of Probate, (to fill vacancy,) one County Surveyor, and two Coroners.

J. L. MILLER, Sheriff. OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE, Lansing, Mich., August 14th, 1854.

TO THE SHERIFF OF EMMET COUNTY:

You are hereby notified, that at the General Election, to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next, in the State of Michigan, the following officers are to be elected, viz: A Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of State, Auditor General, State Treasurer, Commissioner of the State Land Office, Attorney General, Superintendent of Public Instruction, one member of the State Board of Education, in place of Chauncey Joslin, whose term of office will expire January 1st, 1855, one other member of the State Board of Education, for the residue of the term of the Hon. Isaac E. Crary, deceased, and a Representative in Congress for the fourth Congressional District of this State, law which your County is attached.

Also a Senator for the twenty-ninth Senatorial District, consisting of the Counties of Lapeer, Saginaw, Tuscola, Midland, Gladwin, Arden, Roscommon, Ogemaw, Iosco, Alcona, Osceola, Crawford, Otsego, Montmorency, Alpena, Presque Isle, Wyandot, Emmet and Cheboygan.

Also one Representative for the District consisting of the Counties of Newaygo, Oceana, Lake, Mason, Manistee, Grand Traverse, Wexford, Missaukee, Roscommon, Ogemaw, Iosco, Alcona, Osceola, Crawford, Kalamazoo, Omena,* Leelanau, Antrim, Otsego, Montmorency, Alpena, Presque Isle, Wyandot,* Emmet and Cheboygan.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and affixed the Great Seal of the State of Michigan, at Lansing, this fourteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

W. GRAVES, Secretary of State. *There are no such counties in the State. [ED. 185.]

FRUITS AND FARINACEA, THE ORIGINAL AND PROPER FOOD OF MAN.

Proving that the natural and best human diet is derived from the vegetable kingdom.

BY JOHN SMITH. From the second London edition, with notes and engraved illustrations.

BY R. T. TRAILL, M. D. Published by Fowlers and Wells, 308 Broadway, New York. Complete in one volume, substantially bound, price $1.25.

It discusses the question of Dietetics in all its aspects and bearings. The philosophy of the subject is presented in a remarkably clear and comprehensive manner. Reason, Revelation, Human Experience, Natural History, Chemistry, Anatomy and Physiology have been searchingly investigated, and their evidences lucidly recorded; while an immense amount of important statistical data has been compressed and presented in an admirably systematic manner. It is precisely such a text book as the age, the times and the state of the public mind in reference to diet demand. We give a brief abstract from the table of contents.

Introduction—Fruits and Herbs bearing Seed appointed to Man for Food—Longevity of the Antediluvians—Man created in the Divine Image—Opinion that Man is progressive in Mental and Moral Qualities—Natural Food of Man not determined by Climate, but by Structure—General Characteristics of Carnivorous and Herbivorous Animals—Intermediate Character of Man's Digestive Organs—The Gastric Juice varies according to the Food—Organs in which Man differs from other Animals—Opinions of Linnæus, Cuvier, Lawrence, Bell, and others—Objections answered—Animals trained to live upon and relish Improper Food—Difference between Adaptation and Adaptability—Slaughtering of Animals and the exercise of Benevolence—Cruciality to Animals—Demoralizing Influence of Torturing and Killing Animals—Cases in which Man is justified in Destroying Animals—Processes of Decay and Nutrition—A Mixed Diet—Food should vary according to the Character of the Digestive Organs—Time in which various Articles are converted into Chyme—Experiments—Variety of Food not so necessary as a due Admixture of Nutritious and Innutritious Matter—Best kind of Bread—Vegetable Diet—Opinions of Pythagoras, Plutarch, etc.—In what Health consists—Food Nutritive and Stimulative—Stimulation not Strength—More Oxygen required when Animal Food is taken—Protracted Labor endured better on a Vegetable than on an Animal Diet—A greater Degree of Cold may be sustained on Vegetable Diet—On what the States of Health and Disease depend—Opinions of Medical Writers on the Production of Disease—Recent Origin of Certain Diseases—Direct Injuries caused by the Flesh and Milk of Animals—Decay of the Teeth—Dyspepsia cured by a Fruit and Farinaceous Diet—Effects of different kinds of Food on the Lower Animals—Development most Regular when the Processes are Slow—Effects of a Full Meal of Animal Food—Temper and Dispositions of Carnivorous and Herbivorous Animals—Nations living principally on Flesh more Cruel than others—The Propensities prematurely Developed by Animal Diet—Injurious Effects of Animal Diet on Children—Period of Perfect Development the only one that can be indefinitely extended—Chyle and Blood from Vegetable Food more Pure—General Comparison of the Effects of Animal and Vegetable Food—View of the Subject as regards Economy—Immense Resources of Food in the Vegetable Kingdom—Best Mode of commencing Vegetable Regimen—Rules for the Preservation of Health—Fruit, Grain, Tubers for Human Food.

CONTENTS OF NOTES. Absurd Experiments on Animals—A Clergyman on Butchering—All Nutriment formed by Vegetables—Bathing Invigorates the Skin—Bible Authority—Common objections to Vegetarianism—Diet in relation to Toothache—Digestive Apparatus—Effects of Cooking on Flesh—Effects of Tea and Coffee—Experimental Evidence—Food in relation to Animal Heat—Frauds in Flesh and Poultry—Herbivora taught to eat Flesh—Illustrations of the Teeth—Iron in the Blood—Making Food into Blood—Milk Sickness—Modes Operandi of Stimulants—Native Quality of Fat—Organization in relation to Diet—Permission to eat Flesh—Physiological Cook Book—Pictorial Illustrations—Prevalence of Consumption—Salt as a Dietetic Article—Treatment of Gout and Rheumatism—Vegetarians best endure Fasting—Hard Water.

This work will be prepaid by mail. Complete in one Volume, handsomely bound, for $1.25. Address, post paid, FOWLERS & WELLS, 308, Broadway, New York.

OFFICIAL.

Notice of Withdrawal of certain Lands in the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, on the routes of the Oakland and Ottawa, and other proposed Rail Roads.

At the solicitation of a majority of the Delegation in Congress from the State of Michigan, the President of the United States, by his order bearing date the 1st of May, instant, has directed that the following named townships be withdrawn from sale or entry until further orders, except for valid pre-emption claims, to wit:—

IN THE STATE OF MICHIGAN. In the district of lands subject to sale at Duncan:

North of the base line and west of the principal meridian, lower peninsula.

Townships thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range two.

Townships thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range three.

Townships thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range four.

Townships thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight, and thirty-nine, of range five.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, and thirty-seven, of range six.

Townships twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-three, thirty-four, thirty-five, thirty-six, and thirty-seven, of range seven.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range eight.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range ten.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range eleven.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range twelve.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range thirteen.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range fourteen.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range fifteen.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range sixteen.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range seventeen.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range eighteen.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range nineteen.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range twenty.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range twenty-one.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range twenty-two.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range twenty-three.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range twenty-four.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range twenty-five.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range twenty-six.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range twenty-seven.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range twenty-eight.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range twenty-nine.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range thirty.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range thirty-one.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range thirty-two.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range thirty-three.

Townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, twenty-eight, twenty-nine, thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, and thirty-three, of range thirty-four.

POETRY.

The Pastor's Daughter.

An ivy-mantled cottage smiled,
Deep-wooded by the streamlet's side,
Where dwelt the village pastor's child,
All in her maiden gloom and pride.
Proud suitors paid their court and duty
To this romantic sylvan beauty:
Yet none of all the swains who sought her,
Was worthy of the pastor's daughter.
The town gallants cross'd hill and plain,
To seek the groves of her retreat,
And many followed in her train,
To lay their riches at her feet.
But still, for all their arts so sooty,
From home they could not lure the fairy,
A maid without a heart they thought her,
And so they left the pastor's daughter.
One balmy eve in dewy spring,
A barb became her father's guest;
He struck his harp, and every string
To love vibrated in her breast.
With that true faith which cannot falter,
Her hand was given at the altar,
And faithful was the heart he brought her
To wedlock and the pastor's daughter.
How seldom learn the worldly gay,
With all their sophistry and art,
The sweet and gentle primrose-way
To woman's fond, devoted heart.
They seek, but never find, the treasure,
Although revealed in jet and azure;
To them, like truth in wells of water,
A fable is the pastor's daughter.

Did You Ever Travel.

Once upon a midnight dreary,
As I lay all weak and weary,
Snoozing on a dirty pallet,
Spread upon a tavern floor,
Suddenly I felt an itching,
Such a keen and pungent itching,
That it set my nerves a twitching,
Twitching all my body o'er.
To myself I closely muttered,
For I felt a little fluttered,
That's a FLEA-BITE, I'll be sworn.
Scarcely had these words been uttered,
Which I spoke, or rather muttered,
—Muttered as I said before—
When, upon a sudden notion,
With a quick and rapid motion,
Down upon the spot I bore—Down upon the very spot, sir, where
The biting was so sore.
Then I rubbed, and rubbed, and rubbed it,
Each time harder than before,
For, you see—but need I mention?
It was my most fixed intention,
That said flea should bite no more.
When I drew my hand from under,
When I'd rubbed this flea to thunder,
Towards my nose it chanced to blunder,
Within half an inch or more.
Pah! a smell assailed my nostrils,
Such I ne'er, ne'er snuffed before,
No, nor never will again, sir, if I live
To see three score.
Need I mention?—you perceive it,
I had smashed a chinch—a bore,
Old and rusty, filled with gore!
And that smell on my forefinger,
It will linger, it will linger,
Full and fasting, deep and lasting,
In my memory evermore. [N. Y. SPIRIT.

Change.

BY M. A. SPRAGUE.

O never, never sigh, that change
Is written on the rose,
For we may find as on we rage,
A fairer flower grows.
O! never weep that balmy spring,
Is doomed to pass away;
Ripe Autumn fruits she soon will bring;
Then wear a smile to-day.
Though clouds may dim the sun's bright ray,
Yet I shall not repine,
For clouds are flying fast away,
And then 'twill brightly shine.
The morn that decks the starry blue,
Is now both dim and cold;
But soon she'll 'a girdle now,
For this Change oft hath told.
O! then sweet friend do not repine,
That we are doomed to change;
For joys untold may yet be thine,
As down life's vale we range.

The Summer of my Heart is Fled.

SONG—BY JOHN SAVAGE.

I.

The summer of my heart is fled,
Its sun has gone to rest,
And sends but lonesome shadows from
The hills that guard the west;
My eyes are weak for drouth of light,—
My very pride is bowed—
My step is like some ghastly thing,
That wears too close a shroud.

II.

Behind the hills of memory
I too, would, like the Sun
Fain glide, and gild the friendly side
That tends my death couch on;
But I have far outlived my bliss,
In being ever blest
Beneath the genial summer of
The Sun that's in the west.

We do not belong to our patrons,
Our paper is wholly our own;
Whoever may like it can take it,
Who don't—can just let it alone.

Rough Hints.

It is lamentable that so many young people of the present age, are educated with the love of riches. Their minds are like the troubled sea, forever in motion. The dollar, the mighty dollar, occupies all their thoughts, enters into all their hopes and desires, is the impulse of all their actions.

In the pursuit of gold, they leave the comfortable home of their childhood, bid adieu to the comforts of life, leave their worn out parents to totter down to the grave in solitude; and brave the dangers of sea and land, and any or every clime. In their fatal delusion, they rush onward, squandering health and life, or if they obtain their utmost desires, and return to their early homes, it is to learn that gold cannot satisfy the longing of the immortal mind. The time was when parents had their sons and daughters around them, contented and happy. Their desires had not learned to wander to the ends of the earth. They were industrious, and their industry supplied all their rational wants. But now, if you call at a farm house, instead of finding the parents in their easy chair, with a company of happy children around them, all eager to supply their wants, you see them toiling on all alone; their sons are on the ocean, or buried beneath its waves; or in California, and their daughters in factories or in city shops, breathing impure air and wearing themselves out in the prime of life. We are told that the world is advancing; that the human race are improving. Go ask that aged father and mother, if this be true. Ask them if people now, with all their boasted improvements and refinement, are happier than they were, when parents had their children around them, and the love of gold had not taken possession of their hearts; and they will tell you no, no, not a tenth part as much happiness is enjoyed now as then.

This age has yet to learn that happiness cannot be purchased with gold—and that a thousand needless wants are but causes of misery instead of pleasure.

Young man, young woman, remember that better is a dinner of herbs; aye, better is a log cabin, a rude bench, a brown loaf, where peace and contentment reign, than the most costly palace and all the luxuries gold can purchase, with a restless, unsatisfied mind.

Thousands have wandered from home, drawn away by the desire of riches, and left their bones in foreign lands, who would have given worlds, if in their power, to have spent only their last hour with their friends. Thousands have suffered and died among strangers, almost uncared for, who, had they not been led astray by false hopes of becoming rich, might now be living to bless and comfort the last days of fond parents, and to shed happiness on loved circles of brothers, sisters and friends.

I admit, and with deep regret, I am not capable of doing justice to this subject; but these rough hints may arouse the pens of others, and cause them to toil for the good of the rising generation. This boundless love of gold must be checked, or the happiness of our people is gone forever. Children should be encouraged to remain with or near their parents, and each other.—They should be taught that man's real wants are but few and easily supplied, and that his unnatural or acquired wants, which demand the most, are only sources of disquietude, if not of absolute misery. Who will commence the great and glorious work of restoring the people of this age to their senses, and pointing them to contentment, industry, plainness and simplicity, in which alone true happiness is found? Who will enforce on them the important truth that all the treasures of the earth cannot restore the happiness they lose, when they sacrifice home and friends, and all their endearments, in pursuit of riches?—J Hacker.

A Lady Free-Mason.

The Hon. Elizabeth St. Leger was the only female ever initiated into the mysteries of Free-Masonry. How she obtained this honor we shall lay before our readers. Lord Doneraile, Miss St. Leger's father, a very zealous Mason, held a warrant and occasionally opened lodges at Doneraile house; his sons and intimate friends assenting; and it is said that the Masonic duties were never more rigidly performed than by them. Previous to the initiation of a gentleman to the first step of Masonry, Miss St. Leger who was a young girl, happened to be in an apartment adjoining the room generally used as a lodge-room. This room at the time was undergoing some alterations; among other things, the wall was considerably reduced in one part. The young lady having heard the voices of the Free-Masons, and prompted by the curiosity natural to all, to see this mystery, so long and so secretly locked up from human view, she had the courage to pick a brick from the wall with her scissors, and witness the ceremony through the first steps. Curiosity satisfied, fear at once took possession of her mind.—There was no mode of escape except through the room where the concluding part of the second step was still being solemnized; and that being at the far end, and the room a very large one, she had resolution sufficient to attempt her escape that way; and, with light but trembling steps, she glided along unobserved, laid her hand on the handle of the door, and gently opening it, before her stood, to her dismay, a grim and surly tyler, with his long sword unsheathed. A shriek, that pierced through the apartment alarmed the members of the lodge, who all rushed to the door, and finding that Miss St. Leger had been in the room during the ceremony, in the first paroxysm of their rage her death was resolved on, but from the supplications of her youngest brother, her life was spared on condition of her going through the whole solemn ceremony she had unlawfully witnessed. This she consented to, and they conducted the beautiful and terrified young lady through those trials which are sometimes more than enough for masculine resolution, little thinking they were taking to the bosom of their craft, a member that would afterward reflect a lustre on the annals of Masonry.

The lady was cousin to Gen. Anthony St. Leger, governor of St. Lucia, who instituted the interesting race and the celebrated Doncaster St. Leger stakes. Miss St. Leger married Richard Aldworth, Esq., of New Market. Whenever a benefit was given at the theatres in Dublin or Cork for the Masonic Female Orphan Asylum, she walked at the head of the Free-Masons, with her apron and other insignia of Free-Masonry, and set in the front row on the stage-box. The house was always crowded on these occasions.—Her portrait is in the lodge-room of almost every lodge in Ireland.

Singular Tradition.

Among the Seminole Indians there is a singular tradition, regarding the white man's origin and superiority. They say that when the great spirit made the earth, he also made three men, all of whom were fair complexioned; and that, after making them, he led them to the margin of a small lake and bade them to leap therein and wash. One immediately obeyed and came from the water purer and fairer than before; the second hesitated a moment during which time, the water agitated by the first, had become slightly muddied, and when he had bathed, he came up copper colored; the third did not leap in till the water became black with mud, and he came out with its own color.

Then the great spirit laid before them three packages of bark, and bade them choose, and out of pity for his misfortune in color, he gave the black man the first choice. He took hold of each of the packages and having felt the weight chose the heaviest; the copper colored one the second heaviest, leaving the white man the lightest. When the packages were opened the first was found to contain spades, hoes, and all the implements of labor; the second enwrapped hunting and fishing and warlike apparatus; the third gave to the white man pens ink and paper—the engine of the mind—the means of mutual and mental improvement—the social link of humanity—the foundation of the white man's superiority.

Punctuality.

It is said that Melancthon, when he made an appointment, he expected not only the hour but the minute to be fixed, that no time might be wasted in idle suspense; and of Washington, that when his secretary, being repeatedly late in his attendance, laid the blame on his watch, he said, "You must either get another watch; or I another secretary."

Eighty oxen makes only one meal for the crews of the British fleet in the Baltic.

Chip Basket.

Fanny Fern on Schoolmistresses.—I was never on an august school committee, but if I were, I'd make a sine qua non that no school marm should be inaugurated who had not been a married mother. I don't believe in old maids; they know very well that they haven't fulfilled their family destiny, and I wouldn't have them wreaking their bilious vengeance on my urchins if I had any. No woman gets the acid effectually out of her temper till she has taken matrimony "the natural way."

"Father, father, look ye here."

"Well, sonny, what do you want now?"

"Was George Washington ever married to any body else but his wife?"

"Shut up—you're a fool—what do you ask that for?"

"Why, cos, this 'ere paper says that Great Britain was the mother of this 'ere country, and every body says Washington was the father of it—he must hev bin married afore he came over, to hev such an awful big young 'un."

A Judge's duty is to snub the counsel on both sides, and bother the jury by furnishing them with a third method of looking at the case. We got this from a wag who once went to law to get damages, and he got what he went after, enough to last him a lifetime.

How to cut an acquaintance.—If he is poor, lend him some money; if he is rich, ask him to lend you some. Both means are certain.

Lola Montez. A gallant Editor defending this celebrated lady, wrote, "She is pure innocence." The wicked types, however, printed, it she is pure in no sense."

A blacksmith was lately summoned to a town court a witness, in a dispute between two of his workmen. The judge after hearing the testimony, asked him why he did not settle the affair—as the cost had already amounted to three times the disputed sum.

"I told the fools to settle it," he replied; "for I said the clerks would take their coats—the lawyers their shirts—and if they got into your honor's court, you'd skin 'em."

An old bachelor, having been laughed at by a party of pretty girls, told them, "You are small potatoes!" "We may be small potatoes," said one of them, "but we are sweet ones."

Once on a time, a man met an old woman in an English town, driving several asses.

"Adieu, mother of asses," said he.—"Adieu my son!" was the old woman's reply. The fellow went on his way feeling, for his ears.

"What is that dog barking at?" asked a fop whose boots were more polished than his ideas. "Why," replied a bystander, "because he sees another puppy in your boots."

At a concert recently, at the conclusion of the song, "there's a good time a coming," a countryman got up and exclaimed: "Mister, you couldn't fix the date, could you?"

Mr. Webster was speaking, on one occasion, some years since in Faneuil Hall. If we remember right, he was in favor of the "Maysville road" bill. Mr. Otis sat near him, on the platform. Mr. Webster proceeded as follows:—

"I am in favor, Mr. Chairman, of all roads, except—except—"

Here he stuck, and could not think of any exception. Mr. Otis saw his difficulty, and said to him in a low voice,—"say except the road to ruin."

Mr. Webster heard it, and, as if he had only stopped for the purpose of making his remark more impressive, repeated the whole as follows:—

"I repeat it, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of all roads, except—the road to ruin."

The wit in Otis, in this instance, was well met by the presence of mind in Webster.

To be active in laudable pursuits, is the distinguished characteristic of a man of merit.

There is a heroic innocence, as well as a heroic courage.

The gift of water to cool earth's fever, and to cleanse its stains, as a blessing, is second only to the revelation of that living water, "of which, if a man drink he shall never thirst."

A country carpenter having neglected to make a gallows, the judge himself went to the man and said, "fellow, how came you to neglect the gibbet I ordered?"

Without intending any sarcasm, the man replied, "I am very sorry, for had I known it was for your lordship, it should have been done immediately."

A man is in the sight of God what his habitual and cherished wishes are.

If you would have a faithful servant, and one that you like, serve yourself.

Beware, said Lavater, of him who hates the laugh of a child. I love God and little children, was the simple and sublime reply of Richter.

There is more true greatness in owning a fault, and making proper reparation for it, than in obstinately defending a wrong conduct.—But, quitting your purpose, retreat rather like a lion than a cur.

A sentimental chap intends to petition to Congress for an act to improve the channels of affection, so that henceforth "the course of true love may run smooth."

The daddy who was "struck with an idea," was not seriously injured, as the weapon was a slight one. Such an accident is not likely to happen to him again.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. IV.—NO. 19.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, NOV. 2, 1854.

WHOLE NO. 66.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to Cooper & Chidester, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The following letter, from Pres. Strang, is in reply to one by a talented lady in Salt Lake City, to her sister in Saint James. Her letter is ably written, and we should publish it with pleasure, but we hardly feel at liberty to do so without permission, though it was not intended to be strictly private. She requests an answer from Pres. Strang, and the answer contains the substance of all the points mentioned by her:—

(Continued.)

Joseph taught that Jesus Christ was of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Judah, and of the house and lineage of David after the flesh, according to the scriptures; and as such was the lawful king of Israel, and the right heir to the throne of David; and that he was a Son of God by the priesthood, after the power of an endless life; the first born son, as the first fruit from the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth, by his priestly calling, and the appointment of the Almighty.

In pursuance of this doctrine, Joseph taught that he himself was a prophet like unto Moses, as Jesus Christ was, and a son of God in the same sense in which he was, (see Book of Mormon, 2d Nephi, ii.) and that all who kept the law of the gospel faithfully and intelligently should also become sons of God, joint heirs with Jesus Christ, and kings in that kingdom which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

He offered to the faithful as the recompense of their service, not like the sectarians, a policy of insurance against hell fire, but like prophets and apostles of old, the likeness and wisdom, and power and majesty of him who is eternal.

This doctrine of the sonship of Jesus Christ, and of all who by their priesthood are declared to be the sons of God, and of their glorious reward, I have illustrated and defended in two hundred sermons, and in a book which has been the end of controversy upon the subject, against Protestants and Romanists, Christians, Jews, Pagans, Infidels and Apostate Mormons of every sect, schism and stamp, from Brighamites down to Gurleyites; carrying out in its bearings and results that great truth, first declared in this generation by Joseph Smith, that by keeping the whole law of God, and being faithful in the work of Christ to the end, we become perfect as our Father in Heaven is perfect, possessed of all the prerogatives of Deity.

Guided by the same divine light which illuminated Joseph's pathway in life, and guided his footsteps in his outgoings and incomings, in defence of these great truths, I have pursued the demigodism of apostate christianity to its origin in heathen mythology; have convicted the Emperor Constantine, a heathen prince, of forcing this dogma on the Christian Church with fire and sword, while he corrupted the priesthood to its reception with bribes and the spoils of heathen temples, and have detected in the only passage of scripture which seems to support it, a forgery of the fourth century.

While I have been thus illustrating, propagating and defending the doctrine taught by both Christ and Joseph, Brigham Young, guided by abundance of tact and no inspiration, seizing upon the traditions and prejudice of a Protestant education, which nearly all the Saints received, and from which few were quite divested, revived among the Saints the myth of demigodism, leading them back to the vain mysteries of Paganism and Apostate Christianity; adopted the Trinitarianism of Saint Athanasius, the Nicene Council, and the Emperor Constantine.

Thus declaring Jesus Christ the Son of God, without any regard to his priesthood, by an assumed liaison of the Almighty with the pretty wife of a carpenter, he was driven to account for the sonship of Joseph in some way, or get rid of the question as he has of a hundred others, which could not be answered with acknowledging his imposture.

The attempt was made in an irresponsible and semi-official manner, to establish the ridiculous dogma that Joseph was the Holy Ghost incarnate; as though that blessed spirit by which and through which God inspires us with all divine knowledge, and the love of godliness, could dwell in a body defiled by sin.

And as Pagans and Apostate Christians, in order to establish the demigodship of Jesus Christ, had to charge him of being a bastard, and his mother with a sin which would justify her husband in putting her away, I suppose these Brighamite teachers who tried in vain to establish this miserable dogma were prepared to charge the mother of the prophet with lending her charms in defiled sheets, and the Almighty with being her seducer.

This doctrine of sonship and heirship of God, is another of my witnesses, which testifies continually in all courts and places that I am guided in all my ministry by the inspiration and truth of the Eternal, and that in his ministry Brigham is destitute of that spirit which guided David, Isaiah, Peter, Paul and Joseph.

Pursuing this examination no further, I will call a witness on the discipline and manners of the people of God. I believe Jesus Christ taught that except for adultery it was unlawful for man to put away his wife. So I teach, and the rule is enforced wherever my authority is acknowledged.

How is it under Brigham's administration? Are not men allowed to put away their wives for any cause, and for none at all?—Does not Brigham seal and unseal so freely that marriages become a mere partnership, at will?

Moses and the prophets taught that on a man's death, leaving a widow and no sons, his brother should take his widow and raise up seed to his deceased brother, and both Old and New Testament show the prevailing custom to have been that widows went to the near kinsmen of their deceased husbands. At the same time conquering kings and successful usurpers took the wives and concubines of conquered kings, and the widows of slaughtered potentates.

Under this rule we are all compelled to acknowledge that Brigham has acted consistently, but not as a Saint, guided by inspiration of God; for then he would have left the widows of Joseph and Hyrum Smith to their nearest kinsmen, their surviving brothers, William and Samuel. He acted precisely like a successful usurper, as David's rebellious son did; he took the widows of the martyred to himself, and held them as the evidence of his successful usurpation; proof conclusive that he is not guided by inspiration of the same spirit by which the scriptures were written.

This subject might be pursued till it filled ponderous tomes, with the same result. While I have constantly adhered to Joseph's teachings, and been advancing to the grasping of new truths in the same direction, Brigham has ignored the necessity of a Prophet in the Church; deprecated all new revelations, till all had been accomplished which was spoken by Joseph; undertook to lead the Church in his own wisdom, and filled up his leisure hours with sermons on the errors of Joseph.

In the ecclesiastical administration another class of witnesses rise like teeming flocks of locusts, to bear testimony that Brigham Young is a schismatic and an usurper, and that I am teaching the same truths, and guided by the inspiration of the same spirit as Joseph was.

One of these witnesses, Joseph Smith, charges the Twelve that they exalt not themselves, nor rebel against the First Presidency, and admonishes them, see to it that ye trouble not yourselves about the affairs of the Church at the place of gathering; but take up your cross, and whither the First Presidency send you, go ye; purify your hearts, and go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, who have not received it. D. & C., civ.

This witness, with all the rest, approves me as one sent of God, because I teach the same things; and how should I understand, unless guided by the same spirit of God, without which no man can understand the things of God?—In like manner it disapproves of Brigham, because as President of the Twelve he meddled continually with the affairs of the Church at the place of gathering, and refused "to act under the direction of the Presidency, agreeable to the institution of heaven." D. & C., iii, 12.

There is a single additional evidence which I wish to bring before I leave this branch of the subject. In the revelation given for the establishment of the Saints at Nauvoo, (D. & C., iii, p. 13,) God says, "If my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants, whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily, I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place."

Such is the oath of God, upon the faith of which the Saints assembled at Nauvoo. Joseph led them till his death, and they were not removed. After his death the Twelve led them, and they were removed. Yet Heber C. Kimball and others of the Twelve, bore public testimony at the April Conference, in 1845, and frequently afterwards, that they were the most obedient people that ever existed. In the name of truth, tell me, sister, why were they removed? Was it not because they followed the wrong leaders? Is not the reason given in the language of God, which follows immediately after? "But if they will not hearken to my voice, nor to the voice of these men whom I have appointed, they shall not be blest." Does not this witness prove strong as the oath of God, that in following Brigham Young and the Twelve they followed leaders whom God had not appointed?—And as I am truly the only alternate, does it not prove by the same oath that I am the leader appointed of God, whom they at Nauvoo refused to follow?

A short time after receiving my prophetic calling, sister Louisa Sanger addressed me a letter, in which she made a demand upon me similar to that contained in your letter. In my reply, guided by the same spirit of truth, by which this revelation was given, though it had not then been published, I predicted their expulsion as the consequence of following the wrong leaders. She showed this letter to H. C. Kimball and Orson Pratt, and begged them to reply to my strong reasons, if any answer could be made. They declined that task, as they always will; but they threw my letter on the floor, and danced on it their defiance of the prediction. Two years did not pass around till the prediction was fulfilled, and thus another witness testified that I was a prophet inspired of God, and that they were blind and uninspired. By their own words, as well as the voice of God, were they condemned, and I sustained.

It is not an agreeable task for a prophet to compare prophecy with history, for the purpose of proving that he has not spoken

one word more or less than the Lord has spoken by him; and I shall not, without a special occasion, undertake it, for myself. But, whenever the occasion does arise, it will find me fully prepared to show that every leading and material fact in the history of the Brighamite party, for the ten years of its existence, has been by me distinctly and publicly predicted, before it was spoken of among them, and that in all their misfortunes I have offered them such relief as subsequent experience has shown would have been sufficient. So far as this proves me a true prophet, I am entitled to the benefit of the testimony.

As it is natural for Charlatans to ever busy themselves with predicting evil on all who are in their way, Brigham and the host of elders with which he has flooded the country, have from the beginning of my ministry, poured out a perfect deluge of predictions of dire calamities upon me, and my speedy downfall.

That all these are false predictions, every line of my history is proof. The race between me and them has been like that between David and the house of Saul, and now it needs no prophet to open the eyes of the blindest to the fact that it will have a similar end.—Whatever else may happen, nothing can now be plainer than that all the present plans of Brigham, if indeed he has any plans, are destined to total failure.

In weighing the force of these facts it is but just to remember that Brigham and the hosts who followed him, as often as they spoke evil of me, put in requisition a thousand hostile hands to make their predictions prophetic. And yet, every one has fallen to the ground. Not once have they succeeded in making an ill word true. Their hostility I have never reciprocated, but have returned them good for evil; and if obedience to a divine commandment proves anything, this is another witness in my favor.

These, dear sister, are all godly witnesses. They are witnesses who cannot bear false witness, for they speak the word of God.—Though I have called up but one or two in each class, and there are from a score to hundreds in each class, yet here is a cloud of witnesses, all bearing testimony that I am guided in my ministry by the spirit of God, and that Brigham Young has departed from godliness to fables.

Doubtless some, on reading so far, will reply: All this does not prove a call by the voice of God, and an ordination by the hand of angels. Such a reply is not argument. It has no logic in it. It is mere captiousness. For where it is shown that I am really and truly a prophet of God, endowed with the gifts and blessings of the prophetic office, that is satisfactory and conclusive evidence of the divine call and a legal sending, which I lay claim to.

Moreover that proof entitles me to full credit, when I say further and especially that I have heard the voice of God, and received the visitation of angels; that God has called me to such an office by his own voice, and ordained me to it by the hand and anointing of the most noble in the angelic hosts.

Neither by Mormons, Christians, or Jews, can such testimony ever be rejected, without rejecting their faith and going over to infidelity.

Joseph alone bore witness of the time, circumstance and manner of his prophetic call. Joseph and Oliver were the sole witnesses of his angelic ordination. If it be said that I am an interested witness, equally are they both: for each of them, in proving the ordination of the other, proved also his own.

The fact that Jesus Christ has received all power in heaven and on earth rests upon his testimony alone, and the transfiguration is proved only by a few devoted friends, who received with him part in the same ministry. The credibility of all this testimony depends on the fact that they are shown otherwise to be in possession of the prophetic gifts.

Moses is the only witness that the angel appeared unto him in the burning bush, and that God spoke to him out of the midst of the flame. Yet all the earth cannot discredit his testimony: for God, in making him a prophet, has endorsed him as a true witness of visions and revelations.

Going from these primary to secondary cases, Noah is the only witness that God revealed to him the approaching deluge. His work depending on that revelation and the coming of the flood have proved the truth of testimony more satisfactorily than the word of ten thousand witnesses.

When Elijah was taken up to heaven, and his mantle fell upon Elisha, Elisha was the sole witness of his induction into the prophetic office. He was entitled to be credited in his testimony, because he did the works of a prophet, and because it was necessary that some one should rise to fill the office, and come in, in a legal manner, and he alone claimed to have come in, in that manner. His case was just parallel to mine in that respect. He was the only witness of the circumstance, time and manner in which he became a prophet, yet to deny his prophetic calling was to deny the legitimate continuance of the work of God in the dispensation. And in my case, at least, if not in Elisha's, to deny my calling is to deny the dispensation altogether.

Joseph, the son of Jacob, before he was sold into Egypt, had certain visions, showing his future dignity among his brethren. From the divine record it does not even appear that there was any necessity of his being so called, apparently by the previous revelations. His visions were attested by his word alone. Yet for all this his brethren fell under condemnation, for not receiving his word.

The promise which God made to Abraham, to give him an everlasting possession, and the covenant of life, in which he swore, that in his seed should all the nations of the earth be blessed were known to that generation by Abraham's word alone. Indeed, the lapse of ages has scarcely ly added a witness in five hundred years. And the covenant by which the house of David were established as the royal seed, and a perpetual dynasty before God, until the time of Isaiah, stood upon the testimony of David alone.

In these cases I do not think the rule is established, that, as often as any man claims the prophetic office, he should be received in it, on his own word only. So far from it, the first requisite in sustaining his claim is that it be in conformity to the known and declared law.

Upon this requisite Brigham fails, and that is a full end of his claims. Upon the same test, I am sustained. If there were two or more who claimed in the same manner, it would not then become a question of veracity between them, which was truly called off God, and which were impostors.

The question then would be, which is possessed of the gifts pertaining to the prophetic office. Whoever was found possessed of those gifts, and accomplishing the work of a prophet, according to the law of God, would thereby be recognized by God himself as a true prophet and his true witness. There are the public credentials of Almighty God, that such an one is a true and faithful witness of visions and revelations. So that prophets, in declaring the time, circumstance and manner of their callings, are not making a pleading statement, to be proved by witnesses. They are God's witnesses, approved by him, and sent to bear witness of his word among men. To attempt to impeach them, is to attempt to impeach the God who sent them.

At this place it is proper for me to notice a statement made by Harvey Green, and industriously circulated by the Brighamites to the effect that at the Conference at Florence, Michigan, August 5th, 1844, he inquired of me if I had been ordained by an angel, urging upon me that it was necessary, and pointing out to me the revelation, (D. & C. 1, p. 2, 3,) showing the necessity, and that I confessed that I had not been so ordained.

The only truth contained in this statement is, that we conversed on the subject. Mr. Harvey Green did not inquire if I had been ordained by an angel. He did not urge upon me the necessity of such an ordination. He did not point out or mention the revelation showing that necessity, and I did not know of its existence till several months later; and I did not tell him that I had not been so ordained.

Knowing that there was no witness to our conversation, he has maliciously and willfully borne false witness against me before God, in the congregation of the Saints and unto all the earth, evidently calculating that it would be but my word against his, and that he would be believed among his own friends, as well as I among mine.

In this expectation he will be disappointed, and his name will go down to succeeding generations in all time as a false witness against the Lord's anointed.

First of all, then, on the same day on which Joseph was slain, it became known in the family in which I boarded near Burlington, Wisconsin, that I had had a wonderful vision, in which I was visited by a numerous host of angels, with one of whom I had had a conversation of great importance, or that I so asserted, and the next day the matter was public in the neighborhood.

Now it is not probable nor in any sense believable that a man, respectable in one of the learned professions as I was, among friends who had known him from childhood, and with whom he was likely to be associated for life, most of whom were disbelievers of divine revelation, should tell a tale of that kind to set the whole community a laughing at him, and then at the very moment that that fact became necessary in justifying his claim to the highest calling which God confers on man, deny it.

Going from Voree to Florence to attend that Conference, I traveled on foot some three hundred miles, stopping nearly every night with the scattered brethren on the route, and communicating this fact to them all as I went. It is hardly probable that after stating it to twenty families, for no other reason than to communicate to others what God had revealed to me, I should deny the same thing the very first moment that the assertion of it became necessary to my defence. And these facts are so publicly known that to deny them would be as unblushing as to deny the public history of the nation.

Moreover, the public records of the Church at Voree, made previous to my starting to the Conference at Florence, and always before the public from that time to this, contain a full account of that ordination, and a record of the words which the angel spoke. Since that time down till this day, a period of above ten years, I have constantly declared my ordination by the hands of an angel, and have so preached in all the principal cities in eighteen States.

Is it not asking too much of human credulity, to ask mankind to believe that just once in the midst of all this, in the presence of a single witness, and that an enemy, I denied all this? Believe it, if you can. Men of sense never will. To believe it, it is necessary to believe not only that I am a liar and an impostor, but more than idiot.

But I will not rest the impeachment of Mr. Harvey Green on these facts alone, conclusive as they are. He is self-impeached. He, a Brighamite, could not urge upon any one the necessity of being ordained by the hand of an angel, for Brigham does not claim any such ordination, and confessing the necessity acknowledges him an impostor.

This is one of those miserable blunders, by which false witnesses earmark their falsehood. How much more like truth his testimony would sound, if he should say that I claimed an angelic ordination, as I always did, both before and since, and that he disputed the necessity of it, as Brighamites always do, and that I, being unacquainted with the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, could show no law or precedent for it?

To get an opportunity to contradict me in the premises, he assumes to place me, just for that one moment, in opposition to all my previous and subsequent ministry; and then, in contradicting me, throws himself in deadly opposition to Brighamism, and to his whole subsequent life. There I will leave him. Soon will be with him others, who have borne false witness against me.

Crandall Dunn, who was also at that Conference, in a letter to Mr. Appleby, dated two years afterward, accuses me of claiming the prophetic office at first by virtue of the appointment alone, and subsequently taking another position, and claiming it by the angelic ordination alone. (Millennial Star, 1846, p. 93.)

I commend to you the reading of that letter in which Mr. Dunn complacently congratulates himself on having won a victory over me, in an encounter of logic, by showing that though I had been duly appointed prophet, I could no more act in that calling than a Justice of the peace can act in his office after being elected, until he is commissioned and has taken the oath of office.

Not unfrequently have I seen a blundering logician brought up by his own argument, which like a two edged sword, cuts both ways. Dunn's case is worse. If by this argument he had shown that I was no prophet, what does he show of Brigham, who does not pretend to have been appointed or ordained?

Dunn's logic is good. Orson Hyde and John Taylor, by the pains they have taken to publish it, have endorsed it. He has shown that a prophet must be both appointed and ordained, or he is no prophet. I am the only one who pretends to an ordination. If I have been ordained, Dunn is a false witness. If I have not, the words of God to Joseph, "I have given Joseph the keys of the mysteries and revelations which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead," (D. & C. II. p. 2,) has fallen to the ground; and Joseph is a false witness of God, when he gives as the word of God, "and this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations, until Joseph be taken, if he abide in God." (D. & C. xiv. p. i.)

This last text binds the Almighty to his people, not only that he will send no other to teach by revelation and commandment while Joseph remains, but it binds him also to appoint another in his stead, whenever Joseph was taken, or, failed to abide in God.

So Dunn's argument, though not a two edged sword, is held with the edge the wrong way, and cuts home. Joseph has been taken. If I have not been appointed according to my claim, no one has been appointed in fulfillment of this law, for no other one pretends it. Let Joseph be true, though Dunn be a liar. We will lay him away among false witnesses, by the side of Harvey Green.

But though done with him as a witness, I have not done with his argument. In the same letter he embodies an argument common with the Brighamites.

The argument is, that I could not receive the keys of the kingdom from Joseph, because he holds them in the world to come; and thus I could not receive them from an angel, because last on earth before Joseph, they were held by Peter, James and John, and they gave them to Joseph, who alone holds them forever.

All the force of this argument is in the false assumption that no one can impart the keys of the kingdom without divesting himself of them; and that but one can hold them at a time. The falsity of the assumption is apparent in the fact that Peter, James and John were all possessed of the keys when they conferred them on Joseph.

Jesus Christ conferred the keys of the kingdom on Peter. By this Brighamite argument, though he is king of kings, and the prince of the kings of the earth, and has all power in heaven and on earth, he has not the keys of the kingdom. By the same rule of reasoning, as John held them subsequent to Peter and James, they had no business with them, and no power to confer them on Joseph, and their assuming to do so was a false pretense. Thus the Brighamites, not having the same spirit by which Joseph was guided, make his revelations folly, in order to forge an argument against me.

And that they may succeed by means of so flimsy pretences, they have a custom of darkening counsel by words, without knowledge, in which the keys of the kingdom, and the keys of mysteries and revelations are referred to, as though they were one and the same thing.

Now the keys of the kingdom represent the power in its several degrees, belonging to those who attain to a Royal Priesthood on earth, which, if faithfully used, ever survives and is exercised in the resurrection and everlasting life, and may be held by ten or ten thousand, each in his several rank or place.

But the keys of mysteries and revelations represent that power by which a prophet and seer of earth obtains from God commandments and revelations, and knowledge of mysteries to communicate unto men. It therefore cannot survive this life, for in another state of existence it has no office work to perform.

Starting with this position, it is easy to see how Joseph may appoint a successor to hold the keys of mysteries and revelations, and yet himself, as well as the worthies before and after him, hold the keys of the kingdom in this world and also in the world to come.

Near the close of this letter, which you will perceive is dated August 4th, 1846, you will observe the following prophecy on me. "Strang can no more live than a limb of an old oak tree when severed from the body."—Eight years have elapsed since this prophecy was spoken. If it meant that what they call Strangism would die like a limb, cut from an old oak, this particular oak limb has a wonderful tenacity of life, and shows a good promise of becoming a gigantic old oak before it dies.

If the prediction is to be understood in the literal sense, probably Moses Martin, who met me in a dark alley in New York, a few days after the writing of Dunn's letter, and did not accomplish the work of fulfilling prophecy, can tell why it is that the prophet Crandell's words have fallen to the ground. I always attributed it to the fact that Crandell was not called of God to speak by revelation, and more especially that God cares for his own.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.
SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,
THURSDAY, NOV. 2, 1854.

The outside date of this issue is 2d November, but after the outside was printed, and the inside matter nearly made up, we were obliged to delay several days before issuing, in consequence of all the hands except one being called out of the office on pressing business.

Project to Dismember Emmet Co.
We learn that an effort is on foot among certain speculators to dismember Emmet County of all the territory on the main land, and divide it between Cheboygan and Grand Traverse.

Now these same counties of Grand Traverse and Cheboygan had been trying for years to get loose from Mackinac and failed, till a member elected by the votes of Emmet alone got them separated and erected into counties.

Their gratitude is shown by this return. No matter. They can't get along now without our help. However shameful such ingratitude, those who are guilty of it are too weak to call forth resentment.

The proposition betrays gross ignorance. By the constitution, Act x, § 2, no organized county can be reduced to less than sixteen townships, according to the United States survey. And taking the east shore off, this county would leave but three townships.

Moreover, if they could by any means succeed, they would be no better off than the Russian soldier with his Tartar prisoner, who could not bring him into camp, because the prisoner was carrying him the other way. Before another election, our settlements on that east shore will be large enough to control the politics of both Cheboygan and Grand Traverse.

And having the power, under such circumstances we should not fail to use it. We have room enough where we are, and they have more than they can occupy. Their best thing is to let us alone, and leave us in peace.

By meddling, they only drive us in securing personal safety, to occupy and control more country than we really need; and get on their hands, a controversy of which all the fruits are evil.

Stealing.
The Propeller St. Joseph, recently got aground at Middle Island, and the Ogontz helped her off. In doing so, much of the cargo was transferred to the Ogontz.

They came here together and got wood, and went as far as Galilee, where they lay for some time detained by heavy weather.

Soon the Propeller Ogdensburgh, came along and stopped at the same place where the Ogontz had been laying, and there discovered a trunk lying in twelve feet water. On fishing it up it was found filled with old irons &c.

The conclusion was, that the trunk had been stolen by the Mormons, who after rifling it of its contents, filled and sunk it at that place—for what purpose we cannot guess, unless, that it might be found, and they exposed.

The Ogdensburgh went on and also stopped at Galilee to wait for better weather. While there, the Capt. of the Ogdensburgh was relating his adventure, and it was discovered that the stolen trunk belonged on the St. Joseph, and had been transferred to the Ogontz, while at Middle Island.

Of course there was some loud talk about Mormon stealing. But Capt. Martin of the St. Joseph, who is too old a bird to be caught with chaff, suggested that they might as well look at home first, and to the Mormons afterwards.

The result was that the entire contents of the rifled trunk were found in the possession of the watchman and two hands on the Ogontz.

They confessed that the watch started the project, and the two hands went in with him for a general operation of that kind.

All professed that this was the first act, and appeared very penitent, but appearances are much against the watchman, who had several suits of clothing and two wigs, one a negro's, evidently for disguise.

Thus fell to the ground, a beautiful plan for extensive speculations, all to be laid to the Mormons, and circumstances enough to be manufactured to give support to the accusation.

At the present time, it is difficult to ship men on the Propellers. The masters are obliged to employ men of indifferent and unknown character.

These masters, however, many of them without any very deep malice, but in mere wantonness, have, without the slightest occasion, given the Mormons the name of stealing.

Now they are reaping the fruits of their doings. Not unfrequently men in their employ pilfer at the expense of their customers, assured that they shall escape suspicion by charging the offence to the Mormons.

Men who live by plunder, will seek responsible places on board, with a view to abuse the confidence reposed in them by masters and owners.

We well remember a case occurring not four weeks since, of a passenger on another boat who was robbed of all his money.

There were passengers bound for here, who expected the robbery would be laid to them, because they were Mormons.—They insisted on a universal search before landing, and the result was as in this case. The stolen money was found on the watchman.

But we understand the Capt. of the Ogontz was unwilling to prosecute his watchman. It is certain he did not do so here.—If the employee is allowed to go free after such an offence, we shall believe what we now suspect, that the Capt. is a partner in this stealing operation, and intended to lay it to the Mormons.

POPULATION OF EMMET.
The census of Emmet Co., the unorganized territory of which was completed since our last issue, shows a population quite above what we had anticipated. It is as follows:—

Peaine,	2,020.
Galilee,	588.
Charlevoix,	1,706.
Unorganized Ter.,	657.
Total	4,971.

Before the commencement of Census taking, the most sanguine did not estimate it above 3,600, after the townships were taken, we began to estimate as high as 4,600, but the result has beat the most sanguine calculations.

In these results such of the Indians as are land holders, or men of education, and industrious and civilized habits, with their families, are included.—Had the entire settled Indian population been included, the result would have been materially increased.

In classes, the population is as follows:—

MALES.
Under five years old,	461.
5 to 10,	491.
10 to 21,	646.
21 to 45,	604.
45 to 75,	191.
75 to 90,	36.
90 to 100,	6.
Over 100,	2.
Total,	2,437.
FEMALES.
Under five years old,	413.
5 to 10,	541.
10 to 18,	656.
18 to 40,	617.
40 to 75,	216.
75 and over,	80.
Total,	2,524.
Total males,	2,437.
Total Population,	4,971.

There are (Nov. 6th) seventeen vessels in the Harbor, bound up. The Sam Hale, in a crippled condition, but will make her trip, with good weather.

Filander Page, a subscriber for the Islander, at Sheffield, Bureau Co., Ills., writes to us to stop his paper.

Reason—If he takes a Mormon paper, his neighbors will mob him out.

He can stay with such neighbors, if he likes, we will not.—They are only fit to be cast out and trodden under foot.

Painful Rumor.
A rumor has been current for several days on our docks that the schooner Robert Willis, whose sudden disappearance on Lake Michigan last fall was noticed at the time, and of which no intelligence was ever afterwards received, had been captured by the Mormons of Beaver Island, her captain and crew massacred, and the boat unloaded and scuttled. At the time of her loss the Willis was bound from Chicago to this port with a cargo of wheat and was last seen by the schooner Lansing, on the 22d November, off Sheboygan, bound up the lake in very heavy northeast gale. The news of her capture, &c., is said to have been received through a Mormon who escaped from the community at Beaver Island, and who has made oath to the facts above stated.—It is also said that the U. S. steamer Michigan has been sent to look into the affair. We place no confidence in the rumor, but merely give it as a matter of news.

The above first appeared in the Buffalo Republic, of Oct. 13th. It has reappeared in more than one hundred papers since, and in every one the last paragraph is left off.

By such mutilation, they all make the Republic to assert what it expressly discredits—the commission of a horrible crime by the Mormons. In this way a string of accusations is continually moving around against us, like the cogs of a great wheel, making endless noise, but ever returning to the starting point.

We have reason to be glad that this lie has been put afloat. A great advance has been made towards doing us justice. For the first time since the discovery of the golden plates, a newspaper, not in our interest, and not paid as an advertiser, has contradicted a foolish falsehood, floating around against the Mormons.

The Milwaukee Daily News, of Oct. 20th, has the following:—

A Roorback.
The U. S. Steamer Michigan now lies in the river, and we learned this morning from one of her officers that the rumor, started by a Buffalo paper, that she had been sent to inquire into the alleged murder of a ship's crew at Beaver Island, is without foundation. The Michigan stopped at Beaver Island on her way round, but her officers heard nothing of the rumor till they reached this city.

Among the numerous officers of steamboats and vessels in the habit of visiting this place, no such tale ever required an answer. Their sense of the matter is expressed in the words of Mr. Hayford, of the Saginaw. "Well, Strang, I'd like to know whether you ground that twelve thousand bushels of wheat, you stole from the Willis, in this old saw mill, or on a grindstone."

There is not a grist or flouring mill within one hundred and fifty miles of here, and at the time the piracy was alleged to have been done, there were fourteen large vessels and three steamers lying here, manned by some two hundred and fifty men. The population of the Island is some two thousand.

Whoever believes that pirating can be done in such a community, and kept secret for months, is lacking in common sense.

There has been an average of three steamers a-day at our wharves for six months, and more than thirty vessels have laid at anchor in the harbor at a time, and the navigating interests along the Lakes cannot be ignorant of these facts.

With these facts before them, who can believe that any body has to escape to get away from here? It is just as easy to get away from here, as from Buffalo.

If outsiders are enough fools to think we wish to keep unwilling people here, we are not enough fools to try it.

Remarkable case of Second Sight.
One very extraordinary incident connected with the loss of the Arctic, and which is not generally known, is as follows:—

A young gentleman, lately residing in New York city, fell through a hatchway in his father's store some time last summer, and was severely injured, one side of his body becoming completely paralyzed; and after a while he entirely lost the faculty of speech. In this position he remained until the 27th ultimo (about the time of the accident to the Arctic, on board which steamer it was known that the young man's father was a passenger,) when he suddenly started up in his bed, and exclaimed, to the surprise of all present, "My father is drowning!" fell back upon his pillow and died. It was the first time he had spoken for months, it was the last for ever. It turns out that his father was lost.

Another.—Among the after incidents consequent upon the loss of the E. K. Collins, we find this singular narration in the Cleveland papers. We give it as a curious and well authenticated fact, without, of course, leaning upon the deductions that some credulous people would be apt to draw:—W. H. Stone, of Brockville, Cayuga county, in company with two others, went west a few weeks ago to buy land, leaving some business with the law firm of Wyman and Thayer, of Cleveland, in which a brother and brother-in-law living in Brockville were concerned. On Monday last, said brother-in-law and a near neighbor of Stone came to the city, and, visiting their lawyers on said business, had occasion to speak of Mrs. Stone, who, he said, was quite sick, in fact entirely prostrated, by a shocking dream she had the night before. She dreamed that her husband was dead—had died on a swamp boat, and in an awful manner. The lawyers informed said neighbor that a steamboat had been burned on Lake Erie the night before, but Mr. Stone's name did not appear either among the lost or saved, and was probably not on board. While talking, the comrade and room-mate of Mr. Stone, a Mr. Farr, came in to the office, and announced that Mr. Stone was on board with him, slept in the same state-room, heard the alarm of fire, rushed out together into the cabin, which was so full of fire and smoke that they lost one another. Farr reached the deck and jumped into the lake. Stone has not been heard of since.

The very night, and about the very hour, that the husband was grappling with this strange, but terrible death, the wife had a presentiment, so vivid that the reality could not affect her worse. Is there any religious or moral philosophy that can explain this?

In a christian country, where the Bible is read, understood and believed, no such questions can arise.

The spirit of the death-lingers a moment about the loved ones of earth, and seeks earnestly, not always in vain, to tell them of their bereavement, and to assure them that though separated, there is another uniting.

How many million cases have been recorded, all unquestionable, and men yet ask a voice from the dead. But the dead are in a dark world, and find it difficult to make our dull eyes see, or our dull ears hear.

BUFFALO AND CHICAGO
THE SPLENDID UPPER CASIN
STEAMER BUCCEPHALUS
S. ALEXANDER, MASTER.
LEAVES BUFFALO: LEAVES CLEVELAND:
August 23 August 24
September 13 September 14
October 4 October 5
October 25 October 26
November 15 November 16
LEAVES DETROIT: LEAVES CINCINNATI:
August 25 September 14
September 15 September 16
October 6 October 13
October 27 November 3
November 17 November 24
Touching at Beaver Island each way.
AGENTS.
HOLT, PALMER & CO., Buffalo, N. Y.
D. A. EDDY & CO., Cleveland, O.
WALTER CHESTER, Detroit, Mich.
DOUSMAN & CO., Milwaukee.
RUMSEY, BRO. & CO., Chicago, Ill.

SHOEMAKING.
THE subscriber wishes to inform the citizens of Beaver Island and vicinity that he is prepared to wait on those who may wish to have work done in his line of business, near the Steam Mill, where, by good work and strict attention to business, he hopes to be liberally patronized by the public.
I'll make and mend your boot and shoe. Mend, if you please, your harness, &c.
Come, all who're waiting and work done, And call on J. T. PENDLETON, August 21, 1854.

OFFICIAL.
Notice of the Establishment of an additional Land Office in the State of Michigan.
In pursuance of the act of Congress, approved April 20, 1854, entitled "An act Establishing a Land Office in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan," the District for which it is to be called the "CUMMINGS LAND DISTRICT," it is hereby declared and made known, that the Land Office for said District has been located for the present, by the President of the United States, at the town of Danan, in the northern part of the Southern Peninsula of said State.
Given under my hand, at the City of Washington, this sixteenth day of May, A. D. 1854.
JOHN WILSON,
Commissioner of the General Land Office.

BOOKS.
The following books are constantly for sale at this office:—
Ancient and Modern Michilimackinac, including an account of the controversy between Mackinac and the Mormons. Price, 25 cts.
A History of the Rise of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and the discovery of Ancient American Records, &c., by George J. Adams. Price, 12 cts.
A Discussion of the Roman Catholic Religion, between Charles Kellery and James J. Strang. Price, 10 cts.
The Diamond: being the Law of Property Succession. Price, 3 cts.
Also a quantity of Hymn Books. Price, fifty cents.
Money may be sent by mail at our risk from any part of the United States for these books. We will return the books by mail, free of charge.

POETRY.

The Soul's Temple.

BY FRANCIS H. SPRENGER.

The wing of darkness flutters,
The shadows float and flow;
And in the upper ocean,
The jewels faintly glow.
A holy hush of silence,
Pervades earth and air;
And twilight's mystic visions,
Are pictured everywhere.

Above, it is growing lighter,
For the darkness cometh down,
And the golden stars burn brighter,
As the hills and valleys frown.
Now thought, in the inner temple,
Striketh her solemn bell;
And the spirit-organ soundeth—
The tones of music swell.

The worshippers enter softly,
And around the chancel throng,
While the Deum pealeth,
Through the cloisters loud and long.
But the joyful chant is ending,
See the kneeling forms arise;
Their prayers are swift ascending,
To the bosom of the skies.

Now the echo of their footsteps,
Hath softly died away,
And the temple is deserted,
There are none within to pray.
Nay! by yonder lofty column,
In the distance lone and dim,
Sits a rare and radiant being,
With a white and pearly wing.

There's a halo on her forehead,
There's a glory in her eye,
There's a heavenness around her—
Yes her home is in the sky.
But she dwelleth now an angel,
In her majesty sublime,
Within this mortal temple,
Till the gathering in of time.

Then uprising from the earthly,
Soaring upward from the cloud,
Faith the angel of the temple,
Shall go in to dwell with God.

My Mother.

BY N. P. WILLIS.

My Mother's voice! How often creeps
Its cadence on my lonely hours,
Like healing on the wings of sleep,
Or dew on the unconscious flowers,
I might forget her melting prayer,
While "wondering pleasures madly fly;
But in the still unbroken air,
Her gentle tones come stealing by;
And years of sin and manhood flee,
And leave me at my mother's knee.

I have been out at eventide,
Beneath a moon-lit sky of Spring,
When earth was garmented like a bride,
And night had on her silver wing;
When bursting buds and dewy grass,
And waters leaping to the light,
And all that makes the pulses pass
With wilder sweetness through the night;
When all was beauty, then have I
With friends on whom my love is flung,
Like Myrrh on wings of Araby,
Gazed up where evening's lamp is hung—

And when the beauteous spirit there Flung over all its golden chain,
My Mother's voice came on the air,
Like the light dropping of the rain;
And resting on some silver star,
The spirit of a bended knee,
I've poured a deep and fervent prayer
That our eternity might be—
To rise in heaven, like stars by night,
And tread a living path of light.

My Mission.

BY ELLA WENTWORTH.

My Mission! not to startle men
With thoughts that burn and thrill,
Nor by anathemas to stem
The tide of human ill!
Not mine to bask in suns of fame,
Nor revel on a deathless name,
By mighty wonders won:—
A holier work is near my heart,
To heal a pang, to soothe a smart—
To raise a fallen one!

My mission! it is not to dream
Of flattery or power,
Nor feast and banquet as a queen,
The mistress of the hour;
Not mine to revel with the throng
That wing the jest or swell the song,
And scorn the chastening rod—
Ah, no! with eye of faith, I trust,
To lift a sister from the dust,
And point her up to God!

My mission! 'tis a nobler one
Than mighty conquerors know—
Wrapped in the war-cloud's heavy dem,
They steep the world in woe;
The heavy roar of mortal strife,
The shudders of expiring life,
A horrid anthem raise;
I'll change the solemn dirge of death,
The voice of grief, the stifling breath,
To songs of love and praise.

I envy not the lordly chief,
Wrapped in his robe of state,
To dry a tear, to soften grief,
Is to be truly great!
To raise a mourner from the tomb,
And point him upward, through the gloom,
That rests upon the grave—
That glorious work is still for me,
To set some struggling captive free—
Some precious soul to save.

A Testimony to all who are Privileged to read the Revelations of Jesus Christ.

Written Dec. 1st, 1850, for the Benefit of all who Love the Truth, and Delight to be Saved by Adhering to it. Especially Designed for, and Directed to, the Priests and Ministers of all Denominations, Included under the General term Protestant.

HONORED GENTLEMEN:—Permit me to salute you as watchmen upon the walls of Zion, (for so you claim to stand before the public,) and enquire, "what of the night?" Who among all your diversified company can tell me what are the purposes of God, which he designs shall be accomplished during the present generation? Or, has the spirit of truth ceased to show you things to come? If so, why do you stand as watchmen? Does it not belong to watchmen to know and hourly to sound the hour of the night, until the dawn of day?

And when they cease to give the hour, may we not fear that they have gone to sleep, or left their watch? and the inhabitants who have trusted in them, and reposed their security under their guardianship, know not the dangers to which they are exposed? We have heard your congregations sing, "all is well, all is well;" but the hour of the night none of you have sounded in our ears except the Millerite company, which alarm has been considered a falsehood, almost universally, and altogether so, except a few of their blind zealots, who are so far from being the true watchmen that they have even lost sight of the light houses.

Did not the ancient watchmen discern at a distance? and did they not divide the time into certain periods, and give some little intimation of the work of God during each period? And has not every dispensation, since time began, been ushered in by new revelations, and a new set of administrators, or at best such as are ready to engage in doing the work of such dispensation?

I think if you answer these questions at all, you will be forced to the affirmative in each and every case. Well, then; what will you reply? If you have no new revelations, how will you explain the old? What will you say to the prophet's time and times, and the dividing of time? If you are ignorant of all these matters, with what grace do you appear as teacher of God's law and purposes? Do you not fear to stand in a place too high for you?

Perhaps you will say that there never was to be another dispensation succeeding that introduced by John the Baptist, and fully established by Jesus Christ. If so, I would inquire how does your dispensing of things accord with that? And why have you changed that order? You say it was not to be changed, and yet you are not subject to it. Out of your own mouths you stand condemned.

Was not that dispensation introduced by a prophet, whose greatness had not been exceeded previous to his day? And he acknowledges himself not worthy to untie the shoes of him who should immediately succeed him. And Christ himself said, speaking of the progressive work of God, that he that is least in the kingdom of God, is greater than John. Why is it, then, in your dispensing of your gospel, that your superiors are always behind you. I thought superiors should go before, in all progressive work.

The kingdom of heaven was proclaimed as at hand, and Christ said of it, that the least subject in that kingdom was to be greater than John. How then shall they be great? Shall it not be in understanding? in understanding the things of God, as the natural man could not do? Of course they must have the gifts of the spirit, by no means inferior to any former age, for it is, ever was, and always will be, through these means that the men of God are made great—even by being endowed with power from on high to do miracles, such as John did not, nor could not do; and the least subject in that kingdom was to possess some spiritual gift, by which he was to work in building and helping to show forth to the world that spiritual temple which was to be as a city set on a hill, whose light could not be hid.

Having made these preliminaries, I now proceed to give my testimony. I certify, first, that no one sect, among the Protestant bodies, constitute the church of Christ. 2d. That the church of Christ is looked for in vain in the Protestant world, to say nothing of the Roman Catholic, which all Protestants disclaim. 3d. I certify that Roman Catholicism and Protestantism all belong to one and the same vine, and is the vine of the earth, soon to be reaped, that her watchmen are all blind leaders of the blind, and that they contradict each other; and soon a noisome and grievous sore will fall upon them, and they will gnaw their tongues for pain. And even now, when questioned upon the subject of order and authority, their priesthood trembles back to the seat of the beast, and his kingdom is full of darkness.

I certify, furthermore, that there is now generally prevailing an unwillingness to investigate and to examine the testimony that is brought reasonably and scripturally to bear heavily against the position now occupied by the Protestant and Roman Catholic body, or bodies, if that be preferable. I consider it as one body, full of names of blasphemy. I certify, also, that it is blasphemy to name the body of Christ Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Quaker, Hivite, Roman Catholic, Protestant, &c., to the multitude that now exist in this body, this vine of the earth, this hydra-headed man of sin.

I testify, further, that the position now occupied by the priesthood in that or those bodies, is diametrically opposed, not only to the revelations of God, which he has heretofore given of his will, but is also contradicted by the established laws and order of nature; by which it is clearly demonstrated that an inferior power cannot possibly create or make a superior one.—And I hereby affirm that it is both illogical and unconstitutional for a man who only holds, like John Wesley, the office of deacon in the Episcopal Church of England, to ordain a bishop in the Methodist Church, which office is superior to the power that ordained or created it.—And I also testify that the Roman Catholic has no authority from God to ordain, from the fact that she has for a long time been without open vision, consequently blind and destitute of knowledge.

I affirm that it is and has been, for want of open vision or revelation from God that so many divisions have arisen, and every man is doing what seems right in his own eyes; and that this is now, and always was, and ever will be, the consequence in every generation in which God makes no communication to men by way of revelation, through the ministration of angels and a living priesthood. I mean a priesthood who not only acknowledge Jesus Christ as their head, but who receive him as their living head, from whom they are made acquainted with his will and designs from time to time, as circumstances require; as in the days of the apostles and prophets, when were men also pastors and teachers, helps, governments, &c., for the perfecting of the saints, &c., as we are informed by one of old, who rightly understood the order of God's house.

And as we are assured that the purposes of God will stand, and that his ways are perfect, we may safely conclude that, although Satan and wicked men for a time may seem to thwart his purposes, yet he will finally bring about his decree, and do all his will and pleasure. So when he gave to Abraham and his seed the land of Canaan forever, we may not suppose the promise of God has failed, simply because they for a time have been out of the country, any more than we should doubt the historical fact relating to their captivity heretofore.

For as in the case of the order of his church when first established, and destined to be perfected, and without any schism, spot or wrinkle, even so shall it be finally accomplished.

But I certify that this order has traveled down to us unbroken, but that, as the Jewish Church were sometimes driven away from the order of God's house for transgression, to dwell as captives in Babylon, during which time their sacred rights and ordinances were of necessity neglected, and could not be observed according to God's law, until they returned. So also was the church of Jesus Christ to be driven into the wilderness, where they should feed her a thousand two hundred and sixty days, or 1260 years, clothed in sackcloth; and when she came out of spiritual Babylon, the same order will be restored in the church as at the beginning.

For so it was when God's people returned from ancient Babylon, the same priesthood was restored, the same order observed throughout, or their worship could not be acceptable. And when any disorder was introduced, it was looked upon as idolatry, and God dealt with it as such. He would not even admit of any mixture, neither addition or diminution, lest condemnation and destruction follow, as in the case of the introduction of the priesthood of Baal or Baal worship.

In Baal's time men's zeal was great, if not greater than before. But, after all, God was highly displeased, and his prophet rejected. Miracles ceased, wickedness abounded, and the wicked were promoted. I say miracles ceased, that is, among the people who had broken the order of God, and denied revelation through his living prophet Elijah.

But still, as many as received God's prophet, and believed his word, were blessed with his miraculous power manifested unto them, even to the healing of the leprosy, the raising of the dead, and providing for the wants of the body. So, also, now I certify before God, angels and men, that it is only for the want of the true order of God, in the authority of the priesthood, that all this evil is come upon us.

(To be continued.)

The best qualities to look after in a wife, are industry, humanity, neatness, gentleness, benevolence and piety. When you find these, there is no danger. You will obtain a treasure, and not regret your choice to the last period.

Chip Basket.

Where do they come from?—"Grandpa, where do the people get their fashions from?"
"From Boston."
"Where do the Boston folks get them from?"
"From England."
"Where do the English get them from?"
"From France."
"And where do the French get them from?"
"Why, right straight from the devil; there now stop your noise and go to bed."

The Whole Hog.—"Miss, will you take my arm?" "La, yes, sir, and you too." "Can't spare but the arm, miss," replied the bachelor. "Then," said she, "I can't take it, as my motto is to 'Go the whole hog or nothing!'"

A Patriarchal Speech.—The last great flourish that we have heard of runs thus:—

"Fellow Citizens—I am standing here on the throne prouder than any in Europe,—in the face of the Universe, and in the sublime presence of the people; and I stand as a lineal descendant of the goddess of Liberty! Yes, I was raised at the breast of that glorious individual! Her arm has sustained me; her shield has guarded me in every political fight I ever had—and the Lord knows I've had a good many,—her voice has huzzared in my ears; and many a time when I have been partly defeated by many foes, she has raised me from the dust in the thickest of the conflict.—"Has laid my languid head upon her knee, And bathed my bloody brow with tawny tea!"

Oriental Wit.—As a woman was walking, a man looked at and followed her.

"Why," said she, "do you follow me?"
"Because I have fallen in love with you."
"Why so?" My sister, who is coming after, is much handsomer than I am—go and make love to her."

The man turned back, and saw a woman with an ugly face, and being greatly disappointed, returned and said, "Why did you tell me a story?"

The woman answered, "neither did you tell me the truth, for if you are in love with me, why did you look for another woman?"

"What is the Lightning rod fixes?" inquired a gent from the country at the Recorder's office.

"There is no such place in the city," answered a bystander.

"I mean the things that you send letters on?"

"I cannot understand you, sir."

"Well, old hoss—I want to let my wife Betsy know that I have arrived in town."

"The Telegraph you mean?"

"That is the thing I'm arter."

Why are tell-tale women like German watches? Do you give it up? Because they are "Repeaters." The youth who sent us this has been given up by his physician. It produced a rush of blood to his head, which threatens to be fatal.

Cleer Fellows.—People that everybody cheats. In buying beefsteaks they seldom ever get more than fourteen ounces to the pound, while they never get a dollar changed without getting three short shillings in part payment.

They have got a queer law case in Clinton, Massachusetts. A young lady, who married a rich man under pretence of being beautiful, is discovered to have painted, wore bustles, and otherwise disguised her natural imperfections. Her husband sues her for obtaining money under false pretences.

Nobody but a Printer, anyhow.—The above was the sneering remark of a person residing not a thousand miles from the door of our sanctum, in referring to the profession we follow in pride. "Nobody but a Printer." It makes the blood run rampant through our veins to hear such expressions from the lips of those nursed on Republican soil. "Nobody but a Printer, anyhow!"

Who was Benjamin Franklin?

Nobody but a Printer!

Who was William Caxton, one of the fathers of literature?

Nobody but a Printer!

Who was Earl Stanhope?

Nobody but a Printer!

Who was Samuel Woodworth, the poet?

Nobody but a printer!

Who is the present Governor of Pennsylvania?

Nobody but a Printer!

Who is the present Governor of California?

Nobody but a Printer!

Who is George P. Morris, James Harper, Horace Greeley, Robert Sears, George D. Prentice, Senator Cameron, Dix, Niles, and James Buchanan of Pennsylvania, who was the choice of the people of a great portion of the Union, as their candidate for the Presidency?

Who are they?

Nobody but Printers, anyhow!

One thing is evident, every person who chooses cannot be a Printer. Brains are necessary.

"He dies like a beast who hath done so good while he lived." True, indeed! Go to his funeral—not a tear is shed. Not a pain or want has he relieved, and there is none to call him blessed. Think of it, ye time-servants—ye who seek for pleasure—ye who make self the centre of every thought and action—What an epitaph! "He died like a beast for he did no good while he lived!"

Mrs. Partington is in a great interrogatory excitement to know when the "Anglo-Saxon race," so much talked of, is to come off!

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 1.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, MAY 31, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 68.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

The following letter is handed us for publication, and we are requested to add that Elder Hickey endeavored to meet Elder Waugh, but did not succeed. We understand that Waugh is the Brighamite presiding High Priest for Canada. Of this however we are not sure, for the Brighamite papers all refuse to exchange with us, and leave us without official information.

We are not afraid to let them see our paper, nor are our Elders afraid to meet theirs. They are too well aware that if they reciprocate this liberality, there would be an end of Brighamism.

[ED. ISLANDER.]

Shakespear, March 18, '55.

L. D. HICKEY—SIR:—Yours of the 10th came to hand on the 13th, and I was glad to hear that you was down to Mr. Sly's, but was sorry to learn that such animosity was shown you by him. If yours is the truth, and as far as I am concerned I have no reason to doubt your word, I was glad that Br. Parker showed you so much kindness, and that he opened his doors for you. And my prayer is that the Lord would direct me, and that the laborers of his vineyard may be zealous and fervent in spirit, doing his work, and they will be blessed.

But as to the church, I have my mind made up; as to the officers, they must be in full; and if there is a church of God, wherever it may be, there must be a head, and that head must be a prophet, seer and revelator, or he is no head. And likewise those officers that must be under him will be guided by him, or it cannot be the church of God. And as to James or Brigham, it is but little matter to me, if I only knew who he is that I should follow, let him or the church be where they may, whether in the valleys of the mountains, or on the islands of the sea, or at Sevastopol.

And I, as a man, think that any church that is acting any other way, just like all other sectarian priests or churches, I care not where or who they may be, they are all astray, and astray under their own wicked and corrupt hearts, looking for the fleece more than the flock of God. And all I have to say is, may God's church prosper; may his servants be valiant men, men of sterling truth, and the spirit of God at the helm, that they may deliver the word of God in truth, and may men be willing to hear and give heed to what they hear. Then the work will roll forth, and then the kingdoms of this world will soon become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ. This is what I desire to see, and also my prayer.

I thank you for the kind advice that you gave me in yours, as regards myself, whether I become obedient to that instruction or not. But this I know, you have discharged yourself in warning me, and for which you have my thanks for every atom in your letter as a fellow mortal, as a father of a family, and a brother in the church of Christ. And my prayer is, that you may prosper, if you are the servant of God; if not, may it soon fall to the ground. And this we have in the scriptures of truth—the church of God shall be that strong, and built on such a good foundation, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. But when I think of that passage it makes me think how very different it is from the opinion of the gentiles, each one is afraid that one will become stronger than the other; which shows that they are in delusion, or the gates of hell would not prevail against them. I would like to see you and Elder Waugh together, if possible. He is still in London. When he comes here I will write you to that effect.

I am yours in the Lord,
WM. COSSEY.

NORTHERN ISLANDER

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, MAY 31, 1855.

The last previous issue of the Islander was under date of Nov. 30. By our terms the paper should have issued once a month from then till the opening of navigation this spring, but in consequence of the failure of arrangements for mail communication during the winter it was not issued. Once entirely suspended, there has been a little delay in resuming since the opening of navigation. Indeed, we are now rather short of help in the office, and though we shall not cease work except on Sabbath day, may not be able to get out a paper every week. Our subscribers will receive their full complement of papers, nevertheless.

In numbering the volumes, the issue of each year, more or less is counted for a volume; but in making up the accounts we invariably make forty numbers for a year's subscription.

Br. Hickey has sent us the following letter, addressed to him while on his mission in Canada last winter:

Shakespear, Canada West, }
February 28th, 1855. }

ELDER L. D. HICKEY—

DEAR SIR:—Since I wrote to you last I have seen a Mormon paper, which my cousin Wm. gets every week, which concerns yourself, and what you should know at all hazards. You need not think that I pay any attention to it, but I am surprised that such a religious community as the Mormons should be so spoken of by the Brighamites. I took pains to copy it, and you will now read the following:

"Elder Banks is preaching at Springfield, with what success we have not yet learned.—Elder Thomas Colborn gives us an interesting description of his travels through the States. He says Strang has played the devil in Michigan. He has sent his missionaries through the States to rob and plunder, and as he says to suck the milk of the gentiles. They style themselves Mormons. Their preaching is calculated to excite bad feelings. They proclaim publicly that they are going to possess the whole earth, and that they (the gentiles) will have to black their (the Mormons) boots, and become hewers of wood and drawers of water. In Lapeer, where my daughter resides, a short time prior to my arrival, there were three stores broken in and robbed. They were taken in the act. One was Strang's first counselor. His name is Hix or Hickey. He gave them leg bail. The others were awaiting their trial. These things have prejudiced the people against us. They think we are all of a flock."—St. Louis Luminary, Feb. 17, 1855, edited by Erastus Snow.

And there it ends. Now it's a pretty hard thing. Now you have got the name of the party who asserted this, you can get an action. We have got a letter from father Waugh. He says he has heard that Brigham is an usurper. But I will tell you more in my next. Please answer this by return of mail, or at your earliest convenience, and by so doing you will oblige yours in truth

ROBERT NICHOLS.

As the editor of the St. Louis Luminary is afraid to exchange with the Islander, lest we should answer his pretensions and expose his fallacies, we had not before seen the article published in that paper and copied above.

There is something so like what sectaries and gentiles have always said of the Mormons in all this, that our only surprise is that it should be found in a Mormon or Brighamite paper.

The gentiles began fifteen or twenty years ago to accuse the Mormons of stealing and living by plunder. That accusation has been the excuse for every persecution since the exodus from Missouri. We are not surprised to hear the same accusation from apostates, or any who have the gentile spirit. Brighamites are only adding another to the evidences of their departure from the truth, when they so much love and are so ready to make a lie.

We are not in the least disposed to retaliate the accusation. But there is something so familiar to the ear of those who dwelt in Nauvoo from the beginning of Brigham's administration till the western exodus, in the words "suck the milk of the gentiles," that we can hardly forbear to ask Elder Snow, "how—But no matter. Snow will understand the question, and we don't wish that others should.—Snow knows very well what was the chief argument against Mr. Strang's prophetic calling in Nauvoo.

We can assure Mr. Snow that whatever Mr. Strang's sentiments may be, this language, "suck the milk of the gentiles," is none of his. It is technical, and Brighamite. It is never used here. And however disgusting the frequent repetition of it by Brighamites may be, we have never been anxious enough to give them an ill name to insinuate that it meant anything different in their mouths from what it does in the scriptures. Isaiah lx, 16. If he chooses to put it in Mr. Strang's mouth in a connection evidently giving it an opprobrious sense, our only conclusion is that he is giving it the sense to which he is most used. He is giving character to his associations, not ours.

We do not doubt that our preaching has the same tendency to excite "bad feelings" as that of Jesus, or Peter, or Joseph. Nor shall we deny proclaiming publicly that the saints are to possess the whole earth. We should like to know if Mr. Snow and Mr. Thomas Colborn do not proclaim the same thing?

If they do not, the prophet Daniel and the Lord Jesus do.

"And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. vii, 27.

"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. v, 5.

If Elder Snow and Thomas Colborn do not profess to be of the body of the saints, and do not expect with them to possess the earth for an everlasting possession, we at least do. And what we believe we publicly proclaim.

But the next accusation has a special savor of Brighamism.—We are accused of saying, "the gentiles will have to black our boots for us." This again has a most familiar sound to the ear of those who were in Nauvoo in the beginning of Brighamism.—Any one can satisfy himself by reading the sermons of the twelve, reported by Watts. But no one ever heard it here.—Snow and Colborn only imagined we said such things, because they do.

Finally comes this specific accusation, that at Lapeer, a little before the arrival there of this Thomas Colborn, three stores were broken open and robbed, and three men were taken in the act, one of whom was Hix or Hickey, Strang's first counselor; that he gave leg bail, but the other two were, at the date of Colborn's visit, awaiting their trial. We reply,

1st. We have a regular and full file of the Lapeer County Democrat, a weekly paper published at Lapeer, which we have carefully examined, and it does not make the slightest mention of any such robbery or arrest.

2d. We have an official copy of the reports of the Prosecuting Attorney of Lapeer county for the last three years, containing a full statement of all the criminal cases prosecuted in the county during that period. No such is named among them.

3d. Mr. Strang has not now and never has had a counselor or the name of Hix or Hickey. Lorenzo D. Hickey is one of the Apostles, and as such has been engaged in preaching the gospel most of the time for five or six years, and has often visited Lapeer, but he has never been arrested there or any where else.

Elder Hickey has been a resident of Michigan (excepting a few months in Nauvoo) from childhood, and was a respectable preacher of the faith long before Joseph's martyrdom, and is in the habit of traveling and preaching, and is well known in almost every county in the State. Moreover he has a mission now till July, which will take him through Lapeer. Would not Mr. Thomas Colborn and Apostle Snow like to go there and see him prosecuted and punished according to law?

This whole story about the robbery, arrest and leg bail is an arrant falsehood, without a word of truth to support it. It is one of the thousand false tales always told on Mormons, wherever they preach the gospel. If Snow and Colborn have not thus been evilly spoken of, they are not sent of God; for none sent of him, not even Jesus Christ, escaped such.

But the concluding remark, "these things have prejudiced the people against us—they think we are of one flock," requires more than ordinary notice, and we shall furnish Messrs. Colborn and Snow abundance of evidence that it would tend much to relieve them from prejudice if they were thought to be of the same flock with us.

We do not claim to be exempt from religious prejudice. So far from it, we are fully aware that the prejudice which gentile men have ever felt towards those who believe in prophets, revelations and miracles has been measured out to us without sparing. We know full well that all the bitterness of religious prejudice has been stirred up and made active by Know-Nothingism, and as political elements Know-Nothings and Jesuits have joined hands to legislate us out of the pale of judicial protection, as yet in vain.

Mr. Snow may add a broad margin to these facts, and yet it would help the reputation of the Brighamites to be thought to be of the same flock.

Was not the avowed reason for driving the Brighamites out of Nauvoo, that they were thieves, robbers and counterfeiters? We say nothing of the truth of such an accusation against them. But the public opinion held them all as a body guilty, and the public justice justified their expatriation. In all the rural districts throughout the nine counties engaged in that expatriation, those known as Strangites were exempt from the general violence. In many places they were allowed to remain. In others time was allowed them to close their business, which was not allowed the Brighamites.

Mr. Snow knows very well that the Brighamites felt this fact with so much bitterness that in one instance at least they sent men in disguise as gentile wolf hunters to mob a Strangite, and thus make us feel the smart as well as themselves. They then used the fact that there was less prejudice against us than them as evidence that we were the children of this world, and not of God, saying, the world loved its own.

From that time to this we have been in continued contact with the gentiles, and they far away, and except upon the single subject of polygamy there is now far less prejudice against Mormons than then, showing that our conduct has allayed the prejudice which theirs created. On that subject we presume that at this late day Mr. Snow will not attempt to shirk the odium on to us.

And during the whole period since the usurpation of Brigham Young the public press has given voice to the public opinion, and spoken the strength of its prejudices towards us both, and we select a few out of several thousand testimonies we have on file, extending over a period of nine years, to show how far Brighamites are injured by being suspected of being of the same flock with us.

One of the Smiths came from Voree, a few days since to Nauvoo, and proclaimed Strang the head of the Church in the Temple, at that place, without molestation. The Saints are flocking to Voree in great numbers; it is to be the gathering place of all this strange people, except the awfully corrupt Twelve, and their adherents, now on their way to California, over the Rocky Mountains, or to some other country. James J. Strang is a lawyer of considerable eminence in the west. He will, doubtless, establish the Mormon dominion again at Voree, and, by his intelligence and spirit of enterprise, regenerate this people, casting off the corrupt Twelve and all their followers.—Cin. Daily Commercial.

CAMP OF ISRAEL—TWELVEITES—RIGDONITES AND VOREE MORMONS.—We stated yesterday that the emigrating Mormons had assumed the cognomen of the "Camp of Israel," which we are informed includes the awful corrupt "Twelve," the "Danites," the "Destroying Angels," and most of the "bogus makers," "thieves," "assassins," "police," and "vulgar herd," of this strange people. From the best information we can obtain, and we have taken some pains, they are as corrupt a set of "land pirates" as ever disgraced the earth; though they are much to be pitied on account of the suffering women and children, who are emigrating with them. The poverty and actual suffering of these poor creatures are enough to sicken the heart of all feeling persons. There are now three principal cliques of Mormons—1st. The "Twelveites," who are moving off some where to the west, with the most corrupt, abandoned, licentious, low and grovelling portion of the church, now called the "Camp of Israel." 2d. The "Rigdonites," who are locating their "Zion" near Chambersburg, Pennsylvania. They include in their number, it is said, many excellent men and estimable citizens, who left the "Twelveites" in consequence of their "spiritual wife doctrine" and other abominations. 3d. The "Voree Mormons," who acknowledge JAMES J. STRANG, Esq., as their prophet. This portion of the church is evidently the most orderly and law-abiding, and includes most of the talent and virtue of that people. They are rapidly increasing in numbers, and most of the churches out of Nauvoo have declared for "Strang and Voree," and "Voree, Wisconsin," is to be the "great gathering place" of the sincere and virtuous portion of the "Latter Day Saints."—Ohio Union.

Voree is the location of the "primitive Mormons," under the new Prophet, James J. Strang, Esq., an attorney at law, and formerly a political editor in New York—said to be a man of superior talents. The most worthy of the Mormon Twelve Apostles, have gone over to the "Voree Mormons," and many thousands are joining the standard of the new Prophet. Most of the talented and well disposed members throughout the country have united with the "Voree Mormons." Should they avoid the errors of the old Mormon "Twelve" whose bad counsels and iniquitous practices resulted in the death of their former Prophet and Patriarch, and pursue a prudent course with a wise Presidency and Counselors, they will never be molested. It was the "bogus" making, thieving, plundering and assassin-like operations of the "Brighamite or Twelveite administration of the Mormon Church," which rendered them so odious in the eyes of all well disposed people. The vicious portion of them are emigrating beyond the pale of civilization into the wilderness.—Plymouth Herald.

JAMES J. STRANG, formerly Postmaster at Ellington, and subsequently publisher of the Randolph Herald, is now President of a branch of the Mormon church at their location, called "Voree." It appears that these deluded people are now divided into three parties, one called the "Twelveites," located at Nauvoo, or emigrating to the California region—the "Rigdonites" under Sidney Rigdon located near Chambersburg Pa.—and the "Voree Mormons," who acknowledge James J. Strang as their prophet, who are gathering themselves at a place in Wisconsin, which they name "Voree," where they design to maintain order and the laws of the country.

Some remarks from the Mayville Sentinel a few weeks since, on the character of the prophet, has called out a long article in the "Voree Herald," a paper published by him, in which he shows that the charges are without foundation. He had enjoyed the most implicit confidence of the loco foco party of this country, was appointed Postmaster at Ellington on the recommendation of the leading politicians of the country, who "esteemed his opinion of value and reposed ultimate confidence in him." We do not canvass his claims to the station of a prophet, and as successor of Joe Smith.—Fredonia Censor.

The Prophet Strang appears to us a very intelligent man, devoid of any thing like enthusiasm; and so far as we could judge honest and earnest in all that he said.—Southport Tel.

Those who follow the new prophet are usually denominated "Strangites," and embrace in their number most of the talented, well-disposed, honest, law-abiding and devout portion of the church. There are a few of what are called "Brighamite" Mormons, at Voree, who adhere to the emigrating camp, who have recently given some striking proofs of their thieving propensities, to the great annoyance of the citizens. It is supposed they were sent there to bring odium on Mr. Strang's adherents. Prophet Strang (an attorney and counselor at law, by profession) is a small man, about thirty-two or three years of age, light complexion, high forehead, intellectual, fluent in speech, of great suavity of manners, companionable, and, in a word, what we would call a "first rate clever fellow." His extraordinary governing powers are easily accounted for by the fact that "the Latter Day Saints believe in him." They have a new project on foot, which they call the "Indian Mission," it is understood to be the establishment of a mission school, and a large colony or "state" of their church, on Big Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan.—Cincinnati Commercial.

This man Strang, from what we have been able to learn of his movements and purposes, has more means and ability than any one who has yet aspired to the supremacy of the church. His previous experience and individual means give us reason to expect that he will also be eminently successful.—St. Louis Republican.

We have just now received the first exchange of the Voree Herald, published by James J. Strang. It evinces talent of a high order, but oh! how perverted.

We have met Mr. Strang; and in his intercourse he has proved himself a gentleman.—We wish the Mormons were all as good as he.

It is a painful reflection upon humanity, to contemplate the fact of such men as he, being the leaders of so palpable a humbug.—Oshkosh Democrat.

A prophet has lately risen among the Mormons, viz.: James J. Strang, of Wisconsin, who claims to be the successor of Joseph Smith. He has been with them only about two years, and was a young lawyer of western New York. He claims to have received communications from heaven, at the very hour of Smith's death, commissioning him to lead the people.

Strang is said to have found plates of brass or some other metal. He was directed by an Angel who gave him a stone to look through, by which he made the discovery. They were found three feet under ground, beneath an oak tree, a foot in diameter. These he has translated; they give an account of a race who once inhabited that land and became a fallen people. Strang preaches pure Bible doctrine, and receives only those who walk upright before their God.

This sect is now divided into three factions, viz.: the Rigdonites, the Twelveites and the Strangites. The Rigdonites are the followers of Sidney Rigdon, and are but few in number. The Twelveites—so named after their Twelve Apostles—are very fanatical, and hold to the spiritual wife system, and the plurality of Gods. The Strangites maintain the original doctrine of Mormonism.—H. How's Historical Collections of Ohio—A standard History furnished by authority to all the school libraries in that State.

THE MORMONS OR "LATTER DAY SAINTS," AND THEIR MOVEMENTS.—After the assassination of their first prophet and leader Joe Smith, they became divided into three parties, viz.: one under Sidney Rigdon, one under the notorious Brigham Young, the first founder of the "Spiritual Wife Doctrine," and a third party under James J. Strang, who claims to be their present prophet, and successor of Joseph Smith; presenting a letter of appointment from Smith to said office.

The party under Rigdon has entirely passed away; and he has gone into obscurity without a single follower to adhere to his claims, and has not left a stone to tell where slumbers the ashes of the fallen leader. The gang under Brigham Young are known as the Salt Lake party, or the "fighting Mormons," who are located at the Valley of Great "Salt Lake," and at "Council-Bluffs," and have carried with them cannons, guns, revolvers, knives, and other implements of warfare, they still hold on to their cursed Spiritual Wife Doctrine; Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Parley P. Pratt, and some other of their leaders, having more than twenty wives each; they have also established their famous "Nauvoo Legion," and pretend to be twenty thousand in number, and seek admission into the union, with the notorious Brigham Young as Governor.

In relation to their being twenty thousand in number at the "Salt Lake," there is not one word of truth in the statement. It is a deception, and base falsehood from first to last, for the purpose of deceiving this government, and their duped followers; and we are prepared to prove that there is not now, (1849,) and never has been three thousand Mormons at the Salt Lake, men, women and children all put together.

The followers of Mr. Strang claim for him that he was regularly appointed a prophet according to the laws of the church, as a kind of second "Joshua," to succeed Joe Smith in the priesthood and prophetic office to finish or close up the great work of what they call the "dispensation of the fullness of times;" and they may be called the peace party of the Mormons, or "Saints." They are the party that are now gaining numbers every where, particularly in the south. Their head quarters are in Voree, Wisconsin, and Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan.

They have been living at Voree over five years, and had no difficulty with the other inhabitants, which seems a wonder in their history. But their movements at Beaver Island seems most strange of all; they are gathering and locating there by hundreds, by virtue of professed Revelation, that Strang has received from God commanding them to gather there and take possession of the land, as a gift of God, on the "Free Soil" principle, without money, and without price, declaring they never shall be drove from their possessions. They use no "weapons of war," and depend entirely on heaven for protection, and deliverance. Their prophet is now in Washington City preparing documents, professedly by the command of God, to lay before Congress in relation to these things. Truly wonders will never cease.—Boston Advertiser.

BEAVER ISLANDS.—This group of Islands (ten in number) is situated in the northern part of Lake Michigan. It is on these Islands that the Latter Day Saints, or the peace party of the Mormon people, in pursuance of a professed revelation from God, given to Mr. James J. Strang, the successor of Joseph Smith, to the prophetic office, have commenced a settlement, and invite all industrious, law abiding people of their faith to come and possess an inheritance forever, without money and without price, asserting that God has given them the right of soil, on which to establish the kingdom of God, or the fifth universal empire, that is to subdue all nations and stand forever.—This people claim no fellowship with the Salt Lake Mormons, or any of their high handed wickedness, but expect to conquer all by love and rendering good for evil.—Boston Guide.

The Beaver Islands, situated at the foot of Lake Michigan, is the present location of the "peace party" Mormons, (or, as they love to call themselves, Latter Day Saints,) under the administration of James J. Strang, whom they claim to be "Joseph Smith's lawful successor in the prophetic office."

Mormonism, whether true or false, has gone forward in gigantic strides, being aided by the help of persecuting priests and bigoted people, which will always aid in building up any delusion man can invent.

Their prophet Strang is a master piece of intellectuality; a thorough going man, of good information. He was once post master of Ellington, and editor of the Randolph Herald, of this State—was a regular lawyer of considerable eminence before his appointment to be the Mormon prophet. Since which he has had nothing to do with either law or politics. He devotes his whole time to the good of his people, whom he is president over.—Commercial (Ontario) Times.

✓The following is from the Detroit Free Press of May 28th, 1851, on the occasion of the prosecution of Mr. Strang and numerous others for treason, &c.:

✓THE MORMON ARRESTS.—The reported arrest of James J. Strang and other Mormon leaders seems to have been in fact no arrest at all. They all went voluntarily on board the U. S. steamer, and were only taken into the custody of the Marshal at their own request. They expressed themselves not only willing, but anxious for an investigation by the proper authorities—and have asserted from the beginning that no violation of the laws has taken place on their part, or on the part of the Mormons on Beaver Island. They are here voluntarily, and intend to remain here until the authorities are satisfied of their innocence.

We were certain from the beginning that the hue and cry against the Mormons was all moonshine. Violations of the law may have taken place among them, and it would be strange indeed if they did not now and then occur in a community numbering some seven hundred souls. But every instance of the kind has doubtless been greatly exaggerated, until finally it was thought politic to send a large force to make arrests. The "levying war," counterfeiting, obstructing the mails," and other stories so freely in circulation with reference to Strang and his associates, will, we believe, turn out on investigation to be mere invention.

Strang is at large here, having never been placed in confinement since his arrival. Upon a charge so serious, was there any evidence to render a conviction at all probable, he would assuredly be placed in confinement, or held to bail in some such sum as would insure his presence at the trial. As a demonstration upon the pockets of our proverbially benevolent Uncle Samuel, the trip to Beaver Island by the U. S. steamer Michigan, and the government officers here, was all very well, and undoubtedly successful. But that it will result in the conviction of His Majesty, King James, upon any one of the serious charges made against him, we have not the slightest idea.

Strang is a middle sized, hardy looking man, and would be taken at first sight for one of those genuine American Sovereigns, who till our soil and fell our forests, rather than the reigning King of a community in open rebellion against a government so powerful as the United States. He is apparently about forty-five years of age, and would pass readily for an unassuming, intelligent, well informed farmer.

At the time of these arrests there was general rejoicing in the Brighamite camp, in the hope that Strang would soon be hanged, or at least locked up.—Orson Hyde ventured some prophecies on it, but the result proved the Free Press the better prophet. All the arrested were honorably acquitted, tho' prosecuted with much bitterness, at an expense of $30,000.

✓MORMON PERSECUTION.—We are gratified in being enabled to announce a verdict of acquittal in the United States District Court, of all the defendants. We had feared that such would not be the result, notwithstanding our entire confidence in their innocence. The labored efforts made by the Advertiser clique, in Detroit, to convict the defendants in advance of the trial, we had feared would have been felt in the jury box. The jury, we learn, was composed of ten Whigs and two Democrats, from which we infer the result to be anything but gratifying to those who have attempted to enlist the elements of political warfare for the purpose of convicting men innocent of the crime alleged against them.—St. Clair Observer.

✓The trial of King Strang and other Mormons in the U. S. Court, in Detroit, for obstructing the mail, &c., has been concluded—verdict of the Jury, not guilty.

✓While we have no doubt this verdict, by an honest jury, is justified by the evidence in the case, and in strict keeping with every principle of right and justice, it could not have been otherwise than positively mortifying to the Detroit Advertiser. That paper, with a great flourish of trumpets, heralded the departure of District Attorney Bates and Marshal Knox, with the U. S. war steamer to Beaver Island, to arrest Strang and his party—gave its own sided and bitterly prejudiced version of the affair, and, to complete the matter, actually prejudged the case, and condemned the parties unheard—a step grossly abusing the license of the press, and for which no excuse can be offered. Nor did the Advertiser stop here. Thwarted in its designs to wreak vengeance on the Mormons by the verdict of an intelligent jury, it basely attacks the District Judge by insinuating that this verdict was rendered because of instructions by the court.—Verily, this is a poor subterfuge to escape the indignation every man must feel for the unprecedented and unjustifiable course of the Advertiser.—Mich. State Journal.

✓The Legislature is the great centre of attraction. We went into the House to hear the arguments upon the contested seats from Newaygo county. "King Strang" plead his right in a masterly and convincing manner. He is a talented man, equal to any other man in debate and general information.—He retains his seat.—Jackson Citizen.

✓Mr. Strang's course as a member of the present Legislature has disarmed much of the prejudices which have previously surrounded him. Whatever may be said or thought of the peculiar sect of which he is the local head, we take pleasure in stating that throughout this session he has conducted himself with a degree of decorum and propriety which have been equalled by his industry, sagacity, good temper, apparent regard for the true interests of the people, and the obligations of his official oath.—Detroit Advertiser.

✓The case of James Barton, contesting the seat of Hon. J. J. Strang, is yet (Jan. 10) undecided. Mr. Strang presents and argues his case in person, with a force of reasoning, energy and eloquence which, whatever may be the result, will leave a most favorable opinion of his personal qualifications for the position he claims.—State Journal.

✓Mr. Strang is confessedly the most talented and ready debater in the House. It seems he was educated a lawyer, in which profession he had some experience in years past, but he has laid aside the law for the sceptre of a Mormon King and Priest. He seems equally ready on any subject, political, commercial, financial, judicial, educational, or anything else in the range of legislation. He is bold, decided, positive and often overbearing in debate, and woe to him who provokes his satire and sarcasm, for his wit is as unmerciful as it is ready in retort. He is ardent, passionate and rapid in his oratory, even to a fault, but is clear and forcible in argument, and never fails to make himself understood. In person he is a little below the medium height, stoutly built, large head and neck, of light complexion, with small, dark and piercing eyes. From his social position as "King of Beaver Island," he is the lion of the House, and is always pointed out to the ladies visiting the Capitol.—His great speech, since his right to his seat was settled, was made last Tuesday, in opposition to the Railroad bill.—Temperance Advocate.

✓On the whole, Mr. Strang's Senatorial career has been an eloquent and honorable one.—Free Press.

To these we add a single statement, from the Detroit Advertiser, immediately after the result of the last fall election was known:

✓Gov. Parsons has been elected from Shiawassee, and will doubtless contest the leadership of the Democracy in the House with Littlejohn, Fitch, Church, Sherman and James J. Strang, of "St. James," or Beaver Island, whom it is reported is elected. Strang is a shrewd manager, a forcible and ready speaker, and wields more political power than any other man in the State. There will be no lack of talking talent or management on the Democratic side of the House.

This makes no allusion to Mormons, but coming as it does from the leading and most influential political paper opposed to the party with which Mr. Strang acts in politics, it sets him down as one of the leaders of the most powerful party in the country, and as wielding more political power than any other man in the State. We submit that no Brighamite can ever be injured by being classed in the same flock.

Mr. Snow will please remember also that for above three years past Mr. Strang has represented in the State Legislature, not as some spiteful people have said, the Mormon settlement on Beaver Island, but the counties of Newaygo, Oceana, Mason, Manistee, Grand Traverse, Manistowick, Emmet and Cheboygan, and the several unorganized counties attached to them, and has by some means succeeded in carrying more measures for the benefit of his entire constituency than any other man who ever represented any portion of the upper country.

Especially we commend to the notice of the Luminary the fact that in the county of Cheboygan, where there is no Mormon settlement, Mr. Strang, at the last election, received every vote but one; and the further fact that, though religious prejudice, engendered and fostered by Know-Nothingism, prevailed in the last Legislature as it never has before since the existence of the State, and the party with which Mr. Strang acted was in a hopeless majority, Mr. Strang was made chairman of an important standing committee, an honor seldom bestowed on an opponent, and in this case shared with him by but two Democrats in the House.

With all these facts before him, is not Mr. Snow a little ashamed of saying that the Brighamites are disgraced by our standing and conduct?

There is one more consideration which would be worth a thought to Mr. Snow, if he really believed that the reputation of the Brighamites depended in the slightest degree on ours.—

Discussion
Did you or any body else know Mr. Strang to be wanted in a manner

Nobody on earth has endeavored so much to give us a bad name as these same Brighamites. No other people have known less of us or said more against us. From 1844 till the present time their papers have poured out a continual stream of vituperation and false accusation upon Mr. Strang and his followers. For eleven years their preachers, both in Europe and America, have labored as incessantly in endeavoring to render him infamous as they ever did in making converts. If they could have succeeded, it would be right that their work should return upon them. If they have escaped the common infamy their labors tended to produce, it was because they failed to be credited.

We have not imitated them in this miserable folly—this worse than madness. Knowing that gentiles would make no distinction, we have been assiduous in defending them from false accusation, though rewarded only with additional injuries. And the ablest defence of the Brighamites against the attacks made on them since they were in Utah is from the pen of James J. Strang. And their gratitude is shown by getting up some new lie about him, and publishing it throughout Europe and America.

Our controversy with the Brighamites is theological, not personal. We shall conduct it with the weapons of logic, not slander. We have in the foregoing selections produced only such as show that Colborn's assertion that they were injured by being classed with us was not true, and consequently passed over all such as merely spoke ill of the Brighamites.

We do not pretend to credit what is said against the Brighamites therein. But no matter how unjust those extracts may be towards them, they still prove that the public opinion is more favorable to us than to them, and that we are the party which suffers by being supposed to be of one flock.

We send this paper to the Luminary, and will republish at length in the Islander whatever reply Mr. Snow makes, if he will but send it to us.

We publish in this No. acts organizing four new counties within the district represented by Mr. Strang in the last Legislature. A bill passed both Houses for the organization of the county of Iosco, but was accidentally lost, or spirited away on its way from the House of Representatives to the Governor, and by that means is defeated. A bill also passed the House for the organization of Aranac, but was not acted on in the Senate. Its neglect was said to have been accidental, but may have been intentional. Only one new county was organized out of Mr. Strang's district.

COUNTY OF MANITUE.

The readers of the Islander will perceive that we no longer hail from Emmet county, but Manitue. This change was not asked for by any of the inhabitants of Emmet or of the new county of Manitue, but was forced on us by outsiders, for the purpose of injuring the Mormons.

In this purpose they severally overreached themselves. Our position is doubtless stronger than it would have been if they had let us alone. We shall notice this action more particularly hereafter.

Manitue county is the smallest county in the State, being only equal to three full surveyed townships, or about 72,000 acres of land. For municipal purposes it is laid off into four townships. It has a Representative in the Legislature for the next six years. We may hope therefore that there will be a little less foolish talk about Mormon votes for a few years to come, and less effort to get up election contests.

HEEDLESS LEGISLATION.

In consequence of the heedless manner in which the acts to organize the county of Manitue and re-organize the county of Emmet were drawn, no taxes can be collected this year in either of those counties. County and township taxes for the expenses of 1855 and 1856 can both be collected the latter year, but no State tax for either year can be levied. These acts were drawn by the Hon. J. A. T. Wendell, of Mackinac, and passed in opposition to Mr. Strang's earnest remonstrance. We thank Mr. Wendell that his ignorance drew out the venom of his spite. He is welcome to suck his own poison.

LAST WINTER'S MISSIONS.

At the last summer Conference a resolution was offered to send out a winter mission of forty Elders. The resolution elicited considerable discussion on the question whether we really could send that number, twenty-four being the largest number we had ever sent at one time since the Brighamite defection. The result was that the resolution was amended by striking out forty and inserting fifty. All who were slow to believe said the thing was impossible.

But when the time came fifty-three went on missions, fifty-one of whom labored faithfully in the fields to which they were sent. All but six have returned, many of them bringing the fruits of their labors with them.

So great is the call for preaching that several will return to their missions previous to the July Conference.

THE WINTER.

The past winter was at this place remarkably severe, for the Islands. It is worthy of remark, however, that the winters on the Islands are always much milder than on the main land in the same latitude. The severest cold experienced here last winter the thermometer was 16 deg. below zero, being 4 deg. lower than at any time previous. The greatest depth of snow was three and a half feet, being a foot deeper than in previous years.

The brig Robert Burns reached here from Chicago April 23d, being the first vessel of the season. The harbor had then been open two weeks.

April 27th the propeller Saginaw, Capt. Hayford, arrived from Milwaukee, with Mr. Strang as passenger. The 28th the steamer Michigan arrived from Detroit, being the first through the straits.

The winter having been milder here than in the latitude of Chicago and Buffalo, the opening was earlier than was anticipated, and very few were ready for it. Not only Lake Michigan but the straits were free of ice several days in advance of Lake Erie.

The supply of provisions here was abundant. Notwithstanding the unanticipated late opening, no one was short. Fish and potatoes were wintered in large quantities for export, and breadstuffs were sold cheaper than at any other place along the Lakes.

By the following letters, written in Lyman Wight's camp, our readers will get the last news we have of them. We are surprised that any who ever was a Mormon should engage in hunting Indians.

The lands in Texas have never been purchased of the Indians. As the settlements press back on them, depredations are to be looked for as a matter of course. What less could the Indians do? We cannot condemn them. If driven from the land, of course they will seize whatever they find on it; and they do no more than any man would under the same circumstances.

Four months pay in the U. S. service will scarcely remunerate for the loss of twenty-nine horses. We regret the misfortune of Br. Wight. But the cause of the Indians is just. If they are too weak to wage national war, reprisals is the next resort, and they seem to succeed well at it. Get off from the Indians' lands and deal fairly with them, and your property will be safe.

April 2d, 1855.

SISTER MILLER:—We have given up the notion of going to California, and have settled down on a piece of land about fourteen miles above Castroville, which we rented for five years or more. We have about fifty acres of corn planted, and seven houses built. As Lehi wrote the particulars in the letter he wrote to John, I shall say no more about this.

The Indians have been very hostile here this winter. On the 15th of March the boys were in the field planting corn, and while they were in to dinner the Indians came and took every horse and mule we had except one, that being away from home. The next morning the boys started and found their camp ground, about three miles from here, but saw nothing. The next night they came and turned all our cattle out of the field except two, which they killed. One belonged to Rodney Brace, and the other to a Dutchman.

Orange has not returned home yet. Lamoni has just returned from San Antonio, and brought us news of them. The express told him that the rangers were yet at Fort Davis, and could not come home for two months yet, as they have had a battle with the Indians, and killed fifteen, with the loss of two rangers, the names of whom we could not find out. If we do not have to leave on account of the Indians, we shall probably stay here several years. Matilda expects a letter from Orange this week; if so, Lehi will write the particulars to John.

Yours with respect,
ELIZA WIGHT.

P. S. The report we heard of the rangers is false, for since this was written Orange has returned.

E. W.

Medina River, April 8, '55.

BRO. MILLER,

DEAR SIR:—I have just returned from a tour of some four months after Indians, who have been committing depredations on the frontiers. We proceeded as far as New Mexico, and were in the vicinity of Elpasso, and traveled five or six hundred miles along the Rio Grande. We succeeded in overtaking one party only, in which some five or six were killed and a number wounded.

We were employed by the U. S. government for the purpose of a big scout, but being under U. S. officers effected but very little. We saw much country of little worth to anybody. Except in New Mexico, we saw no country after leaving here worth locating.

We are all well at present, and living on the Medina, about fifteen miles from Castroville. At this place we have lost twenty-nine head of horses, which has injured our circumstances considerably. They were all stolen by the Indians in my absence. Father has fifty acres of corn growing, and is doing well. All the local news we have is, continual depredations all over the country.

On my return home I found letters from Bro. John and you, bearing date Dec. 3d and Jan. 1st. I was glad to hear from you both, and as there is but little news, I have concluded to call this an answer to both, and hope you will receive it as such.

Yours as ever,
O. L. WIGHT.

New York, April 17, '55.

DEAR BRO. JAMES:—I have long wanted to write to you. But as I have been out of health a long while, and not having heard of you in four years, till finally I saw an account of you in the Tribune, I concluded to write to you.

Dear brother, you may have forgotten me, but rest assured that I have not forgotten you.—I never bow my knees before my Father but I pray for you, and all the brethren and sisters there, that the Lord will hold you up to do that work which he has assigned you. I hope soon to see you in New York.—I never see any of our people. Please give my love to all the brethren and sisters.

As I have been out of the habit of writing many years, I get my daughter to write as I dictate. I hope you remember the poor deaf sister. I have never seen a revelation since I borrowed one on the baptism for the dead, so that and the letter of appointment is all I have to cheer me up. Please let me know on the receipt of this if you expect to come to New York shortly, or any of the brethren. Please write me all you can to comfort me. I am broken down now, and near my seventieth year. I began with a prophet, and I want to end with one.—Please record my name in the church books.

CATHARINE WILKIE.

Three dollars received. Sister Wilkie is not forgotten. We are most happy to hear from one faithful in New York, where so many have fallen away. We send some papers and tracts to her direction, as well as the Islander. [Ed.]

Wardsville, Jan. 19, '55.

BRO. HICKEY,

DEAR SIR:—I have just received your letter, in connection with Br. Strang's. I am glad to hear of your prosperity. Your blessing is with me. We are prospering. Some eight families promise to go up in the spring. We have the opportunity of calling upon the learned priests. It annoys them, but we do it the more; and when they refuse us, the doctors and lawyers see that we are heard. I am preaching every night, or nearly so. I have an appointment for to-night and to-morrow night. Your suggestion is agreeable, that we should labor west of London. I hope we shall succeed, and do much good in the name of Christ. It is hard to get them in the water, but I tell them to get up to the kingdom of God.

Yours truly,
L. D. TUBBS.

Payments for the Islander.

J. Chase $1.00, to No. 81. L. D. Tubbs 50 cts, to 64. R. G. Thacher 25 cts, to 66.—Abiah Higby $1.00, to 80. Rodolph G. Steel $1.00 to 72. Wm. L. Pavy $2.00, to 106. John Trout $1.00, to 91. Catharine Wilkie $3.00, to 127. James C. Fuller $1.00, to 87. Wm. Cossey $2.00, to 107. Freeman Nickerson 50 cts, to 77.

FULL SUPPLY.

F. JOHNSON & CO. have received a full assortment of various articles expressly for this trade, viz: Dry Goods, Boots and Shoes, Groceries, Crockery Ware and Fishermen's Stores, which they will sell low for cash or ready pay. 68aa.

TO MINING COMPANIES.

Johnston's Detroit City Directory AND ADVERTISING GAZETTEER OF MICHIGAN, FOR 1855-6.

To contain general directory of all the House-holders and other citizens of Detroit, to be enumerated in May next. Nominal List of State and City Executive and Legislative Bodies. Judges and other State and County Judicial and Executive Functionaries. Statistical Reports, the Census of each County, City, Town, and Post Village in Michigan; List of all the Mines in the State, with Statistics, where supplied; A New Ornamental Map of Detroit; Almanac for 1855-6; Tables of Routes and Distances; of Interest, of Foreign Coins and Currency; Shipping List; Steamboat and Railway Intelligence, with many other useful particulars, too numerous to mention here. Size, imperial 8vo., about 350 pages, good paper, neatly bound. Price, ten shillings, except the quantity to be gratuitously distributed.

The style of the Directory of 1854-5 will be improved for 1855-6. Cards neatly arranged on the pages. Half pages and pages of advertisements will be printed on colored paper, pagged and compiled together with extra display.

In the Advertisers Key, will be classified, as usual, the several Advertisements. The work will be prepared essentially with a view to subserve the interests of the advertiser and the general interests of Michigan.

2000 copies of the last Directory were printed, and 1000 gratuitously and widely distributed to benefit the City and State, and the Cards of Advertisers were carried by the work into hands they never, otherwise perhaps, would have reached.

The Directory in preparation, will be ready about the close of June next. I trust the support I may continue to receive will enable me to print for 1855-6.

THREE THOUSAND COPIES.

If so, I shall devote 1500 copies to gratuitous circulation throughout the Union. A copy shall be kept hung up for reference in each Hotel and Post Office in the State, and a number of copies shall be forwarded to Europe.

As usual, the Cards of benevolent Societies, whether in Detroit or throughout the State, inserted FREE. Trustees of Colleges and all similar Institutions, should avail themselves of the opportunity this permanent medium presents of giving extensive notoriety to such establishments.

Manufacturers and owners of Patent Rights in Michigan or elsewhere, may give remunerative publicity to their business at trifling cost. The compiler, at a mere nominal charge, invites for publication the Cards of Attorneys, Collectors, Land Agents, &c., from each City and Village in the State.

The work will be so prepared in exhibiting the unsurpassed resources of Michigan, that it shall prove a highly important aid to increase the population by immigration from less favored States.

The Directory has local claims to patronizing support, and its utility is indisputable.—No effort shall be left unemployed to deserve the continuance of a generous encouragement. For past aid, friends will please accept my acknowledgments, and remembering the high prices of paper, and the large quantity to be used in the work, as well as the great expense of the clerical and printing labor to be expended upon it, will assist me to do better in the pending effort. JAMES DALE JOHNSTON, Compiler Detroit Directory, &c.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED.

The promised work—Europe and the Allies of the past and to-day.

A complete history of the war in the east, 422 pages, fine tinted engravings; portraits of Potentates and Generals; Map of the Crimea; Sevastopol and fortifications; being a summary of historical events from the time of Napoleon 1st to the present day. Price—$1.25.—For sale by all the booksellers.

Agents will find a new opportunity to make money by the sale of this and other works of sterling merit, by applying to the publishers. E. LIVERMORE

No. 20, Beekman St., [New York.] Also 10,000 copies printed of an abridgement of the above work, illustrated paper covers, 175 pages, profusely illustrated—50 cts.—The above books will be sent, post paid, on receipt of the price.

AN ACT TO ORGANIZE THE COUNTY OF MANITUE.

Section 1. The People of the State of Michigan enact, That the several Islands in Lake Michigan known as the Beaver group, the North and South Fox Islands, the North and South Manitue Islands, be organized into a separate county, by the name of Manitue, and the inhabitants thereof entitled to all the rights, privileges and immunities to which by law the inhabitants of other organized counties of this State are entitled.

Sec. 2. There shall be elected in the said county of Manitue, on the third Tuesday in April next, the several county officers to which by law the said county is entitled, and the said election and the canvass shall in all respects be conducted and held in the manner prescribed by law for holding elections and canvasses for county and State officers: Provided, That the canvass shall be held at the village of Saint James, in said county, on the Monday next following said election, and said county officers shall be immediately [qualified] and enter upon the duties of their respective offices, and their several terms of office shall expire at the same time that they would have expired had they been elected at the last general election: And provided further, That until such county officers are elected and qualified the duties of such county officers shall be discharged by the several persons elected to fill the same for the county of Emmet at the last general election.

Sec. 3. The Beaver group of Islands in Lake Michigan, except townships thirty-seven north, and the south half of townships thirty-eight north, of ranges ten and eleven west, shall be organized into a separate township by the name of Peaine, and the first township meeting shall be held in the village of Saint James.

Sec. 4. All that part of the Beaver Island which lies in towns thirty-seven north, of ranges ten and eleven west, and the south half of towns thirty-eight north, of ten and eleven west, shall be organized into a separate township by the name of Galilee, and the first township meeting shall be held at the school house at Galilee.

Sec. 5. The North and South Fox Islands shall be organized into a separate township by the name of Patmos, and the first township meeting shall be held on the South Fox Island at the district school house.

Sec. 6. The North and South Manitue Islands shall be organized into a separate township by the name of Manitue, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the store house of Pickard and Brother on the North Manitue Island.

Sec. 7. The county seat of said county of Manitue shall be fixed by the board of Supervisors of said county.

Sec. 8. The said county of Manitue shall have concurrent jurisdiction on Lake Michigan with the other counties contiguous thereto.

C. LOVELL,

Speaker of the House of Rep's.

GEO. A. COE,

Pres. of the Senate.

Approved Feb. 12, 1855.

KINSLEY S. BINGHAM,

Received and filed Feb. 12, 1855.

ROD. R. GIBSON,

Dep. Sec. of State.

AN ACT TO REORGANIZE THE COUNTY OF EMMET.

Section 1. The People of the State of Michigan enact, That all that part of the State of Michigan which was organized into the county of Emmet by an act entitled an act to organize the county of Emmet, approved January 29th, eighteen hundred and fifty three, except the Islands known as the Beaver group, and the North and South Fox Islands and territory west of the same, be and the same hereby is re-organized into the county of Emmet, and the inhabitants therein shall be entitled to all the rights, privileges and immunities to which by law the inhabitants of other organized counties of this State are entitled.

Sec. 2. There shall be elected on the first Tuesday in June next all the several county officers to which by law the said county is entitled, and the said election and the canvass shall in all respects be conducted in the manner prescribed by law for holding elections and canvasses for county and State officers, and the canvass shall be held at the village of Little Traverse, in said county, on the Tuesday next succeeding said election, and said county officers shall immediately be qualified and enter upon their respective offices, and their respective terms of office shall expire at the same time they would have expired had they been elected at the last general election.

Sec. 3. The county of Emmet shall have concurrent jurisdiction upon Lake Michigan, the Straits of Mackinac, Grand Traverse Bay and Little Traverse Bay with the county of Mackinac and other adjacent organized counties, or that may hereafter be organized.

Sec. 4. All that part of the said county of Emmet which lies south of township line between townships thirty-six and thirty-seven north, and embraced by ranges five, six and seven west, shall be organized into a separate township by the name of Little Traverse, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the Indian school house in the village of Little Traverse, in said township, on the first Tuesday in May next.

Sec. 5. All that part of the said county of Emmet which lies north of township line between townships thirty-six and thirty-seven north, and west of range line between ranges four and five west, shall be organized into a township by the name of La Croix, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the village of La Croix, at the Indian school house, on the first Tuesday in May next.

Sec. 6. All that part of said county of Emmet which lies north of township line between thirty-six and thirty-seven north, and embraced by range four west shall be organized into a separate township by the name of Old Fort Mackinac, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of Francis Lalond, on the first Tuesday in May next.

Sec. 7. All that part of said county of Emmet embraced by townships thirty-four north, of ranges four, five and six west, shall be organized into a township by the name of Bear Creek, and the first township meeting therein shall be held the first Tuesday in May next, at the house of Andrew Porter, in said township.

Sec. 8. All that part of said county of Emmet embraced by township thirty-four north, of range eight west, and the several townships embraced by townships thirty-three north, of ranges four, five, six, seven, eight and nine west, be organized into a township by the name of Charlevoix, and the first township meeting therein shall be held on the last Tuesday in May next, at the house of John S. Dixon, in said township.

Sec. 9. The county seat of said county shall be fixed by the board of Supervisors of said county.

Sec. 10. All previous acts of the State of Michigan contravening any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 11. It is hereby provided that until such county officers are elected and qualified the proper county officers of the county of Cheboygan shall perform all the duties appertaining to the said county of Emmet, in the same manner as though this act had not passed.

Sec. 12. The Register of Deeds of the county of Emmet shall, on the request and at the expense of the persons interested, copy from the records in the office of the Register of Deeds of Mackinac county all records of deeds and instruments in writing conveying or in any wise limiting or affecting the title to any real estate in the county of Emmet, as hereby re-organized, and copies so made shall be deemed and taken to be original records for all purposes whatsoever.

Sec. 13. The board of canvassers of said county under this act shall consist of the presiding inspectors of election from each township therein, who shall organize by appointing one of their number chairman, and another secretary of said board, and shall thereupon proceed to discharge all the duties of a board of county canvassers, as in ordinary cases of elections for county and State officers.

Sec. 14. This act shall take effect immediately.

CYRUS LOVELL,

Speaker of the House of Rep's.

GEO. A. COE,

President of the Senate.

Approved Feb. 13, 1855.

KINSLEY S. BINGHAM,

Received and filed February 13, 1855.

ROD. R. GIBSON,

Dep. Sec. of State.

AN ACT

To organize the counties of Manistee, Mason and Oceana.

Section 1. The People of the State of Michigan enact, That the county of Manistee shall be organized, and shall comprise townships twenty-one, twenty-two, twenty-three and twenty-four north, of each of the ranges numbered thirteen, fourteen, fifteen and sixteen west, and fractional townships twenty-one and twenty-two north, of range seventeen west, and the unorganized county of Wexford is hereby attached to said county of Manistee for judicial purposes.

Sec. 2. The county of Mason shall be organized, and shall comprise townships seventeen, eighteen, nineteen and twenty north, of each of the ranges numbered fifteen, sixteen, seventeen and eighteen west, and the unorganized counties of Lake and Osceola are hereby attached to said county of Mason for judicial purposes.

Sec. 3. The county of Oceana shall be organized, and shall comprise townships thirteen, fourteen, fifteen and sixteen north, of each of the ranges numbered fifteen, sixteen, seventeen and eighteen west, and fractional townships numbered thirteen, fourteen, fifteen and sixteen north, of range nineteen west.

Sec. 4. Three townships are hereby erected in the county of Manistee, to be called Manistee, Brown and Stronach; the township of Manistee shall comprise townships twenty-two, twenty-three and twenty-four north, of range sixteen west, and section one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven and twelve of town twenty-one north, of range sixteen west, and section one, two, eleven and twelve of township twenty-one north, of range seventeen west, and sections twenty-four, twenty-five and twenty-six of town twenty-two north, of range seventeen west, and the first township meeting shall be held at the house of Samuel Potter.

Sec. 5. The said town of Stronach shall comprise township twenty-one north, of ranges thirteen, fourteen and fifteen west, and the remaining portion of townships twenty-one north, of ranges sixteen and seventeen west, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of James Stronach, and the township of Brown shall comprise the remaining portion of said county, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of Henry L. Brown.

Sec. 6. Three townships are hereby erected in the county of Mason, to be called Freesoil, Little Sauble and Pere Marquette; the township of Freesoil shall comprise all of the said county of Mason lying north of the division line between townships nineteen and twenty north, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of Mr. Freeman, at the Freesoil mill, so called; the township of Little Sauble shall comprise so much of the territory of said county of Mason as lies south of said township of Freesoil and north of the division line between townships eighteen and nineteen north, and also sections five, six, seven and eight of township eighteen north, of range seventeen west, and sections one, two, three, four, nine, ten, eleven and twelve of township eighteen north, of range eighteen west, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of Charles Mears; the township of Pere Marquette shall comprise the remaining portion of the territory of said county of Mason, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of Burr Caswell.

Sec. 7. Three townships are hereby erected in the county of Oceana, to be called Pent Water, Stony Creek and Clay Banks; the township of Pent Water shall comprise all of said county of Oceana lying north of the division line between townships fifteen and sixteen north, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of Edwin R. Cobb; the township of Stony Creek shall comprise so much of the territory of said county as lies south of said township of Pent Water and north of the division line between townships thirteen and fourteen north, and also section one, two, three, four, five and six of township thirteen north, of range eighteen west, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of Mr. Wheeler, at the Stony Creek mills, so called; the township of Clay Banks shall comprise the remaining portion of the territory of said county of Oceana, and the first township meeting therein shall be held at the house of John Barr.

Sec. 8. The board of Supervisors of each of the aforesaid counties shall have power to locate the county seats of their respective counties.

Sec. 9. An election for township and county officers in each of the foregoing counties shall be held at the time prescribed by statute for the annual election of township officers in the various towns in the State.

Sec. 10. The inspectors of election in the townships of Manistee, Little Sauble and Stony Creek shall, for the purpose of such election, constitute the board of county canvassers for their respective counties, and shall meet to canvass the votes given at such election for county officers on the first Tuesday succeeding such election, and the inspectors of election in the several towns in each of the aforesaid counties shall make return of the votes given at such election, in their respective townships for county officers, to the respective boards of county canvassers hereby constituted, on or before the first Tuesday succeeding such elections, in the manner prescribed by law.

Sec. 11. The several counties hereby organized shall be bodies corporate and politic, and shall possess all the powers and be subject to all the liabilities usual in counties in this State: Provided, The several county officers elected at the election herein provided for shall take the oath of office and file bonds, when any are required, and enter upon the duties of their respective offices on or before the first day of June next; all acts or parts of acts contravening the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 12. This act shall take effect immediately.

CYRUS LOVELL,

Speaker of the House of Rep's.

GEO. A. COE,

Pres. of the Senate.

Approved Feb. 12, 1855.

KINSLEY S. BINGHAM,

Received and filed Feb. 13, 1855.

ROD. R. GIBSON,

Dep. Sec. of State.

AN ACT

To amend sections fourteen and fifteen of an act entitled "an act to define the powers and duties of the boards of Supervisors of the several counties, and to confer upon them certain local, administrative and legislative powers," approved April 8, 1851.

Section 1. The People of the State of Michigan enact, That section fourteen of an act entitled "an act to define the powers and duties of the boards of Supervisors of the several counties, and to confer upon them certain local, administrative and legislative powers," approved April eight, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-one, be and is hereby amended so that said section shall read as follows:

"Sec. 14. The boards of Supervisors of the several counties of this State shall have power within their respective counties and all territory attached thereto by a majority of all the members elected to divide or alter in its bounds any township, or erect a new township, upon application to the board, as hereinafter provided, of at least twelve freeholders of each of the townships to be affected by the division; and upon being furnished with a map of all the townships to be affected, showing the proper alterations, and if the application shall be granted, a copy of said map, with a certified statement of the action of said board thereunto annexed, shall be filed in the office of the Clerk of said county, and a certified statement of the action of said board shall also be filed in the office of the Secretary of State, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to cause the same to be published with the laws of the next Legislature, after the filing thereof, in the same manner as other laws are published."

Sec. 2. Section fifteen of said act is hereby amended, so that said section shall read as follows:

"Sec. 15. Notice in writing of such intended application, subscribed by not less than twelve freeholders of the township or townships to be affected, shall be posted in five of the most public places in each of the townships to be affected thereby for four weeks next previous to such application, to the board of Supervisors, and a copy of such notice shall also be published once in each week for four successive weeks immediately preceding the meeting of the board of Supervisors at which such application is to be made, in some newspaper printed in the county, if any shall be published therein."

Sec. 3. This act shall take immediate effect.

CYRUS LOVELL,

Speaker of the House of Rep's.

GEO. A. COE,

President of the Senate.

Approved Feb. 10, 1855.

KINSLEY S. BINGHAM,

Received and filed February 10, 1855.

ROD. R. GIBSON,

Dep. Sec. of State.

It is pretty evident that when a man buys a one hundred dollar handkerchief for a "duck of a wife," that he is a "goose of a husband."

That which rises by falsehood, falls by truth.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 2.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 69.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

The following appeared in the Pontiac Gazette last Nov. We insert it for the purpose of some remarks. We can hardly expect the Gazette to use the same fairness by publishing our reply at length.—Possibly, as before, he will say hard things of us, and not send us the paper. We never say hard things of anybody without sending the paper along, and giving a chance to reply.

POPULAR SOVEREIGNTY AND THE MORMONS.—Some two or three months ago the term for which Brigham Young was appointed Governor of Utah expired. No successor has yet been appointed, and the territory is now without a Governor, except, perhaps, a provisional or ex-officio one, in the person of the Secretary. But in all probability Brigham Young is yet officiating. He undoubtedly takes the twattle in the long-winded Nebraska-Kansas bill as all sober earnest—and particularly takes the President, Gen. Cass, Douglass & Co. at their word, and acts upon the principle that the people in Utah have both the ability and right to govern themselves—and to regulate their domestic institutions in their own way.

So far as the "popular sovereignty" doctrine applies to this part of the business, Gov. Young and his fellow outlaws may get along quite well. But when we go to apply the "laws of the United States, not locally inapplicable," to the condition of affairs in Utah, we will find another difficulty which places the Mormon denizens of the Salt Lake basin in an attitude condemned. They are in the admitted, open, flagrant violation of one of the most sacred laws of the United States—they are living in polygamy. There is not a State in the Union that would not consign Brigham Young, and hundreds of others in Utah, to a term in the Penitentiary. And yet, according to the Nebraska bill, according to Gen. Cass and Mr. Douglas, the Mormons have not only a right to make polygamy lawful in Utah, but the United States government has not the constitutional power to prevent it. This is the inevitable conclusion.

But are we to understand that it is a part of the admitted policy of the administration to permit this business? Is polygamy sanctioned by our government? Are we, the citizens and tax payers of the country, contributing our means and giving our influence to sustain the law of polygamy? Let every man ponder, and ask himself this question, and answer it before the laws of our land, and before his Maker. It is a point in which can be discerned, at a glance, the effect of the miserable doctrines taught by the administration, and by grave Senators in their speeches. It is a case in hand, and has not the uncertain nature of a supposition to give it life. It is a case that must be disposed of by the people, and the sooner it is determined the better it will be.—It is a matter of grave import—whether men shall be at liberty to go from the States into any of the national territories, and there set up for themselves laws and institutions which would subject them to Penitentiary penalties at home.

We have conversed with members of Congress upon this subject; we have asked them why Congress was silent, and did not require the President to enforce obedience to the laws in Utah? Why Congress did not pass a law, or resolution, or take some measures for the vindication of morality and the rights of humanity? The answer was an honest one—to do so would cost great sums of money, much sacrifice of life; and the party is not anxious to take the business into their hands. Afraid to do it—that is the true account of it. Mormons cast votes, and woe to the party that undertakes the task of enforcing obedience to the laws from them.

But we need not go away from home to seek a mark for our denunciations. The State of Michigan is harboring within its limits a band of villains, who practice this same outrage upon law, decency and morality. On Beaver Island, (unless we are much mistaken,) men do habitually practice what in Oakland county would consign them to a term at Jackson.—Why is this? Why do this set of men seek an Island, away out in Lake Michigan, but to do what is unlawful on the mainland? Who does not know that these people practice polygamy? And yet the party pander to them, and men in high stations and low will associate with these outlaws, admit them into their society, and all for their votes. Let the guilt of such conduct be where it may—guilt it is, and it is time the laws of decency, the law of morality, the law of the State, and the law of humanity, should be shown some respect.

True, it may be said that it is not known to a legal certainty that any particular individual has more than one wife; it is but surmise—inference. For, although we know that the believers in the Mormon church believe and teach that they have a right to have more than one wife, yet it is not possible to make out a case. Those who are cognizant of the facts are those who are interested in them, to keep them from the light of justice. And should it chance to be that a case may be made known to any person who would inform of it and make complaint, it is not possible to obtain witnesses who will swear to the fact. For guilt will add to it perjury, to shield itself from the penalty. In regard to the Mormons in Michigan, this may be so. But in regard to those in Utah, it is not. Polygamy is practiced there, and President Pierce knows it—and knows who are the guilty parties, and who are the witnesses to prove it.

It may be that the President and his Cabinet are a very conscientious set of men. Perhaps their several oaths of office have impressed them with a fear lest they should do something which the constitution does not warrant. Perhaps they do honestly believe that the people in the territories have the constitutional right "to choose and regulate their domestic institutions in their own way," and that there should be no earthly power "to molest or make them afraid." May be they are conscientious believers in the doctrine of "Popular Sovereignty." If so, we may be wrong in casting reproach upon them for tamely permitting wholesale violations of what most other men deem high-handed, trying evils, and outrages upon our most sacred laws.

We look upon it as an error that much treasure and blood will yet be required to correct, that this matter has been permitted to progress so far. Whether it can be corrected in any other way than civil war—may be a question, but we think the efficacy of the laws of the land ought first to be tried. If the enforcing of law is out of the question, then we certainly ought to do ourselves the justice to withhold all protection from the Mormons, and treat them as foreigners and enemies. This is our doctrine.

What most strikes us on reading the above is the ignorance which it displays of constitution, law, religion, morals, and even language; indeed, of every thing which concerns government, the knowledge or the administration of it.

The Gazette says, "when we go to apply the laws of the United States, not locally inapplicable to the condition of affairs in Utah, we will find another difficulty, which places the Mormon denizens of the Salt Lake basin in an attitude condemned. They are in the admitted, open, flagrant violation of one of the most sacred laws of the United States—they are living in polygamy."

Upon this we take issue, and say there is no law of the United States against polygamy, and never was. Several of the States, perhaps all, have some partial enactments against it, though we are not aware that any has entirely prohibited it. But though every State in the Union had passed any particular law, it would not be the law of the United States. Congress and the treaty making power alone can enact laws for the United States.

Any State can alter or repeal her law on the subject of polygamy, and changes of that kind occur frequently, simply because it is a State law, with which the United States has nothing to do.

Congress has no power to make a law against polygamy in any of the States, and if the State of Texas or Michigan saw fit to authorize polygamy within her borders, the United States government has no power to prevent it. And the doctrine of popular sovereignty, which the Gazette so much hates, is merely that Congress ought, as far as public justice and national security will allow, to abstain from exercising power in the Territories which is interdicted in the States.

Though the laws of the United States, "not locally inapplicable," have been extended over Utah, there is no law there against polygamy. This is conceded by the ablest lawyers in the United States, and was generally conceded on the floor of Congress, in the great debate on that question in 1854.

(See the debate at length, Congressional Globe.) It is equally conceded that though Congress might prohibit polygamy hereafter, it cannot abrogate existing polygamic marriages, nor bastardize the issue which shall be hereafter born. So the denizens of Utah do not stand in an attitude condemned.

If we try the question on religious and moral authorities, the result will be the same. According to the Old Testament God Almighty sanctioned and commanded it; not permitted and suffered it, as many modern writers pretend.—The New Testament contains nothing express on the subject, and in no sense limits or revokes what is contained in the Old. And the whole plan of salvation in the gospel contemplates the adoption of all the heirs of that life into the families of polygamic Abraham and Jacob. The gospel knows no salvation short of an adoption for the life everlasting into the family of a polygamic patriarch. No christian pretends to deny this.

On the score of morals, no writer of any age, living in a country where polygamy prevailed, has spoken against it. Several of the ablest christian writers of the last and present age have regarded it a wise institution for particular nations.

A majority of the patriarchs and prophets practiced it. It prevailed to a great extent among Egyptians, Jews, Persians, Greeks and Romans, at the time of their highest civilization. During the 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th centuries the Saracens were so far in advance of the christians of Europe in civilization that christian youth were sent to Mohamedan universities for education. The Saracens were polygamists.

The present is the first instance in the history of the world when non-polygamist nations have been in advance in civilization of polygamists. And among the non-polygamist nations there exists, by means of left hand marriages, a kind of illegitimate polygamy in all the upper ranks of society, so common that few of the men who lead and give character to the civilization of the age are not partakers of it.

We do not allude here to cases of promiscuous prostitution, but of women who are kept permanently as wives without being married, where the union lacks no element of chastity according to the common acceptance of it, but the authority of the priest or magistrate.

In Europe this thing is public and un concealed. All the kings of England except George II., (who are as much the head of the Episcopal church as the Popes are of the Roman,) had such. The children of these left hand marriages are portioned as Abraham portioned his sons by Hagar and Ketura. Not many years since a son of George III., George Fitz George, received a patent of nobility, and now has a seat in the House of Lords.

The children of Napoleon I. by these left hand marriages are numerous, and among them is Canrobert, now commanding the armies before Sebastopol.—The present Emperor Napoleon has, besides Eugenia, two wives at least, one a Baltimore lady, and the other a French woman from Ham, where he was imprisoned some years since, each of whom has borne him a family of children.

In this country we have as high an example for that practice as Daniel Webster, who had four women, each of whom had as much right, except the priest's authority, to claim him for husband as his married wife. And this fact does not rest on assertion or doubt. It was as well known in Washington as that Webster was a Senator.—And so large a number of those making up the bulk of good society there were either in the same or still more scandalous transactions, that nobody except Mrs. Swishelm dare frown on him for it. She published it. But though not a paper attempted to question it, Webster stood too high to be frowned down.

Do not imagine that these are the sole examples. They are almost as numerous as men of superior talent. Open or concealed, they are every where, among statesmen, moralists, poets, orators, clergymen, lawyers, merchants, physicians, every class of men who make up the sum of civilization; among farmers alone are such unions rare.

Public odium in these cases only produces secrecy. It has no power of prevention. When the veil of secrecy is broken, the result is not reformation. The step is downward, from illegitimate marriage to indiscriminate prostitution. And it is the infamy of these left hand or illegitimate marriages, an infamy produced by the victims of them being without legal protection, which has attached itself in the public mind to polygamy in any shape, and rendered that disreputable.

Once remove the mind beyond those prejudices, and it contemplates polygamy without repugnance. No one ever laughed at the plaintive tale of Jacob's mourning for Rachel because according to our law Leah only was a wife, Rachel but a prostitute. The heart is not the less touched with the story of Joseph making himself known to his brethren, because in this country he would have been a bastard, and all his father's kindness to him so much robbery of them.

Who sings the Psalms of David with less devotion, or doubts the truth of the scripture that he "was a man after God's own heart," because after he had four wives of his own God gave him the fourteen widows of Saul to wife? (2d Sam. xii. 8,) or is less enraptured with the majestic greatness of Isaiah because "his conduct if he resided in Oakland county would consign him to a term at Jackson?"

No, the moment we contemplate polygamy as a legal institution we cease to question Rachel's chastity, though her husband's attentions are divided between her and three others. We do not doubt the sister of Caesar, though she is but one of several wives of Anthony. We withhold our condemnation of Anthony till abandoning his wives he spends his strength on the prostitute Cleopatra, as christian men do in all the cities of the United States.

The New York Tribune has honestly made this distinction, and honestly advised its readers that legalized polygamy among the Mormons bears no relation to either indiscriminate prostitution or to that criminal polygamy which in all the States consigns the guilty to prisons.

On the score of morals this fact, that a house of prostitution cannot be found among a people where polygamy prevails, is worth more than all the declamation the subject has called out. Of the Mormons, this fact is conceded by all who know them. Christian men not a few have left them, angry at this fact; and among them men we can name who still talk of the demoralizing tendency of Mormonism.

In Turkey a few years ago it was supposed by christians that the watchfulness of the harems alone preserved the chastity of the wives. But the opening of the harems has produced no change.—In Arabia and among the Fellaks of Egypt the wives were never shut up in harems. Yet their chastity is proverbial. Adultery in all those countries is so rare as to excite universal horror, similar to that here felt at wife murder, and is punished with death.

Just across the Mediterranean, in christian Europe, what a contrast. Stepping from paradise to pandemonium. The lady who has not a gallant, who is so low as to be obliged to accept the civility of her own husband, is in utter disgrace. Cyprians are the leaders at court, in balls and public assemblies. They are publicly visited at their houses by gentlemen of every profession. They have titles of nobility, and with beauty and talent, in spite of all virtuous influences, they hold an undisputed position in all the highest circles. Such characters as the Countess of Landsfelt and Lady Blessington never existed in a country where polygamy prevailed. In the south of Europe they are more common than virtuous dames.

And christian ministers, who have been employed as missionaries among the ungodly of christian New York, have, in their official reports, represented that between the ages of sixteen and forty every fourth female is a public prostitute. The corruption, though less in rural districts, extends every where.

And these things are not only in a christian country, but among the members of christian churches. The evidence is not the accusation of their enemies.—They have often, in various shapes, officially furnished it.

Not long since a publication went out in religious papers on good authority, and no where disputed, of a Sunday school teacher going to a house of assignation in New York for a new victim, for whose ruin he was to pay a large price, and finding his victim one of his own scholars, a modest girl of fourteen, who had been inveigled in on false pretenses, who the moment she recognized him appealed to him for protection. The tender age of the victim appealed not in vain, where for forty years conscience had been dumb; and that one was saved. How many thousands have been so lost?

Knowing that no such thing exists among us, can we feel less than mocked when we hear christian men talking about Mormon debauchery, and the immorality of polygamy? What can we think while reading tirades like the above from the Gazette but of the prayer of the Pharisee, who "thanked God that he was not like other men, even as those Mormons at Beaver Island—adulterers?"

These things come home to us. They are thrown upon us from day to day, and we are obliged to think of them and speak of them when we wish to let them alone.

Not many days since the Capt. of a steamboat, himself a member of a christian church, reputed an exemplary one, who has religious service with his family, after walking over his premises with a Mormon, the owner of one of the wharves here, inquired where he could find a lady with whom a liberal gentleman would find accommodations for the night? Being told there were no such here, he replied, "I had heard so, and presumed there were no low houses for sailors; there ought not to be; it would be a disgrace to a religious people, though they are obliged to have them in the cities; but for a real gentleman in a quiet way, you know there would be nothing said about it."

Being again assured there were no such, he added, in a confidential way, "well, now, Mr. —, I advise you to get two or three nice healthy girls, and locate them here with a millinery shop, or something of that kind. It will improve your business wonderfully. It will bring all the boats in. They can get their wood here as well as any where else. That will give you the advantage, for their aim a nice place for us officers within three hundred miles of here.—Then the boats would not be off in such a hurry as soon as they get their wood, and you could sell supplies to the passengers. Gentlemen would come here in the hot weather, and they spend lots of money."

When Mr. — replied, "I will see my wharf in hell, and you splitting it up for kindling wood, before I will have anything to do with such work," he was horrified at the profanity.

Within three years a Capt. of the United States navy, who carries an Episcopal prayer book, and reads service daily, visited this place and took occasion to lecture one of the leading Mormons on the immorality of polygamy; and said, "no reasonable woman, if she was sickly, would object to her husband's getting a mistress, so he kept her out of her sight. He had been obliged to do so a great many years, and no difficulty had come of it, but his wife would have been very much grieved if he had brought another woman into the house."

For ourselves we cannot understand why one woman should be prostituted and ruined, to avoid hurting the feelings of another. Neither can we comprehend the morality of begetting and murdering the children of a mistress, because a wife is unable to bear them. We confess ourselves unable to understand it; and it looks to us as though christian morals only recognized marriage as a license to carnal indulgence, and did not know it as an institution of heaven for being fruitful, multiplying and replenishing the earth.

Similar circumstances occur so often that it is impossible for us to read what the papers say about Mormon polygamy with any other feelings than such as would arise at seeing a set of cyprians in the front parlor of a house of ill fame singing camp meeting hymns. We fancy we see Z. B. Knight, of the Gazette, leading the choir.

Mr. Knight says: "On Beaver Island (unless we are much mistaken) men do habitually practice what in Oakland county would consign them to a term at Jackson." Our opinion is that Mr. Knight is "much mistaken." We affect no prudery on the subject, and until he defines his ideas more particularly will not suggest that he is misinformed as to the facts, though editors are sometimes about Mormon affairs. But whatever the opinions and practices of the Mormons on Beaver Island may be on the subject of polygamy, we know of no case, we have heard of none which if it had occurred in Oakland county would have consigned the parties to a term in Jackson.

If Mr. Knight thinks we are in error, for a reasonable compensation we will insure the removal of the parties and every thing necessary to make up the case to Oakland county to be tried there, being of the opinion that the result, like the trials in Detroit, would make a candidate for Lansing instead of Jackson.

In the same connection Mr. Knight says: "It is not possible to obtain witnesses who will swear to the fact; for guilt will add to it PERJURY, to shield itself from the penalty." Out of the heart the mouth speaketh. We do not doubt this opinion is the result of Mr. Knight's christian experience.—Why so ready in looking for perjury, unless his past life had made him familiar with it?

Mr. Knight should remember that the State of Michigan has a little experience in these matters, and that that sword cuts the other way. He should bear in mind that in the foray upon Beaver Island, which cost the United States $30,000, the defendants escaped imprisonment and death by the prosecuting witnesses, who had sworn to all the facts necessary to make out the crime, impeaching themselves on the cross-examination, and by their contradictions, and that at the end of the trial it was conceded in all quarters that all the perjury was against the Mormons. He may take into account that the proceedings in that case were prosecuted with so scandalous violence that both the past (Whig) and the present administration have refused to settle the accounts. In other words, they have refused so far to foot the bills for the perjury that was bought, in the vain effort to convict the Mormons of crime.

But there is a peculiar malice in the question, "WHY DO THIS SET OF MEN SEEK AN ISLAND, AWAY OUT IN LAKE MICHIGAN, but to do what is unlawful on the mainland?"

At the very time this question was asked these Mormons were directing all their efforts to settlements on the mainland. And within ten weeks after the asking of the question the party to which Mr. Knight belongs passed through the Legislature with uncommon unanimity acts asked for, for the purpose of paving the way for mobbing them off the mainland, and compelling them to settle only on the Islands. Drive us to the Islands by lawless violence, and accuse us of going there to violate the law.

A singular argument it is—"they have settled on an Island—their object must be criminal—what else can it be?" Would all the christian inhabitants of Islands like to have this rule applied to them? Yet we doubt not they have generally subscribed to it against us.

This unjust tirade concludes with the following: "Whether it can be corrected in any other way than civil war, may be a question, but we think the efficacy of the laws of the land ought to be tried first. If the enforcing the law is out of the question, then we certainly ought to do ourselves the justice to withhold all protection from the Mormons, and treat them as foreigners and enemies."

That is just what has always been done. From the institution of our church we have been "treated as foreigners and enemies."—It is but adding insult to injury this accusing us of crimes as an excuse for doing what was done years ago, long before the excuse was thought of.

The Mormons were driven from Missouri in the same spirit which has recently overrun and conquered Kansas. The intention and the reason were avowed then as openly as now.

This story about crimes is an after thought. The manifesto of the Missourians stated distinctly that they did not proceed at law, because their offence was not an offence at law. "The difference in religion and domestic habits (being Mormons and doing their own work instead of employing slaves) rendered the occupation of the country by both incongruous, and one had got to leave." The manifesto concluded, "one party has got to leave. We will not—they shall—peaceably if they will, forcibly if they must."

They were treated as "foreigners and enemies." Their crops, their lands and their cattle were made a spoil. Many were killed, some hundred made prisoners, and ten thousand driven at the point of the bayonet from the State, and the Legislature appropriated $100,000 to pay the expense.

In Illinois the excuse for their expatriation was that which Mr. Knight now proposes—crimes.—Thos. Ford, who was Governor of the State at the time, has written a history of the State of Illinois, which since his death was published under the editorial charge of Gen. Shields.

In this work Ford undertakes to vindicate himself from blame for his part in the matter, especially the murder of the Smiths. In this vindication he shows that the charges of crime against the Mormons when traced up universally turned out false. And in the same connection he admits that from the beginning he determined that the Mormons should leave the State, claiming as a merit that he designed to accomplish the expatriation and exile of 30,000 innocent citizens, but meant to bring it about without the additional crime of murder, or at least to avoid the murder of a prominent man. And he a christian, a Governor of a christian State. What would not be said of a Mormon who should make such an avowal? Sir, our bitterest enemies, in the wildest excitement of madness, have never accused us of so terrible a crime as is here plead as the intention, in a Governor's excuse, for a deed of still deeper die.

Col. Kane, of the U. S. army, who witnessed the expulsion, bears ample testimony of the integrity and virtue of the Mormons and their exemplary conduct, and the beastly and ruffainly vices of their persecutors.

A committee of the Illinois Senate, who investigated the difficulties, made a report fully exonerating the Mormons; and Judge Douglas, who presided in the criminal courts of that district most of the time while the Mormons resided there, sustained President Fillmore, his political opponent, in the appointment of Young and other Mormons to office in Utah, by his public statement that there was less of crime among them than is usual among a population of the same number, and far less in proportion to population than among their neighbors. Gov. Ford accounts for the rapid growth of their difficulties there by the statement that the old settlers in Hancock county were of the worst class in the State.

Finally, on their expulsion from there, those who acknowledge Mr. Strang as their leader settled in Wisconsin, in the midst of an old wealthy Yankee neighborhood, where they were always received in good society, and never had any difficulties.

Those who follow Mr. Young went to Utah, and their virtuous conduct was so well attested by Capts. Stansbury and Gunnison, of the U.S. engineers, that a Whig President appointed most of their territorial officers from among them a thing seldom if ever before done for a territory.

At the time of the difficulties here, four years ago, there was in fact no question at issue but the question whether Mormons should have legal protection.

We were then in Mackinac county. The control of all public affairs was in the hands of persons residing in Mackinac, not Mormons. A Mormon was never placed on either grand or petit jury. So careful were they that the administration of the law should not fall into the hands of Mormons, that when Judge Abbot died, in order to prevent Judge Greig, a Mormon, from holding a county court, Gov. Barry appointed J. P. King, who had run against Greig, and been defeated, a judge over his head.

We did not object to all these advantages against us, but claimed then to defend our rights at law. Our persecutors denied us this refuge. Officers came from Mackinac here to enforce the law. They resisted, and Gov. Barry gave them his tacit support. That act cost him at the last election 650 votes in this county, and about 300 in the rest of the State, making 1,900 difference in the canvass. In a closely contested election it would have decided his fate; and against another election the number of votes which such an act would lose would not be less than 1,500, making a difference of 3,000 in the canvass.

The local officers were unable to give us protection. They made a most earnest appeal to the Governor, and he refused.—The issue was determined in blood, and we are here.

We live in the consciousness that if any of us were murdered in any of the surrounding counties, no matter how publicly, the murderers would never be punished. Our property has frequently been taken from us without legal process, but we have seldom been able to get redress, and never without its costing more than the original injury. Mormons residing here have large judgments recovered in Mackinac, on which the wealthiest men in that place are liable; but the power behind the law is so much above the law, they have never been able to collect them.

No, sir; all protection has been withheld from us, and we have been treated as foreigners and enemies for years. That threat carries with it no terror.

As for civil war, we know its terrors better than those who talk of it at a distance. But we have contemplated it, till we do not much dread it. If it must come, let it come upon us, and not upon our children. We suffered it when we were few, and our enemies many. We will not fear it now, that the tables are turned. War is an inconvenient neighbor, and if it comes again we shall endeavor to carry it into the enemies country. And if we suffer in it we have the Savior's assurance that if any man shall lose houses or lands, or wife or children for his name's sake and the gospel, he shall receive a hundred fold in this world, and in the world to come life everlasting.

We have no other place to flee to. If we had, we still remember the warning, "He that will save his life shall lose it, but he that will lose his life for Christ's sake shall find it." We are not men of blood, but suffering has given us a patient courage, that will endure when all else fails, and wrings victory out of defeat.

There is something terrible in the encounter of men who have been injured so deeply, suffered so much, contemplated death so long that they neither wish to live nor dread to die; who have treasured up the memories of a life of unrequited injuries, all to be avenged in that struggle of life which takes persecuted and persecutors in the same hour to the judgment of God. Who would not relinquish the hope of yielding his life for the loved ones behind, to lengthen out its span twenty years, and die quietly between his sheets, with his family and friends around.

You do not understand such men, and had better let them alone."

Charlevoix, May 30, 1855.

EDITORS OF THE ISLANDER:—Town meeting came off here yesterday, under the act to organize Emmet county, passed by the late Fusion or Shanghai Legislature, for the purpose of giving a kind of left hand sanction to a project set on foot at Mackinac to mob the Mormons out of these parts, and resulted in the election of the following ticket:

Supervisor, Galen B. Cole; Township Clerk, Geo. T. Preston; Treasurer, Calvin Thompson; Commissioners of Highways, Medad Thompson, James Young, Samuel Chambers; Constables, J. Young, H. Thompson, M. Kidder; Justices of the Peace, G. B. Cole, G. T. Preston, Medad Thompson, Samuel Chambers.

You will perceive that the ticket is made up without any reference to the religious faith of the nominees; a fair proportion being Mormons, and a fair proportion gentiles.

The friends of law and order have every reason to be gratified with this result. As election day approached it was discovered that a majority of the population were Mormons, but a majority of the legal voters gentiles, some thirty Mormons having settled in the town within ten days of the town meeting.

Some uneasiness was felt as to how far any man would be disposed to take advantage of this fact to make discriminations on account of differences in religion. This result has relieved it all.

But the most pleasing part of the tale is yet to be told. John S. Dixon spent the winter in Lansing in endeavoring to get this township set off from Emmet and attached to Grand Traverse, and really came very near succeeding; the pretense being that the people settled and about to settle here were greatly inconvenienced by the location of the Emmet county seat, and dissatisfied with being in a county where Mormons were elected to office.

Here was an opportunity for the people to either ratify or repudiate his proceedings. Dixon was in nomination against Cole (a Mormon) for Supervisor, and Dixon got just one vote. Nobody voted for JOHN S. DIXON for Supervisor except JOHN S. DIXON. Mr. Dixon prepared and circulated tickets containing the following:

For Supervisor, JOHN S. DIXON; for School Inspectors, JOHN S. DIXON; for Justices of the Peace, JOHN S. DIXON; but for no office could he get above two votes. His shoulders he deemed broad enough to carry these offices, but they proved only broad enough to carry two votes, his own and that of his hired man.

The scene at the canvass wanted but one thing to make it perfect; that is, that those legislators who showed so much anxiety to cut up Emmet county in order as they said to get a part of it out of the Mormon jurisdiction could have been here to see how grateful the people were for their labors of love. They could not have looked more blank than Dixon did. Poor fellow! he thought they were voting for him, and never dreamed that his election was doubtful till he counted the votes. Those who had determined on administering him such a rebuke for his last winter's work at Lansing, made him Clerk of the election, that he might have all the pleasure of witnessing his own defeat which he could possibly derive from it.

MEGIZEE.

Oyster Bay, Lake Mormon, }
May 29th. 1855. }

DEAR FRANK:—We are looking for the Dolphin, and as I am at no great distance from Charlevoix, where she will land, I thought to write you a line, and send it down there to go by her on her return.

"Oyster Bay" is the name of a most beautiful bay putting up to the north, near the foot of this lake. This name is supposed to have been given in consequence of the abundance of muscles or fresh water clams, at the place, and is not therefore quite appropriate. The location has no particular advantages beyond its unrivalled beauty.

Our principal scene of operations will be up the main of this lake, which is fourteen miles long in a straight line, and perhaps thirty by the meander of the shore, and also up the south bay, which extends about ten miles up from the south side of the lake, heading in Antrim county, and making a continuous navigation from the foot of this lake of fifteen or sixteen miles.

I can only say generally of the country on this lake, it is one of the finest I ever saw for agricultural purposes. By what freak it was ever named Pine Lake, I cannot imagine. There is scarcely pine enough on it to supply the country. Indeed, but for the abundance of other timber suitable for building, there would be a lack of pine for the country. It is in no sense a lumber country. It just has a good supply for domestic use, no more.

And what lumber there is, is so distributed that in no place would it justify more than a common custom mill. But what surprises me more than all the rest is, the result of a reconnoissance of the supposed water power in Pine River. There is no water power there. The river is but a canal. It is good navigation, and we have no difficulty in running up it with boats loaded.—The whole length of the river is less than a half mile, and only a small portion of that is merely rapid. A succession of such rapids for five miles would scarcely make a water power for a mill.

A dam on Pine River sufficient for mills, would raise Lake Mormon four or five feet. Indeed it would raise the lake within six inches or a foot of all the fall it obtained, and would flow from 30,000 to 50,000 acres of land, much of it in Antrim county, and probably one-fourth of it the property of the State. It had been a matter of surprise to me that with the great number of lumbermen who for fifteen years have ransacked this country for locations, Pine River was passed by till two years ago.—Now I understand it. They examined it, and found neither water power or timber for lumber.

But for all this there is no lack of water power in the country around the lake. Numerous little creeks suitable for mills, run in from both shores, and up these streams they run over lime stone, with which the whole country is underlaid.—When the country is settled there will be good durable water power in every neighborhood, on streams that rise and fall scarcely perceptibly, but no great amount at any one point, such as tends to build up large manufacturing towns, unless on Bear Creek, which runs into little Traverse Bay.

After completing my examinations I shall write you particularly about the different locations. The brethren who came with me are settling up the lake, and are well suited—charmed with the place.

When Br. Bays gets the engine in the boat he is building, if it proves to light for Lake Michigan, he has only to come here with it. There would be no difficulty in running it up Pine River, and on Lake Mormon it would be just the thing.

Yours Truly, S.
Highlands of Tonedagana, }
May 28th, 1855. }

DEAR FRANK:—I have strayed over here just to see the country and its curiosities, and a fund of information I have accumulated.—Some of it may interest your readers.

I have sometimes heard of old improvements here, the monuments of the early civilization of the Indians under the Jesuite fathers, and I am obliged to say that the half had not been told. Yet I begin to suspect that what has been told was apocryphal.

That the Indians had made great advances in civilization, far greater than they now have the credit for, I have not the slightest doubt, but I am getting the opinion that it was pre-Jesuitical; that the Indians were in a better physical and moral condition before the advent of the whites than they ever have been since. But no more of this now, I may write you on it hereafter.

On these highlands are old clearings of immense extent. I have examined for five miles without getting to the end, which have all been cleared and cultivated for ages, by a people who understood agriculture well.

Here are apple trees two feet in diameter, thrifty and in full blossom. Several varieties of plum, three of currants, including all the choice varieties of gooseberry abound, and all left to waste.—There is not an inhabitant.

Some slight remains of the houses are here and there found.—Bushes are growing up in the old fields, but over thousands of acres one day's work will prepare an acre for the plow.

The sole objection to the country is the want of water. Stock would get it at the lake, but the bluff is too high to carry water up it for domestic uses, and it would require deep digging to make wells.

The soil is fertile, and well adapted to grazing and the cereals.—The surface is diversified with hill and dale, having an appearance slightly more abrupt than what we call "gently rolling," and I imagine that a mile back from the lake bluff, water would be found at a moderate depth. The air is clear and healthy. The situation is delightful.

Yours truly, S.

We are informed that at the recent election in Emmet county an entire set of officers friendly to the settlement of that county by the Mormons was elected without opposition, a majority of the officers being of that faith.

Upon the most thorough canvass of the county, but fourteen men could be found in any respect unfriendly to the management of the public affairs by the Mormons. Of these but seven were voters, and only one a permanent resident.

This result is a proper comment upon the scandalous action of the Legislature in dividing the county, against the wishes of the entire population.

The engineers engaged in the survey of the Lakes have ascertained the latitude and longitude of Mr. Strang's house, at Saint James, with great precision, as follows: Latitude 45 deg. 44 min. 27.67 sec. north. Longitude 85 deg. 26 min. 41.97 sec. west of Greenwich.

In our last issue there is a notice of the failure of the organization of Aranac county organization bill. This is a mistake. It was the Alpena county bill which was so lost.

The Aranac county bill was a proposition to erect a county, consisting of two distinct pieces of territory, separated by the mouth of Saginaw Bay; and after passing the Senate, with a working majority in the House, was defeated by some most skillful parliamentary maneuvering by Messrs. Ashmun and Strang.

The probability is that there will be no Circuit Courts held this summer in Manitowish or Emmet counties, the two Mormon Counties; there being not a single case on either civil or criminal calendar. Is this another reproach upon the Mormons?

We hear of frosts throughout the country the first week in June. There was none here.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The General Conference will be held at Saint James the 7th, 8th, 9th and 10 July next; at which solemn sacrifices and thanksgiving will be offered to Almighty God, who has been pleased to give us the kingdom.

There will also be a Conference at Holy Island, Lake Mormon, the 15th July next, to return thanks to Almighty God for averting the calamities of civil war, with which we were recently threatened, and giving us a peaceful deliverance from the machinations of powerful foes.

At these Conferences public discourses will be delivered on the covenants with Abraham, the sonship and messiahship of Jesus, the royal line of David, and the everlasting kingdom of God on earth, the gospel of the resurrection, the salvation of the dead, and the everlasting life of the saints.

FULL SUPPLY.

F. JOHNSON & CO. have received a full assortment of various articles expressly for this trade, viz: Dry Goods, Boots and Shoes, Groceries, Crockery Ware and Fishermen's Stores, which they will sell low for cash or ready pay. 68aa.

TO MINING COMPANIES.

Johnston's Detroit City Directory AND ADVERTISING GAZETTEER OF MICHIGAN, FOR 1855-6.

To contain general directory of all the House-holders and other citizens of Detroit, to be enumerated in May next. Nominal List of State and City Executive and Legislative Bodies. Judges and other State and County Judicial and Executive Functionaries, Statistical Reports, the Census of each County, City, Town, and Post Village in Michigan; List of all the Mines in the State, with Statistics, where supplied; A New Ornamental Map of Detroit; Almanac for 1855-6; Tables of Routes and Distances; of Interest, of Foreign Coins and Currency; Shipping List; Steamboat and Railway Intelligence, with many other useful particulars, too numerous to mention here. Size, imperial 8vo., about 350 pages, good paper, neatly bound. Price, ten shillings, except the quantity to be gratuitously distributed.

The style of the Directory of 1854-5 will be improved for 1855-6. Cards neatly arranged on the pages. Half pages and pages of advertisements will be printed on colored paper, pagged and compiled together with extra display.

In the Advertisers Key, will be classified, as usual, the several Advertisements. The work will be prepared essentially with a view to subserve the interests of the advertiser and the general interests of Michigan.

2000 copies of the last Directory were printed, and 1000 gratuitously and widely distributed to benefit the City and State, and the Cards of Advertisers were carried by the work into hands they never, otherwise perhaps, would have reached.

The Directory in preparation, will be ready about the close of June next. I trust the support I may continue to receive will enable me to print for 1855-6.

THREE THOUSAND COPIES.

If so, I shall devote 1500 copies to gratuitous circulation throughout the Union. A copy shall be kept hung up for reference in each Hotel and Post Office in the State, and a number of copies shall be forwarded to Europe.

As usual, the Cards of benevolent Societies, whether in Detroit or throughout the State, inserted free. Trustees of Colleges and all similar Institutions, should avail themselves of the opportunity this permanent medium presents of giving extensive notoriety to such establishments.

Manufacturers and owners of Patent Rights in Michigan or elsewhere, may give remunerative publicity to their business at trifling cost. The compiler, at a mere nominal charge, invites for publication the Cards of Attorneys, Collectors, Land Agents, &c., from each City and Village in the State.

The work will be so prepared in exhibiting the unsurpassed resources of Michigan, that it shall prove a highly important aid to increase the population by immigration from less favored States.

The Directory has local claims to patronizing support, and its utility is indisputable.—No effort shall be left unemployed to deserve the continuance of a generous encouragement. For past aid, friends will please accept my acknowledgments, and remembering the high prices of paper, and the large quantity to be used in the work, as well as the great expense of the clerical and printing labor to be expended upon it, will assist me to do better in the pending effort. JAMES DALE JOHNSTON, Compiler Detroit Directory, &c.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED.

The promised work—Europe and the Allies of the past and to-day.

A complete history of the war in the east, 422 pages, fine tinted engravings; portraits of Potentates and Generals; Map of the Crimea; Sevastopol and fortifications; being a summary of historical events from the time of Napoleon 1st to the present day. Price—$4.25.—For sale by all the booksellers.

Agents will find a new opportunity to make money by the sale of this and other works of sterling merit, by applying to the publishers. E. LIVERMORE.

No. 20, Beekman St., (New York.) Also 10,000 copies printed of an abridgement of the above work, illustrated paper covers, 175 pages, profusely illustrated—50c. The above books will be sent, post paid, on receipt of the price.

LEND A HAND.

Working amid the world's commotion,
Fighting up life's stormy road,
Patriots, with a high devotion,
Struggle in the cause of God.
And to us that band is praying—
And their griefs before us laying,
And to us that band is saying,
"Brethren, lend a hand."

Men of freedom—men of daring,
Blest with health, and strong in youth,
Come with all your noble bearing,
Fight the battle fight of truth.
Former friends reject and slight us,
Friends and men resist and spite us,
Earth and hell combine to fight us—
Heroes, lend a hand.

Men of wealth and men of station,
Vice has had your aid too long,
Come, then, from their degradation,
Help to raise the wretched throng.
Of a doom of woe unthinking,
From a poison cup they're drinking—
In a sea of death they're sinking—Rich ones, lend a hand.

Men of genius, high and soaring,
Cease your flights past human ken;
Lend your mighty hand in pouring Knowledge round the paths of men.
Round you is a solitude—
Mind with higher powers endued,
Perishing for lack of food—
Genius, lend a hand.

Men of God, whose noble calling
Has come down from heaven above,
Cease your scheming and your calling,
Preach in truth a Savior's love.
While but trifles you're deserving,
Millions for the truth are sighing,
And the second death are dying—
Christians, lend a hand.

Men of every mind and station,
Sow the seed and strike the blow;
Rise in honest indignation,
Rise to fight the common foe.
There's a field for all your working,
Vice is reigning, sin is lurking,
Let there be no dastard shirking—
Patriots, lend a hand.

DISMEMBERMENT OF EMMET COUNTY.

The county of Emmet was organized in May, 1853, in pursuance of an act passed at the preceding session of the Legislature, consisting of all that part of the Lower Peninsula north of Township thirty-two north, and west of range three west, and the Islands in Lake Michigan westward thereof.

At the time of the passage of this act it was distinctly understood in all places that the white population of this county was made up almost exclusively of people of the Mormon faith, and that in every section of the county they would be able to keep the entire control of all municipal affairs; and the passage of the act was regarded an authoritative adjustment of the difficulties which had previously existed here.

Though the act to organize the county was in no respect different from similar acts for the organization of other counties, yet the understanding in and out of the State was that Emmet county was intended for the Mormons, and that no one not being a Mormon who settled there had a right to complain of any lawful acts of theirs, though not conforming with the prevalent customs in other parts of the State.

From the time of the organization of the county till the opening of the late session of the Legislature, no collision or disagreement whatever grew up between the inhabitants of the county. Its affairs were conducted with the utmost harmony. In no county in the State since its existence have the public affairs been conducted so uniformly satisfactory to the entire public.

The only unpleasant occurrence of any kind which had arisen in the county in the period of nearly two years, was an attempt to murder the Sheriff while serving jury process, made by men from Mackinac; an act so horrid and so utterly unprovoked that with all the prejudices against Mormons, no attempt was made in any quarter to justify or palliate it.

Considering the crusade against them at an end, and not disposed to give any excuse for renewing it, all the Mormons coming into the State settled in Emmet, and good citizens not of that faith opposed any attempt to encroach on them there. All who had the good name of the State at heart regarded this arrangement as just, permanent and binding in good faith, and were opposed to any attempt to disturb it.

All parties were committed to it. The bill was drawn by Mr. Strang, and its passage unanimously recommended by the committee on towns and counties. (House Jour. 1853, p. 75.) It was then duly considered section by section in committee of the whole, and passed without any amendment being proposed. (do. p. 187.)

In the House it was so amended as to confer on the board of Supervisors the power to locate the county seat. (do. p. 193.) Mr. Poppleton, of Oakland, at this stage of the proceedings moved two amendments, the effect of which, if adopted, would be to limit the jurisdiction of the county, and provide for subsequently detaching a portion of its territory, and was supported by Mr. Burt, of Macomb; but the House, by a very strong vote, negatived the amendments. Mr. Fitzsimmons renewed the effort in another form, and moved to recommit the bill; but the House refused, and ordered the bill to a third reading, (do.) when it was passed by a vote of fifty to seven.

On the final passage the vote was as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Adams, Arnold, Bailey, Bates, Benedict, Green, Griswold, Gulick, Haight, Hand, Murphy, Palmer, Parkhurst, Reno, Renwick, Bristol, Bonine, Craven, Davis, Ellsworth, Ely, Ewing, Fitch, Fry, J. Gleason, J. P. Gleason, Goff, Haze, Hudson, Irwin, Jennison, Jones, Lathrop, Lovell, McWhorter, Marsh, Mathews, H. Miller, Morton, Richardson, Root, Sherman, Smith, Strang, Sutherland, Toll, Traver, Warner, Winters, Speaker.—50.

NAYS.

Messrs. Burt, Fitzsimmons, Gale, Ingals, Poppleton, Sheldon, Thompson.—7.

Of the Democrats thirty-seven voted for the bill, and six against it; of the Whigs thirteen voted for the bill, and one against it. Every Representative from the north half of the State supported it, including Mr. Toll of Mackinac; and locally the nearest opposing vote was that of Mr. Ingals, of Ionia, more than two hundred miles away.

In the Senate the bill was reported by the committee on towns and counties, with a unanimous recommendation that it pass, and was passed by a vote of twenty-seven to two, as follows:

YEAS.

Messrs. Arzeno, Beeson, Clarke, Curtin, Fratic, Gardner, Goodrich, Gould, Griswold, Hall, Harrington, Harris, Hickox, Hixon, Johnson, Kent, Leonard, Moore, McCauley, Newberry, Pierce, Snow, Smith, Stevens, Stowell, Twombly, Wright.—27.

NAYS.

Messrs. Paddeock, Russell.—2.

Of the Democrats twenty-three voted for the bill, and one against it; and of the Whigs four voted for the bill, and one against it. It was supported by the Senator from this district, and also the district including Mackinac; the two votes cast against it being by Senators from distant parts of the State. Few public acts have passed with so little opposition, and we are fully warranted in saying that there was not a county in the State in which the entire population were as well satisfied with its boundaries as this. Had the question been submitted to a popular vote, five votes could not have been got in favor of dividing the county.

Those who have learned that the county has been divided, will be curious to know why the measure was set on foot, and by whom.

We answer, certain land speculators laid their heads together to purchase favorable locations, and get two new counties, with county seats on their lands; taking six miles wide off the west side of Cheboygan, and six miles wide off the north side of Antrim, and all the mainland of Emmet for the two new counties.

To carry this measure through they proposed first to repeal the act under which the county of Emmet was organized, and invoke the religious prejudice against the Mormons, sharpened as all religious prejudices have been by the recent action of the Know-Nothings, to override all questions of law and right.

At one time the success of the measure seemed inevitable. The bill to repeal the act to organize the county of Emmet passed the House by a vote of fifty-four to six, without having been referred, printed, placed on the general order, or even read, except by the title, and as if determined to allow no opposition to it, before it was reached an order was adopted to prohibit any member speaking over ten minutes.

It immediately went to the Senate, when on reading the title three times, without even looking into the bill it was passed by a vote of twenty-four to one, the only vote against it being that of Senator Alvord, who represented the district including it.

On the passage of the bill through the House Mr. Strang filed the following protest:

I protest against the passage of the "bill to repeal the act to organize the county of Emmet," because it is without occasion, inexpedient and unconstitutional.

There has not been presented to this House a single petition of any one inhabitant of the county, for the repeal of the act under which it was organized.

The only petition asking any such action comes from the inhabitants of an adjoining county, and the sole reason which it gives for such action, is the desire of preventing the Mormons from settling and residing anywhere except on the Islands.

As the Mormons have the same right to settle in any part of the State, as people of any other religious faith, this language of the petitioners can only be understood as an avowal of a determination, if the present legal government in that section of the State can be abolished, to drive the members of a particular faith, by lawless violence, from their chosen homes, and to prevent others from purchasing property and settling there.

If this House should, on this petition, though moved by different reasons, grant the prayer of this petition, the petitioners could not fail of taking the action of the House as a warrant for prosecuting their desires, so shamelessly avowed, and would have some right to look for any other further legislation which may be necessary to shield them from punishment for the crimes which they are not ashamed to tell this House they design to commit.

The petition from Grand Traverse county does not ask for the repeal of the act to organize the county of Emmet, but that the main land in that county may be detached from the islands; and deserves the same consideration from this House as would a petition from Oakland for the division of Monroe—utter contempt.

The only remaining petition on the subject, is that of the "Chiefs and braves of the Ottawa tribe of Indians," in which they are joined by less than a score of half-breeds and white men, temporarily residing with them, whose petition would be fully answered by either removing the county seat of Emmet county to the main land, or by dividing the county, making one county of the main land, and one of the Islands.

If it was possible, it would be inexpedient to abolish an existing organized county. By this simple act the property acquired by the county is lost, or reverts to the grantors. The holders of moneys and assets belonging to the county of Emmet, and to the townships organized under the same act, are discharged from all obligation to account for or pay over the same; the debtors of the county are released from their liabilities; the creditors of the county are deprived of all means of collecting their dues; the delinquent taxes are remitted, and the public buildings of the county and of all municipal corporations in it, such as School Districts, cease to be the property of those who have contributed to their erection. Indemnities for crimes committed within the body of the county are quashed by this act, and a perpetual stay is ordered upon all suits and proceedings at law, whether pending before Justices of the Peace, Judges of Probate, Circuit Court Commissioners, or the Circuit Court; and the organization of new counties out of the same territory does not cure a single one of these evils.

Evils of such magnitude ought to deter this House, if it possessed the power, from abolishing an existing county. But nothing can be more clear than that the Legislature does not possess the power to abolish an existing county.

By the revised constitution, article 10, section 6, it is provided that "no organized county shall ever be reduced, by the organization of new counties, to less than sixteen townships, as surveyed by the United States, unless, in pursuance of law, a majority of the electors in each county to be affected thereby, shall so decide." This bill contains no provision for taking the decision of the electors, and its passage is a simple treading under foot of that provision of the Constitution. For if the Legislature can repeal the act to organize a county, and reorganize the same territory into new and smaller counties, containing less than sixteen townships, then, in defiance of the Constitution, the county of Macomb, the smallest county in the State, containing but thirteen townships, may, without the consent of the inhabitants, be divided, by first repealing the act by which it was organized, and then erecting two or more new counties out of the same territory.

Thus, the security which all the small and medium size counties have obtained, by the Constitution, against future division, is all lost, and by this precedent, a way is opened to divide any county in the State, whenever the interests of speculators in village property require the location of a new County Seat.

Nor is the difficulty helped in the least by the bills which accompany this, for the organizing the three new counties of Emmet, Charlevoix and Manitowish, (Beaver Island,) for each of those counties, is less than sixteen townships in extent, though each trenches upon other counties.

The proposed new county of Emmet will consist of but fourteen townships, as surveyed by the United States, one quarter of which is taken from Cheboygan, and three quarters from the present county of Emmet.

The proposed new county of Charlevoix, will consist of but a little short of fifteen townships, two of which are taken from Cheboygan, about nine from Emmet, and four from Antrim. The effect of this division is to reduce Antrim to less than thirteen townships of land.

The proposed new county of Manitowish (Beaver Island, &c.) will consist of less than three full townships of land, a portion of which is taken from Leelanaw county, but the principal part from the present county of Emmet.

This simple statement of facts, which any one can assure himself of by five minutes inspection of a map, with these bills before him, must satisfy any one that this whole series of measures is unconstitutional and unjust; yet, so ardently have they been pressed, that a portion of these bills have passed without ever having been read in the House.

As a reason for measures so high-handed, the committee who reported these bills say, that the original act to organize the county of Emmet, was unconstitutional; in that the islands included in the county, are, by article XIX, Section 1 of the Constitution, included in the district of the Upper Peninsula, when it is considered, and it is no where questioned, that every part of the county was also included in that district, this pretense is sufficiently ridiculous.

But if this point was good, it would not vitiate, nor in any way effect the "act to organize the county of Emmet," approved January 29, 1853; it would only vitiate the act by which Emmet county was made a part of the third judicial circuit.

But though the House has relieved itself from this indefensible position, by striking out the preamble of "bill to repeal the act to organize the county of Emmet," in doing so, they have disclaimed the only reason which appears in our proceedings, for abolishing an existing organized county, except the only one contained in the petition from Mackinac, to wit: the desire to persecute, without the fear of legal punishment, the members of a particular religious faith.

In behalf of the people of Emmet and Cheboygan, both of which are dismembered by this series of acts, whose representative I am, by every vote but one cast in both those counties, and in behalf of a sanctity of religious freedom and the integrity of the Constitution, I protest against the passage of this bill.

JAMES J. STRANG.

This protest was placed on the journal and printed, and the day following that on which the bill passed the Senate this protest was on the tables of all the Senators. Almost immediately Senator Upson, of St. Joseph, moved a message to the House asking a return of the bill, which motion prevailed.

On the coming in of the bill, Senator Blair, of Jackson, moved the re-consideration of the vote by which it passed the Senate, which also prevailed; and the bill was laid on the table, and that was the end of it. It was not taken up again during the session.

Accompanying this bill, as part of the same measure, were two bills, one to organize a new county, to be called Emmet, from that portion of the dismembered territory north of Little Traverse Bay, and a large territory to be taken off from Cheboygan; the other to organize a new county, to be called Charlevoix, of that portion of the dismembered territory south of Little Traverse Bay, two townships from Cheboygan, and one tier of townships off the north side of Antrim.

Another bill was brought in at a later date to erect the Beaver, Fox and Manitowish Islands into a county, to be called Beaver Island. The intention of the movers was not to pass this bill, but to keep it along behind the others; with the purpose of assuring those who were not willing to outlaw a numerous body of citizens, and place a large portion of the State out of the pale of judicial protection, until their votes were obtained for the other bills, and leave this bill without final action. The effect would have been, if the plan had succeeded, to leave the Beaver and Fox Islands out of the pale of all civil jurisdiction, and crimes committed here could not have been prosecuted in any court in the State.

Some Senators, unfavorable to so wicked a measure, determined to keep the other bills back, until the Beaver Island bill came up, and the speculators were obliged to yield, that should pass in order to secure for their own measures a favorable hearing. The result was that the Beaver Island bill, after more than a dozen amendments, and changing the name from Beaver Island to Manitowish, passed both Houses, and both the other bills were defeated in the Senate. So the speculators took nothing by their motion. In its consequences it gave the Mormons more than their share in the representation, and thus more political consequence than they asked or were entitled to.

The worthiest people are most injured by slanderers; as we find that to be the best fruit which the birds have been pecking at.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 3.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 70.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

Terms:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 35 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued until further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATIONS.

When, a few years since, Joseph Smith was found declaring revelations from God and messages from the world where spirits dwell, the whole world began scoffing, and they have not done yet. But now their scoffing is at themselves more than him. All the world is agog after spiritual manifestations.

Every great religious reformation or revolution has been followed by spiritual manifestations of some mysterious kind; and in this case that result is only a fulfillment of prophecy, and one of the essential means of the consummation of all things.

How true it is that men love lies more than the truth. Every class of men run after low and groveling spirits when they peep, mutter and rap. Judges and Senators are creeping after their foolish necromancy. But when God Almighty speaks, how few to do him reverence.

Something over a year since Gen. Shields, of Illinois, presented a petition in the United States Senate, asking an authoritative investigation. On presenting the memorial, Mr. Shields said:

I beg leave to present to the Senate a petition with some fifteen thousand names appended to it, upon a very singular and novel subject. The petitioners represent that certain physical and mental phenomena of mysterious import have become so prevalent in this country and Europe as to engross a large share of public attention—a partial analysis of these phenomena attest the existence.

First. Of an occult force which is exhibited in sliding, raising, arresting, holding, suspending and otherwise disturbing ponderable bodies, apparently in direct opposition to the acknowledged laws of matter, and transcending the accredited power of the human mind.—[Laughter.]

Secondly. Lights of different degrees of intensity appear in dark rooms, where chemical action or phosphorescent illumination cannot be developed, and where there are no means of generating electricity or of producing combustion.

Thirdly. A variety of sounds, frequent in occurrence and diversified in character, and of singular significance and import, consisting of mysterious rapping, indicating the presence of invisible intelligence. Sounds are often heard like those produced by the prosecutor of mechanical operations, like the hoarse murmur of the winds and waves mingled with the harsh creaking noise of the masts and rigging of a ship laboring in a sea. Concussions also occur resembling distant thunder, producing oscillatory movements of surrounding objects, and a tremulous motion of the premises upon which these phenomena occur. Harmonious sounds, as that of human voices, and other sounds, resembling those of the fife, drum, trumpet, &c., have been produced without any visible agency.

Fourthly. All the functions of the human body and mind are influenced in what appear to be certain abnormal states of the system, by causes not yet adequately understood or accounted for. The occult force or invisible power frequently interrupts the normal operation of the faculties, suspending sensation and voluntary motion of the body to a deathlike coldness and rigidity, and diseases hitherto considered incurable have been entirely eradicated by this mysterious agency. The petitioners proceed to state that two opinions prevail with respect to the origin of these phenomena—one ascribes them to the power and the intelligence of departed spirits operating upon the elements which pervade all material forms; the other rejects this conclusion, and contends that all these results may be accounted for in a rational and satisfactory manner.

The memorialists, while thus disagreeing as to the cause, concur in the opinion as to the occurrence of the alleged phenomena, and in view of their origin, nature and bearing upon the interests of mankind, demand for them a patient, rigid, scientific investigation, and request the appointment of a scientific commission for that purpose.

I have now given a faithful synopsis of this petition, which, however unprecedented in itself, has been prepared with singular ability, presenting the subject with great delicacy and moderation. I make it a rule to present any petition to the Senate which is respectful in its terms, but having discharged this duty, I may be permitted to say that the prevalence of this delusion at this age of the world, among any considerable portion of our citizens, must originate, in my opinion, in a defective system of education, or in a partial derangement of the mental faculties, produced by a diseased condition of the physical organization. I cannot, therefore, believe that it prevails to the extent indicated in this petition.

Different ages of the world have had their peculiar delusions. Alchemy occupied the attention of eminent men for several centuries, but there was something sublime in alchemy. The philosopher's stone, or the transmutation of base metals into gold, the elixir vitæ or "water of life," which would preserve youth and beauty, and prevent old age, decay and death, were blessings which poor humanity ardently desired, and which alchemy sought to discover by perseverance and piety. Roger Bacon, one of the greatest alchemists and greatest men of the thirteenth century, while searching for the philosopher's stone, discovered the telescope, burning glasses and gunpowder. The prosecution of that delusion led, therefore, to a number of useful discoveries.

In the sixteenth century flourished Cornelius Agrippa, alchemist, astrologer and magician, one of the greatest professors of hermetic philosophy that ever lived. He had all the spirits of the air and demons of the earth under his command. Paulus Jovius says that the devil, in the shape of a large black dog, attended Agrippa wherever he went. Thomas Nash says, at the request of Lord Surrey, Erasmus and other learned men, Agrippa called up from the grave several of the great philosophers of antiquity; among others, Tully, whom he caused to redeliver his celebrated oration for Roscius. To please the Emperor, Charles the Fourth, he summoned King David and King Solomon from the tomb, and the Emperor conversed with them long upon the science of government. This was a glorious exhibition of spiritual power compared with the insignificant manifestations of the present day.

I will pass over the celebrated Paracelsus, for the purpose of making allusion to an Englishman with whose veracious history every one ought to make himself acquainted. In the sixteenth century, Dr. Dee made such progress in the talismanic mysteries that he acquired ample power to hold familiar conversation with spirits and angels, and to learn of them all the secrets of the universe. On one occasion the angel Gabriel gave him a black crystal of a convex form, which he had only to gaze upon intently, and by a strong effort of the will he could summon any spirit he wished to reveal to him the secrets of futurity.

Dee, in his veracious diary, says that one day while he was sitting with Albertus Laski, a Polish nobleman, there seemed to come out of the Oratory a spiritual creature like a pretty girl of seven or nine years of age, with her hair rolled up before, and hanging down behind with a gown of silk of changeable red and green, and with a train; she seemed to play up and down, and to go in and out behind the books, and as she seemed to go between them the books displaced themselves and made way for her. This I call a spiritual manifestation of the most interesting and fascinating kind. Even the books felt the fascinating influence of this spiritual creature, for they displaced themselves and made way for her. Edward Kell, an Irishman who was present, and who witnessed this beautiful operation, verifies the Doctor's statement: therefore it would be unreasonable to doubt a story so well attested, particularly when the witness was an Irishman. [Laughter.]

Doctor Dee was the distinguished favorite of Kings and Queens—a proof that spiritual science was held in high repute in the good old age of Queen Elizabeth. But of all the professors of occult science, hermetic philosophy, or spiritualism, the Rosicrucians were the most exalted and refined; with them the possession of the philosopher's Stone was to be the means of health and happiness, an instrument by which man could command the services of superior beings, control the elements, defy the abstraction of time and space, and acquire the most intimate knowledge of all the secrets of the Universe. These were objects worth struggling for.

The refined Rosicrucians were utterly disgusted with the coarse, gross, sensual spirits who had been in communication with man previous to their day, so they decreed the annihilation of them all, and substituted in their stead a race of mild, beautiful and beneficent beings. The spirits of the olden time were a malignant race and took especial delight in doing mischief, but the new race is mild and benignant. These spirits, as this petition attests, indulge in the most innocent amusements and harmless recreations, such as sliding, raising and tipping tables, producing pleasant sounds and variegated lights and sometimes curing diseases which were previously considered incurable, and for the existence of this simple and benignant race, our petitioners are indebted to the brethren of the rosy cross.

Among the modern professors of spiritualism, Cagliostro was the most justly celebrated. In Paris his saloons were thronged with the rich and the noble. To old ladies he sold immortality, and to young ones he sold beauty that would endure for centuries; and his charming Countess gained immense wealth by granting attending sylphs to such ladies as were rich enough to pay for their services.—The "Biographes des Contemporains"—a work which our present mediums ought to consult with care—says there was hardly a fine lady in Paris who would not sup with the shade of Lucretius in the apartments of Cagliostro.—There was not a military officer that would not discuss the art of war with Alexander, Hannibal, or Cæsar; or an advocate or counselor who would not argue legal points with the ghost of Cicero.

These were spiritual manifestations worth paying for, and all our degenerate mediums would have to hide their diminished heads in the presence of Cagliostro. It would be a curious inquiry to follow this occult science through all its phases of mineral magnetism, animal mesmerism, &c., until we reach the present latest and lowest phase of all spiritual manifestations; but I have had enough to show the truth of Burke's beautiful aphorism, "The credulity of dupes is as inexhaustible as the invention of knaves."

The memorial was laid on the table, and no further attention paid to it. In France it would have been referred to the ablest men of science in the empire, whose report would have gone far to protect the public from imposition, which now, supported by a few facts and much falsehood, runs riot.

We have selected from among our exchanges a few "specimen brick" of spiritualism, as follows:

SPIRITS FINDING A POCKET BOOK.
Correspondence of the Cleveland Plaindealer.

WILLOUGHBY, Wednesday, April 19, 1854.

A few days since, B. Woolsey, Esq., of this place, a very distinguished Methodist, whom many of your readers know by the name of Father Woolsey, lost his pocket book containing nearly $100 in bank notes. After long and anxious searching for days, no trace could be found of it. Now Uncle Ben is a God-fearing man, and, withal, was afraid to tempt God by consulting familiar spirits. Yet the bare possibility of finding his money induced him to consult them. The spirit said he accidentally dropped his pocket book in his own yard, that an individual (describing him) picked it up, and fearing to pass the money, gave it to another individual, an Irishman, who exchanged it in Cleveland for gold; that the Irishman kept half, and the man who picked it up half. On this information the Irishman was charged with it, and all the circumstances, place where found, and kind of money exchanged for, and what exchanged for, made known just as the spirit detailed it, whereupon the Irishman and his friend owned up and refunded the money, greatly to the joy of Father Woolsey, who thinks there must be something in it.

For our part we think this action of Father Woolsey very natural. It is precisely the same thing as Saul did, only on a very small scale. Why should not those whom God answers neither by visions, voice or urim, go to familiar spirits?

SPIRITS AS BOOTS AND KITTENS.
The Spiritual Era of July 6th contains an editorial article detailing some curious manifestations which the editor has witnessed.—

For instance, a table is spread in the usual manner for a meal, by a young girl who is a highly developed medium. Soon apparently a living thing about the size of a kitten is seen to be moving about under the tablecloth, and after a while as the spectators grow familiar with the phenomenon, a small delicate hand, seeming to belong to a child about four years old, is observed to protrude suddenly from beneath the cloth, and is as suddenly withdrawn. After this operation has been repeated several times, the manifestation changes, and a good sized foot, with perhaps a boot upon it, is suddenly thrust out from beneath the cloth, and is withdrawn under it again.—At other times the family are in the habit of placing a Bible under the table, as they are seated round it, when the spirits will open it at the passage which they desire them to read.

A SPIRIT TICKLES THE BOTTOM OF A MAN'S FOOT.
From the Spiritual Telegraph.
MANSION HOUSE, Yonkers, }
July 10th, 1854.

During a recent sitting at a private circle in your City, New York, consisting of four persons besides myself, the following demonstrations occurred. In about five minutes after the circle was formed, I began to feel distinct touches from some object resembling a human hand; these touches were first felt on the knee, then on the arm, and at last on the forehead. * * * * * After I had felt a hand laid on my forehead five or six times, I suddenly reached forth to see if I could clutch it. I caught hold of an object resembling the wrist of a person. As soon as I had fairly clasped it, I was drawn from my chair across the room, for eight or ten feet. Meanwhile I was holding on with all my strength, and the object which I held on to was making much effort apparently, by wringing or twisting the arm and hand to release itself from my persistent grasp. * * * When it touched my forehead, I could distinctly feel the fingers, and even the very nails upon them. The hand felt to me smoother and far less moist than the human hand; in fact, no Parian marble could be polished to such perfect smoothness. I also held a closed fan up as high as I could reach, and it was taken from me, though no person was within several feet of me at the time, and I was fanned for nearly a minute, and so were the others in the circle, each one in turn. My shoe was taken off my right foot and thrown across the room, and the bottom of my foot was tickled excessively. My porte-monnaie was taken from my pocket, the bank notes removed from it, and laid around on the heads of the members of the circle. They were soon replaced from whence they were taken, and the porte-monnaie returned to me. Indeed it was slipped back into the pocket of my pants, opposite to the one out of which it was at first removed, it being the furthestest off from those who were sitting with me in the circle.

SPIRIT TALKING OUT IN MEETING.
TORONTO, March 31, 1854.

MESSRS. PATRIDGE AND BRITTAIN: We have several writing mediums in Toronto—one gentleman who is partially impressed, one lady who is a speaking medium, but not fully developed. There have been some strange demonstrations. One took place on the evening of the 18th of March. Several persons were sitting around a table, when the table commenced moving. It was told us that if we would wait twenty-two minutes, we should have a very different demonstration from any that we had ever witnessed. At the expiration of the time mentioned, I observed that the spirits had disappointed us, and that the spirits who had promised to do something different from other demonstrations was not here. Instantly there came a voice distinct and close in answer to me. "Yes, I am!" This voice was so distinct and clear, and uttered in such a peculiar tone, that it removed my last doubt in reference to its spirituality. After this there commenced a course of demonstrations that was truly wonderful. One of the ladies was raised up out of her chair; the chair moved back to the wall of the room.

BEDS AND FURNITURE FOUNDED.
From the Springfield Telegraph.

In the latter part of January some physical manifestations commenced at the house of a neighbor whose family are all mediums to some extent. The youngest member of ten in family, a boy, ten or twelve years old, is possessed of very remarkable powers in this respect. They had been accustomed to hear from time to time, in the presence of this lad, electrical vibrations, which all at once assumed a new peculiar character. These sounds commenced one morning about six o'clock, and were so loud, sonorous and deep, as to be heard all over the house. An inmate of the house, a gentleman of undoubted veracity, wishing to investigate the origin of these sounds, arose at early dawn, and placing himself in bed with the two mediums, (who were brothers—the younger being the lad referred to,) when the raps were heard even louder than before. A pile of furniture (composed of bedsteads, chairs, &c.,) occupying one corner of the room, near the bed commenced to be violently disarranged and thrown about. The bed clothes were in part drawn from the bed; the medium's hair was pulled, also that of the gentleman, several small locks being found scattered over the bed; two hands were distinctly felt, very dissimilar in size and feeling, on their foreheads, hands, and arms. In short they were rather roughly handled. Mr. ——— having his ear pinched in a manner that left the mark throughout the day. A small, white and dimpled hand, evidently of female origin, was seen simultaneously by both gentlemen, placed before their faces, with the fingers spread somewhat apart, through which the gray morning light from the window was distinctly seen. It was recognized by one of the gentlemen as identical with the hand of a young lady of his acquaintance who died about six months ago. Subsequent to this occurrence several gentlemen of this village, wishing to test these things more thoroughly, they procured for this purpose a vacant room, where astonishing phenomena were witnessed by all present.

In order to test these things myself, I was present on one of these occasions, and witnessed many things which it was not possible for any one present to have done had they been disposed to impose upon their neighbors and friends. The room in which they met was about sixty feet in length, the stove being placed in the back part, near the passage; a small pine table about six feet in length and two in width stood at the distance of thirty feet from the stove, around which were seated three mediums; Mr. ———, who saw the hand, the father of the boy medium, and the lad, each having a hand placed on the table.—As soon as we were seated around the stove, silence being enjoined and the light extinguished, a large dinner bell commenced ringing; it was apparently carried near the ceiling overhead, until it passed beyond the pale of influence, when it fell with a crash at my feet.—Five large bells were next rung in succession, as if to test the sound of each. They were then rung in concert, each sounding a different note, and keeping perfect time.—The dinner bell of the hotel near at hand, was then perfectly imitated. They were then placed in every variety of form and attitude; sometimes arranged in the form of a pyramid, and then again placed singly on the mediums' heads and shoulders. The bells were then removed from the table, when a succession of tremendous blows (sounding as if given with the palm of the hand,) descended upon the table, in a manner that no human being could imitate without severing his hand in pieces. I requested permission of the invisibles to sit at the table, stating my desire to investigate in order to prepare a written statement of my own observations. This request was readily granted, although they had refused the several members of the circle save the three mediums at the table. Being seated at the table I asked a jovial and mirth loving spirit, whom we call Frank, to gently touch my hand. The bells were rung, and a descent of those terrible blows were made on each side of my hand; in an instant the table was capsize, having caught all the bells under it—each standing upon the bottom in a circle. I am confident that no human agency could have effected this singular feat. The table was again restored to its former position. I placed my hand on it as before, and again requested the spirit to touch my hand—the attempt was a failure as in the first instance. The spirit answered by tappings that he could not touch my hand.—The table was then raised with our four hands upon it, the distance of two feet from the floor, and again overturned in a twinkling, with the bells in the same position as before. After I left the table, a succession of the most terrible blows I ever heard were made in the room.—It resembled the driving of fence posts with a large beetle, such as farmers use in the splitting of logs. I was weary of these performances long before they were over, and longed to be away. Three ladies were present besides myself. I was not afraid, although the invisible operatives were at times apparently very angry, and sent the bells at us with considerable force whenever our whispered words broke the silence, which seemed an indispensable requisition in the potency of their weird and occult power.

SPIRITS GET HOLD OF FELLOWS.
From the Spiritual Telegraph.

Sunday, July 23, 1854, at L. S. Beck's, in sixth av. New York; present, Mr. and Mrs. Beck, Miss Matilda ———, Mr. and Mrs. Bradford and myself. Mr. and Mrs. Bradford mediums.

At this circle I experienced what purported to be an attempt on the part of a spirit to take possession of me. Richard Bradford, one of the mediums above named, was being controlled by a spirit apparently attempting unsuccessfully to speak through him. He was raised out of his chair, and his body made to sway to and fro, and to gesticulate as if making violent efforts to speak. While he remained in this condition I inquired of the spirits if I should lay my hands on his head, thinking that it might possibly modify the conditions.

sufficiently to enable him to speak. Through the raps the question was answered in the affirmative. I then went up and laid my hands upon his head, when there immediately ran up my arms a singular sensation, which passed like lightning to my head. I felt as if it was suddenly increased to twice its usual size. My face turned very red, and I began to stagger, when I took my seat, which had I not done I fully believe I should have fallen. As soon as I let go of the medium the influence left me, but with a headache which lasted until the next day.

On inquiring of the spirits, it was said that the spirit possessing Mr. Bradford, upon my laying my hands upon his head, tried to take possession of me, and as soon as the spirit had left him, another well known spirit instantly took possession of him, and caused him to perform a number of antics around the room, to the no small amusement of all present.

T. TOWNSEND.

SPIRITS IN THE TRAGIC LINE—APPROVED BY THE EDITOR OF THE N. Y. TIMES.
From the Spiritual Telegraph.

A regular five act tragedy, consisting of some four thousand lines, has recently been written, under spirit impulse, by the hand of Mr. Isaac C. Pray, of this city. It purports, if we are correctly informed, to emanate from the spirit of Shakespeare. It was read to the manager of the Broadway theatre and a select number of critics and editors, among whom was the editor of the N. Y. Times, and we understand that all concurred in awarding to it literary merit of a very high order. One of them, as we understand, went so far in his admiration as to declare his belief that no living writer could equal it. It was written with great rapidity, and very few erasures or alterations are to be found upon the manuscript.

This seems to give the lie to the new theory of Miss Bacon, who is laboring with earnestness and energy, to prove that Shakspear was only a kind of literary Jo. Miller, who never wrote a line in his life, but good naturedly allowed other men, who had fame enough of their own, to father their doubtful works on him.

These spirits are just now an active class of entities. It would seem that they neither slumber nor enjoy any of the modes of repose which we gross mortals require to maintain unimpaired the functions of our material organism. Even when not engaged in table-tipping, knee-cracking, toe-snapping, rapping, writing, musical exercises, and the various other modes by which they make themselves familiar to one or other of the five senses, they are, nevertheless, actively pursuing the business of enlightening those who yield an assent to their veritable spiritual character, by direct impressions upon the mind, without the intervention of the waking senses. It is astonishing how much they are doing.

The believers in spiritualism are very numerous, and some two hundred thousand believe their communications authentic divine revelations. Among them may be reckoned Ex-Governor Tallmadge, of Wisconsin, once a member of the United States Senate, from New York, and Judge Edmonds, formerly a member of the Supreme Court of New York, and a jurist of the highest rank; and some hundred clergymen of various denominations.

The spirits are untiring in their labors, as well as restlessly active. A large number of journals have been established to aid in the work, and about one hundred distinct books have been written upon it. Most of the articles in those papers, and most of the contents of these books claim to have been dictated by the spirits—either spelled out by the slow process of rapping through the alphabet, or by seizing upon the pen-hold of a medium and guiding it through the mazes of the "spiritual philosophy," or by strong impressions upon the minds of the writers which are not the result of ratiocinating processes.

How far these communications are to be relied on as divine revelations, it would seem that any one could determine without any difficulty, with the fact before him that there is as much disagreement and contradiction in them as so much reading picked up at random in the political and religious newspapers.

Among the more striking evidences of the utter falsity and corrupt and wicked nature of these communications is the fact that some novel writer got a work of the harum starum cheap literature kind, purporting to be dictated by a spirit of superior intelligence, "in the place where spirits dwell," and soon after reading it, fancying it to be genuine, the learned and logical Judge Edmonds got in communication with the same spirit, and learned from him many additional facts elaborating and confirming this veracious novel.

That our readers may see the depth of delusion to which those who could not believe a plain, rational and well authenticated revelation have finally sunk, we add the following:

A NEW MOTIVE POWER—SPIRITUAL PHYSIOLOGY.
From the Boston New Era, June 23.

1. It was announced to Mrs. —, by spiritual intelligence, several months since, that she would become a mother in some sense—that she would be "the Mary of a New Dispensation." The announcement was given under circumstances the most impressive, and in connection with a most beautiful and instructive vision, in which was strikingly elucidated a most important spiritual lesson—namely, the true significance of the cross, as an emblem of spiritual advancement. All who were present on the occasion were deeply impressed with the superior capacities and excellent moral attainments of the intelligence communicating, as evinced by the profound and comprehensive character of their teachings. Nevertheless, the prophecy or announcement spoken of, though declared with marked emphasis, and directed to be put on record, was not believed to have any peculiar meaning. It was thought to refer, possibly, to the maternal feeling which she had felt toward individuals, who had, through her instrumentality, been instructed in the new philosophy. Least of all was there the slightest hint that it had any relation whatever to the mechanism then constructing at High Rock. No one connected with that enterprise was present, and nothing was known of this declaration by them until it was recalled by the events which subsequently transpired.

2. Previous to this Mrs. — had for some time experienced certain sensations and agonies to those attendant upon gestation. Subsequently these indications gradually increased, until they at length became very marked and inexplicable, and presented to me very singular characteristics. They were supposed, however, to be at least partially indicative of disease; but were not imagined to have the remotest connection with either the mechanism at High Rock, or with the prophecy which has been alluded to. As the crisis approached, a variety of singular events, from apparently indefensible causes, (which cannot be related here,) seemed to point to some unusual result, though all failed to give any person cognizant of them the slightest apprehension of the nature of that result.

3. At length a request came through the instrumentality of J. M. Spear, that on a certain day she would visit the tower at High Rock. No one in the flesh—herself least of all—had any conception of the object of this visit. When there however, (suitable preparations having been carefully made by superior directions, though their purposes were incomprehensible,) she began to experience the peculiar and agonizing sensations of parturition—differing somewhat from the ordinary experience, inasmuch as the throes were internal and of the spirit rather than of the physical nature, but nevertheless quite as uncontrollable and not less severe than those pertaining to the latter. This extraordinary physical phenomena continued for about the space of two hours. Its purpose and results were wholly incomprehensible to all but herself; but her own perceptions, clear and distinct, that in these agonizing throes, the most interior and refined elements of her spiritual being were imparted to, and absorbed by the appropriate portions of mechanism—its minerals having been made peculiarly receptive by previous chemical process. This seemed no more absurd or unphilosophical than the well known fact that a gold ring, or any other article worn about the person, becomes impregnated to a degree with spiritual emanations, or that the elements of one's being can be and are imparted to an autograph so fully that the character, capacities, etc., may be psychomized therefrom.

4. The result of this phenomenon was, that indications of life or pulsation became apparent in the mechanism: first, to her own keenly sensitive touch, and soon after to the eyes of all beholders. These pulsations continued to increase, under a process which she was impelled to continue for some weeks, precisely analogous to that of nursing, (for which preparation had previously been made her own organization, while she was in utter ignorance of any such design,) until at times a very marked and surprising motion resulted.

5. At every step in these singular transactions, Mrs. — has been attended by angelic intelligences (whose presence is perceived by her own interior senses) who have from time to time explained the rationale of their proceedings and of her experiences, and unfolded, in various departments of science, philosophy and morals, principles and truths of the highest practical moment to us and to mankind. These teachings have been to a great extent based upon and elucidated by the various experiences connected with that mechanism; and they have been not only profound and comprehensive, intellectually considered, but of the highest, purest and most elevating moral and spiritual character. That these intelligences have infused into her spirit a most beautiful, harmonizing, celestial influence, has been perceived by all who have enjoyed communication with her, and none of these, I feel assured, will hesitate to indorse the admission that "she gets a large influx of superior, saving, harmonizing truths."

In order to a proper estimate of the peculiar experiences thus described, a large class of correlative, physiological and psychological facts, which cannot be even hinted at here, need to be considered by the candid investigator; but the foregoing statements are believed to embrace what is sufficient for the present purpose, namely, the correction of erroneous statements which have gone abroad.

With two or three remarks I conclude.

1. As these experiences were wholly unexpected, and unimagined by the subject of them, until they actually transpired, they could not have been "psychologically produced." Her mind did not act either in conjunction with other minds, or independent of them, to bring about these results. Theories must conform to facts.

2. These experiences were not moulded into the peculiar form they took by any previous religious or theological impressions. Because, first, no impressions of this peculiar character had ever existed; and whatever notions had once been entertained of the miraculous conception of Jesus, had long ago given place to more philosophical conclusions. Secondly, no idea of such results had ever been formed in the mind, and hence there existed nothing which could mould these results.

At the first appearance of these knocking spirits we took the occasion to say that after making a wide allowance for knuckle and toe joint knocking and other species of mere humbug, the rest might be set down to the account of the familiar spirits of the Old Testament and the devils of the New; that the spirits were of the class whom the servants of God are commanded to cast out, and those who deal with them are those whom God says "ye shall not suffer to live."

Among sectarian preachers we find the celebrated Lyman Beecher of the same mind. But generally they have either admitted the divine mission of the spirits, and thus yielded themselves servants to obey them, or denied their existence altogether; thus placing themselves at issue with well proved facts, and indirectly giving the lie to that part of the Bible which records similar events in the olden time.

To all the faithful we say, have nothing to do with the familiar spirits, for "they are the spirits of devils working miracles," that they may deceive many.

"For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: he who now letteth will let until he be taken out of the way: and then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy by the brightness of his coming: Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they receive not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie; that they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." 2d Thess. ii. 7th to 12th inclusive.

During the session of the Legislature last winter, the Hon. Mr. Middlesworth, Representative from Genesee county, introduced a series of measures to abolish all legal forms in proceedings at law, measures quite as radical as were ever practiced in the most barbarous lynch law court.

As he was a Shanghai of good standing, the party were a little anxious to get rid of the measures without taking the responsibility. Instead of referring the subject to the judiciary committee, as they should, a special committee was raised, consisting of Messrs. Middlesworth, Strang, Divine, Reynolds and Brown, and the whole subject referred to them. Some of the measures were so ridiculous that gentlemen rather felt put upon by being placed on the committee.

But this committee was made up of working men, who, with the exception of Middlesworth, knew how to treat any subject in a dignified manner. When their report came, those who expected a laugh at the committee, realized one upon themselves.

Mr. Middlesworth reported back various bills abolishing nearly the whole judiciary system, and all the forms of legal practice.

Messrs. Strang, Divine, Reynolds and Brown, the majority of the same committee, reported adversely to the passage of the bills, as follows:

The undersigned, a majority of the special committee to which was referred a bill to regulate informalities, and also a memorial praying for judicial reform, beg leave to report that we have given to the subjects referred to us that careful and deliberate attention which we feel bound to bestow upon any subject which this honorable body shall see fit to charge us with the responsibility of preparing and recommending for their action, and have not been able to avoid the conclusion that the wisdom which has been developed by the experience of ages, and justified by successful use through long periods of time, is preferable to the new born and untried.

Abler men than we are will be required to tinker up a new judiciary system so far superior to the present as to justify radical changes; and we lack the ambition to inscribe our names on a new code of laws, changing the entire constitution of our courts, and the course of judicial proceedings, so as to dispense with the use of existing legal forms.

Had we such an ambition, we lack the creative power which "spoke and worlds were made," and should despair of accomplishing so great a work, and making this House so well acquainted with it as to induce its adoption in the meagre remains of the poor pittance of forty days allowed to us.

We regard the forms of the law as necessary to the effectual defence of the citizen against injustice, and though isolated cases doubtless occur of wrongs done by the technicality of the law, they are far less numerous than what would grow up in a loose and informal practice.

Care and exactness, in legal forms, are the types of civilization; and the changes which are necessary to keep them up with the advance of mankind are their natural growth, and not the offspring of the heated brain of a new fledged legislator. In the intellectual and the moral, as well as in the physical world, it is slow growth only that is enduring.

Among all the existing codes of law it is questionable whether the oldest is not the best, and though that emanated from a legislator of extraordinary wisdom, and remarkable executive capacity, we do not learn that more than ten sections were enacted in forty days.

Yet we strongly doubt whether ten volumes would dispense with the use of those legal forms of which experience has demonstrated the utility. The absence of formality in legal proceedings indicates a low order of civilization, and the demand for those reforms which dispense with existing technicalities, originates in ignorance, not in wisdom. Lawyers, who do not know how to draw indictments, and Notaries who have failed in an attempt to extend a protest, or certify the acknowledgment of a deed, may discredit legal technicalities, and possibly get a reputation as reformers, which they could not otherwise attain to.

The best thing that could be hoped for, were this Legislature to dispense with legal formalities, is, that whereas now ignorant men are uncertain of legal rights, then the rights themselves would be uncertain. Of this lynch law is an apt illustration, and the next step beyond is mere barbarism.

The memorial referred to us, urges the adoption of the following reforms in the judicial system, which, as a fair sample of informality, we beg leave to state in the exact words of the memorialists:

1st. That technicality of forms in courts of equity be dispensed with.

2d. That all judicial officers, in their respective official capacities, shall be bound by their oath of office, to judge, adjust and settle all matters of difference, both civil and criminal, between the people, as right and equity shall appear from evidence; that the people may have their rights protected, and justice administered in a summary way.

3d. That reasonable bounds be set to the trial of issue in all courts of equity; that no adjournment be allowed after the issue is joined, except by consent of parties, unless it shall appear on a fair showing in open court, on the merits of the case, that equity requires an adjournment, and that from and after six months joining issue, either party may force the issue to trial by giving security for any subsequent damages that may be made to appear from his opponent's plea of not being ready.

4th. That measures be taken to secure to every individual the right of trial by jury, and also the benefit of a jury's decision, which can only be done by making a jury the supreme tribunal of all cases over which it may have jurisdiction, and that the qualifications of jurors be defined as to sanity, temperance and morals, and when a jury is organized, they shall be judges of equity, law and evidence, and that a two-thirds majority shall be sufficient to render a verdict.

5th. That a justice's court shall have jurisdiction of all matters of difference between the people, civil and criminal, with but few exceptions; and in lieu of appeals, on a proper showing, let it be the duty of the court to grant a rehearing, with the privilege of a jury from another town or county, as the case in equity requires.

6th. That all costs shall be paid by the parties as it shall seem equity may demand, in the trial of civil causes, and that the property of both parties shall be held for the event of the cause, from the issuing of process, but that either party may release his property by giving ample security.

7th. That when trial has been had and a judgment rendered according to law, it shall be evidence of a settlement of all civil demands, both trespass and trespass on the case, between the parties.

8th. That any person or persons, after having made a reasonable demand for a debt arising from service of common labor, shall be entitled to a reasonable compensation for all his time necessarily spent in prosecuting his claim.

9th. That each town be invested with corporate powers to elect a vigilance committee for the protection against criminal offences of the higher order, as theft, robbery, murder, &c.

Without doubt, there are friends of these reforms in the House, otherwise the subject would not have been pressed upon the consideration of this House, and a special committee raised on it. But as it is not right to put a banding to nurse among its enemies, we recommend the reference of the whole subject of Judicial Reform to a committee of the whole of its friends, and ask to be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

JAS. J. STRANG,
J. DIVINE,
ASA REYNOLDS,
GEORGE BROWN.

Both of which reports were accepted, the committee discharged, and the whole subject matter indefinitely postponed.

This was supposed to be the end of the matter. But there was really so much anxiety to tinker up the system of legal practice, that Judge Tiffany, chairman of the judiciary committee, introduced a bill concerning indictments, which was finally passed for the benefit of ignorant lawyers, which goes far to deprive an honest man, falsely accused, of his defence.

It will be remembered that our Representative in the late House of Representatives, Hon. J. J. Strang, after advocating the passage of a prohibitory liquor law, and assisting with industry and zeal in perfecting the bill, and making an unsuccessful motion to strike out the seizure clauses, voted against the bill on its final passage. Malicious persons charged him with inconsistency, though in Lansing it was well known that he did so solely on constitutional grounds, holding the seizure clauses unconstitutional. So holding, to vote for the bill would be a violation of his oath of office.

The New York liquor law has a similar clause, and on that the opinions of the ablest lawyers and judges of the State all concur that it is unconstitutional. In this State the point now seems to be yielded. Mr. Strang always advocated the suppression of the liquor traffic by just means, not by harsh and violent measures.

ROBBERY AT MACKINAC.

We learn by a gentleman from Keokuck, who had been inveigled into going to Mackinac on his way here, that there were three Mormons there in the same predicament, who had been robbed of nearly all they possessed, in so open a manner that it was notorious in the streets, and winked at by the officers of justice. They had not enough left to sustain them while going to law for redress, or to decently get away, and it is impossible to conjecture what wrong may yet be in store for them. It does not seem as though such things could go on forever, without being meted out with some terrible act of vengeance.

We cannot comprehend the infatuation which encourages such open wrongs. The people of Mackinac cannot be ignorant of the fact that they exist by the forbearance of the injured, and that if these wrongs were retaliated upon them, they would be wiped off from the face of the earth. It is not because the Mormons lack either the power or the courage to avenge their wrongs, but because they respect the sovereignty of legal government and the public administration of justice by the courts, that Mackinac is not as desolate as its prototype on the south side of the Straits.

THE COMPROMISE.

In a recent number we showed that the organization of Emmet county, under the act of 1853, was the result of a compromise agreed upon with great unanimity by all parties, to make Emmet county the home of the Mormons, and thus avoid the disagreeable occurrences which have several times grown up, where others were mixed up with them.

This compromise was last winter ruthlessly broken, for the purpose of limiting the Mormons to a much less territory, and a new county called Manitowish erected for the Mormons, consisting of the Beaver, Fox and Manitowish Islands, and the purpose was openly avowed in the House of Representatives to prevent the Mormons settling Emmet, and confining them to Manitowish.

Our readers already have the result, so far as Emmet is concerned. But another unlooked for consequence is likely to grow out of it. A project is now on foot to make a large settlement in Antrim county, and thus extend the Mormon border twenty-four miles up Grand Traverse Bay. As Otsego and Montmorency lay behind, and are only accessible in that direction, the consequence can easily be guessed. The Mormons will never again agree to limit themselves to the old boundary. Hereafter the word is onward.

A petition was extensively signed in Grand Traverse, asking the Legislature to do some act injurious to the Mormons of Emmet; doubtless the first petition ever presented in that body from one county asking local action, affecting another. The impudence of such intermeddling would have been promptly rebuked in any deliberate body less hide bound. With the Shanghai's it weighed more than the unanimous wishes of all who had any interest in the matter. As the people of Grand Traverse are not troubled with any excess of affection for the Mormons, will they not be gratified that by this means they have brought the Mormons twenty-four miles nearer home?

HON. J. A. T. WENDELL.

This gentleman now professed to have undertaken the dismemberment of Emmet reluctantly, and only because petitions crowded in upon him in such numbers that he could not refuse to move in the matter. Notwithstanding the shamelessness with which he resorted to deceit and falsehood to carry the measure, he has had the hardihood to try to persuade Mormons that he acted without malice, and contrary to his own inclination.

There are a few facts which sadly deface this mild portrait Mr. Wendell has drawn of himself. 1st. In Lansing he represented that the population of the east shore were so hostile to the Mormons that unless placed in a separate jurisdiction, there would be bloodshed before another summer (the present) ended. Whereas, in fact, they were so far from being hostile that his utmost efforts failed to get any of them to vote against Mormons to rule over them. 2d. He presented a petition drawn up by himself, and signed by nearly all the Indians about Little Traverse, asking to have the seat of justice on Little Traverse instead of at Saint James, which the Indians say he translated falsely, and insist that as translated to them at the time of signing it only asked that each of their villages be organized as a township, and that that was all they wanted, and quite as much as they could undertake in the affairs of government. 3d. The citizens of Cheboygan sent to Mr. Strang by the hand of Mr. Wendell a petition for the location of their county seat at Cheboygan River, which Mr. Wendell never delivered, but cut the names off and attached them to a petition for the dismemberment of Emmet.

If these facts are not enough we have a few more of the same kind. When such a man is just staggering under mercantile bankruptcy, wouldn't it be clever to have a good fat office to fall back on?

Arbor Croche, June 13, '55.

EDITORS ISLANDER:—The canvass for county officers, under the act to re-organize the county of Emmet, took place to-day, having been adjourned one day to wait for returns from some of the towns not represented. The following officers were elected without opposition: Sheriff, Samuel Chambers; Clerk and Register, George

T. Preston; Treasurer, Medad Thompson; Judge of Probate, Jackson Porter; Circuit Court Commissioner, B. Young. I do not recollect the other names.

As the act to re-organize the county was confessedly passed to legislate the officers elected last fall out of office, because they were Mormons, it is worthy of remark that in this list all but two are Mormons. Porter is a Presbyterian, and Thompson a non-professor. But the entire ticket was made up by the leading Mormons, and elected without opposition. I am assured by gentlemen from all parts of the county that the utmost show which could have been made in opposition to the Mormons, would not have exceeded seven votes in the entire county.

The Indians, who begin to take some little interest in such affairs, had been instructed from Mackinac that the Hon. J. A. T. Wendell had the organization of the county, and that the Mormons could have nothing to do with it, and were a little surprised that an election was had without his being present to superintend it, but were gratified with the result. They all consider the Mormons their best friends, as they have good reason to.

It seems to be conceded here that the old officers elected last fall can hold on till the end of their terms, if they see fit to do so. But as the malice of those who passed the act by which they were superseded is defeated by the result of the election, it is thought here they will acquiesce. Offices, we presume, are not sought there for profit, but accepted for the public service.

Glad with you that the matter has resulted so well, I am, sirs, yours truly, SAGO.

We have been annoyed beyond measure at the persistence with which Mormons are accused through the public press with lasciviousness, and giving loose rein to carnal lusts. Perhaps we ought to regard these things less. It is not to be expected that christian men should think better of us than themselves. If they avail themselves of every opportunity to commit sin, why should they believe that we, of whom they know less, resist temptation and flee from evil doing? And when they find their own clergymen clothed with adultery as with a garment, why should they exempt Mormon preachers from the same reproach?

We were led to these reflections by the multitude of cases of clerical villainy, constantly paraded through papers published by christian men. In our exchanges bro't by a single mail, we find the following:

ELOPEMENT.—We understand, from good authority, that a Mrs. Potts, wife of a highly respectable citizen of Henry county, has left the bed and board of her husband for parts unknown, with a Mr. Ausbrook, a reverend gentleman. Ausbrook had been preaching in that vicinity, and boarding at Potts' house for several months previous to the elopement.—Dresden (Tenn.) Flag.

This is the sixth instance that has come under our notice during the last four weeks of clergymen running off with other persons' wives.—Free Press.

A WOMAN IN IT.—Rev. Mr. Yates, late President of a College at Lebanon, Illinois, disappeared a few weeks since most mysteriously. Previous to his departure he wrote a letter to a friend, requesting that no search should be made for him, as he had become disgusted with life, and was determined on destroying himself by drowning. Recent developments, however, seem to indicate that his disappearance is not so suicidal in its character as at first supposed. A woman is in the case.—Ex.

CLERICAL SCOUNDRELS.—A clerical gentleman, of Silk-en address, on Thursday last disappeared with the wife of a gentleman residing on South Creek. The "gay Lothario," in clerical orders, some two or three weeks since, being called to the neighborhood of South Creek, was invited home by the gentleman. He pretended to be unwell, and stayed some days at the house. He then took a brief trip abroad, lectured on temperance, and returned to the house of his hospitable friend, quite sick—so much so, indeed, as to be closely confined to the house. He was a guest for some three or four days, when, on Thursday, the 10th, his host, having some business to transact in Pennsylvania, left home, not suspecting anything amiss. Hardly had he gone when the clerical scoundrel suddenly recovered his health. His carriage was got out, and the unfaithful wife, packing up her things and some of her husband's, had them conveyed to the carriage, and with her sanctimonious paragon took her seat, and bade adieu to a pleasant home and her two children, her innocence and peace of mind, to link her destiny to shame and the vilest rascal that ever the sun shone upon.—Elmira (N. Y.) Republican, 18th.

Through a friend from Troy, we hear a strange, yet true, piece of gossip. Rev. Mr. Chase, of Brunswick—a small village adjacent to Troy—has run away with another man's wife, a newly married woman, and but eighteen years of age, whereas the monster is over fifty, and has a wife and ten children.—Albany Argus, 21st.

TOTAL DEPRAVITY.—A wolf in sheep's clothing, named John Howard Wilson, has been officiating as a preacher for some time at Chevoit, Ohio. During his ministry he particularly cultivated the acquaintance of eleven young ladies, and engaged to marry all of them. Two of the ladies meeting in a store in Cincinnati where each had gone to purchase her bridal arrangement. From the similarity of their purchases an explanation seemed necessary, and it turned out they were both preparing to marry the same man. The disconsolate damsels returned without their purchases to the quiet village, where they speedily proclaimed the villany of the rascally pastor, who getting wind that all was discovered, made tracks between days during the past week.

One of his finances was swindled out of fifty dollars.—Ex.

A very pretentiously pious rascal by the name of Charles S. Brown, indicted in Livingston county, N. Y., for perjury, and held to bail in $2,500, has been figuring extensively in Indiana, under assumed names, as pastor of three or four churches, finally marrying a respectable lady, and at last returning to New York on a requisition from the Governor, to tenant Auburn prison.—Clev. Herald.

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.

The following communication from the Superintendent of Public Instruction, we publish for the benefit of Teachers of Primary Schools, who may desire an appointment to this Institution. It will be seen that each Representative in the State Legislature is authorized to appoint two Normal Pupils. Teachers who desire this appointment, would do well to make early application to the Representative:

OFFICE OF THE SUP. OF PUBLIC INSTRU'N, AND SEC'Y OF BOARD OF EDUC'N,
Lansing, February 6, 1855.

HON. CYRUS LOVELL,

Speaker of the House of Representatives:—
SIR:—The tenth section of "an act to consolidate and amend the laws relative to the establishment of a State Normal School," approved March 25th, 1850, provides that each county shall be entitled to send pupils to said School, in the ratio of the Representatives in the State Legislature, to which it may be entitled, not to exceed such number as the Board of Education may prescribe.

The Board of Education have placed on record a resolution, authorizing each Representative to appoint two Normal Pupils, (the Board recommending that when practicable, there be one of each sex,) who upon the written recommendation of said Representative, will be entitled to all the rights and privileges of students in the Normal School, without charge for tuition.

The next academic year of the Normal School, will commence on Tuesday, the 13th of March, and in order to enable the counties generally, of the State, to share equitably in the privileges and benefits of this Institution, to the end that its benign, healthful and invigorating influence, in elevating and improving the schools generally, of the State, may be felt as speedily as practicable, it is respectfully recommended that the Representatives, at their earliest convenience, and before the beginning of the academic year, do make these appointments, and notify the Secretary of the Board, of the names and residence of appointees.

Very respectfully,
IRA MAYHEW,
Superintendent of Public Instruction, and Ex-officio Sec'y of the Board of Education.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The General Conference will be held at Saint James the 7th, 8th, 9th and 10 July next; at which solemn sacrifices and thanksgiving will be offered to Almighty God, who has been pleased to give us the Kingdom. There will also be a Conference at Holy Island; Lake Mormon, the 15th July next, to return thanks to Almighty God for averting the calamities of civil war, with which we were recently threatened, and giving us a peaceful deliverance from the machinations of powerful foes.

At these Conferences public discourses will be delivered on the covenants with Abraham, the sonship and messiahship of Jesus, the royal line of David, and the everlasting kingdom of God on earth, the gospel of the resurrection, the salvation of the dead, and the everlasting life of the saints.

Payments for the Islander.

John Raymond, $1.00 to No. 87. George W. Gregg, $2.00 to 104. John S. Comstock, $2.00 to 108. Ebeneter Barnum, $2.00 to 107. Dennis Conrad, $2.00 to 105. Jesse Seely, $1.00 to 91. George Northup, $1.00 to 89.

F. JOHNSON & CO.

Have purchased and are continuing to purchase, for cash, a full assortment of fresh goods, by which they are enabled to sell at BUFFALO and DETROIT Prices.

DRY GOODS.

Calicoes, of various patterns.
Mous de Lains and Bareges.
Lawn, Shawls, &c.
A new supply of Bonnets, of handsome finish.
Book and Barred Muslins.
Groceries and Fishing Tackle, and various other stores.
Stoves of the most approved pattern and material, for sale.
68aa.

CITY STORE, SAINT JAMES.

ONE DOOR NORTH OF THE DOCK, WATER ST.
J. M. WAIT has just opened a large assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Tin ware, Hardware, Cutlery, Iron, Nails, Nail-ropes, Glass, Ready Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, also a full supply of Fishermen's Tackle. Thankful for past patronage, I hope to merit a liberal share in the future, by selling cheaper than the cheapest for ready pay; cash not refused.

Saint James, June 19th, 1855. 70

TO MINING COMPANIES.

Johnston's Detroit City Directory—
AND ADVERTISING GAZETTEER OF MICHIGAN,
FOR 1855-6.

To contain general directory of all the House-holders and other citizens of Detroit, to be enumerated in May next. Nominal List of State and City Executive and Legislative Bodies. Judges and other State and County Judicial and Executive Functionaries, Statistical Reports, the Census of each County, City, Town, and Post Village in Michigan; List of all the Mines in the State, with Statistics, where supplied; A New Ornamental Map of Detroit; Almanac for 1855-6; Tables of Routes and Distances; of Interest, of Foreign Coins and Currency; Shipping List; Steamboat and Railway Intelligence, with many other useful particulars, too numerous to mention here. Size, imperial 8vo., about 350 pages, good paper, neatly bound. Price, ten shillings, except the quantity to be gratuitously distributed.

The style of the Directory of 1854-5 will be improved for 1855-6. Cards neatly arranged on the pages. Half pages and pages of advertisements will be printed on colored paper, paged and compiled together with extra display.

In the Advertisers Key, will be classified, as usual, the several Advertisements. The work will be prepared essentially with a view to subserve the interests of the advertiser and the general interests of Michigan.

2000 copies of the last Directory were printed, and 1000 gratuitously and widely distributed to benefit the City and State, and the Cards of Advertisers were carried by the work into hands they never, otherwise perhaps, would have reached.

The Directory in preparation, will be ready about the close of June next. I trust the support I may continue to receive will enable me to print for 1855-6.

THREE THOUSAND COPIES.

If so, I shall devote 1500 copies to gratuitous circulation throughout the Union. A copy shall be kept hung up for reference in each Hotel and Post Office in the State, and a number of copies shall be forwarded to Europe.

As usual, the Cards of benevolent Societies, whether in Detroit or throughout the State, inserted free. Trustees of Colleges and all similar Institutions, should avail themselves of the opportunity this permanent medium presents of giving extensive notoriety to such establishments.

Manufacturers and owners of Patent Rights in Michigan or elsewhere, may give remunerative publicity to their business at trifling cost. The compiler, at a mere nominal charge, invites for publication the Cards of Attorneys, Collectors, Land Agents, &c., from each City and Village in the State.

The work will be so prepared in exhibiting the unsurpassed resources of Michigan, that it shall prove a highly important aid to increase the population by immigration from less favored States.

The Directory has local claims to patronizing support, and its utility is indisputable. No effort shall be left unemployed to deserve the continuance of a generous encouragement. For past aid, friends will please accept my acknowledgments, and remember the high prices of paper, and the large quantity to be used in the work, as well as the great expense of the clerical and printing labor to be expended upon it, will assist me to do better in the pending effort.

JAMES DALE JOHNSTON,
Compiler Detroit Directory, &c.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED.

The promised work—Europe and the Allies of the past and to-day.

A complete history of the war in the east, 492 pages, fine united engravings; portraits of Potentates and Generals; Map of the Crimea; Sevastopol and fortifications; being a summary of historical events from the time of Napoleon 1st to the present day. Price—$1.25.—
For sale by all the booksellers.

Agents will find a new opportunity to make money by the sale of this and other works of every merit, by applying to the publishers, E. LIVERMORE,
No. 39, Beekman St., [New York].
Also 10,000 copies printed of an abridgement of the above work, illustrated paper cover, 174 pages, previously illustrated 50c.—
The above books will be sent, post paid, on receipt of the price.

The committee on Indian Affairs have had under consideration the present condition and the future prospects of the Indians of Michigan, and in connection therewith their relation to the State, and the various means resorted to for their civilization and improvement, and beg leave to make the following report:

Under the provisions of the revised constitution, "every civilized male inhabitant of Indian descent, a native of the United States, and not a member of any tribe," is an elector.

No rule has been established by which to ascertain who are members of tribes. The Indian customs in that respect are partially lost. If any standard has been recognized, it is this, that such as claimed a share in the annuities derived under treaties with the United States were members of tribes, and no others. This leaves the question to be decided by the will of the individual interested.

So there is no standard of civilization, by which to determine who are entitled to the elective franchise. In some parts of the State those only are regarded as civilized who have an English education, and are principally employed in professional, agricultural or mechanical labors. In others, the vices of the whites are satisfactory badges of civilization.

The number of Indians in the State, civilized and not members of any tribe, is not known, nor is it possible to make an approximate estimate of their number.—There must be several thousand scattered through the State, including those of mixed blood, being half Indian.

Of the various tribes and bands in the State, receiving annuities from the United States, the number is as follows:

Chippewas,	5,967
Ottawas,	1,237
Pottowatomies,	266

Total,

7,470
These Indians have congeneric languages, sufficiently like to be taught by the same grammar, and requiring but slight variations in the dictionaries; they scarcely require different books, the difference being rather in the spoken than written languages.

A considerable number of books have been published in the Chippewa language, most of which are religious works; Baraga's Grammar and Dictionary of the Chippewa language are works of rare excellence.

But there is little prospect of the number of works in these languages ever being materially increased. The numberspeaking the language is so small, and the proportion of persons of literary taste so limited, that the sales of a book can never justify its publication in the language.

Missionaries have introduced books among them, as the necessary means of religious instruction. But circumstances favorable to their civilization, make the English language necessary to them; and once educated in that, its wider literary range must render their native language of little practical value.

At present a large proportion, probably one-half the Indians in the State, have some education, either in their own or the English language; but with few exceptions, their attainments are very limited.

Missionaries, merchants and soldiers have been among the Indians of Michigan more than two hundred years. In the work of christianizing the Indians and introducing letters among them, devoted piety, talent of the highest order, combined with rare enterprise and energy, immense treasures, and the powerful support of government, have been put in requisition during most of that long period, and the advance made by the Indian towards the higher order of civilization is less than philanthropists reasonably expected in a single generation.

There is an opinion prevailing, and strongly supported by history and by existing monuments, that during the latter half of the seventeenth century the Indians about the Straits of Michilimackinac and Little Traverse Bay were in civilization far in advance of those now in that part of the State, though they have been the objects of the solicitous care of philanthropists and christian missionaries from that time to the present.

It is at least probable that the efforts of the imperial government of Russia are raising the forty millions of serfs of that empire in the scale of civilization faster than the entire philanthropy of the United States has been able to elevate the small remnants of the Indian race among us.

This result should not be attributed to any want of capacity of the Indian for civilization. Elevation in the scale of intellectual humanity, if indigenous, is the slow growth of necessity, developed during long periods of peace and settled life.

As the American policy has ever been to remove the savage from the presence of the white man to new hunting grounds, they have ever been forced back from what little advance they had made, to their original barbarism. So true is this, that the educated whites, raised to all the advantages and all the toils of the higher order of civilization, who have located themselves with the Indians, have, in a majority of cases, relapsed into the same state of barbarism with the savage tribes.

With game abundant, and land free to whoever pleased to settle on it, without the possibility of obtaining an inheritable title, or a right transmissible to posterity, it is doubtful whether any people would not relapse to barbarism.

The earliest missionaries among the Indians of this State taught them christianity, and the rudiments of letters. They introduced among them a system of agriculture, little inferior to that prevailing in France at the time, and such of the mechanic arts as were necessary in their infant civilization.

They failed to give them any permanent inheritable title to the lands they cultivated, or any such interest in the affairs of the State as to compel them to learn the science of government. They conducted the affairs of the several bands as if they were so many children of an affectionate and benevolent father.

Thus there was only an individual advance, not a national; the next generation began at the same point with the preceding, and left off with it. They gained nothing by experience, and the moment national wars broke up the mission system, they fell back on their original barbarism with diminished ability of self-sustenance.

The later system of introducing Indian children into boarding schools, giving them a good English education, and teaching the boys agriculture and the mechanic arts, and the girls domestic economy, and such arts as are adapted to female labor, probably would have succeeded to some extent, but for the prejudice of race.

This prejudice forbids their intermixing and intermarrying with the whites, or at the best, denies them an equality in society. Timid and sensitive as they usually are, they are thus driven back to the society of the uncivilized Indian, where their education is of no avail, and where they find themselves inferior to those who were raised to savage life.

Females, of this class have been, to a great extent, the prey of white adventurers, who have been temporarily domiciled among the Indians, and obtained them as wives during their stay, and abandoned them and their children at pleasure.

The men of this class, finding no congenial employment among the whites, have in very few instances, been able to make their education advantageous to them among the Indians, and still less to confer any advantages upon the tribes to which they belong'd.

The annuity system has been still more unfortunate, because it fosters the indolence which must be overcome, to civilize the Indian. The expectation of the annuity prevents the Indian making provision for himself, and the expense of attending to receive it is generally more than it amounts to.

The Indians in this State have been in contact with the whites such a length of time, that the vices which civilization carries with it to the barbarian have had their effect, and the present tendency is to recuperate. The shock is past, and the evil must be less in future.

Their hunting has generally failed, and the slow advance of the white settlements around those of the Indians, render the necessity of fixed modes of life every year more pressing.

If they can now have permanent homes, and an individual title to the soil, inalienable for the time, but inheritable, and in pursuance of the wise provisions of our constitution, take upon themselves a share in the government, there is every prospect that they will escape what seems to be their fate—extermination—and increase in numbers and usefulness.

To this end it is necessary to obtain reservations for them in compact bodies, and divide off individual farms to such as will occupy them, and upon their abandoning their tribal organizations, extend to them all the rights, privileges and immunities of citizens, (except for a time the power to alien their estate.)

With the assistance of a few benevolent whites, several of the bands would now be able to organize townships, and to carry on the affairs of the government, if the malign influence of unprincipled traders could be counteracted; and at the worst, that would not be of long continuance.

These locations should be selected with care with reference to the influence of surrounding society, and to their ability to subsist themselves, during the remaining period of the transition state.

Such locations, in most cases, are now occupied by the Indians. Little change is desirable in this respect, except to diminish the number of locations, by doubling up the smaller bands.

The co-operation of the State and National Government is necessary to the consummation of this object; and happily, the views of the National Government are coincident with those here expressed, and measures are in progress to the consummation of so desirable a work.

A treaty has already been negotiated and ratified for the settlement of the Indians at and near L'Anse Bay, on a permanent reservation; and should the State concur in this policy, similar treaties will probably be negotiated with all the bands remaining in the State, the present year.

The committee concur in recommending this policy as the only means of preserving a remnant of this once powerful race, and as the happy means of populating a portion of our State lying waste, and increasing the number without diminishing the happiness of the people.

In prosecuting their labors the committee have addressed circulars to numerous intelligent gentlemen, acquainted with Indian affairs, a copy of which, with a few of the replies, are annexed, and made a part of this report.

JAMES J. STRANG,
D. N. MONTAGUE,
HENRY C. ASHMUN.

THE COMING INDIAN WAR.

Preparations are being made, upon a scale as nearly great as anything this administration can do approaches it, for the prosecution of a war against the Indian tribes west of the Mississippi, and we shall soon hear of the concentration of forces at frontier points, in readiness for the forward movement.—Before the final order to march shall be given, and the step have been taken, from which there is no retreat, let us look at the subject from another point of view than that taken by the belligerent Secretary of War, and with eyes less reddened and angry, try to discover if there be not some little relief for the hard picture which Washington legislators and army executives paint of the poor redskin.

The war of extermination denounced against the prairie tribes has been forced upon us, say its advocates, by the treachery and cruelty of the Indians. We deny this, and appeal to facts to sustain us.—Since the emigration to California commenced, the bands of nomades who inhabit the vast buffalo range have found their supplies of food gradually diminishing, and have been forced to appeal to the whites for partial relief from starvation. They have frequently, even when denied the pitiful alms they asked, preferred to steal a cow or a horse, and not to die, for the want of meat. This is no crime among Indians, although the refusal of hospitality is, and they are only carrying out a law of their being, which requires them to eat, by means of an observance of their imperfect social organization, which permits them to steal rather than not to eat. But they would always rather eat the food of hospitality than that of theft, if they could obtain it. How terrible have they found the retaliation, as compared with the original wrong. They have been slaughtered, tortured, scalped, by men professing a high religious superiority, and claiming a more refined civilization. This has gone on for six years, and until the whole Indian country is excited to fury against the emigrants. They appeal to government, represent the wrongs done them, acknowledge, frankly, the sins they have committed, and ask first for food, then for protection promising, and with earnest faith, to keep their hands from shedding white blood.

They receive all manner of governmental pledges, and for a time are quiet. But they cannot understand why their "Great Father," who has so much money and such great houses and big canoes, and who burns so much powder and shows so much hunting, why he cannot send them corn and cattle at once, instead of waiting until some future time; and so, after patiently starving for another few months, hunger drives them to steal another cow or more horses, and retaliation, sur-retaliation, murders, scalplings and cruelties ensue. Then the treaty is broken, the Indians have not kept the faith, and have forfeited all right to the corn and cattle, which are never sent. So the poor Indians again resort to their only refuge from death by starvation, and rob the emigrants, whom they have now come to consider their natural enemies.

Thus it is constantly. Witness the Fort Laramie massacre, the proximate cause of the coming horrors. A lame cow, which could not have proceeded another step, was butchered by some Indians—under what circumstances? Why, the bands had come in, to the number of thousands of individuals, men, women and children, and were encamped about the Fort, waiting for their annuities, and actually without food, during several days, while they well knew the money and supplies were within the walls of the Fort. They were not angels, nor yet cherubims; they had stomachs, and so had their children, who were crying for food, and a lame cow, of no use to any one, turned adrift upon a prairie, was an enticing piece of property. They killed it, ate it, offered to pay for it, refused to give up the father of a family, who had butchered it, but told the officer to come and take him, and they would offer no resistance.

What did that officer do? He sent another and a younger officer, just out of West Point, and possessed of a constitutional dread of Indians, to negotiate—not with the white flag and clean hands, but with fixed bayonets, and spherical-case-shot. This diplomatic youth asked for the cow-stealer, and received for reply, "there he is; take him!" This was too much for the great country's dignity, which that inexperienced and nervous young officer supposed to be concentrated in him, and he ordered his men to fire. What came of it then, we know. What is hereafter to result from that foolish order, God alone can foresee.

The Law of Kindness has never been tried upon the Indians. With them, our rule of action has ever been the bullet, the sword, and the torch. Slaughter the men, outrage the women, burn the cabins, trample the corn-fields. We have forfeited our plight of faith with them, as we never dare do with France or England; we have stolen their lands, retained their annuities, lied to them, cheated them, sent drunken, incompetent, and roguish agents to carry out the laws of our country, among a people who know no law save that of common observance; and when they have failed in any regard, no matter how slight, to fulfill the rigid demands of their "Great Father," they have been bayoneted, sabred, scalped and roasted by thousands.

Their blood appeals to Heaven for revenge. On this country shall one day surely fall a retribution as terrible as it shall be just. With the amplest opportunity for kindness, and impelled to its exercise by every consideration of justice and magnanimity, we have ignored the thought of leniency, and enacted a part more cruel than the bloodiest savage could have imagined, because we sin against effulgent light. The only Indian victim of the Laramie massacre was a friend to the whites, an old, gray-haired man, whose hand had never been raised toward an American, save to offer food or succor. He fell at the word, "Fire." How many more like souls are to follow his to the happy hunting-grounds, time alone can show—probably scores. And when the "retaliation" shall have been complete, and the agents of it, leaning upon their dripping blades, and casting their eyes over the broad domain, strewn with bleeding corpses and dotted with smoking villages, shall felicitate themselves upon the havoc they have caused, perhaps the history of a previous "relation" may recur to the memory of some one among them, and he may drop a tear as he reads the heart-broken exclamation of the lone old chief, "Who is there to mourn for LOGAN? Not one!"—Dem.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 4.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JULY 5, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 71.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to Cooper & Chidester, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

A great anxiety was felt in the late Shanghai Legislature to unseat Mr. Strang. So far was this feeling allowed to prevail, that it was resolved in caucus of the Fusionists to send for Mr. Lay, who had about half as many votes as Mr. Strang, to come and contest his seat. We are informed by a very respectable member who was present, that the caucus determined to assume that Mr. Lay was duly elected, and give him Mr. Strang's place, "without wasting time on it," in other words, to judge the cause against Mr. Strang without evidence, and refuse to receive it. The opportune appearance of the following article in the State Journal, shamed them out of the measure:

Representative from Newaygo.—The Detroit Tribune—Grand River Eagle, and Mr. Strang.

The Grand River Eagle, of Dec. 16, copies from the Tribune an editorial, in a style of language which we shall not repeat, saying in substance that Mr. Lay will contest the seat of Mr. Strang, as Representative from the Newaygo district, on the ground that Mr. Strang did not receive more than 250 legal votes; whereas, Mr. Lay had 367 votes, the legality of which the Tribune does not question.

The Tribune anticipates a difficulty in a successful contest, because "the saints are all prepared to swear to whatever may be required in the premises, and an investigation of the matter would involve the necessity of taking a census of the legal votes on the Island."

The Eagle replies, that the Tribune has mistaken Mr. Lay's position, and says, that the question does not depend at all upon what the saints may swear to, but upon the question whether the Beaver Islands are included in the Newaygo district; and to show that they are not, misquotes the revised Constitution, Article XIX., Sec. 1.

An examination of the facts, shows the allegations and insinuations against Mr. Strang in these two articles, to be as thoroughly malicious and utterly unfounded as anything ever spoken or written against an honorable man.

The county of Emmet, by the census of last May, on file in the office of the Secretary of the State, contained a population of 4,971; and in November, cast 695 votes, all for Mr. Strang, being something less than one vote to seven inhabitants.

By the same census, Grand Traverse county contained a population of 911, and at the same election it gave 373 votes, all but six of which were for Mr. Lay, being within the merest fraction of two votes to every five inhabitants.

To have voted in the same proportion as was done in Grand Traverse, the vote of Emmet should have been 1,922, or 1,227 larger than it was. If it is a reasonable conclusion that the population of Emmet affords but 250 legal voters, it is equally reasonable that the population of Grand Traverse affords but 46, unless the Tribune means to be understood that the "saints" residing in Emmet county are not legal voters. Therefore, unless the citizens of Emmet county are disfranchised without law, for worshipping God according to the dictates of their own conscience, the presumption is just as strong that Mr. Lay received but 46 legal votes as it is that Mr. Strang received but 250.

The vote of the State at large, on Governor, was 82,366, in a population of 592,668, being a fraction less than one vote to six persons; whereas, the vote of Emmet county is less than one to seven persons, or about 100 votes less than it should have been in proportion to the State at large.

The Grand River Eagle excuses Mr. Lay

from making this issue, but in putting this contest upon constitutional grounds, leaves his case quite as hopeless.

By the revised Constitution, Article XIX., Sec. 1, "the counties of Mackinac, Chippewa, Delta, Marquette, Schoolcraft, Houghton and Ontonagon, (being the entire Upper Peninsula in this State,) and the Islands and territory thereto attached, the Islands of Lake Superior, Huron and Michigan, and in Green Bay, the Straits of Mackinac and the River St. Marie," were constituted a separate judicial district; and by Sec. 4 some special provisions were made for the representation of that district, under which the Eagle claims that the votes given for Mr. Strang are illegal, or Mr. Strang ineligible.

Unfortunately for the argument of the Eagle upon this question, Mr. Strang and Mr. Lay are situated precisely alike. Both reside, and both received all their votes, in "the Islands and territory attached" to the Upper Peninsula, at the time of the adoption of the revised constitution.

By the "act to lay off and define the boundaries of certain counties," passed April 1, 1850, Sec. 35, the entire territory now included in the organized counties of Emmet, Cheboygan and Grand Traverse, and the ten unorganized counties attached to Cheboygan, and six unorganized counties attached to Grand Traverse, (being all the State north of township twenty,) were attached to Mackinac, and they remained so attached until after the adoption of the revised constitution.

Within these bounds Mr. Strang received every vote in Emmet county, and every vote but one in Cheboygan and the ten unorganized counties attached; and Mr. Lay received every vote but six in the county of Grand Traverse and the six unorganized counties attached, and neither of them received a single vote anywhere else. So if the votes for Mr. Strang are to be rejected because cast within "the Islands and territory" formerly attached to the Upper Peninsula, those for Mr. Lay would have to be rejected for the same reason.

Giving the Eagle the advantage of its misquotation of the constitution, and Mr. Lay's case is not helped in the least. The Eagle claims that "the Islands in Lake Michigan" have something so sacred about them, by virtue of Article XIX. of the revised constitution, that "the Beavers" could by no manner of means get or stay in Emmet county.

This also is a two edged sword, and cuts both ways; for two of the three largest and most populous Islands in Lake Michigan are in the county of Grand Traverse, as now organized. We refer to the North and South Manitou Islands, which contain nearly the entire population of the township of Leelanaw in that county, and Beaver Island contains less than half the population of Emmet county; leaving Emmet more than twice the population of Grand Traverse, without that Island.

The Grand River Eagle admits that this question was decided by the party having control of the last Legislature, in favor of Mr. Strang, in terror of "the wrath of His Majesty the King" of Beaver Island; but says, consolingly, "now the case is different, we have a Legislature which will decide the question according to the merits of the case," and feels sure that Mr. Lay will get the seat.

This question was decided in favor of Mr. Strang in the last Legislature, by a vote of 50 to 11. Of the Democratic members forty-one voted for Mr. Strang, and seven against him; and of the Whig members nine voted for Mr. Strang, and four against him. Perhaps the Grand River Eagle can tell which party it was, "the interest of which would not allow it to provoke the wrath of His Majesty." We have for a long time heard the miserable twattle that the Mormons on Beaver Island did not dare vote only as Strang said; but it was left for the Grand River Eagle to discover that Mr. Strang exercised the same despotism over both parties in the last Legislature.

In private conversations Mr. Strang has frequently been accused of exercising an undue influence over the electors in Emmet, and the near unanimity of the vote is given as the evidence.

If there is any force in the argument, here again the candidates are all in the same boat. Mr. Strang had every vote in Emmet, and every vote but one in Cheboygan; Mr. Lay every vote but six in Grand Traverse; and Mr. Brooks a vote about equally unanimous in Newaygo. If the unanimity of the vote raises the slightest suspicion against Mr. Strang, it does precisely the same against Messrs. Lay and Brooks; and if Mr. Strang's accusers change their position, and attribute the boundless confidence which the whole population of Emmet county have in him to his position as a religious leader, then the unanimous vote given him in Cheboygan, where the citizens are not of his faith, is a noble tribute to his industry, faithfulness and wisdom as a Representative, and his amiability and virtue as a citizen.

Moreover, if the issue which the Eagle says Mr. Lay will make was decided in his favor, it would not give him a seat, but would give it to Mr. Brooks.

If it is a just interpretation of the constitution that "the Islands and territory attached" to the Upper Peninsula cannot be detached, and attached to some other portion of the State for Representative purposes, then it follows that Newaygo district consists of the counties of Newaygo and Oceana, and the unorganized counties of Lake and Mason alone, and in that territory Brooks received nearly every vote; Lay not one.

To Lay such a decision would be a barren one—to Strang it would be equally harmless. For there would then be left the three organized counties of Emmet, Grand Traverse and Cheboygan, and the sixteen unorganized counties attached to them, equal to one-fourth of the State, which the Legislature of 1851, by attempting to put in the wrong district, had failed to district at all.

Under the constitutional right of every part of the State to be represented in proportion to its population, Mr. Strang would still sit as the Representative of these nineteen counties. To deny him this would be to say that the Legislature, without any act whatever, by a simple neglect of duty, a mere nonfeasance, can repeal the constitution and disfranchise the people of any portion of the State.

Stranger still is the case of Mr. Strang.—By the revised constitution, Article IV., Sec. 3, "each county hereafter organized," (that is, organized subsequent to the adoption of the constitution,) "with such territory as shall be thereto attached, shall be entitled to a separate Representative when it has attained a population equal to a moiety of the ratio of representation."

Emmet was organized since that time, and has a moiety, and 1,871 over. It therefore cannot be denied a Representative; and as Mr. Strang has every vote in the county, if he has not a right to sit it is a curious question who has. Could not the Tribune and Eagle contrive some way to get that part of the State represented more according to the wish of its inhabitants?

To have persisted in unseating Mr. Strang without inquiry, after the publication of such an article, would have been fool hardy. The very proportion of votes to population, showed that the Grand Traverse vote would not bear the light. With 373 votes to 911 inhabitants, the blindest could not fail to see that half Mr. Lay's votes must be fraudulent.

The next move of the Fusionists was a resolve in caucus that no bill introduced by Mr. Strang should be allowed to pass. Constituting, as they did, more than a working majority, and aided in these nefarious schemes by Hon. J. A. T. Wendell, of Mackinac, and Hon. T. B. Church, of Grand Rapids, of the Democratic party, there seemed every prospect that they would succeed in punishing those distant counties, which were wrongfully placed in the district represented by Mr. Strang, and had never supported him for being represented by him.

Mr. Strang found means to break through this scandalous resolution, and in the end carried more local measures for the benefit of his district than any other member. It is true that representing a district composed of twenty-three counties, he could not, in face of such difficulties, accomplish every thing desirable. But in these defeats the justice of God did not slumber.

Grand Traverse, which had been instrumental in producing these difficulties, was the greatest sufferer. Bills to enlarge the area and extend the jurisdiction of that county were defeated by this scandalous resolution, invited by them.—Mackinac and Grand Rapids came in for their share of injury. An appropriation of 200,000 acres of State swamp lands for opening a road from the Muskegon river, directly north of Grand Rapids, to Grand Traverse, and thence to Mackinac, was among the measures sacrificed in this mad hostility to an individual. To the Mormons this road would not only be useless, but detrimental. But Mr. Strang urged its construction, because the interest of the whole district and the State demanded it. In this road Mackinac had a greater interest than any other place in the State. Yet Mr. Wendell was the instrument of its defeat. We shall give the history of these things hereafter, for the benefit of our friends in Mackinac and Grand Traverse.

St. James, June 20, 1855.

ARRA SMITH—SIR:—I now sit down to fulfill my promise unto you. You wished to know where I was going to locate. You may discover, as probably most surmised before I embarked, that some Mormon settlement would be the place of my landing.

These brethren on Beaver Island are so much like myself, I am very naturally identified with them. Here we have a leader who does not so much as pretend to lead the people independent of God. He claims to be God's prophet—God's oracle to this generation.—There is not another on the earth at the present time who so pretends.

Brigham Young now stands in the prophet's place only by man, not by God; neither by Joseph, nor by any other save a vote, similar to the manner in which the United States elect a President.—Not only does he (James) claim this calling from God by the ordination of an angel, but also through the appointment of his predecessor, which appointment and successorship make good the prophetic office of both James and Joseph, and also establish the church upon a foundation as immovable as the pillars of heaven.

I suppose by this time you are tired of reading, so I will try to change the subject for your sake. I believe you are a Free Soil man. In this you are with us. Here no man needs to buy land. It is all free. Come and choose for yourself, only do not choose another's improvement, unless you pay for it. God is here beginning to fulfill his word through many prophets spoken concerning giving the earth unto the meek—not selling it, but giving it free, without money or price. Uncle Sam is not so generous to his subjects. But Uncle Sam's time is almost run out. He cannot or will not protect his own citizens from the violence of mobocracy.

I think you had not best be afraid of the saints any longer, but come up and take your portion with them. You think they are terrible non-resistants, I suppose. But the saints are only a terror to evil doers, and a praise to them who do well. Most sectarian Christians think that the saints will never again be as outrageously wicked as old Abraham was in his day, when he proved himself a better warrior than the heathen, and slew five kings in one battle; or David's valiant men, some of whom slew twenty men in one single handed fight, with an ox goad; or the saint David who taught sinners in his due repentance through the use of thons and whips, &c.

Why is it that we non-resistants are so much more righteous than the father of the faithful? or even than angels used to be who came down from heaven to burn up cities, sinners and all? Think this new fangled righteousness is nought but self-righteousness. In Jesus, who was a non-resistant one day, was not so every day most certainly, if the New Testament be true, or the Old one either. Therefore I am certain he will not remain a non-resistant during this, the dispensation of judgment. Neither his saints, for they are co-workers together with him in whatsoever work he chooses to accomplish, whether of mercy or of judgment. Thus when God sent the hornets before Israel to drive out the Canaanites, he sent his people to burn up their cities, and kill off the inhabitants. The God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Jacob is our God, (the saints,) this is his memorial to all generations.

Direct to Saint James, Beaver Island. This is the name of the nearest office. Yours truly, J. S. COMSTOCK.

INFIDEL REFORMERS.

To the shame of the church it must be confessed that the foremost men in all our philanthropic movements, in the interpretation of the spirit of the age, in the practical application of the genuine christianity, in the reformation of abuses in high and low places, in the vindication of the rights of man, and in practically redeeming the wrongs, in the moral and intellectual regeneration of the race, are the so called infidels (?) in our land.

The church has pusillanimously left not only the working oar, but the very reins of salutary reform, in the hands of men she denounces inimical to christianity, and who are practically doing with all their might for humanity's sake, that which the church ought to be doing for Christ's sake; and if they succeed, as succeed they will, in abolishing slavery, banishing rum, restraining licentiousness, reforming abuses and elevating the masses, then the recoil upon christianity will be disastrous in the extreme.

Woe, woe, woe to christianity, when infidels, (?) by force of nature or the tendency of the age, get ahead of the church in morals, and in the practical work of christianity, in some instances, they are already far, far in advance, in the vindication of truth, righteousness and liberty, they are the pioneers, beckoning to a sluggish church to follow.—N. Y. Evangelist.

What a confession!

Archdeacon Jeffreys, a missionary in the East Indies, states that "for one really converted christian, as the fruit of missionary labor, the drinking practice of the English had made one thousand drunkards in India."

Printers' accounts are said to be like faith, "the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen."

* a most magnificent scandal

52

We have before us "The Mormon," Vol. 1, No. 6, a 28 column newspaper, of good mechanical appearance, edited by John Taylor of the Brighamite sect, which, by the way, Mr. Taylor will not send in exchange for the Islander.

The Mormon appears to be principally made up of matter already used in some other paper, issued from the same office, the type of a few columns only being set for that paper. The editorial department is marked with less ability than we expected of John Taylor. We judge from this number only, having seen no other.

The most striking feature of the paper is its pictorial motto head line, six inches wide, and extending across the page. In the centre is an eagle, bearing in his beak a scroll lettered, "The Mormon." Above is an eye, from which light radiates over all, and the motto, "And he said let there be light, and there was light."

On the right is the flag of Utah, or an American flag, with Utah among the stars as a bright light, before which they are as nothing, and the stripes with the words, "Truth will prevail," a very good motto, very much falsified by being credited to H. C. Kimball.

On the left is the flag of the United States, with one of the stars greater than all the rest, we suppose to represent Utah in her due rank among the sister States, and inscribed on the stripes, "Truth, intelligence, virtue and faith united," with the name "J. Taylor" signed as author of the motto.

On the flag of the United States is a scroll containing the following: "Mormon creed—Mind your own business. Brigham Young." We could not but think it a little curious that the Mormon creed should find its resting place in the folds of the American flag, and that "truth, intelligence and faith" should lie down with it, unless they lie down to perish, as Joseph and Hyrum did under that flag.

Last of all, dropped on the folds of the flag of Utah, is another scroll inscribed, "CONSTITUTION OF THE U. S. GIVEN BY INSPIRATION OF GOD. Joseph Smith." In any sense this is a gross slander upon the martyred prophet, and little less than blasphemy of God. Joseph Smith never said any such thing.

The very idea that a constitution, the work of a deliberative assembly of several score members, produced through months of labor, in which it was brought together piece by piece, changed, altered, patched and amended till it was brought into working shape, and to which twelve amendments have since been adopted, was given by inspiration of God is too ridiculous to be talked of. To charge Joseph Smith with saying any such thing, is to impeach him of being an impostor and a trickster.

All that Joseph ever said on the subject amounts to but this, that God raised up wise men, whom he inspired to establish free institutions and religious toleration, to open the way for the preaching the gospel, and the bringing in the dispensation of the fulness of times.

God had already given a law which contains the sum of heavenly wisdom. If we yield that the institution of the United States is given by inspiration of God, we must yield that heavenly wisdom has changed since the days of Moses, just so much as that constitution differs from the two tables.

To one not acquainted with Brighamite tactics, such a combination of flags and mottoes is an explicable mystery. If we are to credit what is here shadowed out, the people of Utah are the most devoted friends of the union and of the existing forms of the American government any where to be found.

We despise such hypocrisy. All Mormons know that the American government refuses them the protection which it promises. All know that moderate men have been obliged to exert their utmost influence to prevent the more excitable from breaking out in some terrible act of vengeance. All, without exception, are looking for the utter overthrow of every vestige of the American constitution, and all the forms of government that pertain to it.

Several of the States have stained their escutcheons with the blood of martyrs, and all, without exception, have, in one way and another, with or without law, denied to Mormons the common rights of citizens. Thus they have heaped up on Mormons of all parties wrongs without number; and every Mormon who pretends that a book of remembrance is not written, in which these wrongs are treasured up against the day of wrath, is foolishly false and bootlessly corrupt. He is attempting to deceive, and will end by being execrated.

Our persecutors would, despise us, if they believed that like calves we would thus lick the hand of the butcher. And if Taylor expects thus to deceive the people of the United States into the idea that the Mormons are attached to the American government, he has reckoned without his host. They know it is not true. And being so assured, they will refuse assent to other assertions, perhaps perfectly true, which he may be interested in establishing. Honesty is the best policy. Speak the truth, though it is unpopular, and brings persecution. Then when falsely accused, your word in self-defence will be of some weight.

The Mormons stand in nearly the same relation to the American government that the primitive Christians did to the Roman. They prayed for the continuance of Pagan Rome, not because it was of God, but because after it came Papacy under the prophetic symbol of "the man of sin, the son of perdition." So Mormons rejoice in the American forms of government, as the breach in the walls of Satan's, through which it is to be successfully invaded and overthrown.

In the wisdom with which God has inspired those that love the truth, they see the machinery in that government which shall not only break itself, but all the nations of the Anglo-Saxon race in pieces, and make room for the peaceable advent of the kingdom of God over much of the earth.

This is not the result of the excellence, but of the innate weakness and corruption of the American forms of government. All the forms of government place virtuous and vicious men on an equality. How much better for Mormons to say that their attachment to the American was measured by the good or ill treatment they received under it, but at the worst they wished it to continue until the time appointed of God for the "saints to possess the kingdom."

CURIOUS COMBINATION.

What will not religious intolerance stoop to? Last winter the Legislature was essentially Know-Nothing. Never has a public body so intolerant assembled together in the State. In their hatred of Romanism a number of laws were passed disqualifying all clergymen from acting as trustees of church property and managing charity funds. These acts are all in violation of the rights of the citizen, and in their passage the whole Protestant clergy are tabooed, and branded as unfit for public trusts; not because the members wished to strike at them, but because they could in no other way work out their malice on the Roman church. They were obliged to make the law general, in order to pass it at all. Moreover, the church property bill strikes at the Methodists and Episcopalians as severe a blow as at the Romanists.

One would think the Protestant clergy who voted for the bill must have felt like a boy in a hen roost, looking for something nasty to chew and spit upon his neighbor's new coat.

Was it not a curious sight to see J. A. T. Wendell, a Roman Catholic and a Jesuit, cheek by jowl with those Know-Nothings crusading against the Mormons? And was it not a pretty sight when all together, against one man, they took nothing by their motion?

COMING TO SAINT JAMES.

We again caution all persons who have business at this place against taking passage for Mackinac. Steamboat runners may tell you that that is the best and usual route, but there is not a word of truth in it.

So far as time and money are concerned, you are nearer this place at Ogdensburg or Chicago than at Mackinac. Any person in Mackinac in a hurry to get to this place at a moderate expense would take the first boat to Detroit, and then a boat from there here. The mail from here to Mackinac goes by way of Detroit.

It is just as easy to get a passage here as to Mackinac. More than twenty boats stop here every trip. Nearly all occasionally. We average to have two a day. And passengers for this place, who have foolishly allowed themselves to be landed at Mackinac, are not sure of getting off without rough treatment.

Burning a Negro at the Stake in Mississippi.

Some time since we published an account of the murder of Miss Thornton, an interesting young girl, residing near Gaston, Alabama. Immediately after the murder and detection of the negro, his immediate punishment was seriously contemplated by the people of Sumpter county; but, after mature deliberation, the law abiding citizens delivered him into the custody of the proper officers, and he was committed to prison.

At the late term of the Circuit Court of Sumpter county, the attorney appointed by the court, in the discharge of his duty, moved for a change of venue to Greene county. The Judge, as the motion was sustained by the affidavit, sustained the application.

On Wednesday last the citizens of South Sumpter assembled, en masse, at Mr. Wm. McElroy's, and unanimously passed a series of resolutions reflecting seriously upon the conduct of the Judge, and after having pledged themselves to sustain each other, a portion of them proceeded to Livingston and took the miserable criminal by force from the jail where he was confined.

On Friday last, after due preparation, they carried him to the spot where he so cruelly murdered his innocent victim, and burnt him alive at the stake.

About three thousand persons were present, who witnessed, with various emotions, the dreadful spectacle. We were present, but hope that we will never again witness a scene like it. The pyre was composed of several cords of light wood, in the centre of which was a green willow stake, selected in consequence of its indestructibility by fire.

On the top of the pile of light wood the criminal was placed, and securely chained to the stake. While in this situation, he confessed his guilt, stating that he had no accomplice—he had cruelly murdered her by beating the poor, innocent creature with a stimp—that while he was doing this, she implored him to carry her home to her father, and that she would conceal the violence inflicted. He then left, but soon returned, and after again beating her, he concealed the body in the very hole that the stake was planted to which he suffered.

After this confession was made, the match was applied, and in a few moments the devouring flames were enveloping the doomed negro. His fearful cries resounded through the air, while the surrounding negroes who witnessed his dreadful agony and horrible contortions, sent up an involuntary howl of horror. His sufferings, though excruciating, were short—in a few minutes the flames had enveloped him entirely, revealing now and then, as they swayed hither and thither, his black and burning carcass, like a demon of the fire, grinning as it in hellish triumph at his tormentors. Soon all was over; nothing was left but the burning flesh and charred skeleton of this human devil, who could thus deliberately perpetrate so foul a crime. The horrid outrage was fearfully avenged; and though the heavens were filled with the stench of burning flesh, yet justice was satisfied. The law of retaliation was inflicted as nearly as it could be, while the example made of this wretch had, no doubt, a salutary effect upon two thousand slaves who witnessed his execution.

We are far from approving the infliction of mob law; yet, in aggravated cases like this, popular ebullition will manifest itself, and, in view of the wretch's offence, we, as a public journalist, cannot approve, yet we have neither time nor inclination to censure the conduct of the people of South Sumpter. Justice was inflicted by them, and a thousand deaths of the kind was too good for a devil like negro Dave. —Marion Republican.

Such are not uncommon scenes in all the south. Mob law is little less supreme throughout the land. Very likely the negro may have been quite innocent. The real murderer may have been among his tormentors. If Dave was a devil, was he not a slave? What had he to be good for?

From the New York Herald.

TRIAL OF THE INDIAN MURDERERS OF CAPTAIN GUNNISON.

We have received intelligence from Salt Lake City that the chief of the Par-Vant Utahs has delivered up several of his tribe who were concerned in the murder of Capt. Gunnison. U. S. A., Mr. Kern, of Philadelphia, and others, on the Sevier river, in October, 1853. Shortly after the arrival of Col. Steptoe in Utah, that officer made a demand on Can-Osh for the surrender of all those concerned in the affair. According to Indian usage, that chief offered to give up man for man; and Col. Steptoe, out of regard to the defenceless Mormon settlements in the Par-Vant country, agreed to receive seven Indians for the white men killed. Matters being finally arranged, a party consisting of Major Reynolds, Surgeon Wirtzand, Lieut. Allison, of the United States Army, and Major Hert, Indian agent, with twenty-three artillerymen, started from Salt Lake City on the 24th of February to receive the murderers, and reached Fillmore City, the capital of Utah, the head quarters of the Par-Vant tribe, on the 28th. Immediately on his arrival, Major Reynolds formally demanded the surrender of seven men. Can-Osh was very peaceably inclined, and said that he intended to fulfill his promise.

The soldiers were then disposed so as to be ready for any emergency, and in a few hours the whole Par-vant tribe, consisting of about sixty warriors, entered the main square of Fillmore, bringing with them the individuals that were to be given up. Can-Osh then turned over to Major Reynolds four men, a squaw who had helped to strip the dead, and a child about three years old. Major Reynolds refused to receive the child, but took charge of the men and the squaw, stating to Can-Osh, through the interpreter, Mr. Bean, that he still held him responsible for the delivery in Salt Lake City of the remainder.

While the prisoners were being turned over, things at one time wore a very serious aspect, and it was only by the coolness and well-timed precaution of Major Reynolds that an outbreak was prevented. Nar-i-ant, a chief of the Par-vants, and second to Can-Osh, appeared on the ground, rifle in hand; and with his face blacked with war-paint. Mounting a pile of wood he signified his dissent from the proceedings, and his desire to fight. Once he raised his rifle to fire at the United States officers, but, seeing two or three rifles ready to bring him down, his demonstrations of hostility ended in empty bravado.

Major Reynolds accompanied by Can-Osh and wife, returned to Salt Lake City with the prisoners, on the 3d of March. They will be tried by the court at Nephi, the county seat of Millard county, where the murder was committed.

Some singular developments were obtained from the Indians and others about Fillmore, going to show that the Mormons were indirectly concerned in the Gunnison massacre, as was originally suspected. The Mormons have all along taken every opportunity to impress upon the minds of the Utahs that the Mormons and Americans are two distinct people, and these Indians, in their conversations with Major Hunt, the Indian Agent, frequently spoke of the Mormons and the Americans. They also made inquiries whether the Americans or the Mormons were the more powerful nation.

Now, it appears that some three years ago, a Mormon wantonly killed a Utah Indian, and the Par-vant tribe, to which he belonged, immediately threatened revenge on the first party of Mormons they found in the mountains. But the bishops of the neighboring towns informed the Indians that the man who had excited their hostility was an American, and not a Mormon, (which was false) and consequently the par-vants fell upon the innocent party of Gunnison, and as is well known, but four escaped.

This is but one example of the scheming and duplicity of the Mormons, and strongly indicates that they anticipate making use of the Indians at some future day, should there be a rupture between the two nations of the "Mormons" and "Americans."

Still later advices inform us that the Par-vant prisoners were tried at Nephi.

We annex the most important part of the evidence rendered at the trial, which we find in the special correspondence of the New York Times of the 18th:

George Block, a witness for the prosecution, being duly sworn, said: I saw Captain Gunnison and party at Fillmore City, in the fall of 1853, in October, I believe: there were no other Americans or emigrants in the vicinity at the time; heard Capt. G. say he was going to survey Sevier Lake and Provo Canion, and then go into winter quarters; in five or six days after this, Capt. Morris came to Fillmore and said Gunnison was killed; went down with others, after being ordered by Brigham Young, to bury the dead; found an arrow-spike in Creusfeld's back-bone; recognized Capt. Gunnison by his hair; took particular notice of it when he was at Fillmore; hair was dark and slightly sprinkled with grey; this was in October, I think, 1853, in Millard county.

Cross Examination.—About a week after the massacre before I was on the ground, the flesh had been eaten off the bones by the wolves; should positively say that it was the remains of Capt. Gunnison I saw; his hair was damp; could not say whether it was bloody; gave the hair to Mr. McCall, who probably sent it to Washington.

Ar-wich (Midsummer) an Indian woman, a witness for the prosecution, being duly sworn.

The counsel for the defence demanded the voir-dire oath to be put. The learned Judge explained to her in simple but forcible language the importance of the truth. She replied through a sworn interpreter that she understood perfectly, and would tell the whole truth. The oath having been again administered, Midsummer says: I know all three of the prisoners; was on the Sevier river with them and twenty-one other Par-vants at the time of the murder; Ankle Joint was out shooting ducks, and first saw the Americans coming; he ran and told the rest of the band; they all said let us go and kill the Americans; they had a big talk, started about dark, and all three of the prisoners went along; I remained in camp and did not see them shoot; when they came back they said they had killed the Americans; they had with them watches, blankets, saddles, &c.; the prisoners came back with the band; Ankle Joint had a blanket, a pair of pistols, and several other things; White Tree had a ring; don't remember about Sandy Hair having anything; they had their bows and arrows; brought back no scalps.

Cross Examination.—This was nearly two winters ago; there were twenty-four warriors and three squaws; (here the witness gave the names of the warriors except Scho-zas, who made a big talk before they started; he is not a Chief, but a relation of the Chief, who had been killed by a party of whites some time before; the band started in the evening and returned next day about half past twelve o'clock; (Midsummer told the time by saying the sun was at a certain place which she indicated;) the murder took place not far from their wick-up (lodges); I was simply told to come with the other prisoners, and I came; George Bean, the interpreter, gave me the dress I have on; no one else has given me anything; I have no man here—I have a child;

Na-aw-gue-ne-oh, my husband, is a fighting Chief; he was in the massacre.

DIRECT EXAMINATION RESUMED.—I heard the firing during the killing of the Americans; it was in the gray dawn, before the sunrise.

The witness, Ar-wich, is a pleasant looking squaw, about 20 years old. She gave her testimony readily and clearly; and appeared very cheerful. Once she laughed, and Arrow-pine, the brother and successor of the great Walker, Chief of all the Ute Indians, spoke to her in their own dialect, telling her to be serious and not laugh, and to tell the whole truth. Her testimony being of great importance to the prosecution, was looked for with much anxiety—every one seemed satisfied that she had told nothing but the truth. Exertions had been made by certain parties, well known to the counsel for the United States, to tamper with these witnesses, but their infamy has only recoiled on their own heads. Much credit is due to General Hollman, the District Attorney, for the ability displayed here as well as throughout the east.

It will be seen that the most conclusive testimony was given implicating them in the murder, but the jury found them guilty only of manslaughter in the second degree, and they were sentenced to three years imprisonment. Several members of the Mormon jury acknowledged that they had received instructions from Brigham Young what verdict to give. It is well known that the oath of a Mormon in the church, is paramount to all other obligations. The Hon. Judge Kinney, after the verdict, declared that it was in direct violation of the evidence adduced. The principal object of Col. Steptoe's expedition was to obtain satisfaction for the murder of Gunnison's party; but the Mormons, to defeat this purpose, have acted in a manner that can only be accounted for by their intense hatred toward the general government. The above information comes direct from an officer who was present at the time.

Still further intelligence, up to the 21st March, informs us that the Indian prisoners sentenced to three years imprisonment, made their escape from the new jail, a few miles from the city. The murderers of Gunnison have thus entirely eluded the hands of justice. Thus ends Col. Steptoe's expedition. The Col. was sent out to Utah expressly to obtain redress for Gunnison's murder. He did all that lay in his power, but we see that every effort has been frustrated. Great excitement prevails in Salt Lake City, and if the "Gentiles" were strong enough, Brigham Young would be lynched.

We learn from the same advices, that Col. Steptoe has declined the nomination of governor of Utah, and that Judge Kinney, Chief Justice, has been offered the appointment.—He has stated that he will accept.

Col. Steptoe's Command leaves Salt Lake City on the 5th April for Rush Valley, from which camping place they start for California in the beginning of May.

The co-respondent of the Times says:

No words can do justice to the indignation of the few American citizens here. The Mormon community are damned with a curse "too deep to tell." They are alien and inimical to the present Government in every point of view. We desire that this statement should go before the country, that the people may reflect upon this monster of Mormonism, and see in its true light its nature and intention. "No greater crime can be committed than to substitute the authority of man for the justice of God; and Brigham Young has done this. Is he not capable of any infamy? It is believed by those most capable of judging, that nothing but the strongest measures can avert a terrible evil.—The Mormon community have never been able to refrain from the grossest outrages upon society. The causes in Missouri, Illinois and Utah, has been marked by no change but from bad to worse,—from nuisance to crime. Let the separate organization of Utah be abolished, and her broad and beautiful valleys be portioned out between Nebraska, New-Mexico and California. Then, and then only, with the aid of a strong military force, can the law have its legitimate supremacy among this God-forsaken community.

We have no other account of this transaction than the above, which must be received with many grains of allowance. It carries with it many marks of improbability. Why does not the Mormon or the Luminary give a full and truthful history of the transaction, and send it to such papers as would be pleased to publish it?

As for parceling out Utah, if it should be done, the doers may get as sick of it as our neighbors have of the dismemberment of Emmet county. We question whether the Mormons would not be able to control Nebraska and New Mexico, and directly four Mormons might be found seated in the United States Senate. A reasonable degree of enterprise, and the means the Brighamites can command, in wise hands, would produce that result.

IS THE WORLD IMPROVING?

Some tell us the world is becoming better; that the human race are progressing; is it so or not? Who can decide? It is true that the scions of the old Puritanical stock do not hang witches and whip Quakers through the streets; but then, is it because they are better, or is it not that they can find no witches nor Quakers worth whipping? Is it not that the Puritans themselves have become so much like witches, that a friendship or league of peace has sprung up between them? The time was when such humbugs as Barnum would have been hung for their impositions by our Puritan fathers; and why has he escaped? Is it because the descendants of the Puritans are really more humane and Christlike? Or is it because they are more like Barnum, more inclined to humbug than their fathers?

And why do Quakers now escape the lash, the prison, and the gallows? Is it because the world is more in love with the righteous doctrines the Quakers promulgated, or is it because that sect has so degenerated and assimilated with the world, that there is not sufficient power in them to disturb the workers of iniquity? It would be well to scrutinize closely, and see whether the race is progressing, and not deceive ourselves, and settle down at ease, while we are floating onward to destruction. The world is growing better, says one, because they do not whip and hang Quakers as formerly. Now let those that judge from such data, first show us a Quaker worth hanging—or one who possesses power sufficient to disturb iniquity. The early Quakers went forth with a "thus saith the Lord." They were bold, and open and consistent in reproving sin. They could not be bought, nor bribed, nor frightened, nor driven from their course. Nothing short of imprisonment or death could silence them. How is it now? Why bait them with gold or honor, or praise, and you can catch most of them like gudgeons.

Give their high priests some political office—some place of honor or emolument, and their laymen a chance to increase in mammon, and very few of them will preach righteousness with sufficient power to disturb the world. Has the world ceased to persecute Quakers because men are progressing in goodness? Or is it because Quakers have degenerated and become more like the world? This point must be settled, before we refer to peace or ease which Quakerism now enjoys, as a proof of progress. Is the world really progressing? This appears to me a nice question to decide.—Look at the poor Indians! A mere remnant of a once numerous and powerful people! See how they have been robbed, plundered and degraded by the progressing world! Do we discover signs of progress in them? Does their degraded condition speak of progress in those who have robbed and degraded them?

Look at the three million of the African race now in slavery, in this enlightened, progressive, Christian land! See them bought and sold in the market like brutes, while their owners live in indolence, or waste their lives in dissipation! Colored babies torn from the breast and swapped for church furniture—sold for organs and fiddles on which to play pious psalm-tunes to please the creator of the universe! Are these signs of progress here? See the poor creatures toiling beneath a burning sun, to procure ease and luxury and the means of dissipation for their owners! The book of knowledge closed against them—many and severe penalties imposed on such as teach them to read the Bible! That, too, in these blessed United States, which claim to be the most enlightened, Christian and progressive nation on the globe! See all the officers of the nation sworn to hunt such as may flee from a life-long bondage! See Boston court house, surrounded by armed soldiers, and the judges returning a fugitive, whom God created free, to a life of chains! Do these things speak of progress?

Look at the wars that are now impoverishing the world, deluging God's beautiful earth in human blood! See the contending armies spending months and years in slaughtering each other! Out-bruting the very brutes,—may, out-deviling the very devils—for where have we any account of such battles, even among the most approved Orthodox demons? When did they ever wage such a war as is now raging among progressive men?

See the attempts of our own government to make war with Spain, and fish away Cuba, for the purpose of extending the area of slavery, and increasing our heaps of gold!

Look at the Nebraska bill, consigning the fairest portion of this beautiful land to the curse of slavery! Who can discover signs of progress in these abominations? Again I ask, is the world growing better or worse? Who can answer?

This nation, instead of making peace between those that are at war, have just appointed three of their chief warriors to proceed to the seat of eastern war, and observe the operations of the fighters, in order to perfect themselves in the art of human slaughter, and be better prepared to instruct their countrymen in the science! Are there any signs of progression in this? Ho, all ye who love your race, awake from your slumbers, relinquish your dreams—no longer deceive yourselves with the vain notion that the world is progressing in goodness, while it is floating with wind and tide to destruction.—Up, and strive for reform.—Pleasure Boat.

POLITICS AND THE PULPIT.

We have no doubt that a religious landlord, having sharked it all the week, screwing and gripping among his tenants, would be better pleased to doze through an able gospel sermon on divine mysteries, than to be kept awake by a practical sermon that might treat of the duties of a Christian landlord. A broker who has gambled on a magnificent scale all the week, does not go to church to have his practical swindling analyzed and measured by the "New Testament" spirit. Catechism is what he wants—doctrine is to his taste. A merchant, whose last bale of smuggled goods was safely stored on Saturday night, and his brother merchant, who, on the same day, swore a false invoice through the custom house—they go to church to hear a sermon on faith, on angels, on the resurrection. They have nothing invested in those subjects; they expect the minister to be bold and orthodox. But if he wants respectable merchants to pay ample pew rents, let him not vulgarize the pulpit by introducing commercial subjects.

A rich Christian brother owns largely in a distillery, and is clamorous about letting down the pulpit to the vulgarity of temperance sermons. Another man buys tax titles, and noses about all the week to see who can be slipped out of a neglected lot. A mechanic, who plies his craft with the unscrupulous appliance of every means that he will win, he, too, wants "doctrine" on the Sabbath, not these secular questions. Men wish two departments in life—the secular and the religious. Between them a high wall and opaque is to be built. They wish to do just what they please for six long days. Then stepping on the other side of the wall, they wish the minister to assuage their fears, to comfort their conscience, and furnish them a clear ticket and insurance for heaven. By such a shrewd management, our modern financiers are determined to show that a Christian can serve two masters, both God and mammon, at the same time.—Rev. H. W. Beecher.

DISCOVERY OF A PETRIFIED INDIAN.

We learn from a friend that as the workmen upon the Milwaukee and La Crosse Railroad were at work upon an excavation near Schleisigerville, a few days since, the petrified remains of an Indian were found, and with his remains relics of olden times. The remains are perfect, not having suffered by decay. His height, at the present day, would be considered gigantic—his body measuring seven feet two inches in length. On his breast was a plate of copper, on which were engraved numerous hieroglyphics, the meaning of which can hardly be imagined. But there they are, a record of the past. Could these hieroglyphics be read, they might, perhaps, unveil some of the mystery which hangs like a dark cloud over the history of the red man. An arrow, of considerable strength and curious construction, was also found with him, and especially invites the attention of antiquarians.

These remains may be seen at the store of Caspar Liver, in Schleisigerville, for a few days. In a short time they will be forwarded to Madison.—Washington Co. Organ.

A LOVE OF A PARSON.

That old buffoon, Brownlow, editor of a religious paper called the Knoxville (Tenn.) Register, advises "the true hearted citizens of East Tennessee to enter into leagues to whip, black, ride on a rail, every preacher, citizen or traveler who dares to utter one word in opposition to slavery." This fellow writes Reverend before his name, and most honest men will be ready to write Rascal after it.—Bost. Atlas.

FAMINE PRICES.

Corn is selling in the Chickasaw Nation at $2.50 per bushel, while Flour can only be had at one or two places in the Nation, at $20 per barrel. No groceries are to be had, nor can any be obtained until there is a rise in the Arkansas, or Red River.

The President of the Chickasaw nation recently issued a proclamation, fixing the 19th of May to be observed as a day of Fasting Humiliation and Prayer.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The General Conference will be held at Saint James the 7th, 8th, 9th and 10 July next; at which solemn sacrifices and thanksgiving will be offered to Almighty God, who has been pleased to give us the kingdom.

There will also be a Conference at Holy Island, Lake Mormon, the 15th July next, to return thanks to Almighty God for availing

the calamities of civil war, with which we were recently threatened, and giving us a peaceful deliverance from the machinations of powerful foes.

At these Conferences public discourses will be delivered on the covenants with Abraham, the Messiahship of Jesus, the royal line of David, and the everlasting kingdom of God on earth, the gospel of the resurrection, the salvation of the dead, and the everlasting life of the saints.

F. JOHNSON & CO.

Have purchased and are continuing to purchase, for cash, a full assortment of fresh goods, by which they are enabled to sell at BUFFALO and DETROIT Prices.

DRY GOODS.

Calicoes, of various patterns. Mosses de Lains and Bareges. Lawns, Shawls, &c. A new supply of Bonnets, of handsome fashion. Book and Barred Muslin. Groceries and Fishing Tackle, and various other stores. Copies of the most approved pattern and material, for sale.

CITY STORE, SAINT JAMES.

ONE DOOR NORTH OF THE DOCK, WATER ST. J. M. WAIT has just opened a large assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Tin ware, Hardware, Cutlery, Iron, Nails, Rods, Glass, Ready Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes. Also a full supply of Fishmen's Tackle. Thankful for past patronage, I hope to merit a liberal share in the future, by selling cheaper than the cheapest for ready pay; cash not refused. Saint James, June 19th, 1855. 70a90

TO MINING COMPANIES.

Johnston's Detroit City Directory AND ADVERTISING GAZETTEER OF MICHIGAN, FOR 1855-6.

To contain general directory of all the House-holders and other citizens of Detroit, to be enumerated in May next. Nominal List of State and City Executive and Legislative Bodies. Judges and other State and County Judicial and Executive Functionaries, Statistical Reports, the Census of each County, City, Town, and Post Village in Michigan; List of all the Mines in the State, with Statistics, where supplied; A New Ornamental Map of Detroit; Almanac for 1855-6; Tables of Routes and Distances; of Interest, of Foreign Coins and Currency; Shipping List; Steamboat and Railway Intelligence, with many other useful particulars, too numerous to mention here. Size, imperial 8vo., about 750 pages, good paper, neatly bound. Price, ten shillings, except the quantity to be gratuitously distributed.

The style of the Directory of 1854-5 will be improved for 1855-6. Cards neatly arranged on the pages. Half pages and pages of advertisements will be printed on colored paper, paged and compiled together with extra display.

In the Advertisers Key, will be classified, as usual, the several Advertisements. The work will be prepared essentially with a view to subserve the interests of the advertiser and the general interests of Michigan.

2000 copies of the last Directory were printed, and 1000 gratuitously and widely distributed to benefit the City and State, and the Cards of Advertisers were carried by the work into hands they never, otherwise perhaps, would have reached.

The Directory in preparation, will be ready about the close of June next. I trust the support I may continue to receive will enable me to print for 1855-6.

THREE THOUSAND COPIES.

If so, I shall devote 1500 copies to gratuitous circulation throughout the Union. A copy shall be kept hung up for reference in each Hotel and Post Office in the State, and a number of copies shall be forwarded to Europe.

As usual, the Cards of benevolent Societies, whether in Detroit or throughout the State, inserted FREE. Trustees of Colleges and all similar Institutions, should avail themselves of the opportunity this permanent medium presents of giving extensive notoriety to such establishments.

Manufacturers and owners of Patent Rights in Michigan or elsewhere, may give remunerative publicity to their business at trifling cost. The compiler, at a mere nominal charge, invites for publication the Cards of Attorneys, Collectors, Land Agents, &c., from each City and Village in the State.

The work will be so prepared in exhibiting the unsurpassed resources of Michigan, that it shall prove a highly important aid to increase the population by immigration from less favored States.

The Directory has local claims to patronizing support, and its utility is indisputable.—No effort shall be left unemployed to deserve the continuance of a generous encouragement. For past aid, friends will please accept my acknowledgments, and remembering the high prices of paper, and the large quantity to be used in the work, as well as the great expense of the clerical and printing labor to be expended upon it, will assist me to do better in the pending effort. JAMES DALE JOHNSTON, Compiler Detroit Directory, &c.

THIS DAY PUBLISHED.

The promised work—Europe and the Allies of the past and to-day.

A complete history of the war in the east, 122 pages, fine tinted engravings; portraits of Potentates and Generals; Map of the Crimea; Sevastopol and its fortifications; being a summary of historical events from the time of Napoleon 1st to the present day. Price—$1.25.—For sale by all the booksellers.

Agents will find a new opportunity to make money by the sale of this and other works of sterling merit, by applying to the publishers.

E. LIVERMORE

No. 20, Beekman St., [New York.] Also 10,000 copies printed of an abridgement of the above work, illustrated paper covers, 175 pages, profusely illustrated—50c. The above books will be sent, post paid, on receipt of the price.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Lansing, Mich., Jan. 8th, 1855.

DEAR SIR—The committee on Indian Affairs of the House, consisting of Messrs. Strang, Montague and Ashmun, are desirous, before preparing their report, to obtain your opinion, how far the measures heretofore adopted for the colonization of the Indians have been beneficial to them; and in what respects they have failed to accomplish the desired ends.

Any suggestions you may make as to the working of the mission system; the system of paying of annuities; aggregation with the whites; removal to the Western wilds—indeed anything bearing upon the past and present condition and future prosperity of the Indian race, will be received with great satisfaction.

Respectfully yours,
JAS. J. STRANG.

COMMUNICATION FROM J. L. CHIPMAN.
Detroit, January 15th, 1855.

Hon. JAS. J. STRANG, Ch'n of House Com. on Indian Affairs:

DEAR SIR—I have received your communication of the 8th inst, in which you state the desire of the committee on Indian affairs, "to obtain my opinion, how far the measures heretofore adopted for the civilization of the Indians have been beneficial to them, and in what respects they have failed to accomplish the desired end."

The subject is one to which I have devoted some attention, and, though the limits of the session of the Legislature forbid that I shall occupy the time necessary to a complete investigation of it, it affords me pleasure to submit to the committee, the conclusions at which I have arrived. In doing so, I shall, to so great an extent as seems possible, confine myself to the Indians in Michigan. They consist of parts of three tribes, estimated by the Hon. Henry C. Gilbert, of the Michigan agency, as follows, viz:

Chippewas,	5,967
Ottawas,	1,237
Pottowatomies,	266
In all,	7,470

They are scattered in small bands throughout the upper and the northern and western parts of the Lower Peninsula. The first treaty between any of them and the United States, as a nation, was at Fort McIntosh, in 1785, to which the Chippewas and Ottawas were parties. In 1789, at Fort Harmar, the Pottowatomies were received into the amity and protection of the government. In August, 1795, after Wayne's campaign, these tribes with others, engaged in the late hostilities, treated with the United States at Greenville. This treaty seems to have been the first which in any degree had civilization for its object.—It contains an authority for the Indians to commute certain annuities, for domestic animals, implements of husbandry, and the employment of useful artificers. It is also interesting, because it introduces to these Indians the annuity system, which we shall attempt to show has been detrimental to them.

From 1795 to 1836 nearly a hundred different treaties were made with these tribes, separately, together, with other tribes, or each other. War and the exigencies of settlement seem to have been the motive for most of them.

In 1836 the treaty of Washington, to which the Chippewas and Ottawas were parties, was made, and contains the system under which the present relations between the greater number of the Indians in Michigan and the general government, are conducted. The principal features of this treaty are, money annuities, paid per capite; the payment of a certain quantity yearly of tobacco, provisions, fish barrels and salt; a provision for the payment of their debts, and for their half-breed relatives, (these two have long since been exhausted;) removal to the west of the Mississippi River, and the payment by government of the sum of $100,000, whenever the Indians shall surrender certain reservations. It will be perceived that this treaty is but the perfection of the idea shadowed forth in the treaty of Greenville, nearly fifty years before. It seems to be founded on the principle that to civilize, civilization must be transported to them, and to depend but slightly upon the only agency which is efficient for the purpose—the exertions of the individual himself.

Perhaps no more liberal treaty than this was ever made by a strong and civilized nation, with weak and savage tribes. Peculiarly considered, it is unsatisfactory. Its defects are not those of meanness or of oppression. On the contrary, it provides a lavish support for a system which reason, so well as experience has demonstrated, is insufficient to elevate a barbarous to a civilized people. History teaches that civilization is of slow growth. It must result from necessity, which forces man to labor. A savage state is always one of idleness, knowing no toil save the gratification of the animal passions. Nature herself by increase of population, or by withholding the means of subsistence too lavishly bestowed and improvidently exhausted, must give the impetus to industry. In countries where she seems most parsimonious of her gifts, man is strongest and wisest. The monuments of his capacity are greatest. There instead of beguiling him into sloth by easy or bountiful supplies of the means of ease and comfort, she makes him feel a thousand wants in order that he may invent as many means of gratification.

Thus his energies are awakened, his mind becomes active.—Then follow the rude beginnings of agriculture, suggestive of arts, which bring with them comfort, improvement, new fields of invention and labor, until finally his habits become fixed in channels which lead to civilization. The secret of this progress is, that each step he takes is guided by the experience his necessities have imparted to him. In this view the best plan for the elevation of a barbarous people, would seem to be to prepare them so far as possible, for the coming of that period, when Nature assumes the work and compels their advancement. Perhaps the payment of annuities, the establishment of schools and of missions, of farms and artisans, and the supply of provisions and goods, together with a motion to the west of the Mississippi, and the system of trade established by the laws of Congress, were intended to have effect; but the means used are, as will appear before I conclude, intrinsically repugnant, each benefit being counterpoised by some absolute evil.

The first reason why the system of the treaty of Washington has failed to civilize the Indians, is that it does not provide for their immediate localization, so that each one shall possess an allotment of land. There is no place where they may collect and enjoy the actual benefits which it proffers. I speak now of the practical operation of the treaty; for, though it provides for their removal west of the Mississippi, they still remain within the State, and this notwithstanding that by its own terms it expires during the present year. Thus, though missions are established among them, they are inefficient, because they cannot collect them in numbers sufficient to have the necessary moral influence; so it is with schools, the teacher must either go from camp to camp, instructing families instead of communities, or he can effect nothing.

Though mechanics and agriculturalists are appointed to reside among them, their intercourse with individuals is so limited and unfrequent, that instead of teaching them the arts, they but supply the exigencies of their barbarity. And lastly, though agricultural implements are supplied, they are given to bands collectively, and not to their members personally, so that they are really of little use, because the Indians have no lands to till, and if they have, are so scattered that it is impossible for any considerable number to avail themselves of them.

The convenience of localization and concentration for the purpose of instruction, is evident; for it is impossible to impart the arts of civilized man to a people who are in the scattered, roving state of their savage nature.

But I will confess that I have but little faith in the method of direct teaching. It seems too much like transporting civilization en masse to a people, or rather it is introducing them to its theories, when the necessities do not exist which prove its practicability and utility. This is in no manner better illustrated than by the effect of missionary effort among the wild bands in Minnesota and Wisconsin. There it is common to meet Indians who have a devout reverence for the God of the Christians, and at the same time, an abiding faith in the wonders and traditions of their own mythology. Instead of driving out the old religion, another is placed beside, and becomes co-existent with it. The two are in full force in the same individual.—The reason for this seems to be that there is absolutely nothing in his social state which commands to him his new faith—nothing in his necessities which teaches him the superiority of the first, or the incompatibility of believing both.

But localization must be at the foundation of every system of civilization. Fixedness of habitation enters as completely into our idea of civilized life, as do education, politeness of manners, knowledge of the arts, comfort, or social intercourse.—Indeed, all of these are, to a great extent, its offsprings; while a nomadic life is the very synonym for a savage one. Indeed, one who wanders from place to place, sleeping where night falls upon him, subsisting upon what chance provides, does not possess even the leisure to acquire those habits which shall elevate him in the scale of being. On the contrary, if he has them, he is apt to impair if not destroy them. He who has reared no monument of toil; whose ideas of home are not associated with some one spot; who has no fields to cultivate; no chattels which are his own; no fixed pursuit which forces him to regular and continued industry, has no inducement to social improvement. If he dwells with the civilized, he sinks in their estimation, and is deemed worthless and degraded. If he is savage, he remains savage.—It is true that the mere possession of the soil does not absolutely, and in all cases, create civilization. It only has a tendency to do so, just as a roving life has a tendency to prevent it. It must combine with that natural necessity to which I have referred, and which alone can compel the individual to become stationary, before it can be efficient.—Its use consists in instilling the idea of distinct property in that which has heretofore been held in common, and in no manner can this be so thoroughly attained as by giving to each a right, which shall be ascertained from that of others. It is at least a starting point.

The individual knows that he has a possession peculiar to himself. It is his own, and as such, will acquire an importance in his sight which will secure for it his care. It is true, that in order to do this, there must be a congeniality in the location to his taste, so that the Indian would probably select with reference to the pursuits of his savage state; but no matter what the motive, the effect is the same. He is fixed to some spot—a place where he may behold the fruits of his toil as they ripen; and in this country, so rapid is the advance of settlement, so quickly would population increase, and the supplies of nature decrease around him, that soon the necessity would exist which would impel him to civilized life. This is demonstrated by the history of the settlements which have already been founded. Thus, the decline of fur-bearing animals in Michigan, has robbed the Indians of one tie to their savage life, and has driven them, either to localities where those animals still lingered, or to lake and river shores, where the fisheries proffered them sustenance. The result has been, the collection in certain spots, of small communities and towns, as at L'Ance, the Rapids of St. Mary's and the Ut-e-quaw-me-non settlements, which have gradually obtained a fixedness of character, and exhibit to a considerable extent the appearance of civilized society. Nor are these examples the only proof we have of our theory. We know how reluctant they are to depart from the land in which they dwell.—They only retreat before the whites, because they have no place to live among them. Now, this evidence that they possess, in common with ourselves, the love of locality—that sensibility to associations, which attaches men to home, and makes them useful and loyal members of the State. It argues their capacity to become stationary, for it teaches us to expect that they would. Give them the opportunity to obey the dictates of this feeling, and they will take their position among others—for the reluctance to depart is but the desire to remain, and they can only remain, by becoming fixed in their habitation, as are those around them.

In all efforts to civilize the Indians, which have been made by the government, the certain results of this law of necessity, do not seem to have been properly provided for. This may be, and is probably, to a great extent attributable to the peculiar relations which subsist between the State and the federal power, which curtails the latter, the duty of so framing its systems as that the interests of the former may be subserved. The existence of a hostile tribe within a State would be a grave impediment to settlement; and even if not hostile, if large in numbers, vicious, uncivilized and incapable of industry, so that they would not be useful citizens, their presence would be a serious evil. The general government, therefore, possessing the exclusive control over the tribes, and the sole right to extinguish their title to the public domain, but bound so to exercise that control and right as not to interfere with the sovereignty of the States, were necessarily circumscribed in their policy for their civilization.

Consequently no permanent provision for the localization of the Indians of Michigan could be made by the treaty of Washington, save that of a motion to the west of the Mississippi.—But even here a fault was committed. Instead of providing immediate removal, so that they should be fixed so soon as possible, it left it for the future, no doubt with the humane intention of permitting them to remain, if circumstances should seem to justify it. Practically the effect of this was to leave them for many years where they were at the time the treaty was executed—the roving occupants of a country held in common.—It discouraged fixed settlement, and sat like an incubus upon every energy of their minds—upon every effort to reclaim them. An intimate acquaintance with them, under circumstances which gave me unusual opportunities of observation, has taught me the truths of this.

They lived for years in a state of insecurity and fear, which was to a great extent fostered by the traders among them, whose object was to keep them in their primitive wilderness.—They would not build houses, clear forests and cultivate lands, for fear that they would be compelled to leave them to strangers. They had not the certainty of enjoying the fruits of their industry. The land in which they dwelt was not their home. The necessity for civilization and civilized labor was before them, but their treaty obligations forbade and prevented them from obeying it. Thus they had no other objects in life than those of their barbarous state—subsistence from day to day.—Whatever they attained was expended for the gratification of the moment. Incapable of obtaining the substantial representative of progress, the nucleus around which the virtues and comforts of civilized life might gather—a home—they had not the natural and ordinary inducement to thrift and industry. In fine, from the execution of the treaty, in 1836, up to the adoption of the State Constitution, in 1850, they felt that they were merely waiting, not dwelling, in the land. The necessity for civilization came, but the government system was in no way prepared to meet it. The only provision made for it (removal to the western wilds) had, in the course of events, become repugnant to the end. If there ever had been efficiency in it, the time for it had passed. If they had been removed when the treaty was made, there is no doubt that they would sooner or later arrived at the same crisis which they experienced here. I am inclined to the belief that it would not have come so soon, but that whenever it did come government could have prepared for it.

Another defect of the treaty of Washington, and the management of the Indians under it, is, that they tend to perpetuate the tribal connection, with its incident evils. Thus, all the benefits which they receive are, as members of the tribe, their provisions, their annuities, iron and carpenter's work, religious and secular education, and lastly, the large amount to be received for the reservations, all belong to them in common, and is divided among them per capite, or so far as it is possible to do so. No individual exertion places one before the other—no personal merit is followed by superior rewards. They hold the benefits of the treaty, as they do their forests in their wild state, as the property of all; the share of each to be ascertained, only when the time for its enjoyment arrives, and then to be in all respects, as great as that of the others. Their sole title is the membership of the body; all the machinery of the government intercourse tends to strengthen this idea. They meet to receive their annuities and other payments, as bands, under their respective chiefs; they communicate with the United States through their rulers, who, on such occasions, pursue the same routine, as they do in their primitive state towards other tribes. On the pay rolls, and at the pay table, they are scrupulously divided, according to their inter-tribal organization; in short, everything tends to the preservation of their national existence, and consequently is repugnant to their individual civilization.—The evil of this is, that their language, manners and habits are perpetuated; it keeps around them the forms of their barbarity. It prevents them from forming an acquaintance with proper systems of government. It fosters that spirit of communion, which is one of the great characteristics of the savage state, and which, as a matter of course, is fatal to the existence of distinct property.

(To be continued.)

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 5.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 72.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,

at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by

COOPER & CHIDESTER.

Terms:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

From Arthur's Home Gazette.

GOVERNING CHILDREN.

BY T. S. ARTHUR.

"I'll not live in this way!" exclaimed Mrs. Lyon, passionately. "Such disorder, wrangling and irregularity robs me of all peace; and makes the house a bedlam, instead of a quiet home. Tom!" she spoke sharply to a bright little fellow, who was pounding away with a wooden hammer on a chair, and making a most intolerable din;—"stop that noise this instant!" And you, Em, not a word from your lips. If you can't live in peace with your sister, I'll separate you. Dye hear! Hush, this instant!"

"Then make Jule give me my pin cushion. She's got it in her pocket."

"It's no such thing; I haven't," retorted Julia.

"You have, I say."

"I tell you I haven't."

"Will you hush?" The face of Mrs. Lyon was fiery red, and she stamped upon the floor as she spoke.

"I want my pin cushion. Make Jule give me my pin cushion."

Irritated beyond control, Mrs. Lyon caught Julia by the arm, and thrusting her hand into her pocket drew out a thimble, a piece of lace, and a penknife.

"I told you it wasn't there.—Couldn't you believe me?"

This impertinence was more than the mother could endure; and, acting from her indignant impulses, she boxed the ears of Julia soundly; conscious, at the same time, that Emily was chiefly to blame for all this trouble, by a wrong accusation of her sister, she turned upon her, also, administering an equal punishment. Frightened by all this, the younger children, whose incessant noise had, for the last hour, contributed to the overthrow of their mother's temper, became suddenly quiet, and skulked away into corners—and the baby, which was seated on the floor, between two pillows, curved her quivering lips, and glanced fearfully up at the distorted face in which she had been used to see the love-light that made her heaven.

A deep quiet followed this burst of passion, like the hush which succeeds the storm. Alas! for the evil traces that were left behind. Alas! for the repulsive image of that mother, daguerre-typed in an instant on the memory of her children, and never to be effaced.—How many, many times, in after years, with a sigh heave their bosoms, as that painful reflection looks out upon them from amid the dearer remembrances of childhood.

A woman of good impulses, but with scarcely any self-control, was Mrs. Lyon. She loved her children, and desired their good.—That they showed so little forbearance one with the other, manifested so little fraternal affection, grieved her deeply.

"My whole life is rendered unhappy by it," she would often say. "What is to be done? It is dreadful to think of a family growing up in discord and disunion. Sister at variance with sister, and brother lifting his hand against brother."

As was usual after an ebullition of passion, Mrs. Lyon, deeply depressed in spirits, as well as discouraged, retired from her family to grieve and weep. Lifting the frightened baby from the floor, she drew its head tenderly against her bosom; and, leaving the nursery, sought the quiet of her own room. There, in repentance and humiliation, she recalled the stormy scene through which she had just passed, and blamed herself for yielding blindly to passion, instead of meeting the trouble among her children with a quiet discrimination.

To weeping, calmness succeeded. Still she was perplexed in mind, as well as grieved at her own want of self-control. What was to be done with her children? How were they to be governed aright? Painfully did she feel her own unfitness for the task. By this time the baby was asleep, and the mother felt something of that tranquil peace that every true mother knows when a young babe is slumbering on her bosom. A book lay on a shelf, near where she was sitting, and Mrs. Lyon, scarcely conscious of the act, reached out her hand for the volume. She opened, without feeling any interest in its contents; but, she had only read a few sentences, when this remark arrested her attention:

"All right government of children begins with self-government."

The words seemed written for her; and the truth expressed was elevated instantly into perception. She saw it in the clearest light, and closed the book and bowed her head in sad acknowledgment of her own errors. Thus, for some time, she had been sitting, when the murmur of voices from below grew more and more distinct, and she was soon aroused to the painful fact, that, as usual, when left alone, the children were quarreling among themselves. Various noises, as of pounding on and throwing about chairs, and other pieces of furniture, were heard; and, at length, a loud scream, mingled with angry vociferations, smote upon her ears.

Indignation swelled instantly to the heart of Mrs. Lyon, and hurriedly placing the sleeping babe in its crib, she started for the scene of disorder, moved by an impulse to punish severely the young rebels against authority, and was half way down the stairs when her feet were checked by a remembrance of the sentiment—"All right government of children begins with self-government."

"Will anger subdue anger?—When storm meets storm, is the tempest stilled?" These were the questions asked of herself, almost involuntarily. "This is no spirit in which to meet my children.—It never has, never will enforce order and obedience," she added, as she stood upon the stairs, struggling with herself, and striving for the victory. From the nursery came louder sounds of disorder.—How weak the mother felt. Yet in this very weakness was strength.

"I must not stand idly here," she said, as a sharper cry of anger smote her ears; and so she moved on quickly, and opening the nursery door, stood revealed to her children. Julia had just raised her hand to strike Emily, who stood confronting her with a fiery face. Both were a little startled at their mother's sudden appearance; and both, expecting the storm that usually came at such times, began to assume the defiant, stubborn air with which her intemperate reproofs were always met.

A few moments did Mrs. Lyon stand looking at her children—grief, not anger, upon her countenance. How still all became.—What a look of wonder came gradually into the children's faces as they glanced one at the other.—Something of shame was next visible. And now, the mother was conscious of a new power over the young rebels of her household.

"Emily," said she, speaking mildly, and with a touch of sorrow in her voice that she could not subdue, "I wish you would go up into my room and sit with Mary while she sleeps."

Without a sign of opposition, or even of reluctance, Emily went quietly from the nursery, in obedience to her mother's desire.

"This room is very much in disorder, Julia."

Many times had Mrs. Lyon said, under like circumstances, "Why don't you put things to rights?" or, "I never saw such girls. If all was topsy-turvy, and the floor an inch thick with dirt, you'd never turn over a hand to put things in order;" or, "Go and get the broom, this minute, and sweep up the room. You're the laziest girl that ever lived." Many, many times, as we have said, had such language been addressed by Mrs. Lyon, under like circumstances, to Julia and her sisters without producing anything better than a grumbling, partial execution of her wishes. But now, the mild intimation that the room was in disorder, produced all the effects desired. Julia went quickly about the work of restoring things to their right places, and in a little while order was apparent where confusion reigned before. Little Tommy, whose love of hammering was an incessant annoyance to his mother, had ceased his din on her sudden appearance, and, for a few moments, stood in expectation of a boxed ear; for a time he was puzzled to understand the new aspect of affairs. Finding that he was not under the ban, as usual, he commenced slapping a stick over the top of an old table, making a most ear-piercing noise. Instantly Julia said, in a low voice, to him—

"Don't Tommy—don't do that. You know it makes mother's head ache."

"Does it make your head ache, mother?" asked the child, curiously, and with a pitying tone in his voice, as he came creeping up to his mother's side, and looking at her as if in doubt whether he would be repulsed or not.

"Sometimes it does, my son," replied Mrs. Lyon, kindly; "and it is always unpleasant. Won't you try and play without making so much noise?"

"Yes, mother, I'll try," answered the little fellow, cheerfully.—"But I'll forget sometimes."

He looked earnestly at his mother, as if something more was his thoughts.

"Well, dear, what else?" said she encouragingly.

"When I forget, you'll tell me; won't you, mother?"

"Yes, love."

"And then I'll stop. But don't scold me, mother, for then I can't stop."

Mrs. Lyon's heart was touched. She caught her breath, and bent her face down to conceal its expression, until it rested on the silken hair of the child.

"Be a good boy, Tommy, and I will never scold you any more," she murmured gently in his ear.

His arms stole upward, and as they were twined closely about her neck, he pressed his lips tightly against her cheek—thus sealing his part of the contract with a kiss.

How sweet to the mother's taste were these first fruits of self-control. The effort to govern herself, what a power she had acquired. In stilling the tempest of passion in her own bosom, she had poured the oil of peace over the storm-fretted hearts of her children.

Only first fruits were these.—In all her after days did her mother strive with herself, ere she entered into a contest with the inherited evils of her children; and just so far as she was able to overcome evil in them. Often, very often, did she fall back into old states; and often, very often, was self-resistance only a light effort; but the feeble influence for good that flowed from her words or actions, whenever this was so, warned her of error, and prompted a more vigorous self-control. Need it be said that she had an abundant reward?

OPINIONS.

My opinions, like the opinions of others, may be true, or they may be false. Therefore the opinions of even inspired men are not a sure foundation to build upon. Men of God sometimes set forth their own opinions, according to their judgment of right; yet they themselves dare not risk their eternal life on such a foundation. And surely it can be no certain foundation of trust to other men. Nothing short of direct revelation from God can constitute a sure foundation of eternal life to any man.

Is the Bible such a foundation? Then why so many opinions built upon that book? Surely it is because of uninspired priests, or of usurpers of power and authority not given from on high. For the Bible never acknowledged but one set of administrators in the church in any age, and they were an inspired ministry always, or they were rejected. Who will dare deny this fact? Opinions were quite prevalent and diversified in relation to John, the forerunner of Jesus, as also of Christ himself; and when Peter was inquired of in regard to mens' opinions about the son of man, he replied they were various.

But of his own opinion upon that matter, our Savior did declare it to be nothing short of direct revelation from the Father of heaven. Declaring, at the same time, that no man could know the son of God (even in that age) in any other way. And even the inspired John, the prophet, declares the same thing, and says he knew him not until it was made known to him directly from heaven. Yet he did know that he was sent to prepare the way for his immediate entering upon his ministry.

Here is work for uninspired divines to think upon. Two cousins, whose mothers both knew of these two personages by direct revelation before they were born, who grew up in the same neighborhood, and under the immediate instruction of godly parents, both of whom knew him by revelation, and yet the one prophet of God knew not the other, from parent or any other earthly teacher.

How then is it possible for uninspired priests and teachers to know Jesus Christ in this age? or how is it possible for their uninspired opinions to be correct in reference to this matter? All those who believed John, and who saw also the Holy Ghost descend, and heard the words spoken out of heaven, had not to depend on mens' opinions; neither any other who afterwards knew him.

These facts, with a flood of other testimony, stand forth in confirmation of this all-important truth, that mankind verily do need more revelation from God than the mere opinions of uninspired men. And it is not an opinion of men merely that these signs shall follow believers, but it is God's word. Some mens' opinions are contrary to it.

It is no new thing for mens' opinions to belie God's word.—Shall I ask any man if God's word is true? No, indeed; but I will ask the sects of their opinion about the application of this word to themselves. Do these signs follow them now, who believe this word and promise of Christ? I hear them say no. Thus I must count them infidels to this most precious faith. And why am I uncharitable? Is it not charitable to credit mens' open confessions?

I believe God and the holy prophets. But what do christendom believe? Ans. A world of opinions not found in God's word, and consequently they ought not to expect these signs should follow them for believing almost every thing imaginable, save the true gospel. If the Jewish church, in her apostacy, could cry out for miracles to be wrought before their eyes to make them believe in the power of God among men, then why not gentile sects do so too? Even the priests agreed to believe on the son of God, if he would come down from the cross. And yet he did not. Yet many Protestant ministers will say so still, right in the face of God's word, which declares it to be a falsehood. And yet they are not ashamed to be found liars before God and men, the living as well as the dead.

So the word of God and opinions of men are often wide apart. Even in sound, as well as substance, do they differ widely; as, thus saith the Lord, your Redeemer. While the opinions of uninspired priests are after this manner, viz: I understand the scriptures thus and so, or this is our honest view of it, &c.

Says another, we of the orthodox faith hold Jesus to be the very eternal God, and all contrary opinions are fundamentally heretical. It is our opinion we ought not to fellowship heretics, lest we partake of their sins. Their opinions are no doubt false. God has revealed to men in past ages the truth of this matter, and settled it in our opinion, so that no inspiration is needful to understand it.—And these men will not bow to our uninspired opinions, but will set up their own uninspired opinions to the contrary, and yet claim to be honest in such opinions; and we denounce them as heretics; and with no better guide, assume to dictate the free exercise of the opinions of others. O! how sacred are our uninspired opinions, yet how unhallowed are those of other like free thinkers with us.—When will the natural uninspired man learn to discern correctly, so as to need no more revelation from God?

Hear them speak further: But of all the different sects of free thinkers that now throng society with our general jargon of contradictory opinions, none are so much to be hated and despised as that company of modern infidels who denounce all the sects as one body of Anti-Christ, and claim themselves to be the only true church of Christ. Neither would we count them so entirely unreasonable, were it not that they fanatically claim to believe in direct revelation from heaven, and to be divinely inspired; thus making their opinions to outweigh all of ours put together. Would they only stand as one of the heretical christian sects, we could suffer them to share with us occasionally in the common weal. But they declare God has spoken again in this generation, and spoken to them, and rejected all other churches. And, consequently, we deem them destitute of charity.

For we believe there are good and bad in all churches, (save this one,) who claim to be inspired with God's Holy Spirit, and to preach and pray by inspiration, as saints of old. Now, we cannot see how any of these deluded fanatics can get to heaven. They are as strongly set in this delusion as were those of ancient times, who verily were inspired. We think our government ought not to tolerate this one kind, surely, which does not belong to our enlightened age. Our venerable ancestors did not dream of so hateful a religion ever coming on this side of the great waters. Even the sect of Nazirines, that once turned the world upside down with their opinions, could not be worse than these modern infidels—Mormons.

Well, truly, they did not come over the briny deep. This spirit of inspiration was here before our Puritan fathers, and the record of their inspired works is now with us. And we declare God has taken this stick and put it with the other, as he promised long ago to such men as we are, and with these men and means will he thresh the nations. One will chase a thousand: for by the spirit of inspiration shall the earth be cleansed ere long.

The baptism of fire and Holy Ghost will yet be experienced by the saints of latter days. This fire will burn water, and quench fire. And, O! how entirely powerless will be these bundles of tares, when the fire of God shall try every man's work. It appears to me that Satan is already aware of the vanity of his popular priesthood, and is now about changing it, for one who will not be ashamed of believing in miracles. So he now allows of the resurrection of spirits, but not of bodies.

So the war will soon end at the citadel of no power from God, and the saints must meet the enemy under entire different colors; even such as floated in the common air when the magicians of Egypt stood up to interpret dreams and work miracles in that age, nearly as dark as this present.

J. S. C.

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1855.

THE PONTIAC GAZETTE AGAIN.

The Gazette of June 23d makes the following response to the Islander of June 14th:

THE MORMONS.—The Northern Islander, the newspaper published at St. James, Beaver Island, Michigan, and organ of "King Strang," has noticed our article in a number of our paper last November, on the subject of the Mormons and Popular Sovereignty. The paper containing the notice is of date June 14th, 1855. The Islander of that date contains an article occupying a little over two pages of the paper, including our article, which is published entire. It is a paper which bears evidence that it was written by the "King" himself, and is evidently intended as an answer to the many newspaper articles which have appeared against the Mormons and their peculiar practices.

We should like to publish the article entire, as we find it in the Islander; but after carefully scanning it, we think that it is not worthy of that consideration. The fairness of the Islander, in giving the whole of our article, would seem to entitle it to a like return; but we are not in the least disposed to a controversy, and are willing to let the two articles as found in that paper have their own weight. The "King" takes the course usually pursued by a cunning and unscrupulous advocate of iniquity—mixes some truth with a great deal of nauseous error, to suit the taste and inclinations of his followers, and thus to give them an opportunity to hail him as the victor. Just so it would be did we prove conclusively that he was wrong; hence the utter fallacy of any attempt on our part to refute what he says. If we were writing for Mormons, it might be different; but as we are not, we shall not feel under any peculiar obligations to undertake the task.

The "King" makes one or two points against us, and evidently feels satisfied. These he places first in his defence, thus preparing the minds of his readers to read the rest with gusto, glorying in our defeat. Well, that is a good way to proceed! Thus we said that "They (the Mormons of Salt Lake City,) are in the admitted, open, flagrant, violation of the most sacred laws of the United States—they are living in Polygamy." Whereupon the "King" says he takes issue with us, and says there is no law of the United States against Polygamy. In that he is right; and we plead to a loose expression, that did not convey the meaning of our mind. What we should have said was that they were living so against the laws of every State in the Union. For we believe there is no State which has not laws that will punish severely the crime, or misdemeanor, of polygamy. But we were caught by our brother, the "King," and handled just as if he supposed we meant that the denizens of the Salt Lake Basin were violating a law of Congress! Pretty "sharp practice" to be found in a seriously labored defence of Mormon Polygamy.

The "King" proceeds to make a criticism of our manner of expression—which is also evidently very important to him, but of very little consequence to us. Then he follows up his case by alluding to the many instances recorded in the Old Testament, in which men of God are represented as having lived in the practice of polygamy. May he be would have us all engage in the sacrifices, wars, murders, &c., which are there recorded. If the argument is good for anything, it is good to prove that mankind should now-a-days live just as the children of Israel did two or three thousand years ago! This is not the first instance we have ever known of a man's justifying his iniquity by quotations from the Bible. We have seen stout, healthy men going about the streets begging, and saying that Jesus was a beggar, and hence it was not wrong! The Devil himself was accustomed to quote scripture; and so yet are his "lesser lights."

But the "King" is not satisfied with this; he goes still further with his argument, and attempts to justify polygamy by saying that some ancient nations in which polygamy was practiced were more wealthy, powerful and civilized, than some others who did not practice it. And he says also that the present is the first instance in which nations discountenancing polygamy have been in advance in civilization, of polygamists. And even in such nations he evidently thinks without "left hand marriages" there could be but little civilization and progress. And still further he says that polygamy discourages and prevents the illegitimate intercourse of the sexes. Very well-said, O King! And if you had said that if we had a law permitting murder, or theft, there would be no murder or theft! Truly there is no offense without a law. He also insinuates a defence of polygamy by alluding to the evil practices of christians; but we do not suppose it is any defence to one man that another sins, or commits a like crime to the one with which he is charged.

But we are running into an answer to the "King," which we do not wish to make.—But we must be excused with a few words more. The "King" is pleased to give publicity to the name of the Editor of the Gazette—for which we are thankful. His fling at our familiarity with perjury, and his vulgar picture of our leading a choir of cyprians in the front parlor of some fashionable haunt of those wretches, are harmless. Such attempts will hurt no one but the "King" himself.

Once more, and we stop for this week. The "King" says that in his opinion we are much mistaken in regard to the practice of the Mormons on Beaver Island. That may be; but we understand it to be one of their practices, to "indulge" in polygamy, or the having of more than one wife, and if that would not consign a man, so practicing, to a term at Jackson, if he lived in Oakland county, we are unable to understand the following section, to be found in the Revised Statutes of 1846, page 651.

Sec. 4. If any person who has a former husband or wife living, shall marry another person, or shall continue to cohabit with such second husband or wife, in this State, he or she shall, except in the cases mentioned in the following section, be deemed guilty of the crime of polygamy, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the State Prison not more than five years, or in the county jail not more than one year, or by fine, not exceeding five hundred dollars.

The cases excepted by the next section, are those in which the former husband or wife shall continue beyond seas, or voluntarily be absent for five years, the party not knowing the other to be living within that time, &c.

If there is any man on Beaver Island who has two or more wives, we take it that such a man, if he were living in Oakland county would not only be guilty of a crime and liable to be sent to State prison, but he would be prosecuted for the crime, convicted, and sent to Jackson.

Our readers will observe that, though Mr. Z. B. Knight's name stands at the head of the Gazette as editor, he takes it quite amiss our naming him in connection with this controversy. Yet he drags in the name of "King Strang," who has no connection with the Islander, as though never a word appeared in it but by his special direction. This is complimentary to the publishers of the Islander, and they will appreciate it at precisely the value of—a little fib.

Mr. Knight thinks the fairness of the Islander in giving the article of the Gazette entire, entitles it to a like return. But as he had only invoked civil war and all its attendant evils on us, and is not in the least disposed to enter into a controversy as to the propriety of that measure, he is willing to let the two articles have their weight with his readers, by giving one and withholding the other. That is not the way we Mormons mete out justice.

We do not congratulate ourselves on the prompt admission of Mr. Knight that the argument is against him on one or two points, and his attempt to change the issue and draw off on the plea of indifference from the rest. The man who will invite civil war, invoke fire and sword, to extirpate evils about which he is too indifferent to pursue a controversy of his own opening, is either cruel or corrupt to the last degree; cruel, if the evils are not of the most aggravated nature—corrupt, if such evils do not challenge his constant attention while they continue.

In attempting to let himself down from the false position in which he had posted himself, as a watchman upon the republican walls, Mr. Knight has committed a greater error. He is guilty of prevarication—of falsehood.—Whereas, before he merely mistook the law—now he misrepresents the facts. He has told a falsehood to conceal his ignorance, and the cloak is not large enough to cover it.

Mr. Knight now says:

"We said (in the Gazette's last article) that the Mormons of Salt Lake City are in the admitted, open, flagrant, violation of the most sacred laws of the United States—they are living in polygamy. Whereupon the 'King' says he takes issue with us, and says there is no law of the United States against polygamy. In that he is right; and we plead to a loose expression that did not convey the meaning of our mind. What we should have said was that they were living so against the laws of every state in the Union. For we believe that there is no state which has not laws that will punish severely the crime, or misdemeanor, of polygamy. But we were caught by our brother, the 'King' and handled just as if he supposed we meant that the denizens of the Salt Lake Basin were violating a law of Congress. Pretty 'sharp practice' to be found in a seriously labored defence of Mormon Polygamy."

Again we take issue. We did not gain a victory over a "loose expression, which did not convey the meaning of his mind"—a mere lipsus lingue, which it required sharp practice to look out.

Mr. Knight's position, in his own language, was, "when we go to apply the laws of the United States, not locally inapplicable—the Mormon denizens of Salt Lake Basin are in an attitude condemned."—This is technical language, to designate such treaties and acts of Congress as are in general force throughout the confederation from those which are applicable to particular localities only. It being a rule of law that acts of Congress of a general and public nature do not, ipso facto, extend to territories, but only to the Federal States, this form of language has been adopted to extend those laws to the Territories.

Will the editor of the Gazette pretend that in using this language he did not mean "that the denizens of the Salt Lake Basin were violating a law of Congress?" Is he foolhardy enough to pretend that in saying "laws of the United States not locally inapplicable" he did not mean laws of the United States at all, but only State laws, applicable only to the body of the several counties of the States for which they were enacted, and not alike in any two States in the union?

Then what did Mr. Knight mean by asking members of Congress, (as he asserts in the Nov. article,) "why Congress was silent, and did not require the President to enforce the laws in Utah?" Does Mr. Knight mean to say that he thought the President could supersede the Governors of the several States, and assume to himself their prerogatives of enforcing "State laws, and that Congress could require him to do it?" This ignorance is worse than the other. If Mr. Knight will not own the truth, that he was both ignorant and malicious, no fib will help him out short of this, that all he has said on the subject, first and last, is a "loose expression," a lipsus lingue. Does he ever make any other than loose expressions?

The Gazette's article was made up more than any thing else of a tissue of complaints that the Mormons violated the law, and the President, Cabinet and Congress were grossly derelict of duty in not enforcing the laws and punishing the guilty; and now, forsooth, it was not laws of the U. S., it was not acts of Congress that were violated. It was for not enforcing the laws of the States, out of the States which enacted them, that the President, Cabinet and Congress are to be publicly impeached. That the editor of a leading political paper, in one of the cities of Michigan, should imagine that the President, Congress and the Cabinet could lawfully meddle with the execution of the State laws, exhibits a degree of stolidity we had never dreamed of. With so much dullness, we believe Mr. Knight will not himself pretend that his case is helped by the fact that these "State laws" were to be enforced in the Territory of Utah, over which they had not been extended. Yet to this depth has the editor of the Gazette degraded himself, to cover with a fib an error he had fallen into, in his haste to make criminals of the Mormons.

After defining his present position with such success, he states our argument on the subject of polygamy as follows:

"Then he follows up his case by alluding to the many instances recorded in the Old Testament, in which the men of God are represented as having lived in the practice of polygamy. May he be would have us all engage in the sacrifices, wars, murders, &c., which are there recorded. If the argument is good for anything, it is good proof that mankind should now-a-days live just as the children of Israel did two or three thousand years ago."

This again is false. The argument, if it proves anything, proves that men ought now to live as they ought to have lived two or three thousand years ago; not as they did live. Our position was that "according to the Old Testament God SANCTIONED and COMMANDED polygamy, not permitted and suffered it;" and that "the New Testament in no sense limits or revokes what is contained in the Old, and finally that the whole plan of salvation contemplates the adoption of the heirs of life into the polygamic families of polygamic Abraham and Jacob." So polygamy does not stand as a naked fact in history, to be judged by human wisdom. It stands in the scriptures as an institution and command of God. Does Mr. Knight put the murders and other crimes of that age on the same footing? or by what argument does he make obedience to the divine commandments equally heinous with the grossest crimes?

In the next paragraph the Gazette says: "The King insinuates a defence of polygamy by alluding to the evil practices of christians." We will not answer for "the King." He is abundantly able to answer for himself. The Islander did no such thing.

The Islander defended the Mormons against the charge of outraging law, decency, morality and humanity, by "regulating their domestic institutions in their own way," which the Gazette made against them. In that defence the Islander showed that among Mormons chastity was universal, whereas among christians, our accusers, pollution is the rule, chastity the exception; and against this showing the Gazette answers not a word.

The Islander shows historically that polygamic nations so universally respect the matrimonial obligations, that among them adultery is a rare and most detestable crime; whereas, among monogamic nations adultery is so common that the guilty men every where, and guilty women in most places, hold the most exalted and respected places in society, and fornication and adultery not only go unpunished, but undetected. And to this showing Mr. Knight is dumb. He admits beat in other points. To this he has no answer.

We never attempted to excuse the sins of Mormons, on a showing of the sins of christians. But when christians accuse Mormons of corrupting the public morals, we shall not fail to challenge a comparison between their cities and ours. They being judges, our morals are immeasurably better than theirs. Living in glass houses, let them beware how they throw stones.

What Mr. Knight pleases to call the "fling" at the familiarity of our accusers with perjury is history, and no fling. He began by a "fling" that if prosecuted, the Mormons would defend themselves with perjury. We replied, historically, that when accused heretofore they were prosecuted with perjury, defended with truth, our enemies being the judges.

If this is not sufficiently explicit, we will make it so by informing Mr. Knight that at the celebrated Mormon trials in the United States District Court at Detroit, the District Attorney, by a perversion of official authority, secured the selection of the jury from the whole panel, packing the jury as perfectly as though he had had the exclusive power of making a jury for the occasion.

Nine of the twelve jurymen were Whigs, and a majority were men of strong religious prejudices. On the prosecution an abundance of witnesses swore to every fact necessary to constitute the guilt of the defendants. On the most important points the venue was so laid that it was impossible to bring any contradictory testimony.

It is needless to say that on that trial the defendants were prejudged and foredoomed. So obvious was this fact, that one of the jurymen, immediately after bringing in his verdict, asked Mr. Strang why he did not challenge them all? who very frankly replied, "because there was not another name in the jury box, and I had RATHER TRUST YOU THAN THE EQUALLY PREJUDICED AND LESS HONEST MEN whom the Marshal had in attendance WAITING TO BE SUMMONED."

Yet on such a trial the defendants were all acquitted. Thus, on a political trial, supported by the weight of the federal government, in the conduct of which money was poured out like water, a jury of politicians, packed for the purpose of convicting the Mormons, have said on their solemn oath that the perjury was against us, the truth with us.

If anything further is necessary to show how unjust is this "fling" at the Mormons about adding perjury to conceal crime, it is found in the fact on this same trial that the District Attorney was perfectly conscious of the innocence of the defendants before he took a witness before the grand jury, and advised the abandonment of the prosecution, which other men insisted on carrying on, though they had only perjury to resort to wherewith to sustain it. On all these points we are prepared with the proof. On none will the Gazette take issue. He will not think it worth while to pursue the discussion.

The Gazette is pleased to suppose that polygamy improves morals only by rendering every kind of immorality moral. Such obtuseness might be expected, perhaps, in that quarter. We should not know where else to look after it.

Suppose in the city of PONTIAC there are a half dozen men who have each a wife of his own, and one or two other women who are not anybody's wives, but need to be. Suppose there are as many more who have each a wife of his own, and each occasionally his neighbor's wife also, or possibly three or four of them.

Suppose that in such a community there are a few women who let their charms to hire, and make merchandise of their crimes and shame, and find it a sufficiently vendible article to support themselves in better style than honest labor will procure. And to make the features like a christian city, suppose further, that nearly all the business men young and old, disclaim any pretensions to personal chastity, and allow without shame that if enticed by a healthy and respectable woman they would not wait to be asked a second time before they would commit adultery, and name any man greeney and prude who, with a fair opportunity, would not corrupt his neighbor's wife.

In contrast, suppose the city of DERAY, with about the same population, similarly situated, in the interior among an agricultural population, in which there are a dozen men with two or three wives each of their own, not one who has his neighbor's wife. Suppose that a virgin has not been corrupted there within the memory of the oldest inhabitant, and that there is no word in the language wherewith to name a house of ill fame.

Allow, if you please, that polygamy is against nature, morality and decency, is it not in this view far better than monogamy? We submit upon the attestation of all history, that such is the universal contrast between polygamic and monogamic nations, and this is not getting rid of crime, by merely ceasing to call it criminal. It is abolishing the thing, not the name of it.

It was not exactly necessary for the Gazette to furnish us a section from the Revised Statutes, to inform us of the law on the subject of polygamy. A few stray copies of that book are found here, and the laws therein contained, we are warranted in saying are better observed in this county than in any other county in Michigan.

As the Gazette persists in believing that this particular law is violated here with impunity, we will return its questions upon it by asking, "is it the admitted policy of the (State) administration to permit this business? Is polygamy sanctioned by our (State) government?" Why do these men extend their settlements from the Islands to the mainland, unless to get more wives than the Islands make room for?

"And yet the party pander to them, and men in high stations will associate with these outlaws, admit them to their society, and all for their votes. It is time that the laws of decency, the law of morality, the law of the State and the law of humanity should be shown some respect."

"It may be that" Gov. Bingham and the State officers "are very conscientious men." Perhaps their several oaths of office have impressed them with a fear, lest they should do something which the Constitution does not warrant. May be they are conscientious believers in the doctrine of popular sovereignty (in the counties,) or perhaps they may not know how to proceed to conviction against the guilty, since our very wise Legislature refused to provide for holding Circuit Courts in Manistowick county; and therefore may not be corruptly criminal in the matter. But is it not an unendurable disgrace that on the mere pretense that those who have sworn to faithfully execute the laws cannot conscientiously violate them, this guilt should go unpunished?

With President Pierce it must be a matter of conscience, for the Mormons of Utah have no vote. But here in Michigan, with the 650 Mormon votes cast for Gov. Bingham—ah, well, party does not weigh with him.—It must be conscience.

Open thine ear, reader. Did you ever hear of the $3,000 which found no takers where Mr. Wisner got no votes? Is it possible that this evil speaking of the Mormons is for want of votes? Was this little denunciation of the Mormons, which Mr. Knight will not now defend, really from his pen? or is it the overflowing bile of a disappointed candidate for Congress?—What a pity it is that money will not get Mormon votes as well as justice. Easier to pander and pay, than to merely do right.

Withal, how is it that Mr. Knight mouths no more about withholding all protection from the Mormons, and treating them as foreigners and enemies? Is he also looking after votes, and the interests of the party? Has he been cyphering on the value of the 1,900 votes at the next election, which party cannot reach; justice, truth and equality before the law alone can secure? Has it occurred to him that a State administration and six electoral votes, as well as the 4th Congressional District, may be in the hands of these injured men, whom no money will purchase, nothing but retraction reconcile to their calumniators?

GREAT TURTLE EMPIRE. We have read of the chagrin of Field Marshal Lord Raglan when Gen. Pelisser, a mere commander of Zouaves, without so much as consulting him, sent orders to his staff officers. But Pelisser won victories, and Rag-lan had to submit. He was only a Field Marshal, and his sovereign was more anxious for victories than questions of heraldry.

Not so his August Majesty, Jacob A. T. Wendell, Emperor of the continent of the Great Turtle. This vast fresh water continent stretches full threemiles north and south, and makes a very prominent lump in the straits of the same name, containing a population of five or six hundred souls, American, Irish, German, French, Indian and half-breeds, speaking four different languages.

Weaker powers ought to learn not to trifle with such a vast and teeming population. Considering the limited territory and sparse population of the United States it is a wonder they have taken so little pains to propitiate such a power. In the present dispensation of federal appointments, the Turtle has not much above twenty offices, though it furnished the Democrats in their late defeat all of 153 votes, and the neighboring Mormon Kingdom has all of one office, though at the same time it furnished but 695 votes.

Unjust as this was to the Great Turtle, the federal government actually tried to give two of these places (not four as the Union said) to these men of the Beavers. The spirited Emperor, Wendell, did not stand any such pranks. He trotted the commissions back to Washington, and let Mr. Secretary Guthrie know that he could take care of Turtledom, and all the region round about, without impertinent intermeddling.

CONFERENCE. We have not been able to find room for even a synopsis of the proceedings of the July Conference in this No. The place of meeting was in the splendid Enoch Park, and the first day was occupied by the prophet in preaching.

The morning of the second day, very early, all the heads of families came to the place of sacrifice, and offered their victims. Upwards of 200 victims were slain. Preaching and the eucharist occupied the forenoon, during which the feast was prepared, and tables spread in the park, sufficient to accommodate the whole assembly.

We have never seen tables at this place so loaded with the good things of the land, and never in any place seen such general abundance, and every voice was joyous. Among the guests were a large body of Indians.—More remained than was eaten.

The Conference continued in session five days, there being two discourses daily, except the last day, which was entirely occupied with business.

Five persons were ordained to the Apostleship, and there are three places now vacant. Of the quorum there remained in good standing only four, Ebenezer Page, Phineas Wright, L. D. Hickey and Warren Post. The case of Samuel Bacon was finally disposed of, and he degraded. Those now ordained are Anson W. Prindle, Edward Chidester, Isaac Pierce, L. D. Tubbs and James Hutchins.

Considerable numbers were ordained to all the other quorums, from the Twelve down, but more than usual care was taken to place no person in any quorum who would not faithfully attend to the duties of the calling.

Among the most cheering things of this interview, is a dispensation of baptism for the dead at this place. Heretofore that sacrament has only been administered at Voree.

CONFERENCE AT LAKE MOR-MON.

A party of some fifty odd persons left here the 13th to attend the Conference on Holy Island, and made the passage across Lake Michigan in fish boats, the same day, camping on shore. The next day they made the run up Pine River and Lake Mormon to Holy Island, when they completed the preparation of the grounds, and camped, many of the settlers joining in the work.

The 15th the boats were out bringing in the settlers. It was a glad and glorious sight in this primeval wildness of forest and water, such a gathering together of the faithful and believing on a land they will soon make a garden.

After the congratulation of mutual friends in this happy reunion, the ensign was run up a staff fastened in the top of a tall maple, and the services commenced. They consisted of a relation of the persecutions suffered by the Mormons, and especially the efforts to dispossess them of that country, and a solemn thanksgiving and praise of God for their happy deliverance from civil war and from threatened persecution. After the administrations of sacraments, &c, the Conference closed, and the camp broke up. Such a scene has not been witnessed in that Lake since the earth came new from the hand of God. May it oft be repeated.

The day after Conference men and women went together to the mouth of Pine River and erected a gallows and hung in effigy the men who made the murderous attack on two boat loads of unarmed Mormons there two years since. Had the men been in hand instead of the effigies, they would have doubtless shared the same fate.

The following day all hands got together and put up the body of a synagogue, for a future place of worship. It is a block house, of excellent workmanship. Early the sixth day all returned, most happy with their excursion.

The Feast of First Fruits is appointed permanently, to take place the day next preceding the third Sabbath before the Autumnal Equinox, (counting the day of the Equinox, if it occurs on Sabbath the first.) This year it will occur the last day of August.

F. JOHNSON & CO.

Have purchased and are continuing to purchase, for cash, a full assortment of fresh goods, by which they are enabled to sell at BUFFALO and DETROIT Prices.

DRY GOODS.

Calicoes, of various patterns. Mous de Lains and Bareges. Lawns, Shawls, &c.

A new supply of Bonnets, of handsome finish.

Book and Barred Muslins. Groceries and Fishing Tackle, and various other stores.

Stoves of the most approved pattern and material, for sale. 68aa.

CITY STORE, SAINT JAMES,

ONE DOOR NORTH OF THE DOCK, WATER ST.

J. M. WAIT has just opened a large assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Tin ware, Hardware, Cutlery, Iron, Nails, Nail-ropes, Glass, Ready Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, also a full supply of Fishermen's Tackle. Thankful for past patronage, I hope to merit a liberal share in the future, by selling cheaper than the cheapest for ready pay; cash not refused.

Saint James, June 15th, 1855. 70504

This is a bid for a seat in Congress, which he would have Documents Accompanying the Report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, of the Michigan House of Representatives.

(Continued.)

But not only does the treaty of Washington encourage the perpetuity of the tribes, but it directly creates a dependence, which is fatal to individual effort. It either does too much, or too little—too much, because it is just enough to lead a savage mind to expect absolute support from it, while it cannot supply—too little, because fostering this idea, it does not satisfy it. It causes artificially, as it were, occasions of abundance, followed by want, which are so incident to their barbarity. The savage seems never to learn frugality by experience. Consequently the occasions of receiving the treaty benefits is one of feasting and excess. He then practices the only lesson which suffering can teach him—that is, to enjoy to repletion, what the present provides. If he wants clothing, he believes that his annuity will provide it. If winter is approaching, he expects to purchase his necessities by the same means. It is a fund on which, while in expectation, his imagination draws limitless draughts. Yet, until it comes, he will wait for it, and the best months of summer are often spent in loitering around the place of payment, preparatory to receiving it. Finally when he receives it, he parts with it prodigally, and is at length driven to the forest or the lakes to obtain the means of paying his debts and banishing starvation. This is the effect, more especially where he has no ascertained location, and where the beasts of the chase or the fisheries proffer him an opportunity to follow his natural pursuits; but after these have disappeared, when the necessity for a change of habits has come, the idea is still left in his mind that there is a power beyond himself, from which he may receive support.

Another evil of these pecuniary benefits is, that they attract around the Indians vicious and avaricious whites, whose sole object is to plunder them. These men set them examples of immorality which are fatal to the progress of civilization, and in return for their money supply them with the means of dissipation. The time of payment is notoriously an occasion of debauchery, with some of the bands. Thus we see that, while these annuities foster the vices of their wild condition, they are also the means of imparting to them those which belong to civilized man.

The object of removal to the west of the Mississippi seems to have been two-fold—to benefit the whites by relieving them of the residence within the States of savage tribes, and the Indians by placing them beyond the influence of the whites. It has always seemed to me but an experiment as to how much demoralization the tribes may be subjected to. It keeps them in a transition state of society—in a moral atmosphere which is deadly to all virtue. Just at the period when the bad influences beginning to disappear in one place, they are sent to another, where they find them in full force, and are again subjected to the plenitude of their evil sway. The vices which are most baneful to them are incident to new societies, where men are beyond the arm of power and the voice of public opinion.

Now, the Indians of Michigan have survived the destroying influences which mark their first intercourse with the whites; the desperate and immoral adventurers, who, either as traders or settlers, from their earliest and most intimate acquaintance with civilized man, have disappeared before the mellowing influences of organized society. They are now surrounded by Churches and Schools, by examples of morality and institutions of government—by God-fearing and law-abiding citizens. The rise of laws and the increase of manners, have been so gradual, that they have brought their train. They have had an opportunity to appreciate that vice is not civilization—to witness the process of transforming a wilderness to the seat of commerce and of arts—to the home of religion and law. They have witnessed the beginnings of agriculture, at a period when the failure of the beasts of the chase, their chief support in a wild state, has taught them to look for other means of sustenance. They see the bowels of the earth yielding up their treasures of the mighty engines of toil, which the genius of man has invented and his labor constructed. The secrets of civilization—the source of its comforts and triumphs, are before them. Their belief in the divinity of national objects, a belief which, to my observation at least, seems to attach only to those solid bodies, as rocks, the metals, &c., which they had no means to render useful, and, in fact, no use to which to apply them, has melted away before labors, which have reduced them to possessions, demonstrated their utility, and unveiled them of the attributes of unconquerable strength and impenetrable mystery, which awakened their superstitious reverence. Thus, they have had peculiar opportunities, both of secular and religious advancement, for they have remained stationary until the time has ripened, which Nature seems to have fixed for their elevation, until not only has the necessity of progress become apparent, but observation has taught them an experience which directs to practical effort. Now, remove them to the west of the Mississippi, and what do they find there? Why, the very state of necessity from which they escaped; the wild country would renew their love of wild pursuits, because it would present an opportunity for their enjoyment, and the profligate trader and pioneer would resume their evil sway.

At best, the policy of a motion is but a temporary expedient. Its sole object as a means of civilization, (to keep the Indians from the whites,) can never be attained; it is but putting off an evil day. The time must come, when they will find rest somewhere. Emigration is pouring in from the Eastern and Western Ocean, and the settlements of our people have already covered the face of the Continent with the boundaries of States. Eventually they must be surrounded; whatever of difficulty or of evil may arise from the meeting of the races, is and will be confined to no particular spot. Until the spirit of our people is occupied by new enterprises—until there is no longer untrodden fields to tempt their enterprise and employ their energies, the tide of emigration will roll on. He but little understands that spirit—but faintly appreciates the rapidity with which settlements are formed who does not see that in the future, and that not far distant, somewhere upon this vast continent, the Indians must be aggregated with the whites, or driven from the face of the earth. Motion will then be impossible; the first of these alternatives must occur—perhaps it will bring with it the last—but if it does, it will be because of the inherent weakness of the race, and therefore no policy can avert it. Systems would then be impotent; I, for one, am willing to try the experiment, and desire to try it here, where their present condition, both socially and politically, seem to proffer the greatest assurance of success; but in order to do this, there should be an immediate dissolution of the ties which binds them to the general government, provided that such dissolution shall be based upon the extinction of the tribal organizations; the abolition of annuities and all direct payments; the localization of each individual; the division of the lands into townships, and if possible into counties; and lastly, the immediate enjoyment of the rights and assumption of the duties of citizenship, as they may do under the Constitution.

Deprived of the forms of their ancient organization, they would part with the last link that unites them to barbarism. No longer possessing the annuities, they would cease to be the prey of the avaricious and dishonest. Armed with political power, they would possess the sole element of equality known to the law, and would attain an importance in the State which would render their advancement the subject of popular concern. Forced to sustain themselves, they must either labor or die. The benefits which still are due to them under the treaty of Washington, should be devoted to their advancement in the new state. The large amount of $200,000, which is to be paid for the reservations, should be disposed of for the encouragement of arts, agriculture and education; but under no circumstances should it be paid to them in money, or in any other manner placed within the cupidity of the whites. In this opinion I am confirmed by the Hon. Henry C. Gilbert, the head of this agency, whose official career has been an uninterrupted effort to prepare the tribes under his charge for the enjoyment of the privilege of the Constitution. I sincerely trust that your committee have called to their aid his lucid and truthful series of reports to the government concerning their condition. The lands west of the Mississippi should be commuted for distinct allotments in contiguous tracts in this State, and these should be so secured to them that for a time they shall not have the power to lease, sell, contract to sell, or in any way part with the possession, or right to them. The common school should be introduced among them, and such encouragement given to the promotion of religion as is compatible with the institutions of our State, and the freedom of conscience. Every trace of governmental supply of their individual necessities should be eradicated, but with this exception, that such aid as shall be necessary to locate them in their new habitations should be extended to them. Upon all these points I trust that the committee will endeavor to receive an expression of the opinion of the Legislature during the present session. The last payment under the treaty will be made next summer, so that the necessity for prompt attention is apparent.

It has been doubted whether the Indian can adapt himself to fixed habitation and civilized pursuits. His nature has been supposed to be intrinsically different from that of the whites. To the majority of persons he is that myth of children's books, the pictorial Indian with feathers in his head and war-club in his hand. The suspicion that in any place he presents a different aspect, that within the limits of the State he may be seen in communities wearing a hat and breeches, and almost, if not quite as ignorant of the shape and use of the murderous weapon of the picture as they are themselves, does not enter their mind.

A strange ignorance, colored by romance and prejudice, (I am glad that there is little of the last,) prevails as to his actual condition. Because his habits are not like ours, we deem him instinctively wild; thus disregarding the distinction between what man is, and what he may become. Overlooking the fact of how gradual has been the increase of civilization among ourselves, how complex is its details, how each generation receives it perfected, yet how progressive it is, because it adapts itself to the changes in the condition of man, how by constant observation and education we are familiar with facts, which ages have devolved and understand arts, which, a few centuries ago, the greatest genius would have deemed miraculous, and above all, overlooking the natural necessity, which forces man to civilized pursuits, and mistaking artificial wants for those of nature, we wonder why, in a few years, barbarous tribes do not comprehend the mode of our lives, the machinery of our acts and the ornaments of our luxury. We forget that they have imbibed their customs, as we do ours, with the first glance of their infant eyes, that they have grown with their growth, and by force of habit have entered into all their ideas of existence. We forget that, nourished in the very lap of nature, her grandeur has become luxury to them, and that her rugged features do not present the frown of suffering, or the austerity of wildness. We forget that they are not the heirs of a polite and learned ancestry, that they have not resided in countries where over-population or any other cause has driven them to labor and fixtude of habitation; we forget years of hostility and frequent motions; the strifes against engines of war, unknown to their rude understandings, and the hopeless struggles against vices, not their own, and the fatal combats with diseases, whose first presence was their first knowledge of their deadly power. We forget these as reasons why they have not advanced, but we recognize in their bitter fruits, in decay and extermination, the manifestations of a destiny of ruin; we forget their continued residence in far off wilds, where but few of the arts of civilization penetrate. And lastly, we forget that, when brought into contact with us, our arts and sciences, our domestic economy and governmental institutions, systems perfected before they knew them, which their observation had never revealed to them, nor their education taught them to expect, must present a thousand mysteries which their "unprepared minds" cannot solve. We do not see that no efficient plan has been adopted for their civilization, but that the duty of government of States, has, in the case of our Indians at least, had the effect to embarrass and prevent the consummation of its humane designs. Why are they not like us, is the stern inquiry?—Why have they not ascended from the simplest to the most complicated form of society? Why cannot they appreciate our civilization before they experience the wants upon which it is based?

But the Indians of Michigan have advanced in civilization—their present condition, as contrasted with that of portions of the same tribe in other localities, demonstrates the progress they have made. An observation of them from boyhood has taught me the truth of this. For instance, the Chippewas who inhabit that portion of the British possessions which includes the shores of Lake Superior from Gros Cap to Pigeon River, are almost as wild as at the discovery of the continent. Some little change has been wrought in their dress by the trade with the Hudson's Bay Company, but white population is scarce. Subsistence may still be attained by the chase. Their numbers are not large, and their country is in its primeval wilderness. They are a fierce, strong and barbarous race, exhibiting few implements that are not supplied by Nature, and no arts which are not absolutely connected with their roving habits. When we come to the bands of Minnesota and Wisconsin, we find them a step in advance of the north shore Indians. Not so wild, but more vicious, with more of the utensils and comforts of civilization—but, perhaps with less of the virtue, hardihood and courage of the others. But the Indians of Michigan, whose intercourse with the whites has been more frequent, and whose natural necessities have attained greater force, exhibit a marked superiority. Their dress, thoughts, habits and pursuits are absolute refinement when compared with those of their British brethren, while their morality and constitutional hardihood are greater than those of the Minnesota and Wisconsin bands. These differences not only evince improvement, but a capacity to improve.

But the world generally and necessarily have but imperfect opportunities to appreciate either their actual progress, or the impediments which beset their path. Our standard of comparison is confined to our position, and that is the height which we stand above them. Few persons have seen them in the different phases of their being; there is absolutely little in their condition to make them the object of popular consideration. The negro race has attracted sympathy and aid because they have political elements in their situation, which affect the public destiny. The world has recognized their capacity to become civilized; it has become a fixed fact; yet they were, a few centuries ago, as barbarous, and certainly not esteemed of so great mental ability as the Indians. The difference is, that they have constantly been within the reach of improvement—that they have been stationary so long, that time enough has elapsed to develop within them the necessities of their being. With the Indian, this has not been so; shut up in the forests, surrounded only by pernicious examples, at first the friend, then the enemy, and at last the dependent of the whites, he has in no manner become identified with the interests of the country, and has been too often regarded as a mere cumberer of a place on the earth, which a more energetic and useful man might occupy. We are too prone to believe in the innate difference of races—too apt to draw comparisons favorable to our inherent superiority; we forget that civilization has been a wave, tossed from century to century, from age to age, from race to race, bearing nations for a time upon its top, but leaving them in the decline of its trough. We seem to regard it as the invention of our genius—the peculiar progeny of our superior intellect. Yet all the civilized world are not civilized in the ordinary acceptance of the term. Our own country demonstrates that portions even of the European race have not attained to so great an advancement as is exhibited by the Indians of this State; but they wear the dress, obey the laws, and live in the habitations which characterize civilization, still, they are not fully developed. They are aggregated with those who are—nothing more; but we do not doubt their capacity—do not wonder that thousands of them neither write or read, or they have no fixed pursuit, and understand neither art or trade. It never strikes us, though they may be induced to vice, that it is inherent, or that it is necessary to send them away from us to learn letters, morality or manners. They are of the same race as ourselves, and consequently, the highest development of the race is the standard of the development they may attain, and we let them remain, wisely and justly I think, to rise, as time and opportunity shall permit. We have the principle, but it has not been comprehensive enough. It has not extended to the universal brotherhood of man—it has been limited by races.

The fact then that the Indians of Michigan are not completely civilized, is not proof that they shall continue so. It is only lately that the time came for their improvement, and then they were met by a system which discouraged and prevented them. No sooner was the new Constitution formed, than a marked change came over their habits. They had then a power to remain within the State. Their settlements increased. A dispensation for the acquirement of fixed habitation developed itself, until now almost every band has purchased tracts of land out of its annuities. In the fisheries, in the lumber trade, in navigation, and even in merchandise, they find congenial employment. Individual enterprise begins to display itself. The communistic spirit of their old state has no existence, save where it is directly fostered by the system of the treaty which still holds them to their tribal organization. With very few exceptions they are christianized. The elders among them see the necessity for education and industry—the effect is visible in the deportment of the rising generation. The whites among whom they reside regard them with kindness, and as so progressive in their present tendencies that their absence from the State would be a positive evil. Entire self-dependence, a full enjoyment of political rights, seem to be the only requisite to their certain advancement. It is an honor to our State that she has so framed her Constitution, that these ends may be attained.

I recommend to the committee to procure, if possible, the passage of an act by the Legislature expressive of the willingness of the State that they shall remain within her limits, and designating to the general government such a plan for the severance of relations between it and them, as shall leave them, so far as possible, in a condition to become useful citizens of the State.

In reviewing the system of the treaty of Washington, I have considered it solely as bearing upon the civilization of the race. Its defects are, to a great extent, those of necessity. The government does not, nor ever can, possess all the powers necessary to consummate its humane intentions.

I am respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
J. LOGAN CHIPMAN.

MORMONISM.

This is a fruitful topic with some of our cotemporaries, and evidently puzzles their philosophy not a little. All concur in the idea that it is an evil; but how are we to get rid of it?—The Albany Transcript puts forth the absurd idea that government should put it down by force of arms. It says:

"In view of the fact that this society is the vilest excrescence as a religious community—that it is utterly deficient in the grand primal elements of truth and principle—that it presents an antagonism of the deadliest hate and most determined character to all that is noblest, purest, best in our national institutions—and finally, that it is increasing in numbers and strength so rapidly that its chiefs laugh at our impotence as a government to avenge our own wrongs in our own territory—in view of all this, we ask, is it not time that firm and immediate action was taken by our federal authorities, at least to check and repress the extension of the evil, if eradication cannot be pursued?"

To this the Knickerbocker replies in the following tart remarks:

"It is all well to say 'repress the evil,' and 'put down Mormonism,' but how is it to be done? Would our friend wage a civil war against the Saints? If he would, what good would that effect? Did the editor of the Transcript ever know a religion to be put down by artillery? But granting that gunpowder would sweeten the morals of Utah, where in the Constitution has the government a right to resort to such power for any such purpose? Congress has certain well-established limits within which it can act, but within these limits we find no authority that would warrant the government in waging war against a people because their marriages are such as Noah, Abraham and Moses believed in. We say that Congress has no power to act in the premises. If the editor of the Transcript thinks differently, he will confer a favor on us by pointing out the chapter and verse. If Congress can put down the Mormons for having a dozen wives, why not our friends the Shakers for having no wives at all? The Shakers believe that marriage is a sin—a doctrine which would depopulate the world in a century. The editor of the Transcript says that bigamy is injurious to the best interests of the State. If that be so, what must we say of a faith that places an embargo on the supply of children?—an article without which the United States would soon become a howling wilderness. If the Transcript would preserve its consistency, it must not only war against the Mormons, but against our broad-brimmed friends of Niskayuna. Will it do so? We pause for a reply. Face the music, Jakey, and define your position."

It is always best to count the cost of an undertaking before it is commenced, and also to consider the means of accomplishing it. Perhaps that some of our cotemporaries can show that the government has both the authority and the means of suppressing religious evils at will. If so, we hope they will do it.—Dispatch.

ECONOMIZE.—Corn meal is more nutritious and healthy and a great deal cheaper than wheat flour, and, if properly cooked, is quite as palatable. Rice, peas and beans, are among the cheapest and most nutritious articles of food. There are many ways in which the poor might economize without any sacrifice of health or happiness. Tea and coffee are needless expenses. Cold water, after one becomes habituated to its use, tastes much better than any beverage man can invent. This I know by ten years' experience, having in that time seldom tasted tea or coffee. Many people are complaining of high prices of provisions and hard times, who might live quite as comfortably as they do now, at one half the expense, if they would only correct their perverted appetites.—J. Hacker.

Men of great genius, but little heart,—are they not like the aurora borealis, whose magnificence awes the arctic voyager to silence? But for what are they good? With all their splendor they cause no flower to bloom; in all their light there is no life.

A noble person needs but a plain garment to set him off; a beautiful picture but a simple frame; a great thought is better dressed in the simplest language. But all these need a spirit of understanding to be appreciated.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 6.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, JULY 25, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 73.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

A few weeks since we published an account of the trial of the murderers of the lamented Gunnison, in which the Mormons of Utah were charged with screening them from just punishment. The following letter from an old Saint Louis trader who was present, though crude and uncouth in its style, probably puts the matter in its true light. After reading this, who can wonder that there is no permanent peace with the Indians. Not only were United States officers engaged in corrupting the Indian women during the sitting of the court, but a woman—a prisoner in chains—was violated by her keepers, before the eyes of her husband, chained by her side, and for this no redress is offered. Yet this nation is scandalized with the corrupting tendency of Mormonism:

St. Louis, May 24, 1855.

MR. EDITOR: Having just arrived from Salt Lake City on the fifth of this month, in company with the mail from Utah, I have been not a little surprised at seeing an article copied from the New York Daily Times, in relation to the trial of the murderers of Capt. Gunnison and his party, who were massacred on the morning of the 26th October, 1853. After reading the article carefully, and being there at the trial of the Indians in March last, I feel that it is my duty to the public, and to Utah, to give a true statement of the facts as they existed; for I must say, fearless of contradiction, that the articles that have appeared in the public prints, in relation to this matter, are perfectly absurd, and nine-tenths of them are falsehoods, and I challenge the writers to get Col. Steptoe, or Chief Justice Kinney to endorse their statements; or any one of the officers under Col. Steptoe's command, except the writer himself, who is without conscience, truth or honor; I know not who he is, nor care, either for his office or the position he holds, I again say, he cannot get Col. Steptoe, nor any honorable man under his command, to endorse his statements.

It is true that Col. Steptoe was obliged to bribe the chief of the Indians, for he considered it the only way to get hold of the murderers, and that too at a pretty round sum. This deal for the Indians was between the chief Kanosbe and the Colonel—the chief knew that the Colonel required that of him, that he would not do himself; that is, to turn traitor to his own flesh and blood, (the people of his own band,) particularly as in that murder the chief was unquestionably as deep in the mud as they were in the mire; and, as I have been credibly informed by the interpreters, the chief had stated at different times, that he had no objections to receive the Colonel's "blankets and horses," but he did object to surrendering up his people, that were concerned in the murder, to be hung up by the neck like dogs.

And what took place at the trial, goes to prove this statement; for the evidence shows that the chief had rather got the Colonel down on the trade, for the Indians that the chief had given up were not the ones that committed the deed; but were accessory to the crime, by assisting the party on. To substantiate this, I will here state that two of the Indians given up were very old men, (one of them was blind,) another of the party was a squaw.

The Colonel ordered the question put to the chief, while in the witness stand, why he gave up this old blind man, when he had no hand in the murder. The chief answered, "that he had agreed to give up so many Indians, and that old man was blind, and of no account, and he did not care if they did kill him." So it was discovered to be a swindling game on the part of the chief, and the Colonel remarked to me that he had been deceived by him; for when he made the bargain with the chief he promised to bring more Indians as witnesses to establish their guilt, and that he himself would be the most important witness. But when he was put upon his oath he knew nothing (you will bear in mind that the witness had already obtained the blankets and horses) notwithstanding all this treachery on the part of the chief, of which the Colonel and the court were fully aware, the correspondent of the New York Daily Times states that "the witnesses were tampered with by Col. Babbitt, a tool of Brigham Young." He says that, notwithstanding all this, the prisoners' guilt was proven without doubt.

Why don't the writer give the evidence, so that the public may judge of the matter? When the witness was upon the floor, the question was put to him by the court, "Has Col. Babbitt or any one else spoken or made presents to you since the trial commenced?" The answer was distinctly, "No one excepting Col. Steptoe."

Col. Steptoe then asked the witness why he had misrepresented things to him; that when the first conversation took place, he (the witness) told him he knew considerable, but when put on his oath he knew nothing. The witness said "he did not know why he'd forgotten, unless it was that when he was talking to the Colonel about the bribe he then talked for the bribe, but now he was talking for his people." The question was then put to him: Do you know the nature of an oath? He said he did not. He was then asked if he knew there was a God, or a Supreme being? He said that all he knew about him, was what the white man had told him; but he had never seen the person, nor made his acquaintance; but he could not believe the white man, for some told him that God lived in the air, and others said he lived under ground; in fact, he said, he did not believe that the white man knew any more about him than he did.

There was no evidence against the prisoners of any more weight than the chief's, and yet this is called positive proof by the writer in the Times. I ask what reliance can be placed upon such correspondents? He further states that "Col. Babbitt was the tool of Brigham Young." I think if he had needed a tool he would not have taken an outsider, as to my certain knowledge the Colonel and the Governor are not on the best of terms; and I know that Gov. Young had nothing to do with the case, for Col. Steptoe assured me that he engaged Col. Babbitt himself to defend the Indians; and his instructions to him was to acquit them if possible, since he learned how little the Indian testimony could be relied upon; and further, Col. Steptoe spoke to me in the highest terms of Gov. Young, in my last conversation with him, previous to leaving the Valley.

In regard to Cols. Steptoe and Babbitt, I know that they were on the most intimate terms; and Mr. Babbitt's course in relation to the trial, was highly commendable; much credit is due him for his zeal, and unremitting labors in behalf of humanity, in the case of the two poor old Indians, whose only chance of defence, in their loneliness and ignorance, was through their counsel, Col. Babbitt. I regret that I am not able to say as much for the counsel on the part of the people; for I presume he felt somewhat indignant at the repudiation of a certain code of morals, which had been attempted to be introduced among the feminine copper colors, by some of the professions, whose generous philanthropy towards the benighted heathen led them to condescend to become their preceptors, in some of the arts of civilization; and these practical white teachers, after luxuriating in the endearing charms of squaw-ology, having forgotten to redeem their pledges, were called upon publicly in court by a red cyprian to fulfill their agreements; backed by her brother-in-law, the chief Arrapene, as counsel, who took upon himself all the usual airs of the profession in imitation of our courts, he, with great dignity, but rather unceremoniously, interrupted the speech of the eloquent gentleman in his plea, who was then addressing the court, and insisted upon the immediate payment of red paint, blankets and a looking-glass, the terms agreed upon, and assuming the office of judge and executive, he threatened instant vengeance by his band of Utes if not complied with.

This being a new case upon the docket, and the prosecution somewhat peremptory, the case also appearing clear to the court, and the defendants being present, and making no demur, the aforesaid articles were produced to the satisfaction of the plaintiff, whose counsel, Arrapene, feeling a little elated in his new profession, said, "I can talk as well as the white lawyers," and demanded one dollar for his fee, which being paid, he, with his sister-in-law, left the court.

The above was unquestionably a serious interruption to the learned gentlemen, just then pathetically addressing the court, in relation to Indian outrages; and must necessarily somewhat ruffle the equanimity of his feelings; and it would not be surprising if some charges in the shape of paint, blankets, looking-glass, &c., should be included in the mileage, or contingent expenses of some of our professional gentlemen, as it cannot possibly be that such luxuries can be enjoyed out of the small salaries allowed by general government.

The correspondent of the Times writes that the court charged the jury to the effect that "they must either bring in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, or clear them," &c. This I deny, in toto. The court charged the jury that "if they were satisfied from the evidence given that the prisoners were guilty, they should bring in a verdict accordingly; if innocent of murder, they should so bring in a verdict; but if satisfied they were accessories to the crime, their verdict should be in accordance."

I must here say that much credit is due to Chief Justice Kinney, for the able manner in which he presided in this case. I will admit that such a charge as the correspondent referred to was asked of the court by the counsel for the prosecution, but no such charge was given; for Chief Justice Kinney is too well versed in law to be swerved from his duty by such suggestions.

I will now call your attention to that portion of the article in which the correspondent states that he was present at the trial, and does know there was a special agent sent there by Gov. Young to communicate with the jury; this agent, he says, was one Huntington; what communication said Huntington brought to the jury, he does not say; I was there myself during the trial, but never heard anything of this until I saw it in the Times; but this I can say, that this same Huntington is, and has been for several years employed by the general government as Indian interpreter, and was at that time and upon that occasion employed by Doct. Hurt, the Indian agent for Utah.

The writer also states, as a notorious fact, that Brigham Young commanded Mr. Carrington, the Prosecuting Attorney for Salt Lake county, to wrest the prisoners from the hands of Col. Steptoe. The circumstances connected with this I am also acquainted with, having received the particulars from Col. Babbitt and Mr. Huntington; and from the little regard for truth displayed by the correspondent, I feel compelled to relate it. You will bear in mind, as I stated before, that one of the prisoners was a female; these Indians were all confined in the soldiers' barracks, and a few days after Mr. Huntington and Col. Babbitt were sent for by the husband of this squaw, who stated to them, as they were there chained down as prisoners, that his wife was ravished by the soldiers before his eyes, and wanted to know if this was the way that white men treated their prisoners.

As soon as Col. Steptoe learned of this, he at once removed them, and Col. Babbitt applied to Judge Shaver for a writ of habeas corpus, which was also the duty of their counsel, as the Indians were held in prison, out of the district in which the crime was committed for which they were on trial. This writ, however, was denied by the court, upon the grounds that the evidence was not properly before them. This last I had from Judge Shaver himself, and I know that Gov. Young had nothing to do in the matter. But justice demanded that those prisoners should be removed from that den of infamy and corruption.

The writer in the Times may think it all right to subject the poor ignorant Indians to violence and shame in an enlightened civilized country like our own. But this much I can say in his behalf, that for his unprincipled falsehoods in relation to this trial, and of Gov.

Young and the people of Utah, he is unworthy to be classed with honorable men, or admitted into decent society.

I will not assert, but appearances strongly indicate, that he is one of those men who bear upon their persons the indelible impress of a corrupt association with those very Indians that called forth publicly from Gov. Young the just and scathing rebuke, about which the writers in the Times and Herald were led to so unwarrantable an attack upon a people whom these brutes had sought to corrupt and reduce to their degraded standard of morality; and this, no doubt, was the cause of their writing their falsehoods to the above named papers, in the hopes of covering their infamy.

I have more things to communicate, but as I am afraid that I have already trespassed too far upon your columns, I forbear for the present.

Yours, &c.,
THOMAS S. WILLIAMS.

A PREDICTION OF THE PRESENT WAR.

The Rev. John Cumming, D.D., of the Scotch church, London, in a lecture delivered in Exeter Hall in the year 1847, pronounced, among other matters, the prophetic words written below. They are copied from his "Apocalyptic Sketches."

"Having explained the pouring out of the six preceding vials, the learned lecturer proceeds with the seventh—his text is Rev. xvi. 17 to 21.

"The seventh vial is ready to be poured out, or if not already pouring out, we are upon the very verge of its being so. It trembles in the hands of the angel. We may expect that during the action of this vial, the mountaineer in his fastnesses—the miner in his subterranean caves—the voyager upon the ocean's bosom—the Arab in his desert—the Moslem in his mosque—the Cossack in his Steppes—the King upon his throne—the mother in her household—the babe in the cradle—all will feel its vibrations, receive the taint of its influence, and respond in a thousand echoes to the voice from above, 'It is done.'

"There will be rocking thrones; there will be subverted dynasties; there will be dislocated systems; there will be nations scattered and shaken as by a whirlwind; and the hearts of the great and the mean, the rich and the poor trembling for fear of the things coming on earth.

"Now you will notice that under the seventh vial the ten-kingdom form is no longer to be the distinctive characteristic of the Romish nations; they are to assume a new shape; they will be divided into a tripartite shape; three great masses will be the ultimate form into which all the nations of Europe and christendom will be divided; as soon as you see three great leading powers coming into collision, with broad Europe for the battle field, and the evening of the world for the hour of the conflict, you may expect that the downfall of Babylon and the advent of Christ and the dawn of the millennium are near. It is probable that this tripartite division will consist of France leading its hosts upon the one side, as the great partisan of the Papacy; the Autocrat of all the Russians, who has more than once played a cruel game, may lead the second part; and I have some idea that this old England of ours, so illustrious by its sainted sufferers, its noble army of martyrs, its devoted christians, its preached gospel, its spreading christianity, its circulated Bibles, will be also the third part, and when the conflict come, it will be as of old, England against the world, the truth of God against the apostacy of Satan and the infidelity of man."

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, JULY 26, 1855.

PONTIAC GAZETTE AGAIN.

The Gazette is out in a new attack on the Mormons, of so singular a character that we cannot forbear giving it our readers as a literary curiosity:

WHERE SOME HORSES WENT.—About two weeks ago some five or six horses were stolen in the neighborhood of Milford in this county. The alarm was given, and runners dispatched to various points to detect the thieves and recover the horses. It was ascertained that eleven horses were put on board a propeller at the Dock at China, St. Clair county, a short time after the theft above mentioned. The boat was said to be bound for Chicago. An officer was sent to Chicago, to be on hand when the vessel arrived. When the Propeller came in she had seven horses aboard, and had left eleven horses at Beaver Island. The seven landed at Chicago were brought from Buffalo, and the eleven left at Beaver Island were the same put on board at China. From a minute description by the mate of the Propeller, the officer had no doubt that some of the eleven horses were those stolen near Milford. The officer returned to Oakland county, and the Under Sheriff, A. Bernard Cudworth, Esq., was immediately sent to Beaver Island, in search of said horses.

On his way he found King Strang at Detroit, who gave Mr. C. letters to some of the principal men at Beaver Island, and saying to them that any service done for Mr. C. would be considered as done for him. Upon arriving on the Island Mr. C. was shown every hospitality, and piloted whithersoever he wished to go.—But no horses could be found on the Island; and the men at the Dock, where the officer of the Propeller said they left the eleven horses, said there were no horses left by the vessel, at all; but that the whole eighteen had been taken off for exercise, and had been re-shipped, when the boat left!

Mr. Cudworth traversed the Island in every direction, but could find nothing of the horses—or any horses. But at about every half mile he would encounter a Mormon. He was not out of sight of a Mormon, in all probability while he remained on the Island.

The question now remains to be solved.—What become of those eleven horses? Were they not all, or a portion of them stolen horses? Is it not probable that there is a system of stealing carried on by those outlaws who inhabit Beaver Island? Had not the Public Authorities, and the citizens of this State, better keep a special watch on those men—men who openly and flagrantly defy and violate the sacred law of the State?

These latter questions are suggested by the above facts. For their faithfulness we have the best authority. That there is villainy in the transaction, somewhere, there can be no doubt; and it rests between the Propeller, (whose captain is said to be a Mormon,) and the denizens of Beaver Island. We strongly incline to the opinion that it is a Mormon trick against the Gentiles, as they are graciously pleased to call those who do not belong to their band. For we think as all history proves, the act of men who will combine to defy and violate one law of the Government that protects them, will also combine to defy and violate any other law which intervenes against the accomplishment of whatever designs they may have in view. But from the isolated position of the Island which they inhabit, it is nearly impossible to bring to justice the men who may be guilty of any crime.

The man who could steal eleven horses in one drove, five or six from the same neighborhood, and actually run them off and conceal them so effectually that the owners, after tracing them to a well populated Island of only 35,000 acres in extent, could not find them, must be much smarter than common. To say the least, we don't think any body but Mormons need undertake it. If they can do it, all the horses may as well surrender to them at once, as the coons did to Capt. Scott, and the wild cats to Col. Crockett.

The Gazette may remember that, according to the fable, the coons readily came down from the trees and gave themselves up to Capt. Scott, because the gallant Capt. was so good a shot that there was no use in standing out; they were certain to be brought down.—Wonder if horses will not soon begin to swim across to the Island, because the Mormons are such expert thieves that they must fall in to their hands any way.

We shall not undertake to say how many falsehoods there may be in the Gazette's article, but will specify the following:

1. Eleven horses were not shipped on any propeller at the dock at China. No such or similar shipment was ever made there.

2. No horses shipped at China were ever landed at Beaver Island.

3. No propeller or steamboat ever left eleven or above six horses at Beaver Island. As many as six horses have been landed here at one time; but never in any case has a boat coming from below left more than a single span at one time; nor has more than a single span ever been landed by one boat on the same trip, except horses brought by emigrants from Iowa and Texas.

On all the above facts we appeal to the officers of all the steamboats and propellers which stop at Beaver Island—over sixty in number.

4. It is not true that Mr. Cudworth could find no horses on the Island. Nothing could be more false. Several farmers regularly work horse teams. A large number of horses, both American and blooded horses, French and Indian ponies, are constantly ranging about here. These a stranger, unless he made a very thorough search, might not see, because they have a very wide range; and such as are owned by the Indians not unfrequently swim the channels from Island to Island. Still it is not probable that a gentleman looking for horses would spend a day here without running upon a gang of a dozen or a score of them.

But in addition to these, a large number of horse teams are constantly employed hauling wood on the wharves, and in the most frequented places. As well might any one pretend to have visited Pontiac and searched city and township for horses, and failed of seeing a single one.

We are perfectly willing to admit that if Mr. Cudworth, or any other gentleman engaged in searching for stolen horses on Beaver Island, failed for a whole day to find any horses, the circumstances would be more than suspicious. No man, except on a Sabbath or a very stormy day, could lounge for an hour about one of the wharves without seeing several span of horses hauling wood, which is constantly brought forward at the rate of one hundred cords a day. If Mr. Cudworth will say circumstantially over his own name that he searched faithfully Beaver Island, and could not find one or twenty horses, we will sign a cognovit for any amount of offences.

5. The Gazette says: "The men at the dock where the officers said they left the eleven horses, said there were no horses left by the vessel at all; but that the whole eighteen had been taken off for exercise, and reshipped when the boat left."

Now we venture the assertion that no officer of any boat ever said he left eleven horses under such or any other circumstances.

The story is a mere lie. If there is any truth in it, what boat was it? What is the name of the officer? What office does he hold? Get his certificate, and we will publish it, and convict him of the most reckless false witness.

Moreover no man at a dock here ever told Mr. Cudworth that eighteen horses were taken off a boat here for exercise, and all re-shipped when the boat left. Mr. Cudworth was informed by the gentlemanly proprietor of one of the wharves that the propeller Iowa stopped at his place in the night with a large number of horses aboard, which were taken ashore for exercise, while the boat was receiving wood, (some three hours,) and taken on board before the boat left, and that he was not aware that any of them remained on the Island. He had no occasion to count the horses, because he did not charge passenger horses for merely passing over the wharf for exercise; and the opinion that all the horses returned aboard was a mere inference, from the fact that wharfage was paid on none, and that without counting he had not discovered that less went aboard than came off. For the correctness of this statement and the falsehood of that of the Gazette, though we have not the pleasure of a personal acquaintance, we appeal with confidence to Mr. Cudworth, the under Sheriff of Oakland county.

The statement that while Mr. Cudworth was traversing the Island he encountered a Mormon every half mile, calls for a brief remark. We wish to know by what particular ear mark or brand a Mormon is so well known that Mr. Cudworth could know he was not encountering Gentiles instead of Mormons.

We can well understand that with most of the farms, narrow in front and heading up on both sides of the roads, any man would hardly go a half mile without meeting somebody; but we do not believe Mr. Cudworth has any means of knowing whether each man he meets is a Mormon or a Gentile. If he has any such art, we should like to learn it. But if Mr. Cudworth imagines that the public attached so much importance to his visit as to set a watch to dog his footsteps, he is vainer of his consequence than he here got credit for.

If any one imagines that a drove of eleven stolen horses have been shipped on here, or that a systematic business of stealing is carried on, why not get a shrewd and respectable officer whose character and conduct will assure him the same hospitality and attention which the Gazette says Mr. Cudworth received, to come and stop here and look over the Island at his leisure? Why not engage some of the numerous fish traders, who stop here at all times during the fishing season, to keep an eye out for such horses as were supposed to have been brought here?—Why not ask the aid and assistance of the United States' engineers and the men in their employ, some fifty or sixty in number, camped on the Islands, who are engaged in the Lake Survey in still weather, and as often as there is a blow sufficient to interrupt the most exact measurements on water, merely ranging the Islands to shoot rabbits and pigeons? Wonder how many of these government employees were included among the Mormons encountered every half mile?

In another article in the Gazette we learn that there is so little security for property in the christian city of Pontiac, that property owners have established a "private police," who in their appropriate duties find it necessary occasionally to shoot a man, one having been very recently shot; salt-peter being "used freely, and proving a better safeguard to property than the law."

We beg to assure the Gazette that in the Mormon city of Saint James there is neither public nor private police, and no demand for salt peter; the law affording ample security to property. So ample is this security, that the houses are without locks, and valuable stores in which no person sleeps have only common padlocks on.

Mr. Strang, whom vain men like the editor of the Gazette call "King Strang," thus acknowledging his dominion in the midst of the Republic, has a large amount of valuables laid up in his house, guarded only by a wooden latch, and the windows not fastened down, yet his house is never fastened nights.

So confident is he of the safety of property under the shadow of "Mormon law," that at the very date of the Gazette's article his entire family were absent from home for six days, his house unoccupied, and in a condition that a boy five years old could have ranged and plundered it. And this house contains the church plate, regalia, and most of the valuables which Mr. Strang has accumulated during his active and energetic public career, attended as it has for several years been with remarkable success.—And his house is forty rods from the nearest building, surrounded by a thick set grove, affording perfect concealment, and only two hundred feet from the Lake, where boats could load from the house and depart unseen. Not an article was missed from it. Four years practice in this manner has not been attended with a loss to the value of a shoe string. And Mr. Strang's experience is not different from that of his neighbors generally.

It is hardly probable that a band of outlaws, such as the Gazette persists in calling the Mormons, have been congregated together for the general purpose of stealing, &c., and yet so honest that none will steal from another. If it is so, "King Strang" must have learned not only the art of raising a storm, but also to ride the tempest and guide the whirlwind with a hair.

However, in view of the Gazette's recommendation to the authorities and citizens to "keep a special watch on these men," "King Strang" authorizes us to say to the Gazette and the citizens of Pontiac that if they will send a respectable gentleman, of unexceptionable moral character, to keep watch at this place, the King will extend to him the hospitality of his mansion without charge, such length of time as he sees fit to stay on that business, and will render him any assistance he may require, only asking in return that he shall publish in the Gazette a faithful account of his mission, and its results. And as the fear of the Mormons is on those that hate them, if such an ambassador cannot be induced to come, lest some harm should befall him, the King also offers to send one of his sons to Pontiac as a hostage for the safe return of the ambassador. Will the Gazette publish this? Will it see to the sending an agent to watch and search?

THE SACRED LAW.

The Pontiac Gazette accuses the Mormons of openly and flagrantly violating and defying the sacred law of the State. Can the Gazette tell us which of the laws of the State is sacred, and which may, without sin, be profaned? We have not gone so far in lawlessness here as to hold only a portion of the laws sacred, and profane the rest, regardless of the common authority from which they all emanated. It is a scandal that in a Christian State men should take to themselves a dispensation to violate the law at pleasure.

But whichever law the editor of the Gazette regards as especially sacred, it is evident he does not so regard that law of God—"Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor." If the scriptures are right as to the fate of those who love and make a lie, it does not require the spirit of prophecy to predict his fate.

Once for all, we tell Mr. Knight that whatever may be the opinion of the Mormons as to the policy or righteousness of some of the laws, State and National, such for instance as the fugitive slave law, there is no place in the State where law is so little violated as in the two Mormon counties, Emmet and Manitowish. At that distance away it is easy to keep up false accusation, if one prefers it; but we will submit that question to Pontiac men, if they will come here and then judge.

FISHERIES.

The fishing business has this year been unusually productive, and as fish bear a high price in market, all engaged in the business have prospered beyond precedent. From all the information we are able to obtain, we are of opinion that twice the usual quantity of fish have been taken by each man employed. This success has greatly increased the number of men employed, and caused the investment of large sums in boats, nets, &c. Should this improvement continue through the season, it must result in a permanent extension of that branch of business. The fish trade of Saint James had last year become much greater than that of Mackinac, and at this time exceeds that of any place in the fishing region.

THE CROPS.

Crops of all kinds look well, and promise abundance. The spring was cold and backward, but the summer has been very fine, the weather being warm without excess of heat, and showers frequent. Corn is now in tassel and some forward fields in silk, and considering that the autumns are here very fine, and no frosts till late, the crop will have abundance of time to mature before the fall frosts.

In this respect our insular climate is superior to places many hundred miles south of here.—The importation of breadstuffs this year will be small. Taking all kinds of provisions and eatables into account, the Mormon settlements sell more than they buy. No stagnation of trade can therefore materially embarrass us. The breadth of land in crop increases more than in proportion to population every year.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The present policy of the government is to settle the remaining Indians in Michigan as permanent residents of the State. For this purpose it is proposed to let them have lands in Michigan in lieu of those to which they are entitled west of the Mississippi. If this proposition should be carried out, several bands will remain in Emmet and one in Manistowish counties. We hope it may be so. The Indians in our immediate vicinity are in a prosperous condition.

At the late Conference at this place a man of eighty two years was ordained to the priesthood. He may not remain long to administer here, but he will be a priest in the Temple of God forever. Our present life is but a speck. We live here for the great future.

JOHN N. INGERSOLL may take our hat. The Times contains the following:

IMPORTANT.—We learn by the Northern Islander, King Strang's paper, at Beaver Island, that the engineers engaged in the survey of the Lakes, have ascertained the latitude and longitude of Mr. Strang's house at St. James, with great precision, as follows: Latitude 45 deg. 44 min. 27.67 sec. north. Longitude 85 deg. 26 min. 41.97 sec. west of Greenwich. Navigators will take heed.

The Islander did contain just that information, with no explanation of the occasion of it. The repetition of it is enough to take off Mr. Strang's hat, at least, with a very low bow.

Now since John has a hat of his own, (we don't mean to insinuate that he had none before, but don't see how he can want two at once,) it is not improper to say that Mr. Strang is engaged in conjunction with various institutions and men of science in making a variety of observations in the various sciences, in some of which latitude and longitude are very material elements.—The position of Beaver Island is on nearly all the maps from 15 to 30 min. out of its true place. Mr. Strang, though not bred a mathematician or an astronomer, thought he had discovered the error in latitude, and persisted in making his calculations upon the basis of his corrected latitude.

When the true position of Mr. Strang's house, (the point of observation for the Island,) was ascertained with the remarkable accuracy attained by the astronomical observations and geodetic survey made under the direction of Capt. Macomb, the Islander was the most convenient medium of communicating the result to all who had an interest in the matter.

To them no explanation was necessary. The notice in the Islander could not have struck one of them as containing anything personally consequential. If Mr. Strang felt any pride in having proved right against numerous and high authorities, the Islander took no notice of that fact, and it was left in the exclusive possession of those who had a share in the controversy. We hope that no one will discover any impropriety in the fact that the residence of Mr. Strang is the home of science, quite as much as of theology.

DISCLAIMER.—Hon. T. B. Church's Jackson Citizen affirms, is a member of the order of Know Nothings. If so, the order must be composed of strange material, as we know of no one who has expressed more deadly hostility to the proscription and bigoted views entertained by the Hindoos, than Mr. Church.—It is our opinion that he don't "train" in that company.—Grand Rapids Enquirer.

It may be difficult to tell in what company the Hon. T. B. Church does train now, but nothing is more certain than that he did train in that company his forty days at Lansing. In the most objectional acts of "Sam," he acted as fogleman.

When the ecclesiastical estates bill was before the House, a bill which disqualified every clergyman in the State from acting as trustee of a RELIGIOUS TRUST, the Hon. Thomas Brownell Church had the shamelessness to say, in his place in the House, that though general in its terms, the bill was aimed at a single individual, Bishop Lefever, the Roman Catholic Bishop at Detroit, and advocated the passage of such a measure, by the votes of clerical as well as lay members, degrading as it was to the clerical profession, as a measure of hostility to the Catholics.

Several charity corporation bills were before the House, not one of which escaped a pruning and grafting which would have done credit to the skill and God-hating spirit of the French revolutionary convention; and in all this work Mr. Church had the largest share. If forty days training show what company an honorable gentleman trains in, Mr. Church was in the Know-Nothing train-band. We do not pretend to guess where he will turn up next muster.

It was mortifying to see clergymen in the Legislature voting themselves unworthy of small public trusts for charitable and religious purposes. We are unwilling to speak so ill of these clergymen as to suggest that this is really their judgment of themselves. Yet this is the most charitable construction of it, and if it were not it is scarcely possible that posterity should look at it in any other light. In Mr. Church's case, to be equally consistent, the law profession ought to have been disfranchised. We only wonder that, recollecting his own history, he did not move to include lawyers among the proscribed.

The following, from the Saint Louis Herald, makes a stronger case in favor of Brigham Young for Governor of Utah than we anticipated. We are glad to see so many an expression in his favor, especially from Col. Steptoe, who declined an appointment to supersede Young:

OWEN BRIGHAM YOUNG TO BE RE-APPOINTED GOVERNOR OF UTAH?

We have no hesitancy in answering this question, nor have we had any doubt how it ought to have been answered at any time since it arose. We think Governor Young ought to have been, and ought now to be, re-appointed. He has the capacity for the discharge of the office; nobody has successfully impeached his integrity in the discharge of it; he has the entire and implicit confidence of the whole body of the citizens of Utah; all those citizens, with perhaps not one exception, certainly without one exception among ninety-nine one-hundredths of the Utah population, are exceedingly desirous that he should be re-appointed.—And, beside all this, residents in the Territory—men, the most of whom must be supposed to be free from improper bias—join cordially in recommending him as by far the most suitable man for Governor in the whole Territory. In proof of this last statement, take the following memorial:

To His Excellency Franklin Pierce, President of the United States:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent that, Whereas, Gov. Brigham Young possesses the entire confidence of the people of this Territory, without distinction of party or sect; and from personal acquaintance and social intercourse, we find him to be a firm supporter of the Constitution and laws of the United States; and a tried pillar of republican institutions; and, having repeatedly listened to his remarks, in private as well as in public assemblies, do know that he is the warm friend and able supporter of constitutional liberty—the rumors published in the States to the contrary notwithstanding—and having canvassed, to our satisfaction his doings as Governor and Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and also the disposition of the appropriation for public buildings for the Territory; we do most cordially and cheerfully represent that the same has been expended to the best interests of the nation; and,

Whereas, His re-appointment would better subserve the Territorial interest than the appointment of any other man, and would meet with the gratitude of the entire inhabitants of the Territory, and his removal would cause the deepest feeling of sorrow and regret, and being our unqualified opinion, based upon our personal acquaintance, which we have formed with Governor Young, and from our observation of the results of his influence and administration in the Territory, that he possesses, in an eminent degree, every qualification necessary for the discharge of his official duties, and unquestioned integrity and ability; that he is decidedly the most suitable person that can be selected for that office.

We therefore, take great pleasure in recommending him to your favorable consideration, and do earnestly request his re-appointment as Governor and Superintendent of Indian Affairs for this Territory.

Signed: J. F. Kinney, Chief Justice U. S. Supreme Court Utah Territory; E. J. Steptoe, Lieutenant Colonel U. S. Army; Geo. P. Stiles, Associate Justice S. C. of U. S. for Utah Terr'y; Leo. Shaver, Assistant Justice for Territory of Utah; Horace R. Wirtz, Med. Staff, Staff U. S. Army; A. W. Babbit, Sec'y of Utah Territory; Stephen B. Rose, Sub. Ind. Agt. for Utah Territory.

Great S. L. City, U. T., Dec. 30, '54.

This petition was supported by the names of all the chief officers in the Territory, both civil and military, as also by the principal merchants and residents, whose names we omit for the sake of brevity.

Now, we regard this certificate as, upon the whole, an extraordinary testimonial. It is signed by all three of the Justices of Utah, by the Indian Sub-Agent, and by two officers of the United States Army, one of whom is a physician, and the other is a colonel, in command of a large body of troops now in the Territory. Can it be that corrupt and sinister motives or fear is operating on the minds of these gentlemen. Are these judges bribed, or this commander with a little army at his back, intimidated? Are they not all likely to be men of discernment and men of honor? Would they put their hands to testimony which they disbelieved, or to be made tools of by others? What has induced gentlemen of their position and character to present themselves before the President as the warm defenders, supporters and advocates of Brigham Young? We scarcely believe of them that they are such fools as to have done this without knowing what they were about; or such knaves as to have done it, knowing that they were imposing a falsehood on the President and abusing the trust that was reposed in them, when they were elevated to the office they hold. Any such supposition is nonsensical. The body of testimony in favor of Brigham Young's fitness for the Governorship of the Territory, and the suitability of his appointment to it, which is furnished by the document signed by these gentlemen, is, we think, a higher recommendation for office than most men usually have, and all that any man ever need have.

But, it may be argued, the objection to Gov. Young is not a personal one. The objection is to the appointment of any Mormon. If a Mormon must be appointed, Young may be as fit as any other Mormon, and perhaps fitter.—In this way, it may be attempted to sustain President Pierce in his refusal to appoint Gov. Young. But this argument, like all of the sort, proves too much. It assumes that Mormonism itself is obnoxious, and ought to be put under the ban of our government and its institutions. It is clear enough to us, however clear its contrary may be to others, that a community of 50,000 Mormons with scarce a dissenter in their midst, ought, under our institutions, to be governed by a Mormon, if there is an undeniably fit man among them for Governor. It would be so, if we had in the Union a State peopled almost exclusively by Mormons—even if there were not a man in it with quite timber enough to be the Chief Magistrate.

And it ought to be so in the Territories. That is, as far as possible, the real popular will of the inhabitants, voters or citizens (call them what you may) of the Territory ought to be deferred to in the Territory just as it certainly would be enforced in the State. But, if it is proposed to lay down another rule in respect to Utah, that very attempt shows that something besides and very different from laying down such a rule is required to be done. It shows the existence of reason—either good or bad—for denouncing the whole territorial organization, and for proceeding to demolish the entire structure, from top to bottom.

If a large community, which enjoys a territorial organization, and is a unit in its opinions and will as regards the person to be appointed its Governor, is not to be in the least degree respected or heard in the matter of such appointment, then it is clear that such a community ought not (at least politically) to be suffered to exist. Their organization should be suppressed and terminated. But, so long as Utah is a Territory, and is inhabited just as it is now, such recommendations as Brigham Young's friends have brought to the eye of the President, with the President's own knowledge, if he is not the most ignorant man in the Republic, of what the real sentiment of Utah is, ought, it appears to us, to be conclusive with that functionary. If the Mormons are to have a Territory to themselves, they ought to have a Governor from themselves. And, from testimony of very high character and great trustworthiness, we are satisfied that the Mormons offer a man for Governor who will do his duty faithfully—not disobeying the laws of the Union, but executing them.

We write all this, not caring a bawbee about the success of Mormonism, and, as we have always thought, still thinking, not at all favorably of its character or its prospects in the great future. But, nevertheless, we do feel that the way in which the administration is acting towards Utah, in the matter of this Governorship, is trifling. Let President Pierce give Utah for its Governor the man who, besides being endorsed by unprejudiced and disinterested testimony as perfectly well qualified, is by the President well known to be wanted for its Governor by nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand of its citizens.—This will be a compliance with his duty under the Organic Law. After that, if he sees fit, he can urge on Congress the repeal of that law, the abolishment of the Territory, or any other political measures, of a lawful kind, which he may think efficacious for rooting out Mormonism. But, as the matter now stands, it is perfectly clear that the office of Governor ought to be filled, and that no other man has a hundredth part of the pretensions that Brigham Young has to it.—St. Louis Morning Herald.

A NOVEL COLLEGE SOCIETY.

In 1830, John Tappan, Esq., of this city, proposed to the members of the Amherst College that if they would form a society, whose members should pledge themselves against the use of ardent spirits, opium and tobacco, he would present them $500, to be used as they saw fit. The society was formed, although the donation was refused by them, lest it should be deemed a bribe. The pledge has been presented to nearly every class since the organization, by Dr. Hitchcock, who has acted either as Secretary or President since the formation of the society.

A large number of the members of the college received the certificate of membership last week. This is embellished with a beautiful engraving, containing a figure of Minerva, the goddess of wisdom, presenting the pledge of temperance to a student, and, at the same time pointing to temperance as giving the victory. Behind Minerva are several philosophers, one represented as recording on a tablet the names of the neophytes. Above are Apollo and the Muses. The roll of names belonging to the society now exceeds 1,200.—Bost. Traveler.

THE CAROB TREE, OR ST. JOHN'S BREAD.

Among the recent importation of seeds from Alicante, Spain, were those of the Carob tree, the pods of which, when ripe, contain a few drops of a substance resembling honey. From this circumstance, it is supposed that this tree is identical with the one upon which St. John fed while in the wilderness, and hence sometimes is called St. John's bread. It blooms twice a year—at the end of January or the first of February, and about the middle of September—and when well watered, grows to a considerable height and size, sometimes spreading to such a degree as to have a circumference of from two hundred to three hundred feet, and bearing upwards of a ton of pods.

Young trees, only a year old, often have stems eight or ten inches thick, with branches ten or twelve feet long. Cattle, horses and mules devour the pods with great avidity, and if well fed upon them will become extremely fat, or in good condition to work. This tree, doubtless, will succeed well in the southern, and perhaps in the middle States. Thus it is that the interest government takes in the success of the science of agriculture not only tends to improve the science at home, but collects the seeds of all climes to swell its own products.—Washington Union.

An Interesting Table.

Messrs. Square & Launders, of New York, are constructing an electrical clock, with 31 dials, intended to exhibit the difference of time between New York and the other cities in different parts of the world. The centre dial shows New York time, while the others show the time at the different places for which they are set.

A cut of the face of the clock has recently been published, and from it we make up the following table, which is sufficiently accurate to be of use, and it may be well to cut it out for reference.

Take any day, the 4th of July for instance, and when it is 12 o'clock, noon, at New York, it is at—

Pekin,	12 o'clock 31 minutes of the 5th.
St. Petersburg, July 4th,	6.58 P. M.
Constantinople,	6.51 " "
Vienna,	6.01 " "
Rome,	5.48 " "
Paris,	5.06 " "
London,	4.55 " "
Portland,	12.18 " "
Quebec,	12.13 " "
Boston,	12.12 " "
Washington,	11.48 A. M.
Buffalo,	11.46 " "
Charleston,	11.36 " "
Havana,	11.35 " "
Cincinnati,	11.18 " "
St. James,	11.14 " "
Milwaukee,	11.07 " "
New Orleans,	10.54 " "
St. Louis,	10.55 " "
Mexico,	10.30 " "
San Francisco,	8.45 " "

So that a despatch by telegraph, sent from New York at 12 o'clock, M., ought to be here (with a through line without repeating) at 7 minutes after 11, A. M.—Sci.

Payments for the Islander.

David R. Whipple, $1.00, to No. 87. R. G. Thacher, $2.00, to 106. J. M. Wait, $1.00 to 100. George L. Cole, $1.30, to 71. Robert Wickstaff, $2.00, to 107. L. D. Tabbs, 50cts, to 74. Gilbert Watson, $1.00, to 90. Ulysses Porter, $1.00, to 88. Alfred O. Phinn, $2.00, to 110. Lewis Briggs, $1.00, to 89. Jerutia Crandall, $1.00, to 87. James O. Fiddle, 50 cts., to 81. Jonas Brown, $3.00, to 109. Wm. J. Clark, 75 cts., to 87. A. W. Prindle, $2.00, to 100. Thos. Bedford, $1.00, to 72. Wm. Calkins, 50 cts., to 76. B. R. Young, $2.00, to 113. B. G. Wright, $2.00, to 112.

The Feast of First Fruits is appointed permanently, to take place the day next preceding the third Sabbath before the Autumnal Equinox, (counting the day of the Equinox, if it occurs on Sabbath the first.) This year it will occur the last day of August.

F. JOHNSON & CO.

Have purchased and are continuing to purchase, for cash, a full assortment of fresh goods, by which they are enabled to sell at BUFFALO and DETROIT Prices.

DRY GOODS.

Calicoes, of various patterns. Mous de Lains and Baregas. Lawns, Shawls, &c. A new supply of Bonnets, of handsome finish. Hook and Barred Muslins. Groceries and Fishing Tackle, and various other stores. Stoves of the most approved pattern and material, for sale. 48as.

CITY STORE, SAINT JAMES,

ONE DOOR NORTH OF THE DOCK, WATER ST. J. M. WAIT has just opened a large assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crochery, Tin ware, Hardware, Cutlery, Irons, Nails, Nail-roads, Glass, Ready Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, also a full supply of Fishermen's Tackle. Thankful for past patronage, I hope, to merit a liberal share in the future, by selling cheaper than the cheapest for ready pay; cash not refused. Saint James, June 19th, 1855. Yagp

Hon. JAMES J. STRANG, Chairman,
&c., &c.

SIR—I have had the honor of receiving your letter of the 8th inst., proposing in substance the following inquiries:

1st. "How far the measures heretofore adopted for the civilization of the Indians have been beneficial to them, and in what respects they have failed to accomplish the desired ends?"

2d. "The working of the Mission-system;"

3d. "The working of the paying of Annuities;"

4th. "Removal to the Western wilds;"

5th. "The past, present, and future prospects of the Indian race."

In answering the above important inquiries, I confess that the subject demands a greater amount of time and labor than I am able to command at present, to do the subject justice.

The inquiries are necessarily in some respects of a general character, but I apprehend the committee are desirous to know, from me, more particularly the condition of the Senecas, and of the Six Nations of New York, in reference to the questions:

"The committee are no doubt well aware that some of the tribes have received a greater amount of aid from the philanthropist, over and above what the general government has done to civilize the aboriginal tribes, than others, as some of the tribes have received little or nothing from the philanthropist.— Therefore, it is difficult in this respect to treat the subject which, in all respects, would apply to the Indian race, in their general and changing conditions.
But each tribe must be taken up and treated of separately in their respective and different circumstances, and conditions. But this I cannot do, as I am ignorant of what use the committee design of making of my views in reference to these matters.

However, certain general truths are applicable to all the aboriginal inhabitants of this country, upon which I ask indulgence to speak a word or two, before proceeding to answer the inquiries. First, I believe it is condemned that human nature is alike under all circumstances; that is, whatever principles or influences may be brought to produce an effect or change in one condition of human nature, among the different races, will produce like effects among other races, in the same condition.

When the Western continent was first discovered, it was found that the country was inhabited by a rude and barbarous people.
Barbarism is antagonistic to civilization; in other words, the two systems cannot exist at the same time; one or the other must predominate. Whatever is hostile to civilization, is barbarism; because it produces stagnancy in the moral life, and fixes limits to the exercise of the intellect.

There appear to be several conditions, which are comprised in the term barbarism; when we compare these conditions, we find that they have one common defect—"stagnancy." They tend to keep everything in one fixed condition, to check advancement and improvement.

"Hence we conclude," says Dr. Taylor, "that the primary elements of civilization, according to the common sense of mankind, is progress—not from one place to another, but from one condition to another, and always in advance. The idea of progress, development, amelioration, or extension, appears to be the prominent notion.

"Civilization, then, is progressive, and barbarism stationary. The question hence arises, which is the natural state or condition of man? We know that there are fundamental laws of life and being, and that the state most natural to it is that in which it fulfills most completely the end and object for which it was made, according to its organization, and the principles of its vitality. Man, in the state of Nature, must, therefore, be man in a state for which Nature has fitted him. Is there a definite mould or form to which his faculties are irrevocably predetermined and pre-determined?— Then Nature has designed him to remain stationary, and the natural man is the savage. On the other hand, are his faculties expansive, his capacities progressive, and his moral endowments susceptible of cultivation?
If so, Nature has organized him for progress; civilization is the natural state, barbarism the artificial. If the unity of the human species can be established, then it follows of course that the capacity of becoming civilized belong to the human race; as before stated, civilization is natural to man, barbarism is not 'a state of Nature,' and there is no evidence in fact, to assume that it was the original condition of man."

If these premises are correct, then it follows as a matter of course, whatever legislation calculated to benefit the red man, it must be that, which shall have a tendency to restrain, so far as it may be prudent, his habits, motives, usages and customs—the customs of his forefathers.

1st. His love of roving from place to place. He has no abiding home, within the territory of his fishing and hunting grounds. He must have some permanent abode. He must give up hunting and fishing as a profession. He must give up this upon the same principles upon which he gave up war—
"necessity." He must turn to the cultivation of the soil. He must no longer depend upon the fruits of the chase for his subsistence. He must be made to feel and understand that it is no discredit to him as a man, to labor in the field, instead of the women. This process is necessarily slow and difficult in the wild tribes, for the reason that they have an idea that they are distinct absolutely from the whites, and that their future destiny is as different and as wide apart as the distinction now between the two races. But the fact must always be borne in mind, the unwillingness on the part of the red man, even to attempt to adopt the habits of his white brother. It is not so strange after all. If he was ever so willing and anxious, he could not do it at once; it would even in that case require time to get acquainted and accustom himself to a different mode of life, and then never be really civilized, much less refined; but his children may be all of these.

The nations of Europe were a long time changing their condition. People are reluctant to give up their customs and habits. Why, sir, it is a matter of fact, that among farmers there is a reluctance to adopt any change, however beneficial to them. In Ireland it was found necessary to pass several acts of Parliament to prevent fastening ploughs to the tails of horses, and burning oats in the straw to avoid the labor of thrashing.—

Such is habit, even among the whites. How much more of the wild tribes, who never had an idea what belonged to civilization, but roamed wild and free as the air they breathed over the vast wilderness, in pursuit of the chase, and engaged in the conflicts of war.

The measures heretofore adopted for the civilization of the Indians in New York have always proved beneficial in individual cases, as well as in communities.
That it never succeeded to the fullest extent desirable, has been owing to the fact that the measures adopted have themselves failed before accomplishing the object; or the measure was prosecuted injudiciously by incompetent persons, not understanding the practical object of their mission. Many accept the trust, not because they are competent, but solely on account of the salary.

At other times the plan itself is defective; for instance, educating one or two young men, sons of the chiefs of a tribe, at a public expense, who are sent to school to prepare for college, finally graduate at some fashionable college. These young men return to their people finished scholars, and gentlemen in the most acceptable sense of the term. It is unreasonable to suppose that they would not much sooner associate with their rude brethren than any other gentleman with like education and civilized taste.

As a result, they will be despised by their brethren, and perhaps in return will despise their friends. At all events they are not suited companions. Here ends their usefulness among their people. They have been brought up gentlemen, know nothing about work or labor.—
What kind of business were they expected to follow after they returned from college, at home with their people, when first sent to school? It was well known that the Indians have no learned professions among them, and it is not necessary as a general thing that they should have men of superior learning, even for governmental objects. The Indians are no longer independent nations, but subject to the laws of the States.

It is known, too, that the whites, more or less, look upon the red men with prejudiced eye, civilized or not, therefore, no great inducement is held out to the educated young men from that quarter. In the mean time, those young men, whose intellects have become active by discipline, are bound to do something, as a general thing, among the Indians, and will resort to the intoxicating cup, if they have no useful employment; or if he remains and keeps sober, and as man is a social being, the man is obliged to marry a woman of his own Nation—uneducated—and she brings up her children, not according to his civilized notions, but according to her customs and habits, for this is all she knows.

If Napoleon Bonaparte was a judge of the duties and their results, of a mother, he has declared: "the formation of a man's character is the work of a mother."

The result of these educated young men did not advance the civilization of their tribe. The fault was not in the want of intellect in the young man, but a defect in the application of his talent to some useful purpose, either to himself or his tribe;
in this respect the measure adopted for his education were defective. After the result was known, it was at once said—
"you cannot civilize the red man."

Now, sir, how much better it would have been if these young men had been taught to read, write and cypher, working at the same time on a farm with some good christian white man, or learning some useful trade, so that when they return to their people, here lies a wide field open to them; they could labor on the farm, and thus set an example to their people. So with those who may have learned the mechanic arts, and thus do much good. In a large Indian community, sometimes one white teacher is sent to civilize them; because he does not succeed in five years, it is declared impossible to civilize the Indians,
hence the labor is abandoned.

I might, sir, go on and state many more particulars and circumstances; what measures have been adopted; apparently proving ineffectual to civilize the red man, and disappointed those who had planned the desirable and praiseworthy object.

In my opinion the mission-system among the Senecas of New York has worked the best; and the Senecas are now in a fair way to become entirely civilized.

Our missions are supported by the American Board of Missions; the general Government has also done something through this Board, in supporting the common schools among the Senecas—say about one thousand dollars yearly are expended of the civilization fund, for the Senecas, under the direction of the Missionaries.

But the best plan is to have Boarding Schools connected with the missionary stations, in two departments—one department for the males, and one for the females. The boys, between school hours, to labor on the farm or in the shops, and the girls to learn what the farmers daughters are taught, each to be under the direction of competent teachers, of men and women of good practical christianity, and no Catholics. This is by far the best plan for civiliz-ing the red man. Civilization must commence with the young;
the preference or advantage should always be given in favor of the girls, because they will soon become mothers, and they will have the care and treating of the children, and thereby the advantage gained should not be lost, but step by step be advancing up and up, and over the hill of civilization, until the summit is gained. The effect of this system would be perceptible very soon in the old people.—
It would have a strong tendency to keep them at home, and would prevent in a measure from roving over the lakes, and from creek to creek, or, at all events, they would be within hailing distance.

Experience has shown that the payment of annuities to the Indians, with the view of being divided among them, is decidedly injurious in my opinion. It always makes them indolent and lazy—always anticipating it, and will not be satisfied until it is spent—yea, half a dozen times over, if they can. Money comes to the Indian like a powerful rain in summer, in a little while the ground is covered with water, soon as the sun appears again, the rain disappears from the ground. So goes the Indian Annuity, and it does them no good. The annuities should be devoted to the building of school-houses and purchasing farming utensils, for carrying on blacksmith shops, and erecting grist and saw mills, where it is possible, and for building roads and bridges on the Indian Reserves. In short, the money should be devoted to something permanent, and for public improvement, calculated to benefit the Indians; and they should be made to understand that these things are for their good, and must be done; and they must learn to make individual exertions, and not depend any longer upon their annuities; and every encouragement should be given in their efforts to alter and better their condition, and that they should be told also that they must depend upon the domestic animals for their meat and clothing, instead of wild animals, as formerly.
Their motto is now, "sufficient unto today," &c.

The removal to the West: I consider that proposition is now out of the question. The Six Nations of New York Indians attempted it in 1846, and proved a failure. I am decidedly of the opinion that the plan is so full of objections, that it shall not again be attempted by the Northern Indians. But the great principal reason is, that the Indians there would be in no better condition. They would then be under a Territorial jurisdiction, and therefore better remain where they are, under the protection of a noble and generous State.
And there is, and always are, many associations connected with the earlier history of the State, which calls forth noble and generous feelings on the part of her public men towards the remnants of the red man, who possessed and occupied the lands of the States before them.

The future prospects of the red man of this country I shall not speculate upon at the present time; but when there is only here and there bright and cheering prospects for the red man, to the philanthropist. But the idea of reclaiming and preserving them into civilized communities, should not be given up, but it should be persevered to the end, and only when the great and benevolent work is accomplished, and not before, by adopting judicious and well digested plans for their civilization.

I would suggest here, which is, in my opinion, to be very important, and which statesmen should never lose sight of; in planning systems for civilizing or ameliorating the red man, that is, he must change his superstitious notions which he calls religion. Barbarism and his religion co-operate with each other in resisting the approaches of civilization, and it is stationary. And if he is ever civilized, he has got to adopt christianity, that great principle, the greatest civilizer of man—and which co-operates and goes hand in hand with the modern civilization. The greatest hindrance why the red man hesitates to adopt the habits and customs of the whites—because he thinks it will interfere with his religion, and rejects all improvements as a matter of conscience.—
But this the benevolent white man must overcome by kindness, on the principle, that sometimes there is more gospel in a loaf of bread than half a dozen sermons.

As I have remarked before that I do not know the main purpose of this inquiry; but, gentlemen, I hope it is for the purpose of eliciting facts and views from various individuals to enable you to devise some plan to submit to your House to enable them to make laws ameliorating, or calculated to aid in ameliorating the condition of the red man within the borders of the State of Michigan. If this is the case, I pray that you may be able to make such laws as shall prove a great and lasting benefit to the red man, and an honor to the committee who proposed, and the State a benefactor to the poor sons of the American forest.

The State of Michigan, I have noticed, has passed many salutary laws for the benefit of mankind. It has manifested much solicitude for the rights of man everywhere, and the greatest and crowning act to her honor is the passage of the prohibitory law against the use of intoxicating drinks.

And if now it takes up the case of the red man, I trust it will prove equally as successful as it has proved in her other laws for the good of mankind.

I regret very much that my time is so limited as not to be able to review the whole policy heretofore adopted to civilize the native inhabitants of this country in a more detailed manner. There are other considerations in my judgment than those assigned in this communication, which have retarded the progress of civilization, but it would require some space and time to prepare it; but most of which however arises from political considerations, and the form and manner of holding property.
Indians are like other men, and are influenced by the same motives, such as "honor, trust and profit." As they become more and more civilized, these motives will naturally and rapidly appear, and therefore no impediment should ever be thrown in their way to the final attainment of these objects, by a law of the State.

If there are such laws in existence, they should be repealed; because if you make him feel that he is inferior, and therefore ought not to be placed upon a par with all the nations under heaven, as to rights and privileges, I confess in that case it is hardly worth while to talk about civilizing the red man. It is a mockery, and nothing else. But let a law be passed that shall be for the benefit of the red man, and a living monument to the glory and honor of the State of Michigan in having honestly and faithfully made efforts to save and redeem the red man from the extinction which awaits him, in his barbarous condition.

I am very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
N. T. STRONG,
A Seneca Chief.

(To be continued.)

The evils of life may be likened to comets.
Like these they bear after them a long train.—
Like these, too, they seem to wander through the boundless space of our being, pathless and objectless, creatures of chance. Yet are they both alike in the hands of the Creator.

The greatest trial of patience—a stammering lawyer examining a stammering witness in the presence of a deaf judge.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 7.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, AUG. 9, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 74.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER.

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 25 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

Saint James, June 22, '55.

DEAR BROTHER:—In accordance with your request, I now proceed to write you a series of letters, narrating some incidents of my life and experience since I have been a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

In the early part of November, 1838, the wolves being unusually destructive to my flock of sheep, and to avoid the perplexity of having them daily killed, I resolved in my mind that I would reserve of my flock for family use a sufficient, and take the residue (amounting to a little over five hundred) into the adjoining State of Missouri, (I was then living in McDonough county, Ill., about five or six miles east by north of the village of Macomb,) and there find a market for them.

Whilst I was ferrying my sheep over the Mississippi, at the town of Quincy, Ill., I met with a young man on the ferry boat, who had been in the town to get himself armed and equipped for the purpose of entering the Mormon war, as he pleased to call it. This declaration of the ignorant young man was indeed news to me. I had heard through the medium of the newspapers that a sect of religionists had recently sprung up in north-eastern Ohio, but never took interest enough in the matter to read an entire article, thinking it all humbug.

When I got to Mr. Merrill's, (six miles from Quincy,) who lived in Marion county, Missouri, being a Campbellite preacher and tavern keeper, (where I put up my sheep for the night,) I found a crowd collected there, and much excitement and confusion prevailing. This was the night of the eighth of November. It is not to be expected that I heard much good said of Mormons in this clamorous collection of ignorant, enthusiastic beings. Although I entered into the discussion of every topic, I gained very little knowledge of the causes of the Mormon war, as it was called.

Early the succeeding morning after my past night's confusion I put my sheep drove in motion, and made near twenty miles on my way west, all the way trying the chances of selling my sheep, but found no buyers, on account of the war excitement; there being none but the old superannuated men, females and negroes left at home, and they all excused themselves from buying sheep on the ground of having used all their ready money to arm and equip those who, at the Governor's proclamation, had responded to the call to drive out every Mormon beyond the limits of the State, or exterminate them.

Where I stayed the night of this day was at the house of an old aristocrat, a native of Virginia, (and of course one of the first families,) possessed of more pride of family than sound judgment, or general information. I had many warm arguments with him on free religious toleration and the Mormon war, being, as I now considered it, nothing more or less than a religious persecution, together with their increasing numbers, and the fears excited thereby, that they might in a short period give political character to the State, if not nipped in the bud.

I became convinced during the argument against the Mormons by the old egotist, (my host,) and his disclosures of the cause of the Mormon war, that it was altogether as I supposed, a religious persecution and an ungodly crusade against an unoffending, innocent people. And I ever after treated it as such, while I remained in Missouri selling my sheep. I did not return home until the first of December, and before I left the State the war was ended.

On my way home I was detained a week by the ice running in the Mississippi, cutting off the communication between the adjoining States. And the old preacher Merrill's being the nearest house of entertainment, there was a general resort to this house by all transient men that were waiting to cross the river.

The house was very much crowded by men from Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois, all prejudiced more or less against the Mormons, except Judge Holman, of Ky., who was on his return home from emigrating the Pottowamany Indians, as principal agent, to the west of the Missouri river. He informed us that he had went and returned through Far West, and the firm conviction of his mind was that it was a religious persecution, and political jealousy of the growing strength of the Mormons.

Judge Holman and myself had to contend against the crowd, who were headed by our host, preacher Merrill. Our arguments were (or rather quarrels on the part of our opponents) very bitter. All were more or less excited. Holman was a host to contend with, and bore down all opposition; and we really succeeded in silencing the crowd, before the end of our six days and nights discussion.

By the time I got home the advance of the Mormons expelled from Missouri began to cross the Mississippi river, in a poor, and apparent, distressed condition. During the course of this winter I found my health very much declining, and was advised by Dr. Wm. F. Barrett (who is now President of the Medical College of Mo.) to suspend all manual labor, and take moderate horse exercise; and he prescribed for me, and prepared the medicine for me to take.

I had already entered my sons and two nephews as pupils or students at the McDonough College, located in Macomb, and concluded to rent my farm, teams and other stock and move into the village, and board my sons, instead of hiring their board. I had 300 acres tillable land, between 5,000 and 8,000 bushels of grain that I had no market for, a large quantity of bacon and lard, about 250 head of hogs, and about 100 head of cattle, together with sheep and poultry, and fourteen well selected horses, well suited for the saddle or harness, also three yearling colts.

The incumbrance of this amount of personal property was greatly in the way of my resolution to move to the village. I was not long in determining what to do. With the abundance about me I immediately resolved to seek out some poor Mormon families, and establish them as farmers on my homestead, as I was well supplied with house room. My dwelling had eight rooms, besides the cellar, and I had another good house that would accommodate two small families.

Sometime in the month of March I went down to Quincy, Ill., to put my plan into effect. I saw many families that had come out of Missouri, all more or less in destitute circumstances. But I had a friend in Quincy, the Hon. Archibald Williams, whose advice I wished to obtain in regard to suitable persons to take charge of my farm and property. Upon my arrival in Quincy I waited on my friend Williams, who informed me that he had in one of his houses the families of Joseph Smith, Sen., Samuel H. Smith, Don Carlos Smith, Jenkins Salisbury, and a Br. Henry Hoit. He said they were all destitute, and he thought gentlemen, and would suit my purpose; and that he had warm prejudices in favor of them, and Mormons in general.

I waited on the venerable patriarch and those under his roof. He received me with great cordiality, and after I had disclosed my business he frankly said that his sons would take charge of my farm and effects, and praised God that I had been sent in answer to his prayers.

We called the whole household together in council, whereupon it was determined that Samuel and Don Carlos would accompany me home, to see the premises and consummate the bargain. But the distance being sixty miles, and they on foot, it was concluded that I should start home that afternoon, and get there the next day, and they would try to be at my house the night following. The old patriarch, during our brief interview, gave me rather a detached account of the persecutions the saints had passed through since the organization of the church, in April, 1830, up to the expulsion of the saints from Missouri, and their unparalleled sufferings, with the circumstances of his son, the prophet and seer, remaining in prison in the hands of his enemies. But his confidence was unshaken in God, that he would deliver him from his enemies, and restore him to the bosom of the church.

The manner and language used in narrating the above, and his allusion to the ignorance of mankind in regard to God and godliness, and the period having arrived at hand for the ushering in (according to the words spoken by the holy prophets) of the dispensation of the fullness of times, and the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, pursuant to the accomplishing of God's work for the salvation of mankind, bringing them to the glorious period when all should know the Lord from the least to the greatest, was really most thrilling, and made an impression on my mind which cannot be forgotten; indeed, I was almost persuaded to be a Mormon.

I arrived at home, and the Bros. Smith came as was agreed upon, and in a few days they took possession of my farm and stock on hand, which was ample for the comfort of many families. I told the Bros. Smith, Hoit and Salisbury to inform all the destitute Mormons to come and get provision to subsist upon, as 8,000 bushels of grain would feed many persons, if used for breadstuff alone, and it could be had without money or price.

Notwithstanding the influence of the course of medicine I was under, my health was still rapidly declining, all seemed to move on smoothly with me and my tenants; but, however, there was an occasional freak of persecution against me for introducing Mormons into the neighborhood. In the meantime I had read the Book of Mormon, and was somewhat perplexed (as I was really a believer in the work, although I had not as yet heard a sermon) at the frequent occurrence of the word "had not ought," and such like provincialisms, however I became more reconciled in regard to those errors as I was daily growing in faith.

About this time we had the news reach us that the prophet Joseph Smith had escaped from prison, and had arrived in Illinois, and was making an effort to buy the village of Commerce, at the head of the lower rapids of the Mississippi river. I had great anxiety to see him, but Don Carlos informed me that as soon as the contemplated purchase was made and a place fixed for the gathering of the saints, that Joseph would be at my place to pay them a visit. I therefore put my patience in requisition to wait the appointed time.

As I was in the daily habit of riding out every fair day, on a bland bright morning I prevailed on my wife to indulge in the luxury of a ride on horseback, to visit our tenants on the farm. On our return home I perceived, as we were leisurely riding along, that a carriage containing a number of persons was meeting us, and as we neared it the appearance of a large man sitting in front driving seemed to be familiar to me, as if I had always known him, and suddenly the thought burst on my mind that it was none other than the prophet Joseph Smith.

Indeed, my whole frame was in a tremor with the occurrence of the thought, and my heart seemed as it were coming up into my mouth. Getting in speaking distance, he suddenly reined up his horses, as making ready to speak, (I was much agitated as the words came from his mouth,) "Sir, can you tell me the way to the farm of a Mr. Miller, living somewhere in the direction I am going?" Instead of answering him direct, my reply was, "I presume, sir, that you are Joseph Smith, Jr., the Mormon prophet?" "I am sir," adding, "I also presume that you are the Mr. Miller whose farm I inquired for?" "I am, sir." He then introduced me to his wife and family, and thus a formal (or rather an informal) introduction passed between us and families. In our short interview many things were said in regard to our meeting, that on our approach we both supposed that the other was an old acquaintance.

I solicited him to preach. He excused himself as not feeling like sermonizing, having just escaped from prison; that he felt like a bird uncaged, and was more disposed to reconnoiter the country and visit his friends and people.

Upon my urging the matter of his preaching, he suddenly turned to me, saying, that he did think of some one of the elders preaching for me, but he was now resolved on doing it himself; that it had been whispered that a Samaritan had passed by and bound up the wounds of his bleeding friends, adding that he would do the best he could in the way of preaching. Accordingly the time and place was fixed upon, and I went to notify the people of the appointment of the Mormon prophet to preach.

The appointment arrived at hand. The house and dooryard was filled with people, apparently anxious to hear, as I then thought, and do yet, more for the purpose of fault finding than seeking after truth. He took for his text that chapter in the writings of Luke, where a certain man fell among thieves when journeying from Jerusalem to Jerico, and was taken and ministered to by the Samaritans.

He took an extensive latitude while treating on this text, and took up a long time, and notwithstanding it was a rainy day, those outside of the house stood in the rain sheltered by umbrellas until the service was over. I had no remaining doubts left in regard to the truth of the prophet Joseph, and the doctrine of the gospel as taught by the Latter Day Saints. An arrangement was then agreed upon that I was to circulate notice of an appointment for two days' meeting, to be held in the court house on Saturday and Sunday, three weeks from that time, and Joseph was to send a couple of able elders to preach in this hot bed of Presbyterian and Methodism.

Three days before the appointed time of preaching in the court house in the village of Macomb, it being some time near the 26th of June, 1839, keeping up my custom of riding out every day on account of my declining health, I harnessed up my carriage horses and brought out the carriage, proposing to my wife to take our little daughter Mary, who was about the age to be interesting as a little prattler, and for us to take a ride to the farm, see our Mormon friends, and dine with my sister that lived adjoining my farm.

On our leaving our brother-in-law's, in the act of my handing our little daughter to her mother in the carriage and putting up the steps, I fell as if I had been shot down, with no use of my body from the hips to the ends of my toes than if I had not had such parts. I would however persist in going home, and was accordingly bolstered up in the carriage and got home at night, or rather sun down, with much difficulty. Three doctors were called in, and upon consultation they opened the veins in both my arms, and took a half pint of blood every three quarters of an hour. They pronounced my disease tic douloureux, and told me frankly if I had any matters to arrange in regard to my estate I had better be about it, as I could not possibly live.

On that afternoon elders Taylor and Rigdon arrived at my house for the purpose of filling the before mentioned appointment. They questioned me in regard to my faith, and told me I need not lay in bed another minute on account of my sickness. I was instantly healed, and had the use of my limbs and entirely free from pain. The entire village was in an uproar. Those who were watching with me at the time of this occurrence, fled from me and left my house as if I had been a hideous monster. The word was circulated all over the village that it had been a plan concocted between me and the Mormons, that I was to feign sickness and pretend to be healed by the Mormons, all for effect, to carry out our imposition upon the credulity of the people.

Elders Rigdon and Taylor preached as agreed upon to a full house, who were there to find fault rather than be profited by hearing the truth. There were preachers of different sects present, who, when challenged by the Mormon elders to defend their false doctrine and erroneous religious tenets, not one of them would take up the glove when opportunity was given.

I was baptized by elder Taylor, and here a new era of my life was fully ushered in. I was now openly persecuted for my religious belief and profession. My cattle were shot on the prairies, (but not killed.) My fences laid down, and the flocks and herds of the prairies turned on my grain fields. I was vexed by petty lawsuits. Men that I had never had dealings with would recover sums of money from me, by bringing into the justice's court false witnesses, and those that owed me would prove payment, and it was openly avowed by some that they had just as well have the picking of my estate as the damned Mormons and Joe Smith, as they were all living off of my effects.

I immediately began to arrange my property matters so that I put them in shape to be available, and gather with the saints; which I accomplished the ensuing spring. In my next I will give an account of other remarkable incidents in my life.

Most truly and sincerely, &c.,
GEO. MILLER.

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, AUG. 9, 1855.

Salt Lake Correspondence

(From the Mormon of July 14th.)

G. S. L. CITY, May 31, 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Sir—Several numbers of your highly interesting paper have arrived by the Eastern and California mails. The Eastern mail arrived on the 13th inst. with 27 sacks, the principal part of 4 months mail, and considerably in advance of the usual Oz. Telegraph, which has generally made its appearance in October and November with a year's mail.

The Presidency, with a large company, have just visited most of the Southern Counties, the people are all enjoying excellent health, the Indians quiet, and many of them learning to work. The Iron Works are progressing.

But one drawback causes the feelings of all to awaken: every settlement has been visited with an innumerable host of grasshoppers, devouring all the early crops, standing guard over every spear of vegetation that may venture to present itself, and the moment a single blade appears, they attack it as vigilantly as Sir Colonel Campbell's Minie Rifle Corps shoot at the Russian troops when they show their heads. The attack of the allied armies on Sebastopol is mere sham work compared with the investment of our grain fields by these united hosts.

The prospect bids fair for the Saints to learn to live by faith; for what little wheat there is now left, the men, women and children appear to be organized into squads of three or four each, well armed with willow bushes, and they are very busy sweeping the armies of grasshoppers into the small creeks where they place coffee sacks, and when they get them filled, they dig trenches, and bury their enemy: other of the brethren are equally as busy where the grain is entirely gone, plowing, sowing wheat, harrowing, planting corn and potatoes, and they appear to be just as diligent as they were eight or ten weeks ago; 'tis true it appears rather late, but the Saints feel it is better to plant late than never, and they have a very strong faith that a loafer, or a lazy man cannot live here this season, at least: and you may sound as loud an editorial as you please, that emigrants for the gold mines, unless they bring their provisions with them, are likely to feel a little hunger in common with us, unless they could make up their mind to live on grasshopper or cricket soup; for 60,000 Saints must be fed whether the grasshoppers and crickets continue or not. Where they must draw their sustenance from for the next year, it requires a pretty good stretch of faith to imagine. The Lord says in a revelation to Joseph Smith, "It is My Business to provide for the Saints," and there is a very strong prospect for him to have it to do this year, for they feel it difficult to take care of themselves.

A few loads of rock are drawn to the ground to commence building an office for the Historian, which will be built opposite the President's office.

Sent out my clerks, Thomas Bullock and Leo Hawkins, to take a peep at the public works, and they report they have seen about 100 men very busy rolling down large rocks to form the foundation for the Temple, which is very nearly completed on the last or west side. They have commenced laying the flagging for the foundation of the cut stone, and very great progress has been made during the past month.

They saw several men at work cutting the large stone for grinding seed for oil, which are 5 feet 8 inches in diameter, and 14 inches thick, and are expected to be finished next week.

Visited the foundry, the fire of which is blown by heavy machinery, and took a sweating while Morgan Phelps, and his assistants cast two segments for a large iron wheel for a threshing machine, and which cannot very easily be beat in any of the Eastern States. Saw the blacksmith's shop, in which seven fires are kept constantly in blow, with the men broiling and sweating over their warm work, with the continual clink of the hammers, fashioning the useful and necessary articles for the public works.

Went into a stone-cutter's shop, where 17 men were busily plying their hammers and chisels, forming the coping for the north wall of the Temple Block, which is very near finished; also blocks, squares, and other shapes for different public buildings now in process towards completion; also saw a grave stone for Rodney Badger, who you will recollect was drowned in the Weber River, while endeavoring to save the lives of an emigrant woman, and her four orphan children, who were travelling to California last season; also one for the child of Elder O. Pratt, and one for Bro. Patterson, who was killed while quarrying rock; all of which are the work of Bro. Wm. Ward, and will bear comparison with any work of a similar nature in the cities of America or Europe.

Next took a peep into the paint shop, where Bro. James Beck was putting on the finishing touch to some bedsteads put together upon an entirely new and scientific principle; examined his various pieces of workmanship, with which the public paint shops abound. I learn he has nine men under him in constant employ.

They then took a stroll through the lumber yard, and saw the numerous piles of lumber, which Bro. E. Fordham told them contained over 150,000 feet. Went into the joiner's shop, which, under the superintendency of Bro. Miles Romney, is a perfect bee hive for industry, every bench being in active occupation, and every man intent upon the labor set before him. Saw the modeling shop, and finally visited the machine shop, where flanges, wheels, cranks, gudgeons, and machinery of various descriptions were being manufactured.

The whole being as complete a business establishment as you ever saw in any of the United States, England, Scotland, France, Germany, or any part of the world in which you have been a traveler; and although you know what Mormon enterprise is, I can scarcely write so that you can read and realize the great amount of improvements that have been made, and are daily making in our midst.

The people begin to realize that there is no place like the public works, for there they are sure of their food and the necessities of life; while at the same time every other person is fearing and trembling, and endeavoring to work his temporal salvation in trying to raise a sufficiency of food; but the result of their labors they leave in the hands of Almighty God to do with them as seemeth good in his sight. Yours faithfully, Geo. A. SMITH.

This letter, written as it is by a Brighamite Apostle, certainly offers a melancholy prospect to the denizens of Utah. It is not in the nature of things that a country situated and constituted as that is, should be exempt from occasional visitations of famine.

Stansbury and Gunnison, who made a very thorough survey of the valley of the Salt Lake, estimate the entire arable land of the basin at only four hundred square miles, distributed in various small tracts at the points where the streams burst from the mountains into the valley, and this must be irrigated to be cultivated. In all countries there is an occasional failure of crops, partial or entire. In such a country the crops must be very uncertain.

The common remedy on failure of crops is diminished exports, and increased imports; the balance, after exhausting hoarded means, forming a debt, to be paid in future years; but Utah is too remote to admit of such a remedy. The population could be transported to the grain easier than the grain to the inhabitants.

In Asia and Africa similar desert countries support a considerable wandering population, who cultivate a few crops on what tracts of arable land the deserts contain, but depend mainly on their flocks for support. Drouth drives them to a wider range, but does not so soon produce destitution of food; a single year of drouth, grasshopper or locust only partially exhausting the flocks. With only a few settled inhabitants in the towns, a few years drouth may nearly depopulate large regions, by merely driving the inhabitants with their flocks to more favorable lands, to return again as the seasons change, but they produce little suffering.

What strikes us most as seriously discouraging is the last paragraph of Mr. Smith's letter. If there is no place like the public works for securing food and the necessities of life, and if every person not employed there is fearing and trembling with the prospect of starvation, pray where do the public works get their supplies?

If breadstuffs were imported, the commissioners of public works might be in credit and able to sustain their employees while private individuals were suffering without the hope of relief. But when it is considered that all the necessities of life have to be produced on the spot, and therefore all belong to the farmers, it is certain that unless tyranny has invented some process of wresting their crops from them, farmers and agricultural laborers will be the last to suffer.

All the crops produced belong to them, and voluntarily they will not part with any till they have secured food for their families. By the law of God only one-tenth can be taken for all the purposes of government and the church. Under this limitation the men in public employment would feel an even share of the common calamity. If crops failed, tithing would fail in the same proportion.

Does the Utah government first send around the tithing collector for the tenth, and then the tax gatherer for what remains? How is it that the public works have food when those who produce it look with fear and trembling upon the face of gaping starvation and the madness of protracted hunger?

Unquestionably it is God's business to provide for the saints. But it is his business to do it in his way, not theirs. Here he has made abundant provision, and this is the place to which he called them. All ye hungry come and eat.

Withal, this monopolizing the avenues of private enterprise by state shops, under the name of "public works," is a most ruinous policy. What a catalogue of government monopolies. Besides erecting buildings for public use, which are legitimately public works, here are cutting millstones, making gravestones, casting mill irons, blacksmithing, painting, making bedsteads, keeping lumber yard, carrying on a joiner shop, a modeling shop, a machine shop, and employing a historian as a public functionary, and building an office for him. We have understood elsewhere that the sugar manufactory and iron works are also public works.

With such competition, what is private enterprise to do? Where is it to seek its reward? If such works are public works, then whatever loss occurs either by the default of unfaithful stewards or the unprofitableness of the business must be made up by public taxation; and so far have these things gone already, that if the opinion of Geo. A. Smith is correct, while agriculturists are in danger of perishing of famine enough will be wrung from them to supply abundantly those on the "public works." Such a system is more destructive than the grasshoppers.

This making every avenue of enterprise a public monopoly, is of itself a relic of barbarism, which effectually bars all improvement. It is the system of Spain, Egypt and other base kingdoms, where, with vast wealth in natural resources, it has produced poverty, stagnation and misery.

Among the most intelligent and enterprising people it has been found inconsonant with the public interest that turnpikes, railroads and canals should be constructed as public works. Individual enterprise constructs them at half the cost, and runs them at a handsome profit, when under government superintendence they will not pay repairs. But with joiner shops, smithys, mills, furnaces, &c., &c., all conducted as public works, what city in the union could exist? Not one. There is no work done by government, but in one way or another it costs two or three prices. To this rule Utah is no exception. If government manufactures for the market, the difference must be charged in the price, and the monopoly protected by pains and penalties, or the articles sold at a loss, and the deficit made up by taxation.

We are as truly sorry to hear this report of the prospect of famine in Utah as these Utah people would be glad to hear the like of us, and hope that means may be found to avert it without the removal of the population to California, with its mines and its immoralities. The fault is that they went to the Salt Lake Basin. But since they are there, we want to see good come of it.

COUNTY SEALS.

Doty, of Detroit, has just engraved a seal for the Circuit Court of Manitowish county, which is a little the best piece of work of the kind we have seen in the State. The device is the ark of the covenant, and the mercy seat, overshadowed by the two cherubim. A most appropriate device for a county inhabited almost exclusively by Mormons. The seals of most courts and municipalities have some device representing heathen mythology, which may satisfy christians, but the chosen of God properly seek their emblems in the sacred mysteries.

The seal of Emmet county, engraved at the same place, represents an old Indian in a bark canoe; quite appropriate, as a large proportion of the population of that county are of the Indian race, and they are likely to make it their permanent home.

STEALING IN MACKINAC.

John S. Dixon, of Pine River, who spent last winter in Lansing lobbying against the Mormons, says when he came through Mackinac, landing there to take another boat, his cow was stolen, and hid away in the village in broad day light, and he was several hours in a vain search for her.

After an inconvenient delay, an Irishman drove her back, and apologized for stealing her by saying, "I thought you was a Marman." Comment is needless.

Attorney General Holman, who has just returned from Utah, reports very unfavorably of the prospects of the Territory. In Utah he was accused of illicit intercourse with Indian women, and rejected from good society. This may account for his unfavorable opinion of the country. All accounts, however, seem to justify the conclusion that the natural resources of the valley have been overestimated. At best it is but a cluster of oases in a vast desert.

DRUMMOND ISLAND.

The Mormon settlement on Drummond Island was commenced two years since, but had no growth till within the last four weeks several emigrants went on. Drummond is a large Island in Lake Huron, being twenty miles long and thirteen wide. The shores are indented by several excellent harbors, as well as numerous rocky bays. The surface is uneven, and in some parts hilly, but does not rise to mountains. There are some extensive flats. A considerable portion of the land is excellent, other tracts are rocky and barren. Notwithstanding considerable tracts of land are barren and worthless, the Island presents many advantages for settlement. The present moment is propitious, and we hope to see the number of settlers increased.

Drummond Island, and a few small Islands surrounding it, constitute the township of Drummond, in the county of Chippewa. There are few settlers in that part of the country, and no opposition to Mormonism. Mormons settling there are in no danger of persecution.

Col. Stej toe and his command have left Utah for California. No soldiers remain in the Valley.

THE REASON OF HIGH PRICES EXPLAINED.

A few days since the New York Journal of Commerce stated that a convention or meeting of produce dealers had been held in this city, at which measures were adopted calculated to keep up the prices of breadstuffs as long as possible, for the purpose of enabling them to dispose of their surplus stocks. The paragraph has been noticed, but not generally credited. We learn, however, from reliable authority, that such a meeting was actually held here a few days prior to the 1st of July, which was attended by dealers from various points from Chicago to New York.

These parties, it is understood, control about three-fourths of all the flour and grain now in store awaiting shipment, and in transitu from the western granaries to the eastern markets. The object of their meeting was to combine in order to keep up present prices until the latest possible moment. When it is recollected that much the largest proportion of the stock now in hand and expected to be made available before the receipt of the new harvest, is entirely controlled by a limited number of dealers, the task which they have undertaken is not one attended with any very great difficulty. The principal obstacles to its success is publicity, and the extraordinary pains taken by the parties to this transaction to keep in the shade is another evidence of their ability and shrewdness in carrying out their plan.

P. S. Since the above was in type, we have received additional information, which settles the question emphatically. The convention was held at the Clarendon, and was quite numerously attended. The combination went into operation early last week, and had the effect to immediately check the downward tendency of prices, which had become alarming, and to cause them again to go upward. Purchases, to a considerable extent, were also made by those in the secret, and several unsuspecting outsiders in this vicinity were victimized. Large quantities of flour were ordered into store, and corn, the face of a decline of 4s. 6d. in the English markets, maintained its buoyancy at an advance. It is not difficult to account for the milk in the cocoanut now. The matter is perfectly clear, and several very unusual "freaks of trade" are reconciled without the aid of forty-foot reflectors.—Buffalo Republic.

A FEAST FOR ANTIQUARIANS.

Recent excavations on the site of the ancient cemeteries of Sidon have brought to light objects which exceed in interest the discoveries of Ninevah. Sidon is 30 miles south of Beirut, and contains 10,000 inhabitants.—There has long existed a tradition of treasures hidden among the ancient ruins, to which the people gave credence. In this belief, a Moslem obtained a right to dig in an old grave yard.—For a long time his labors were unsuccessful, but in the winter of 1853 '54 he came upon three copper pots, each containing eight hundred pieces of gold, which bore the name or head of Philip or Alexander. The value of each piece is about five dollars.

Of course, when this was published, an army of gold diggers took the field. On the 19th of last January, writes a correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce, some men, at the depth of twelve feet, struck upon a splendid sarcophagus. On the lid was an inscription in the Phœnician language.

"The lid is of a blue-black marble, intensely hard and taking a very fine polish. The lid is about eight feet long by four feet wide. The upper end is wrought into the figure of a female head and shoulders of almost a giant size. The features are Egyptian, with large, full, almond-shaped eyes, the nose flattened, and lips remarkably thick, and somewhat after the negro mould. The whole countenance is smiling, agreeable, and expressive beyond any thing I have ever seen in the disinterred monuments of Egypt or Ninevah. The head-dress resembles that which appears in Egyptian figures, while on each shoulder there is the head of some bird—a dove or pigeon—and the bosom is covered by what appears to be a sort of cape, with a deep fringe, as of lace.—On the lid, below the figure head is the inscription, consisting of twenty-two long lines, closely written. The letters are in perfect preservation, and can be read with the utmost ease and accuracy, and the whole forms by far the longest and most perfect inscription in this most ancient language and character.—It appears to be mainly a genealogical history of the person buried in the sarcophagus, who, as it appears, was a king of Sidon. The names of Baal and Ashtoreth, the well known gods of the Sidonians, occur repeatedly in these inscriptions. Some of the words are Hebrew, as melch, king, while the forms of some of the letters are so much like those of the ancient Greek as at once to indicate the relationship. Letters were invented by the Phœnician. Here we seem to see them dropping from their hands in the first casting."

The correspondent adds that the Rev. Mr. Smith, an American missionary, who is translating the whole Bible into Arabic, deciphered the inscription with little difficulty. A contest has arisen between the English and French consuls, as to the ownership of the splendid prize, each being anxious to enrich the collection of antiquities of their respective countries with this remarkable monument. While the question is pending in the courts, the Turkish Governor has placed a guard of soldiers over the coveted treasure.—Ex.

BLESSINGS OF POVERTY.

Hear what a distinguished writer says on the subject:

"Poverty is the nurse of family energy and heaven-climbing thoughts, attended by love, faith and hope, around whose steps the mountain breezes blow, and from whose countenance all the virtues gather strength. Look around you upon the distinguished men that in every department of life guide and control the times, and enquire what was their origin and what were their early fortunes. Were they, as a general rule, rocked and dandled in the lap of wealth? No, such men emerge from the homes of decent competence or struggling poverty. Necessity sharpens their faculties and privation and sacrifice brace their moral nature. They learn the great art of renunciation and enjoy the happiness of having few wants. There is not an idle fiber in their frames. They put the vigor of a resolute purpose into every act. The edge of their minds is always kept sharp. In the schools of life, men like these meet the softly nurtured darlings of prosperity as the iron meets the vessel of porcelain."

WHY THERE IS NO RAIN IN PERU.

In Peru, South America, rain is unknown. The coast of Peru is in the region of perpetual south-east trade winds. Though the Peruvian shores are on the verge of Great South Sea Boiler, yet it never rains there. The reason is plain. The south-east trade winds in the Atlantic ocean first strike the water on the coast of Africa. Traveling to the north-west, they blow obliquely across the ocean until they touch the coast of Brazil.

By this time they are heavily laden with vapor, which they continue to bear along across the continent, and depositing it as they go, and supplying with it the sources of the Rio de la Plata and the southern tributaries of the Amazon. Finally they reach the snow-capped Andes, and here is wrong from them the last drop of moisture that that very low temperature can extract. Reaching the summit of that range, they now tumble down as cool and dry winds on the Pacific slopes beyond. Meeting no evaporating surface, and with no temperature colder than that to which they were subjected on the mountain tops, they reach the ocean before they become charged with fresh vapor, and before, therefore, they have any which the Peruvian climate can extract. Thus we see how the tops of the Andes becomes the reservoir from which are supplied the rivers of Chili and Peru.—Lieut. Murray's Geography of the Sea.

MORE GOLD EXCITEMENT.—An excitement has been prevailing among the Mormon brethren at San Bernardino, from discoveries lately made of gold deposits in the San Bernardino mountains. Several parties of the faithful were out prospecting.—San Diego Herald.

We hope the above is not true;

we would rather hear of an iron, coal, wood, lead, wheat, corn, or any other mine being found than a gold mine.

From all parts of California, as well as from Utah, reports are that the destruction by grasshoppers is immense.—Mormon.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

From all quarters disastrous accounts are received of the grasshoppers. In Carson Valley it is feared the entire grain crop will be destroyed, while in the vicinity of Sacramento and at Hook Farm, the residence of Gen. Sutter, everything green had disappeared in their march.

ARRIVAL OF ORSON HYDE AND COMPANY, AND COL. STEPTOE AND COMPANY AT CARSON VALLEY.—The Sacramento Union publishes a telegraphic dispatch from Placerville, announcing the arrival at that place from Salt Lake, of Hon. J. P. Stiles, Associate Judge of Utah, J. L. Heyward, U. S. Marshal of Utah, and Orson Hyde. Col. Steptoe and command will remain at Carson Valley about ten days to recruit, previous to crossing the mountains. Mr. Hyde says that the last report gives him many more wives than he really has, and none came over with him.—Alta California, June 30.

LATER.

BY PACIFIC EXPRESS COMPANY.

A company of dragoons, under command of Mowry, accompanied by Lieut. Chandler, arrived at Los Angeles on the 20th. They are en route for Fort Tejon, and have about 80 horses. Col. Steptoe, with the remainder of the troops, have taken the northern route.

The military road through Utah has been completed and accepted by the professor.

The crops throughout Utah have been almost totally destroyed by grasshoppers, and the farmers have commenced putting in another crop.

There had been no eastern mail received at Salt Lake City since March, and the government officials now receive their correspondence via California.

COL. STEPTOE.—We learn that Col. Steptoe did not resign, as was stated, the Governorship of Utah Territory. He has informed the administration at Washington that he will act as Governor, provided that when his term is out or he is displaced he shall be reinstated in the army. He is now awaiting the reply of the President, which is being taken to him by express from this way to Carson Valley.—On receiving the reply, if it is favorable, Col. Steptoe will immediately return to Salt Lake, and continue the administration of the government.

The thermometer for some time has been ranging at from 112 deg. to 115 deg. in the shade, at the Colorado.—Alta California.

"A sober life," according to an eminent author, "implies moderation in all things. It consists in moderate eating in moderate drinking, and in the moderate enjoyment of all the pleasures of this world—in keeping the mind moderately and constantly employed, in cultivating the affections moderately, in avoiding extremes of heat and cold, and in shunning excessive excitement, either of body or of mind."

KANSAS.—"Outrages continue. The seat of government is sought to be removed to a location which would place it directly under the influence of a mob."

Antiquities of America.

In the southern part of Mexico are the remains of a city whose extent has led recent travellers to suppose that it was sixty miles in circumference, and to have contained 3,000,000 inhabitants. In this city was a temple, whose ruins indicate that its size equalled that of St. Peter's at Rome. Fourteen other buildings of gigantic size are distinctly traced.—The Pyramid of Cholula far exceeds in size the largest of Egyptian pyramids. It covers forty-four acres of ground—is four hundred feet high. It appears to be a large pile, artificially cut and sculptured. Its sides are covered with platforms, traces, slopes, gables; all constructed of immense stones, filled with critical nicety, without the intervention of cement. The pyramid is three miles in circumference. On its top is a temple, and it encloses in its bosom a vault which contains skeletons and relics of idolatry. The style of architecture is unique. Who shall penetrate the mystery which enshrouds the mighty empires which reared these monuments? Our savans need not make a pilgrimage to far-off lands to decipher mysterious hieroglyphics and to anatomize mummies. At their door lie greater marvels, the problem of whose existence remains to be solved.—Ex.

Minutes of the Conference, held at Enoch Grove, Saint James, Beaver Island, July 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th, 1855.

The General Assembly of Saints assembled at 10 o'clock, A. M., agreeable to appointment. Conference opened by Pres. Strang reading Psalm xxxvii. Singing. Prayer by Pres. Strang. Singing. Preaching by Pres. Strang, on the covenants that God made with Abraham. Adjourned till 2 o'clock, P. M. Benediction by Pres. Strang. Afternoon session, 2 o'clock, P. M., opened by singing; Ebenezer Page, one of the Twelve, presiding. Prayer by E. Page. Singing.—After transacting miscellaneous business, adjourned till to-morrow morning at sunrise.—Benediction by E. Page.

Sunday morning at sunrise the saints assembled with their victims, for a thankoffering unto the most high God because he has given us the kingdom. The victims were slain between sunrise and 8 o'clock, and whilst the feast was preparing the saints assembled at 10 o'clock to hear preaching.

Pres. Strang read xxxvii Psalm. Singing. Prayer by Phineas Wright, one of the Twelve. Singing. Preaching by Pres. Strang, on the sonship and messiahship of Jesus. His text was 1st Cor. xv. 21 and 22.—After sermon the eucharist was administered. The congregation dismissed by singing. After singing George Miller, General in Chief, marched the assembly in procession to the tables, which were spread with the luxuries that had been prepared by the saints. After they had partaken of the feast Pres. Strang pronounced the benediction, and then repaired to the meeting ground. After the assembly was called to order, Pres. Strang made some remarks, and announced to the saints that God had appointed baptism for the dead at Beaver Island, and to be performed only in Font Lake. Adjourned till to-morrow at 10 o'clock, A. M.

Monday, July 9th, 10 o'clock, A. M., forenoon session opened by singing. Prayer by E. Page. Singing. Preaching by P. Wright, one of the Twelve, on the royal line of David. Text, John i. 20 to 26. After transacting miscellaneous business, adjourned for an hour. Benediction by E. Page. Afternoon session, half past 2 o'clock, P. M., opened by singing. Prayer by Warren Post, one of the Twelve. Singing. Pres. Strang announced the call of brothers Anson W. Prindle, Edward Chidester, Isaac Pierce, Lorenzo D. Tubbs and James Hutchins to the Apostolic office. Preaching by L. D. Hickey, one of the Twelve, on the everlasting kingdom of God. Text, Luke xvii. 21: "Sorely the kingdom of God is within you." Adjourned till 10 o'clock, to-morrow. Benediction by E. Page.

Tuesday, July 10th, 10 o'clock, A. M., opened by singing. Prayer by Benjamin G. Wright. Pres. Strang made remarks concerning the apparel of the sisters, showing the necessity of conforming to the pattern that God has given. Preaching by Warren Post, on the gospel of the resurrection and the salvation of the dead. Pres. Strang made some remarks on the priesthood, and then asked the mind of the saints whether they would sustain with their faith, confidence and prayers the above named brethren that God had called to be Apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of the king in Zion. They all voted to sustain them by their faith, confidence and prayers, and they (A. W. Prindle, E. Chidester, Isaac Pierce, L. D. Tubbs and James Hutchins) covenanted to go when, where and as they were sent, and to come when, where and as they are called. Then they were anointed and ordained under the royal scepter and the hands of Warren Post, L. D. Hickey, Phineas Wright and Ebenezer Page, members of the quorum of the Twelve, to be Apostles of God, the Lord Jesus Christ and the king in Zion, and members of the quorum of the Twelve, and princes in God's everlasting kingdom.—Adjourned for an half hour. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Afternoon session, 2 o'clock, P. M., opened by singing. Preaching by E. Page, on the everlasting life of the saints. Remarks by Pres. Strang. Adjourned till 8 o'clock, to-morrow. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

Wednesday morning, July 11th, Conference in session. Opened by singing. Prayer by Moses Chase, patriarch. Pres. Strang presented before the Conference Bros. George Miller, Gilbert Watson and A. J. Porter, to have the approval of the Conference, which was unanimous, to be set apart, anointed and ordained to baptize for the dead at this place, which was accordingly done.

For Seventies, Henry L. Bays, David R. Whipple, M. M. Aldrich, Jr., George Wright,

Alfred Fingal and John S. Comstock, were ordained to that office.

For Elders, Abel Galland, John Raymond, Moses Chidester and J. T. Pendleton, were ordained.

The case of S. P. Bacon, formerly Pres. of the Twelve, was brought forward. Bro. Post offered the following resolution:

Whereas, Samuel P. Bacon has failed to bear a faithful testimony to the end, and turned back from the witness of his Apostleship, and finally has corrupted himself and refused all admonition and gone among our enemies; therefore,

Resolved, That all authority of priesthood be withdrawn from him, and he be deprived of all the sacraments of the church, and that he has forfeited the confidence of the saints and all who love righteousness.

After prolonged discussion all authority was taken from him. Also the case of Franklin Bevier, Pres. of the Seventies. Bro. Watson offered the following resolution:

Whereas, Bro. Franklin Bevier has gone from among us, and taken his residence among gentiles, by means of which he has utterly neglected the office of Pres. of the Seventies, and neglected his ministry; therefore,

Resolved, That he be cast out of his Presidency and priesthood.

Adopted unanimously, and his authority taken from him.

For Priests, Davis H. Bays, Samer Page, Absalom Kuykendall and John Case, were ordained.

For Teachers, Sarah A. Wright, Maria J. Comstock, Adaline Scott, and Clarissa O. Nichols, were ordained.

For Deacons, Tobias McNutt, Mortimer M. Aldrich, Mason C. Kidder, Samuel N. See, Pomroy J. Kidder and Lovell Kidder, were ordained.

For Recorders of the Baptisms of the Dead, Sarah A. Wright, the General Recorder for the Dead at Beaver Island, and Assistant Recorders for the Baptisms of the Dead at Beaver Island, Adaline Scott, Maria J. Comstock and Anna Elizabeth Brownson, were ordained.

The ordinances of sealing and blessing children, also baptizing for the living and the dead, were ministered in a great number of cases.

The Feast of First Fruits is appointed permanently to take place the day next preceding the third Sabbath before the Autumnal Equinox, (counting the day of the Equinox; if it occurs on Sabbath the first,) this year will occur the last day of August.

The Conference adjourned sine die. Benediction by Pres. Strang.

JAMES J. STRANG, Pres.

HEBREM G. BALL, Clerk.

The Feast of First Fruits is appointed permanently, to take place the day next preceding the third Sabbath before the Autumnal Equinox, (counting the day of the Equinox, if it occurs on Sabbath the first.) This year it will occur the last day of August.

NOTICE TO BUILDERS.

Office of Light House Inspector, Detroit, July 18, 1855.

SEALED Proposals will be received at this office until the fifteenth day of August next for furnishing materials and building a Light House and keeper's dwelling at Port Clinton, and at Taylor Point, Illinois, and at the entrance of Beaver Island Harbor, Michigan.—Specifications and drawings can be seen at this office, No. 122, Jefferson Avenue, or at the Custom House, Detroit. Working drawings for all the casings will be furnished. The work to be completed by the 31st October.

No payment will be made until the whole work is finished, and before it is received it must be approved by a duly authorized agent of the government. Said agent having power to reject all materials and workmanship not in accordance with the terms of the contract.—Proposals should be separate for each work, to be addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed, "Proposals for building Light House." The assignment of the contract, without the consent of the Department, will be a forfeiture of the same.

The right is reserved to reject all bids that may not be deemed advantageous to the public interest.

L. SITGREAVES,
Capt. T. E., Light House Inspector
11th District.

F. JOHNSON & CO.

Have purchased and are continuing to purchase, for cash, a full assortment of fresh goods, by which they are enabled to sell at BUFFALO and DETROIT PRICES.

DRY GOODS.

Calicoes, of various patterns. Mous de Lains and Barges, Lawns, Shawls, &c.

A new supply of Bonnets, of handsome finish. Book and Battered Mullins. Groceries and Fishing Tackle, and various other stores. Stoves of the most approved pattern and material, for sale. 68aa.

CITY STORE, SAINT JAMES,

ONE DOOR NORTH OF THE DOCK, WATER ST.

J. M. WAIT has just opened a large assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Tin ware, Hardware, Cutlery, Iron, Nails, Noddies, Glass, Ready Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, also a full supply of Fishermen's Tackle. Thankful for past patronage, I hope to merit a liberal share in the future, by selling cheaper than the cheapest for ready pay; cash not refused. Saint James, June 12th, 1855. 70-60

Documents Accompanying the Report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, of the Michigan House of Representatives.

(Concluded.)

MR. GILBERT, INDIAN AGENT, FORWARDED US THE FOLLOWING LETTER TO THE COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS:

Washington, March 4th, 1854.

Hon. GEO. W. MANYPENNY, Commissioner Indian Affairs,
Washington:

SIR—I have noticed with much pleasure the recommendations contained in your last Annual Report, relative to the Indians of Michigan, and agree entirely with the remark that "the dictates of humanity and good policy alike require the early and effective interposition of the Government in respect to them."

I beg leave on this subject to submit to you the accompanying statements, and my own views of the policy that should be adopted by the Government in any attempt to permanently benefit this remnant of the race.

The Indians of Michigan are principally of the Chippewa tribe. There are also remaining small remnants of the Ottawas and Pottowatomies. Their business with the Government is mainly based upon the stipulations of the treaty of Washington, of March 28th, 1836, annexed abstract No. 7. The annuities due by this treaty will expire with two more payments in 1855. The only remaining claims of the Indians under it, with the General Government, will then be,

1st. For amount withheld and invested in stocks in accordance with the provisions of article 4, to which interest should be added, $20,000.

2d. For this sum due by amendment of the Senate to article 4, for surrendering reservations, $200,000.

3d. A reasonable commutation for lands to which they would have been entitled west of the Mississippi, had they removed thither, and in estimating this item the expense of removal and of subsistence, all which has been saved to the Government, should be taken into account.

All other treaty stipulations for the benefit of the Michigan Indians are permanent, and under them small annuities have been paid for many years. They are as follows:

To the Ottawas under the provisions of 4 treaties; a permanent annuity of $1,700 00.—To the Pottowatomies of Huron, a permanent annuity of $400 00. To the Pottowatomies, a permanent annuity of $1,587 50. To the Chippewas of Swan Creek and Black River, $300 00. To the Chippewas of Saginaw, $2,200 00. Total, $6,187 50.

The Chippewas of Saginaw have also a claim upon the Government under the treaty of Detroit, of Jan. 14th, 1837, and which was modified and explained by the treaty of Flint, of Dec. 20th, 1837, and of Saginaw, of Jan. 23d, 1838, for the proceeds of the lands ceded by that treaty, whenever the same shall be sold.

I am of opinion that all their claims of every description may be settled and compromised with the Indians advantageously to the Government, and with great benefit to them, so that within three years all connection with and dependence upon Government, on the part of the Indians, may properly cease.

I propose the following arrangement for the Chippewas:

1st To set apart certain tracts of public lands in Michigan, in locations suitable for the Indians, and as far removed from white settlements as possible; and within the limits of the tract so set apart every Indian family should be permitted to enter eighty acres without charge.—The title to the land should be vested in the head of the family, and the power to alienate should be withheld. All the land embraced in the land set apart should be withdrawn from sale, and no white person should be permitted to live among them, except teachers, traders and mechanics, specially authorized by rules and regulations prescribed by the authority of the State.

2d. To pay in addition to the grant of land the sum of—dollars, in two equal annual payments, to be paid in cattle, agricultural implements, mechanics tools, building material and cooking utensils; and this sum and the grant of lands, to be in full of all claims of every nature whatsoever, after the payment of the specific annuity due under the treaty.

3d. I propose that the two remaining installments of annuities be paid as promised by the treaty. That the $20,000 reserved and invested, be paid with interest, in the same manner that the annuities are now paid, the year following the expiration of the annuity payments.

4th. That the sum of $300,000, upon which interest has hitherto been paid, be deposited when the annuities expire, with the State of Michigan, as an educational fund for the benefit of the Indians. The principal never to be impaired, and the interest to be appropriated from year to year, for purposes of education, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the State.

I also propose to commute with the Ottawa tribe, who are also parties to the treaty of Mar. 28th 1836, and entitled to all its benefits, for the small permanent annuities to which they are entitled under the treaties of 1795, 1807, 1818 and 1821, and which amount in the aggregate, deducting the portion committed to those who have emigrated West of the Mississippi, to the small sum of $1,700.

The Chippewas, of Saginaw, in addition to their permanent annuities, have a claim upon government for the proceeds of the reservation lands, ceded by them by the treaty of 1837. These lands are now held for sale at $2 50 per acre. They are generally of no better quality, and not more desirable for settlement, or as an investment for capitalists, than other public lands in Michigan, in the same section of country, and which are held at the usual rate of $1 25. The consequence is that they sell very slowly, and many years must elapse before they will be taken up, unless the price is reduced, and by the terms of the treaty stipulations, this may now properly be done.

The lands ceded by this treaty amounted in the aggregate to 102,400 acres. The United States have already advanced to the Indians, a large proportion of its value. They now propose to surrender all claims upon this fund, upon receiving grants of land in the same manner that I have suggested for the Ottawas and Chippewas, parties to the treaty of 1836. They also propose to commute their permanent annuities, due under the treaties of 1795, 1807, and 1819, and which amount in the aggregate to the sum of $2,500, or for the last year $1 75 per head—for the present value to be paid in their annual installments. They are also receiving an annual appropriation of 2,000 dollars for a blacksmith, farmer, agricultural implements, and smith shop supplies, which they propose to commute, for the purpose of establishing an Educational Fund, to be placed under the control of the State of Michigan, in the same manner suggested by the Ottawas and Chippewas.

The Pottowatomies are entitled to a permanent annuity of 16,000 dollars, under the treaty of July 29th, 1829, nearly all of which is remitted to those of the tribe who have emigrated west of the Mississippi. But few of them remain in Michigan—about 250 persons—and their portion of the annuity amounts to "only 1,587 dollars and 50 cents."

The Pottowatomies, of Huron, a distinct band of the same tribe, receive under the treaty of 1807, a permanent annuity of 400 dollars. They are only 50 in number. I think they could be persuaded to change their permanent annuities into temporary installments, and set aside a portion of the principal for an educational fund. They are not, however, as much disposed in favor of the plan, as the other Indians. To induce them to do it, I propose to offer them the same privilege of entering land that is extended to the Ottawas and Chippewas. The increase in the quantity would be but small, and the expense light, in comparison with that necessarily incurred in making the annuity payments from year to year.

Such are the general features of the plan that I propose; it will require the consent of the Indians, and the concurrence of the State authorities.

Both, I believe, can be obtained, and I respectfully submit that the object sought to be obtained, is worthy of an effort to accomplish it.

Believing the plan feasible, I do not design in this communication to enter into an extended argument in favor of its adoption. I suggest the following points:

1st. It is the only plan offering any reasonable ground of hope for the improvement of this race in civilization. They are now scattered throughout the whole Northern and central portion of the Lower Peninsula, and cannot be effectually reached by teachers and missionaries, unless they colonize, and have a permanent home, with an interest in the soil;

2d. It is the only plan by which the specific amounts due the Indians, under the several treaty stipulations, and their equitable claims upon the government, can be made available for their benefit. The large sum due under the treaty of 1836, if paid directly to the Indians, in coin, would be of no particular benefit to them whatever.—Within one year after its payment, scarce a trace of good could be discovered as the result. It has already attracted the attention of claim-agents and harpies, who subsist by plunder, and who stand ready to clutch the prize whenever a favorable opportunity presents itself;

3d. It will relieve the general government of all the contingent expenses attending its transactions with the Indians of Michigan. The agency may then be discontinued, and with it twenty-four subordinate officers—all of which will save to the government not less than 20,000 dollars per annum;

4th. Justice to the State of Michigan requires that some such arrangement should be made—otherwise on the expiration of their annuities and the payment of their claims under the treaty of 1836, the general government having no further transactions with them, they will be turned over to the State as paupers, and will be from year to year a continual source of annoyance to her citizens, and expense to her treasury.

I respectfully request that if, in your opinion, the suggestions that I have made are entitled to consideration, you will submit them with your own views on the subject, to the Secretary of the Interior and the President, in order that some definite action may be had in regard to it. The lands of Michigan are all in market, and are fast being taken up for civilization and settlement, and the difficulties attending the selection of suitable locations for the Indians within the State will rapidly increase from year to year.

Very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,

H. C. GILBERT,
Indian Agent.

TO THE CHILDREN.

You were made to be clean and neat in your person and in your dress, and gentlemanly and ladylike in your manners. If you have not been bitten by a mad dog, do not be afraid of fresh water. There is enough water in the world to keep every body clean; but there is a great deal of it never finds its right place. In regard to this article, there is no danger of being selfish. Take as much as you need. The people of the west boast of their great rivers; I would boast of using a large tub of their water every day.

You were made to be kind, and generous, and magnanimous. If there is a boy in the school who has a club-foot, do not let him know that you ever saw it. If there is a poor boy with ragged clothes, do not talk about rags when he is in hearing. If there is a lame boy, assign him some part of the game which does not require running. If there is a hungry one, give him part of your dinner. If there is a bright one, be not envious of him; for if one boy is proud of his talents, and another is envious of them, there are two great wrongs, and no more talent than before. If a larger or stronger boy has injured you, and is sorry for it, forgive him; request the teacher not to punish him. All the school will show by their countenance, how much better it is to have a great soul than a great fist.

You are made to learn. Be sure you learn something every day. When you go to bed at night, if you cannot think of something new which you have learned during the day, spring up and find a book, and get an idea before you sleep. If you were to stop eating, would not your bodies pine and famish? If you stop learning, your minds will pine and famish too. You all desire that your bodies should thrive and grow, until you become as tall and large as your fathers or mothers, or other people. You would not like to stop growing where you are now, at three feet high, or four feet, or even at five. But if you do not feed your minds as well as your bodies, they will stop growing; and one of the poorest, meanest, most despicable things I have ever seen in the world, is a little mind in a great body.

Suppose there was a museum in your neighborhood, full of rare and splendid curiosities—should you not like to go and see it? Would you not think it unkind if you were forbidden to visit it? The creation is a museum, all full and crowded with wonders, and beauties, and glories. One door, and one only, is open, by which you may enter this magnificent temple. It is the door of knowledge. The learned laborer, the learned peasant, or slave, are made welcome at its door, while the ignorant, though kings, are shut out.—By Horace Mann.

What a hollow-hearted concern this world is! What a lack of upright and downright honesty! Professions are plenty, but what are professions without practice? Religion has become an article of merchandize, a tool of self-interest, a steppingstone to public favor; friendship is hardly known, except in name; friends, now-a-days, are much like one's shadow, ever present when the sun shines, but vanishing when a cloud arises; love degenerated to animal passion; heaven, they say, is paved with gold, and should certain speculators we know of, ever get there, and possess the same disposition they do now, they would dig up the gold, dam up the river of life, build factories, and convert the angels into operatives. This is the spirit of the times, at least we think so, and who will dispute it? There is, to be sure, now and then an honorable exception, and that is about all an honest man can see to make life desirable.

A man who writes falsehood or nonsense, may become popular and grow rich, but woe to him who utters needful truth.

The priest who pleases the fancy of the people, receives his $2000 to $5000 per year, while the real man of God, who goes forth weeping and bearing precious seed that would save and bless the world, may live on dry crusts, grudgingly given, unless he happens to fall in with some publican or sinner, who has no theological doxy to defend.—Pleasure Boat.

THE CORK TREE.

The Patent Office has distributed the seed of the European cork tree throughout a number of States, in order to test its adaptation for our climate. This tree in its native country, is an evergreen, and usually grows to the height of twenty or thirty feet. The substance familiarly known to us as cork is the outer bark, and grows two or three inches thick. Should the experiment succeed, it will be the subject of great national importance that plantations should be established in various parts of the country for the purpose of growing this useful substance. If india rubber could be afforded as cheap, stoppers made of it would answer just as well as cork.

TIME OF INVENTIONS.

Glass windows were first used in 1189; Chimneys in houses, 1246; Lead pipes for conveying water, 1252; Tallow candles for lights, 1290; Spectacles invented for an Italian, 1290; Paper first made from linen, 1302; Woolen cloth first made in England, 1331; Art of printing in oil colors, 1410; Printing invented, 1447; Variation of the compass noticed, 1543; Pins used in England, 1510; Circulation of human blood discovered by Harvey, 1619; First newspaper published, 1630; First steam engine invented, 1549; First cotton planted in the U. S., 1769; Steam engine improved by Watt, 1767; Steam cotton mill erected, 1783; Stereotype printing in Scotland, 1785; Animal magnetism, by Mesmer, 1788; First Sabbath school in England, 1789; Electro magnetic telegraph, Morse, 1832; Daguerreotype process invented, 1839.

When we reflect that every mother has children of surpassing genius, it is a matter of serious inquiry where all the ordinary men come from that cross our path in every day life.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 8.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, AUG. 16, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 75.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.
TERMS:—$3.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

Advertisements relating to the affairs of the public, whether on business or otherwise, addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, are paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per line (12 lines) for three insertions, and every subsequent insertion. A liberty is made to those who advertise in the Northern Islander, not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further order and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Northern Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

CORRESPONDENCE.

G. S. L. City, U. T., May 25, '55.

DEAR SON AND DAUGHTER:—
I received your letter, dated March 15th, from Canada. I was glad to hear of your health and that of your family. We had not heard from you for some three years, not knowing how to account for it, for we had written frequently to you, but when we received your letter the mystery was solved. Stephen and Horace also received letters from you.

But let me assure you we were no little astonished at the strange course you have taken. I should not have given credit to the report had it come in some other way.—
But, strange to say, how it is that the different spirits operate on individuals. One is induced to believe Strang, another Baneemy, another Gladden Bishop, another Rigdon, and another Brewster.—
These all have their votaries, all firm in the different faiths, all zealous in their own way, all serving God according to their different faiths, views and opinions.

Now here comes the question—
are all right, or are some wrong?
If all are right, let us travel on,
and make the best of life we can,
with as little persecution as possible, and get into a good country where the good things of this world abound in rich abundance.
But reflections pass through my mind something like these: Shall I be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease, whilst others fought to win the prize, and sailed the cloudy seas?

If I am not much mistaken the saints have got to pass through narrow places, where the priests will have to stand between the porch and the altar, and say, Lord, spare thy people, and give not thy heritage to the heathen.—
What the views of Mr. Strang are in regard to this matter I have not been informed, neither am I acquainted with the general views of doctrine advanced by the Strangites.

You stated that you was just as willing that brother James should be a prophet as brother Young.— For my own part I am willing to receive him whom the Lord has set apart to lead this people. The question would now arise who that person is, among all the prophets.
For my part, as I am a follower of Brigham, I shall advocate his authority to the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

The first evidence I received that Brigham was the true successor of Joseph, was on the day when Sidney set up his claim for the Presidency. Brigham's countenance, his voice, gestures and everything truly represented the martyred prophet in such a striking manner I shall never forget.—
I was convinced by the spirit of the Lord that the mantle of Joseph had fallen on Brigham.

From that day to this I have all the time seen undisputable evidence of the course that church has taken is pleasing in the sight of the Lord. I have had every opportunity to see the course President Young has taken for a number of years. I know him to be a man of God. He has taken every possible way to promote the interest of this people. He is kind, merciful and forbearing, when there is any hopes of reformation.
His course has ever been steadfast.
The confidential friend of Joseph, and the man Joseph did place in charge to guide the church, and to carry out the measures and designs contemplated by Joseph.

I have the testimony of mother
Smith, while in private converse with Joseph and the Twelve.— Now, said he, I am going to take my rest for a while, and I now place upon your shoulders the responsibility of bearing off the kingdom. Little did I think, said she, he was going to be martyred.
She closed her remarks by bursting into tears.

I have no doubt but you feel honest in your opinion, but honesty may not always prove a man right. Many of the sectarians are honest as we are in their religion, but their sincerity will not save
them.

Do not be offended when I show you the rock on which you ran aground. You recollect the word went out by Benson and Grant for the saints to gather to the Valley, en masse. This you did not comply with, which you might have done. Remember that the disobedience of one commandment will pave the way for a false spirit to enter. When once entered it will lead to every wrong imagination, and it is not easy to discern the difference. Satan is ingenious.
He will come with many truths.—
Were it not so, no one would believe him. Paul said: Many spirits are gone out into the world, therefore try them. Now if they were easily discerned there would be no need to try them, for it would be visible to every one.

You cited us to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. All who have come out since the beginning have dealt largely on the Book of Covenants, the Book of Mormon, Bible, &c. All these are good, but the spirit of God is ahead of all of them; it is continual progression, hence the stream is never as high as the fountain.

The valley of the mountains is the place for the people of God to gather to, where the house of the Lord is to be raised in the tops of the mountains, where all nations are to gather to. This is truly the chambers where the people are to be hid in when the overflowing scourge shall pass. Our strength is the mountain of rocks.

According to the signs of the times the calamities have commenced. War, famine and pestilence have begun to make their appearance in various parts of the world. Remember that the day is not far distant when war will be poured out upon all nations, and our own beloved land will be delugged in blood, and he that will not take up his sword against his neighbor must needs flee unto Zion. Therefore I would advise and exhort you to tarry not in all the plain, lest sudden destruction await you.

I would like to write many things to you, but I cannot do it in one letter. I would like to give you a description of the country, &c. The valleys are rich and very productive. It is far superior to Illinois or Missouri for wheat, and corn grows well. Potatoes are raised in any quantity. There is also abundance of fish. The public work is rapidly progressing.—

Every one seems willing to pay their tithing. The work is rolling on with rapidity. The elders are in almost all parts of the earth, gathering out the honest in heart.
Truly the fig tree begins to show forth the signs of our redemption.
When you see these things, lift up your heads and rejoice.

Sarah, my second wife, has two daughters. One is 27 months old, the other 3 months. Mother knows no difference between Sarah's children and her own.

I want you to write to us as soon as you receive this. Speak freely.
You are speaking to your friends;
those who feel for your present and eternal welfare. Look well to who you follow, lest sorrow should overtake you when you think not.
We were in great expectation of seeing you and family this fall, but how uncertain are all earthly expectations. My prayer to God, is that you may return.

Mother wishes to hear what Jane's testimony was to convince her of the truth of Strangism.— Please write. Send me something on doctrine, and everything else you can think of that will be interesting to us. I should like to get one of your papers now and then. My family all send their love to you.

Yours in the gospel.
WM. HICKENLOOPER.

REPLY.

St. James, Mich, July 24, '55.

DEAR FATHER AND MOTHER:—
I take my pen in hand, after so much delay, to answer your letter, dated May 25th, which came to hand the 10th inst. It found us all well, and enjoying a glorious Conference meeting. I received letters from Belinda, Horace and Stephen.

I shall, in answering you, endeavor to take up each question by itself, and look at it carefully, as far as doctrinal points are concerned. One is induced to believe in Strang, another Baneemy, another Gladden Bishop, another Rigdon, another Brewster. These are all zealous in their own way.

Now the question is, say you,
are all right, or are some wrong?
I answer, no; there can be only one right way; there can be a legion wrong ways. How then shall we try them? By the written word, is the reasonable conclusion. This is the only means by which we can solve these questions.

We all may say we are possessed with the holy spirit. So the professor of any religion, no matter how erroneous, will not in any wise admit he is devoid of the holy spirit. So we see that if it is better than the Bible, Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, as you have related, nevertheless it must be in accordance with the written word of God, as is found in any of those books.

Now let us carefully examine the word of God, as it is recorded, not anybody's assertion, and see if any of the above individuals have come in by the door. And while we are going through with the examination, we will class Brigham Young with the rest, and try him also by the word, and see who it is that is weighed in the balance and found wanting.

"And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations, until he be taken, if he abide in me."— D. & C. sec. 14, par. 1. As much as to say that when or at the time he was taken there is another appointed.

Now we will see how many pretended to receive revelations before Joseph's death. Baneemy claims to have been appointed ten years before. Gladden Bishop claimed to have received revelations eight or ten years before, and was tried and cut off from the church, as was well known.— Brewster claimed to have received revelations some few years before his death, and his father took him to show his revelations to Joseph, and got reproved. Sidney ceased to go in accordance to the word of the Lord through Joseph in the time of his life, and for several years before the prophet was martyred, as was well known to the church; for Joseph was heard repeatedly to say he had carried him on his back as long as he would.
Yet he stood as Joseph's counselor at his death—stood the highest in authority—yet he did not claim to have been appointed, but rather wished to be chosen guardian for the church. Consequently we will set them all down as usurpers.

Now the question at issue is, which of the two, Mr. Young or
Mr. Strang, or whether either.—
Mr. Young stated at the August Conference that Joseph stood in his own place, and always will.—
He also said the Twelve stand in their own place, and always will.
Then, I ask, why was brother David Patten's place filled by another? And if the High Priests and Seventies stand in their place, and always will, where, I ask, will the priesthood be then when this generation is dead? We draw the inference that it will be where it was when or after the Apostles fell asleep—gone to heaven, and the church into the wilderness, to be consigned to Popery.

He also stated or made this broad assertion: Let no one presume for a moment that the place of Joseph will be filled by another. When God has said, expressly, (if Joseph be true,) that if he (Joseph) be taken, I (the Lord) will plant another in his stead.— Sec. 11, p. 4. Now another is not twelve. Which told the truth,
Mr. Young or the Lord through Mr. Smith? I shall leave that for you to infer.

I will drop this part at this time, as I treated quite lengthy in my former letter. And as Mr.
Young does not nor never did claim to have been appointed by Joseph, neither received the ordination from the hands of an angel, but after about four years, in which time he stood with the Twelve to lead, and then was appointed by the minority of the people assembled together at Council Bluffs, I shall show beyond successful contradiction by your own arguments that he is an usurper, and has acted as such ever since Joseph's death.

In the Deseret News, extra, in a revelation purporting to have come from God through Joseph in 1843, it is stated that there can but one stand on the earth at one time holding the sealing power; which is, of course, the highest authority of the priesthood on earth, that whatsoever power it has to bind on earth it has to bind in heaven, &c. Now admitting your argument to be true for a moment, for argument's sake, that Joseph did say to the Twelve in private council, a few months prior to his death, that he was going to rest for a while, and I now place upon your shoulders the responsibility of bearing off the kingdom to the nations of the earth, what does it imply? that he conferred that high power upon them equally, of which there can but one stand upon the earth at a time holding it, as is stated in the Deseret News,

extra?

And if they equally held it, which they did if the declaration conferred it upon one it did upon them all equally, one as much as the other, why in the name of truth, I ask, did Brigham Young, after standing with the Twelve holding that authority for four years after Joseph's martyrdom, take the authority to himself, thereby usurping the power to lead the church? Or, in other words, if you claim that Mr. Young held it all the time from the time that Joseph was with them in that council unto the present, I ask again which of the two, Mr. Smith or Mr. Young, held it from the time of that council until his (Mr.
Smith's) death?

I wish, if you please, you will answer these questions according to the book. I will tell you what it implies. That he placed no more authority upon them than they had before is evident, for from the declaration you say was given to them, it is nothing more than is conferred upon an Apostle, and the responsibility of bearing off the kingdom to the nations of the earth.

So you see he was rather re-proving them for not doing their duty. Instead of conferring additional power upon them, they got a reproof for not carrying out that great responsibility that was upon their shoulders of bearing the kingdom to the nations. He had it resting upon him, and gave them to understand he should do their duty no longer. They had it to do themselves; therefore throwing it off from his shoulders. In saying they should bear off the kingdom did not confer power to lead the church.

Because Mr. Young had tried to mimic Joseph for several years before his death, and on his return from Boston after his (Joseph's) martyrdom even went and got a dentist to take out a tooth on the same side that Joseph lost one, to make himself appear as much like him as possible, that even his voice, gestures and likeness would seem like Joseph, and did, at the August Conference, as you related, which was evidence to you that he was the man Joseph appointed;
yet it is no evidence without he had come in at the gate, and been ordained, as the Lord had told Joseph before; which was by an angel. Sec. 50, p. 2, 3. Given Sept., 1832.

No person does or ever did set up any claim to have been called by revelation of God, and ordained by the hands of angels as the successor of Joseph in the prophetic office, except James J. Strang.—
That he is thus called and sent, he presents strong evidence. And as that is the only mode pointed out in the scriptures and the revelations to come into that office, unless he is the rightful prophet, there is none, and consequently the Mormon institution must fall to the ground.

Mr. Strang's views in regard to the saints being drawn into narrow places is somewhat like yours, and more especially of that people (if saints they can be called) being in such straitened circumstances that if they are delivered at all it will be by the power and influence of that priest and prophet that God has called by his own voice, and anointed and sent under the hand of his angels, and said to him that he should bring salvation when there was no arm to deliver, and that he should break the yoke

o the unjust ruler; that they should flee away, but the way of peace they should not find.

I hope you will not be offended when I show you the rock upon which we both run aground. You no doubt remember at the August Conference, of 1844, that the question was asked by Brigham Young, after many remarks were made preparatory to the question, whether we would have a prophet or the Twelve to lead us, or Sidney Rigdon.

You and I there raised our hands in favor of the Twelve, thereby rejecting God's prophet, whom he had called and sent by the ministering of angels. And God was just, for he is a God of truth, and cannot lie. He was just I say in fulfillment of his sacred and divine word by his servant Joseph, to remove us together with that people out of their place; or, in other words, he promised that if they would adhere to the words of those men whom he appointed to lead them they should not be moved out of their place. D. & C. sec. 103, p. 13. Evidence sufficient to show that even if they did adhere to Joseph's teachings unto his death, and were not moved out of their place, that after his death they rejected God's prophet and were moved out of their place.

Heber C. Kimball and others of the Twelve, at the April Conference, 1845, and at other times, said they were the most obedient people that ever existed. Why were they removed out of their place? Was it because the arm of God is shortened, that he cannot save? or was it because they obeyed the voice of men, whom God did not appoint to be their leaders?

The promise is express that if they will obey they shall not be removed, and if they will not obey they shall be cursed. We were removed, and bitterly have we been cursed. Yes, we had to flee from fire and from the sword, and finally from the cannon's mouth. I think you remember well the night that we fled before them, in which you carried your sick daughter helpless, yes, in the jaws of death, as it were, on a one horse wagon, wrapped in blankets, who is now my affectionate wife, and is the mother of four lovely and promising children.

We went with the loss of our property, and have wandered in darkness. But thanks be to the Lord, I have beheld the true light upon the Islands, that have waited for his law. Yes, without inhabitant, as the prophet declared of old, for God's law, and finally is now settling up with the saints, who have the law of the Lord recorded in a book, that they may read it all their days, and that it may be written upon their hearts, that they may not forget it.

I must say something upon that rock, as you represented, upon which I run aground. About eight months before Benson and Grant came back to the Bluffs, Orson Hyde gave council for all that were in rather poor circumstances to remove north, and take up claims, and assured them they should be blessed with a plenty of means by so doing to go west with by the time they were required to go, intimating at the time they would stay there several years.

The Bishops also went, in pursuance of his council, and made a number of claims, to settle the poor on who should come from the old country. Those claims were to be held as church property. In the fall and winter following here came Benson and Grant, harrah for the Valley, en masse. For thus saith the spirit, said Orson Hyde eight or ten months before, go north and settle, and you shall be blessed.

Why all this change in opposition? Who don't know that a man in inferior circumstances can't go on to a new place and better tell you how it was. The U. S. officers went there, and Brigham was so harsh with them that on their return to Washington they made an unfavorable report, as Brigham well knew it would be. So he sent Benson, Grant and others to gather up en masse, for they feared trouble. Why did they not know by the spirit that they would not have trouble at that time, so as to carry out the former measures? I will tell you. They were led by the spirit, but it happened to be the spirit of man that they were directed by. It is nothing miraculous either that a people who have a man made prophet, should be led by the spirit of man.

Says Jane, "Mother wants to know what evidence I have of the truth of Strangism." She says the testimony she received under their preaching, and the strong evidence they brought from the scriptures and revelations was one evidence. Another was, she prayed that if it was right the Lord would send a man to buy our place and property, and in a few days a man came and would not give it up until he bought it, and first we knew we were ready to start. It was not as it had been formerly, when we tried to fix to go there, all unfavorable, when we were as fervent in prayer as at this time, desiring to do what God would have us to do. This is another evidence.

She says she has another evidence. It was impressed upon her mind that if we did not go to Beaver Island that she would die in a short time. And upon the morning of the day we started, after we got partly loaded up, the devil told us we had better go and make a claim and settle down. Bro. Mickey came to our house, he being the Apostle that was sent to preach with us that winter. He was impressed by the spirit, and spoke out and said that if we did not go she would die, and he should never see her again. She then said this had been the impression of her mind for some months, but she had told no one of it, not even me; but that she then was confident it would be so if we did not obey the voice of the good shepherd, which was to go. We accordingly hitched up and started.

I have mailed you a paper, and shall forward one from time to time. I wish you would send one of the Deseret News occasionally. I shall answer Belinda's letter. I cannot write all I want to in one letter. Write to us when you receive this. I remain as ever yours affectionately.

S. S. THORNTON.

THE GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE.

It seems that the visitation of the plague of grasshoppers, says the Marysville (California) Herald, has been general all over California. In the counties of Shasta and Siskiyou, many fine wheat fields have been utterly ruined. Three or four days ago, clouds of them reached the Yuba and Feather Rivers, attracted thither by the green herbage, having exhausted all living vegetation on the plains. Our friend, Geo. H. Beach, informs us that they have committed sad havoc on his farm, especially to his young peach trees. In spite of fire and smoke, and all other conceivable modes of attack and defence, they have worked him vast injury. He had lately plumed himself on realizing a fine crop of five hundred bushels of peaches, but the grasshoppers will not leave him fifty. So it is every where. Mr. Beach has given us some facts in regard to the movements of these destructive insects, which are somewhat interesting. About the 15th of this month they invaded his orchard, nursery and vineyard, for the first time. They were then wingless; and, by active exertion could be kept at bay. So continued till the 22d, when all the starved hosts of the prairies, for a dozen miles around, having mounted their wings, came pouring into his gardens in countless myriads. He estimates the height of their flight from one hundred to one thousand feet. Wherever one of these huge swarms saw a green spot on the earth, they pounced down on it like a hawk on a chicken, and in a very few moments all the greenness was wiped out. Against these ravenous pests there was no defence.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, AUG. 16, 1855.

The State Journal says:

The stock requisite to organize the Saginaw and Lansing Railroad Company will soon be taken—this road will be built and extended south to Cincinnati, south-west to Chicago, and north to Mackinac. It is one of the best and grandest Railroad projects of the age.

It does not rise to the character of a project. It is only a caricature of a humbug. A Railroad from Saginaw to Lansing, and thence south-west to intersect the Central at the east line of Kalamazoo county, would eventually be a good work, and would make a Cincinnati, Chicago and Detroit connection for both Saginaw and Lansing. But from Saginaw to Mackinac! Fudge! As soon from the Moon to Pandemonium.

We would like a life assurance till such a road is built. The scenery at the approach of Mackinac would be truly grand. From main land to Bois Blanc Isle there would be a bridge five miles long, with its foundations laid in sixty feet water. From Bois Blanc to Round Island, and from Round Island to Mackinac two other similar bridges, each near a mile long, would be requisite.

These bridges would need either to be provided with ponderous draws, sufficient for first class vessels to beat through against head winds, or be sufficiently high to pass under them the whole navigation of the Lakes.

These bridges could be built at a cost of from $12,000,000 to $15,000,000 for a little more than the entire first cost of the whole system of New York canals, previous to the enlargement.

This very slight expense, together with two hundred miles of railroad track, would make a communication with Great Turtle Island, a town containing a population, including Indians and half breeds, of full one-fourth that of Lansing, and doing near one-twentieth as much business.

Along the two hundred miles of railroad, and within twenty miles of it, would be found a population, besides waves and wild cats, of from five hundred to one thousand souls. All to contribute to the immense carrying trade of this "best and grandest railroad project of the age."

Medina River, July 4th, 1855.

Editors Northern Islander:—In your publication of May 1st, which you have had the goodness to send me, I see you have published a letter which addressed last spring to Bro. Miller. You seem not to be pleased with our manner of treating the Indians. We beg leave to differ with you on the subject in some respects.

As to our possessing their lands, I do not pretend to dispute it. But we argue that we are American born as well as they, and have as good a right to the soil as they have, as long as we are disposed to live in peace with them; which we have ever manifested a desire to do. We are continually making overtures of peace to them, to no purpose. You say, by their lands of them. They will not sell it. What then is the poor man to do, when God has seen fit should be born upon this land, but to crowd for unacquired Territory. You may say, come to the land that is or has been acquired. We would say, again, what will those do whose constitutions will not bear a more northern climate? As long as the Indians will not make peace, and live on equal terms with us, we consider it our right to try to hold our own with them.

We are still suffering in every part of the country from the Indians, (i. e., on the frontiers.) Every moon they come down from the mountains, and annoy us. At the present time there is a large party near us, which have committed depredations on every side of us; but as yet have killed no one, that we have heard of. Some twenty or thirty head of horses have been taken within five or six days, and one man shot at with his own gun, which the Indian slipped up to his camp and procured, when he was only fifty yards distant. The Indian missed his aim.

Crops are good with us, but in most parts of the country near here they are very poor; that is, the corn crop. Corn is worth one dollar per bushel now, and on the rise, and it is hard to tell what it will be this fall.

All are well and prospering with us. Father is quite well. I would like to hear from my friends. Do not let difference of opinion create enmity.

I send you by the same mail with this a copy of the San Antonio Ledger, and would like to send you a paper once in awhile, and correspond with you (when there is news of interest) in return for your periodical.

In haste, your friend and servant,

O. L. WIGHT.

Bro. Wight is entirely wrong as to this controversy between the Texans and the Indians.

The question at issue is, not whether natural born citizens shall be allowed a piece of land to live upon, though they happen not to be Indians. It is, whether the Indians themselves shall be allowed to retain any part of the ancient heritage of their fathers. So long as the whites only asked a place to sit down upon in the midst of their "red brethren," it was never refused.

The old white settlements of Texas were not built up on conquered, but on granted territory. The Indians of the whole continent in all times have freely given lands to such needy adventurers as came among them. When they have taken a price for it, the price has usually been less than the value of the improvements they have made on it.

The difficulty with the Indians in Texas does not grow out of any reluctance of the Indians to allow the whites to settle and occupy land, so far as they can without depriving them of the means of subsistence.

This is the cause of the quarrel and the war. The Indians have occupied the country from time immemorial. They think they have some right to it. They cannot understand how a set of adventurers, strangers born in distant lands, can have a better right to the land than themselves.

But the Republic, now State of Texas, is a land of adventurers, strangers from distant climes, of whom Bro. Wight is one. And that Republic assumes that the Indians do not own any of the lands; that they are at best but mere tenants at sufferance, on an expired term. Texas takes lands from the Indians whenever it will, and can without purchase, and refuses compensation. The question at issue therefore is, not whether Bro. Wight and the rest of the Texans shall keep their possessions, and the Indians theirs, but whether the white Texans have a right to keep all they have got, and to get all they can.

The white men in Texas claim all the land. The Indians, disputing the justice of this claim are unable to interpose an effectual barrier, but fight the best they can, and when they are compelled to retire, nevertheless return and take a share of the stock and crops, and we wish them success.

In all the old States there was in theory at least a recognition of the Indian title, and at some price, and under a treaty, or less voluntary, the land purchased. In Texas there is an right was always in, and in Oregon and all the territory obtained from Mexico. United States have followed this vicious example.

As a Mormon, Bro. Wight should also know that the Indians hold their lands in Texas in virtue of the gift to Joseph, and he should remember that whatever claim he may have as being also of the chosen seed, he is not fighting in defence of that claim, but of such an one as the State of Texas can confer.

Hon. J. J. STRANG hands us the following correspondence, which, as it pertains to matters of exclusive public interest, we give to our readers:

Saint Ste Marie, July 30, '55.

DEAR SIR:—The election of District Attorney occurs, as you are aware, in Sept. I am a candidate for that office. Will you be kind enough to inform me whom your people wish to support, if that matter has been settled. From a casual observation, I conclude your Co. has a voice in the election. I am a candidate for the office. Can I do anything for you, if elected? As yet I have not the honor of your personal acquaintance. My knowledge of you is all second hand. Please write me at this place and at Mackinac, under the name of Seth Wilson.

J. W. McMATH.

Hon. J. J. STRANG,
Beaver Island.

Saint James, Aug. 14, '55.

J. W. McMATH, Esq.:—SIR— I had the honor of receiving your friendly communication of July 30, by due course of mail. Its arrival at the moment I was leaving home has delayed my answer, but I hasten at the earliest moment to reply.

I do recollect that the election of District Attorney comes off in Sept., and having witnessed the strange, disorderly and unjust arrangement of the internal divisions and districting of the State, am not ignorant of the rights of the citizens of Manitowish Co. in the premises. You may be sure that I feel no regret at the prospect that those who have devised and by falsehood have carried so unjust measures are likely to be the first to suffer by them; and that those who were marked for lawlessness will be really benefitted.

Very little has been said among my friends at this place about the election, and I do not know who will finally receive their support. We are not so much as informed who are to be the candidates, though we have learned of two or three being named in connection with the election.

Not having the honor of a personal acquaintance with you, I claim disclaim effect-best are rthe-of the wish was tion

ome

have thought proper to cast about for such means as might be within my reach of answering your letter in a satisfactory manner.

As you inform me twice on a single page of note paper that you are a candidate for the office; inquire with some apparent anxiety whom our people will support, and ask, can I do any thing for you if elected? I cannot mistake the end of, your letter, and shall answer you with perfect frankness.

Our people intend to support a man and a good law. I see that the laws are executed. We are not of that class of officers who regard the law as only an article to entrap the simple, and the moment they fail, resort to mobs as a better means of accomplishing their wickedness.

So far as regards yourself, if elected, you could in your official capacity break up and scatter the bands of lawless desperadoes and petty pirates who have for a century filled the country about the Straits with disorder and violence. You could prosecute and send to prison numerous old sinners who have grown rich in cheating, robbing and murdering Indians, and have for five years past tried the same game on the Mormons without effect. You could prosecute and punish with perpetual imprisonment the assassins of Indian Johnson, who inveigled him to Mackinac, and murdered him last winter in revenge for having saved my life when I was ready to perish.

You could move the Court for leave to not prosqui a half dozen indictments found in Mackinac against some of the leading Mormons, on the statement of the Grand Jury who found them, that there was no evidence whatever to support them, but that it would do to nab the Mormons on whenever it was necessary. And you could at least try to so administer the law that all men should be equal before it, not even ignoring the legal rights of a Mormon. But to do any of these things would require so great a reform in the administration of that office, that we could hardly look for it without some previous assurance of capacity and integrity.

Whether Mr. McMath has the stamina to so do the duties of that office as to carry himself aloof from private interest, commercial rivalry and religious prejudice; or, in brief, whether he can treat a Mormon before the law just precisely as he would a Catholic, a Protestant or an Infidel, we are unable to judge, except from the indices of a meeting held in Mackinac, the 17th May, 1853, of which he was Secretary, and a communication of the 20th, same month, to the Detroit Free Press. At that time the officers of the several townships in Emmet (now Manitowish) county had given notice of their determination to prosecute for all violations of the liquor law of 1851, on the water as well as on the land, and in general to put a full end to the scenes of lawlessness and violence which had disgraced the country during the period while the jurisdiction of Mackinac extended over it.

Mr. McMath, then a Justice of the Peace at Mackinac, signed his name officially to a call, and acted as an officer of a meeting which recommended forcible resistance to the administration of the law in these cases, and pledged military support to those who would arm to resist all law and all legal authority in Emmet Co.

In pursuance of this offer, some seventy desperadoes, who were furnished with arms from Mackinac, actually made an attack on the Sheriff of Emmet and his boats' crews, firing upwards of three hundred guns, and wounding six men.

Considering that Mr. McMath was accessory before the fact to this attempted murder, and that indictments are now hanging over the guilty, it may be matter whether Mr. McMath is the most proper person to prosecute them; but, passing over that, how are we to know that he is now any more faithful to the law than then? For myself, I shall wait what assurance Mr. McMath can give.

I am, sir,
Most truly and sincerely,
JAMES J. STRANG.

We insert the following extract from the proceedings of the meeting at Mackinac, above referred to:

Notice.—The citizens of Mackinac county, and all others interested in the matter, are requested to meet at the Court House to-morrow (Tuesday) evening at the ringing of the bell, to devise ways and means of protecting themselves against the felonious depredations of the Mormons. (Signed.)

J. P. KING, Supervisor.
J. D. IRVINE, District Attorney.
WM. N. McLEOD,
JAMES H. COOK,
J. W. McMATH,
LEVI GRAY,

Dated Mackinac, May 16, 1853.

In obedience to the above call, a large number of people collected at the Court House at an early hour. The meeting was called to order by appointing J. D. Irvine, District Attorney of the Upper Peninsula, Chairman, and J. W. McMath, Esq., Secretary. After some eloquent and spirited remarks from the Hon. Wm. N. McLeod, the following resolutions were proposed and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the high handed pretensions and immoral course of the people called Mormons are inimical to our republican institutions, subversive of the good order of society, and destructive of all security to person and property.

Resolved, That in the recent outrages perpetrated on our fishing grounds, consisting of arson, larcenies and other felonies, we recognize a spirit, which, if not quelled by the strong arm of the law, must eventually lead to the most determined resistance, and possibly terminate in bloodshed.

Resolved, That while we revere the institutions of our country and pledge ourselves to support the law, we at the same time bind ourselves to resist to the last extremity any and every attempt to commit depredations upon the persons and property of our citizens, whether committed by open violence or under the pretended sanction of legal authority.

Resolved, That the boundaries of Emmet county, and the organization of the township of Drummond, as established by the last Legislature, taken in consideration with the avowed determination of the Mormons to make forcible arrests under color of law, is highly dangerous to the rights and interests of the citizens of Mackinac.

Resolved, That a Committee of five, to be denominated the Committee of safety, be appointed by the Chair, whose duty it shall be to memorialize the President of the United States and the Governor of this State—to call public meetings of the citizens where the exigency may require it; and generally to take such measures as may seem conducive to the public safety.

The Chair then read some resolutions sent down by the fishermen of Pine River and Gull Island, the purport of which was that if the law was not put in force they would take the matter in their own hands. These resolutions were signed by seventy resolute men, who know the importance of the step they have taken. This meeting was then addressed by J. W. McMath and Mr. Thero. On motion of Henry Selby, it was

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be published in the Detroit papers.

The Chair announced the names of the Committee of safety, after which the meeting adjourned.

JOHN D. IRVINE, Pres't.
J. W. McMATH, Sec'y.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY AT YPSILANTI, WASHTENAW CO.
There is an account going about in the papers of the discovery at Ypsilanti of an ancient church and bell. The story is credited to the Sentinel, published there, and is to the effect that the stone foundation of a church about 40 by 60 feet, was laid bare at a distance of several feet below the surface, while workmen were excavating on the public square in the village last week. The corroded and enrusted remains of a church bell were also found. It is evidently the remains of an ancient civilization.—Centrally situated within the foundation walls, where doubtless fires were kindled, proving that the cheaper convenience of stoves were unknown or unobtainable. By whom or when it was built, the "oldest inhabitant" cannot tell.

A TRIP UP LAKE MICHIGAN.
From the Predonia.
BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN,
July 10th, 1855.

Detroit River—St. Clair Falls—Lake Huron—Emigration—Mackinac—Beaver Island—
President Irving.

Agreeably to request, I jot you down some notes of travel by the Great Lakes. A fortnight since, I left Detroit in the steady old foggy steamer Michigan, for Beaver Island. Our voyage was a remarkably pleasant one: the surface of the several lakes disturbed by our keel, was as smooth as my lady's mirror.

From Detroit, we passed up the river of the same name—a noble stream of transcendent water, leaving fertile, populated cultivated shores—10 miles, when we passed into Lake St. Clair, a small, shallow, circular sheet of water, whose greatest diameter is about 35 miles, with shores, for the most part, low and marshy. The famous St. Clair falls—famous for the obstacles which they interpose to the navigation of the Lakes, and the enormous expense they occasion annually to commerce, by reason of delays, lighterage and towage, we safely overcame before night shut in. In this we were more fortunate than many of our fellows, who "go down to the sea in ships," for we passed many a propeller and sail craft hopelessly stuck on these flats—the flattest position, certainly, that a navigator can be placed in. A comparatively small outlay of money, expended in dredging and unconfining the waters of the St. Clair river to the channel, (it now has several outlets) would remove this stumbling block—this barrier—to the free navigation of the Great Lakes.

At the foot of the falls, we saw magnificent bodies of fresh water, the world, and which float a commercial unequaled, and appreciated by few. Surely the Solons at Washington have a very inadequate idea—a faint conception—of the magnitude and importance of our Lake Commerce, or they would show it by making more liberal appropriations for the improvement of our inland Seas, which are not local, but directly subversive to the interests of at least one-half of the greatest and most populous States of the Confederacy; nay more, are but an extension of the world circling ocean itself, for ships, but for St. Clair falls, might take in a cargo at Chicago, and lay it down in Liverpool, San Francisco, or Calcutta, without transshipment, (breaking bulk.) The St. Clair falls are a "crying evil," so great, that the merchants of Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit, despairing of aid from Congress, have determined to take the matter in hand, and effect such improvements as their means will permit.

We ascended the river St. Clair in the night, and as Somnus took possession of me during that period, I saw nothing; therefore have nothing to say. Nothing worthy of record occurred during our voyage across Huron. The blue waters of this Lake—deep and blue as the azure vault of heaven resting upon it on the furthest horizon, was untroubled by a single breeze. The weather, however, was quite cool—at night the air "eager and nipping." We ran along the coast of Michigan, 10 miles distant—too far for anything but a general view. I noticed, however, that the dense pine forests which a few years ago towered in undisturbed primitive grandeur over the land, have given way before the advancing step of improvement, and smiling villages now look out upon the Lake. The lumber interest is imported in this section.

Our steamboat was crowded with the better class of emigrants, in families, from New York and "down East," seeking new homes in the region contiguous to Green Bay. Verily, the whole world seems to be in motion; every thoroughfare, every line of travel is thronged with hopeful multitudes, hastening to occupy the fertile and inviting fields of the West.

Leaving Mackinac, we passed through the straits, and in five hours landed at St. James, Beaver Island—an island the largest of a group lying at the foot of Lake Michigan, 50 miles or so to the southward and westward of Mackinac. To this island and its peculiar people, I may refer at some other time. Since landing, I have had the pleasure of an introduction to King Strang, Prophet, who, you are aware, was formerly from Chautauque.

He received me with gratifying attention. Even a casual observer could not fail to observe that Mr. Strang is a man of superior intelligence and information. He has an eye and a forehead which all eyes would address is easy; his language earnest and potent, and his bearing denotes energy, resolution and a soul for any work which he may have to do. Whatever may be his idiosyncrasy, he is a man of mark, you may depend. Yours truly, J. H. F.

The Feast of First Fruits is appointed permanently, to take place the day next preceding the third Sabbath before the Autumnal Equinox, (counting the day of the Equinox; it occurs on Sabbath the first.) This year it will occur the last day of August.

NOTICE TO BUILDERS.
Office of Light House Inspector,
Detroit, July 18, 1855.
SEALED Proposals will be received at this office until the fifteenth day of August next for furnishing materials and building a Light House and keeper's dwelling at Port Clinton, and at Taylor Point, Illinois, and at the entrance of Beaver Island Harbor, Michigan.—Specifications and drawings can be seen at this office, No. 129, Jefferson Avenue, or at the Custom House, Detroit. Working drawings for all the castings will be furnished. The work to be completed by the 31st October. No payment will be made until the whole work is finished, and before it is received it must be approved by a duly authorized agent of the government. Said agent having power to reject all materials and workmanship not in accordance with the terms of the contract. Proposals should be separate for each work, to be addressed to the undersigned, and endorsed, "Proposals for building Light House." The assignment of the contract, without the consent of the Department, will be a forfeiture of the same. The right is reserved to reject all bids that may not be deemed advantageous to the public interest.
L. STIGREAVES,
Capt. T. E., Light House Inspector
11th District.

F. JOHNSON & CO.
Have purchased and are continuing to purchase, for cash, a full assortment of fresh goods, by which they are enabled to sell at BUFFALO and DETROIT Prices.
DRY GOODS.
Calicoes, of various patterns.
Mons de Laine and Bareges.
Lawns, Shawls, &c.
A new supply of Bonnets, of handsome finish.
Book and Barred Muslins.
Groceries and Fishing Tackle, and various other stores.
Stoves of the most approved pattern and material, for sale.
68aa.

CORRESPONDENCE.
Saint James, June 26, '55.
DEAR BROTHER:—At the writing of my article bearing date 22d instant, my health was so miserably wretched that I apprehended some doubts in my mind whether I should really be able to continue the writing the series of letters I had at that time intended.

In the fall season of 1839, I got my affairs so arranged that I moved to Commerce, or, rather, across the Mississippi into Iowa; where I had a tract of land and house to shelter my family. This place of my farm in Iowa was nearly opposite (a little below) the present remains of the city of Nauvoo, then Commerce.

There I established a small wood-yard, for the steamers plying on the Mississippi, and remained here with my family until the first of September, 1840, when I was solicited by the prophet Joseph to move into the city of Nauvoo, which was now growing up like a mushroom.

We bought a steamer about this time of the U. S., remodeled her, named her Nauvoo, and put her on the trade. A requisition was made by the Governor of Missouri, upon Gov. Carlin, of Ill, for Joseph Smith, as a fugitive from justice. Joseph, to keep out of the way of the officers of the law, went two trips on the steamer, that was then plying on the Upper Mississippi River. I was also on the steamer Nauvoo until the close of navigation, which was earlier than usual, taking place in November, at which time I moved into Nauvoo. I was requested by Joseph to rouse up some Elders and go into Iowa, and the region around about Nauvoo, and preach the gospel. This portion of the country having been neglected on account of the Apostles and many of the Elders the fall previous being sent to England and the eastern States on missions. This was a great task for me, on account of my infirmities, and however was faithful in my calling and appointment of my mission, and our labors were blessed.

The Legislature has granted us a city charter, and other charters also, embracing powers and privileges so broad that our enemies had their jealousy aroused to the highest degree, (either real or ideal) on account of the great power granted by the legislature to the Mormons. But my opinion was then and is yet that the main grounds of fear was the act to organize a military force, called the Nauvoo Legion, as according to the provisions of the act to organize the militia of Ill., that this dreaded Nauvoo Legion would draw State arms; and if they should wish to expel the Mormons from Ill., as they had from Ohio and Missouri, these State arms might be somewhat in the way of the undertaking; as our increasing numbers had already excited the fears of the knowing ones, in regard to our political aims, as also our military strength.

Joseph Smith already began to make preparations to build a Temple, and had suggested the propriety to me of building a house suitable for a tavern or hotel, answering to the growing importance of the city. Whilst I was out on my mission, on the 19th January, 1841, Joseph Smith received the revelation appointing me to the office of Bishop, to organize an association to build the Nauvoo House, also the revelation to build a Temple. Alpheus Cutler Reynolds Calhoun, and Elias Higby were appointed a Building Committee to superintend the building of the Temple.

In this commandment I was made one of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and named by Joseph as its President. In the month of February I was ordained and set apart in the Bishopric, to which I was called in the revelation; and also as President of the Nauvoo House Association.

I immediately entered on the duties of the stupendous work before me, and a scene of activity peculiarly complicated and diversified in every feature, involving responsibility and manifold labors, hitherto unknown to me. Early this spring the English emigrants (late converts of the Apostles and the Elders in the vineyard) began to come in, in apparent poverty and in considerable numbers. Beside these, they were crowding in from the States, all poor, as the rich did not generally respond to the proclamation of the prophet to come with their effects, and assist in building the Temple and Nauvoo House. The poor had to be cared for, and labor created that they might at least earn part of their subsistence—there not being one in ten persons that could set themselves to work, to earn those indispensable things for the comfort of their families.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

My brethren of the Committee of the Nauvoo House Association, and the Committee of the Temple, all bore a part in the employment of laborers, and the providing food for them, but I had a burden aside from theirs that rested heavily upon me, growing out of my Bishopric. The poor, the blind, the lame, the widow, and the fatherless all looked to me for their daily wants; and but for the fact of some private property I had on hand, they must have starved; for I could not possibly, by soliciting gratuitous contributions, to feed the dead, when there were thousands of the living, who were thrown into straits unlooked for.

No titling store, the rich amongst us pretended to be too poor to barely feed themselves and nurse their speculations, which they were all more or less engaged in, and those that were really poor could not help themselves.

I was now in the midst of a sickly season, filled with anxiety for the suffering. Multiplied labors crowded upon me, and hundreds of mouths to feed. My days were filled with toil and care, and my nights were not spent with the giddy and the mirthful, but with sleepless anxiety in waiting on the suffering poor and sick of the city. Perhaps I am saying too much.—But I praise the God of heaven that he gave me shoulders to bear, and patience to endure the burdens placed upon me.

In a Conference of the Building Committee, Joseph and Hyrum Smith presiding, called at my suggestion, to deliberate on the best plan of operations for procuring lumber for the building of the Temple and Nauvoo House, the result of our deliberations were, that we should buy a mill in the pineries of the firm of Crane and Kirtz, situated on Black River, a tributary of the Mississippi, which they were holding for sale at fifteen hundred dollars.

Crane and Kirtz were sent for, (their residence twenty miles off.) They came. The bargain was made upon the representation of Crane and Kirtz, and Peter Haws, of the Nauvoo House Committee, and Alpheus Cutler of the Temple Committee, were appointed to take immediate possession of the mills, and take a company of laborers, with nine months provisions and clothing, and enter into the business of lumbering, for the joint benefit of both buildings, each furnishing an equal proportion of the accruing expenses. The outfit was provided for a large company, (I do not remember the precise number,) and they all forthwith set out on their undertaking.

The residue of the summer and fall were taken up in providing the means for feeding and paying the wages of the laborers engaged on the Temple and Nauvoo House, which was done abundantly for the time being, mainly by the exertions of Lyman Wight and myself, for both houses. The workmen were kept all winter, as we necessarily had to feed them whether we discharged them from the work or not; they having no means of buying their winter's food without our aid.

At the closing in of winter Joseph advised me to go to Kentucky, on a preaching excursion, and sell some property I had, to obtain means for the early spring operations; and Lyman Wight to Ohio, & the eastern States, and visit those that would not gather up to Nauvoo, get what titling he could, and sell what stock in the Nauvoo House he could, and return early in the spring.

We severally set out. Lyman to the N. E., and I to Ky. My labors were prospered. I returned in the ensuing April with a hundred head of cattle, some horses and other effects.—I will now take a retrospective notice of the progress of our operations in the piney. Haws and Butler returned with a raft of hewed timber at the close of navigation, and twelve of the men. They left a man in charge at the pineries. They remodeled, or rather almost made anew the mill, but made but little or no lumber, and left the men to get logs ready for spring sawing.

This summer I was almost overwhelmed by the amount of business crowding upon me; having the burden to bear almost alone.

John C. Bennet, one of the most corrupt of corrupted men, having been severely reprov'd for his corruptions and false teachings, set out to get revenge for being so harshly dealt by.—He wrote and published a series of exposures of Mormon corruptions, as he was pleased to call them, and by his falsehoods procured another requisition by the Gov. of Missouri, upon the Gov. of Illinois, for the expatriation of Joseph Smith, as accessory before the fact to an attempt to commit murder on the body of Ex. Gov. Lilburn W. Boggs.

I was delegated to go to Mo. and see Gov. Reynolds in person. E. H. Derby went with me, and for the time being the blow was ward'd off, and all was peace again. Soon after this Joseph wrote two letters of revelation in regard to the baptism for the dead. In the beginning of the month of October, 1842, we fully ascertained that our lumbering operations run us in debt $3,000, and the amount of lumber so little that our work was almost brought to a stand.

All of our lumbering operations having proved nearly abortive, Lyman's labors this summer produced very little for the Nauvoo House, but a large amount for the Temple.

We had another Conference of the committees, whereupon it was determined that I should go to the pineries, and get Henry W. Miller and family, with two other families, to go up as cooks for the men, and for Lyman Wight to go east and return in the spring, and together with Peter Haws drive the work at home, whilst I should make an effort in the pineries to extricate our establishment from debt, and make the lumber in sufficient quantities to keep the work progressing. It was advised that I should take my wife along with me, as she was very sick of ague and fever, and taking her north was advised to recover her health.

A few days after the Conference I started with my wife, female children and hired girl to Prairie DuChien; there having a suit pending against Jacob Spaulding, the owner of the mills at the falls of Black River, fifteen miles above our present establishment. The others were to come forthwith after me, in a boat loaded with our winter supplies, which we intended to have towed up to the mouth of Black River, and then work it by poling to our lumber mills. I got to Prairie DuChien, and arranged my business with Spaulding, so as to secure my claim against him, in getting possession of his mills on my arrival there, and turn him over ours (which was of little or no value) in lieu thereof.

Spaulding returned to the mills to await my arrival, and I remained awaiting the coming up of H. W. Miller. It is often the case in the course of human events, that a man clothed with a little brief authority, that they get far above their principal.—Unfortunately this seemed to be the case with H. W. Miller.—He loitered away his time at Nauvoo, swelling over his big authority, telling the men that we could not do without him, for his knowledge and mechanical skill was really indispensable to us. He also told the men that he was sent up to keep a kind of oversight of my movements; but he was finally urged out of Nauvoo by the men on the boat and the architect of the Nauvoo House, after having loitered away two weeks of time at this advanced season of the year, and it was not until three weeks after the time that he appointed to meet me at Prairie DuChien that this great personage arrived, and not until the steamers had all stopped running; leaving us ninety miles to tow or pole our boat to the mouth of Black River, and then over one hundred miles to the mills.

I, however, before the boat came, got on a raft, and met them coming on by poling, and on the evening or rather afternoon of the 12th of November, we got to Prairie DuChien. I got my family aboard, and came on towards our destination. The weather cold, and the river running with slush ice, with intense labor we made at noon, on the 17th of November, within seven miles of the mouth of Black River, and stopped at a trading post. The river now being completely filled with snow and ice, here we secured our boat for the winter, and stored our freight.

I will not attempt to give in detail (as appears in my diary) the toil, cold, breasting snowbanks, (it was two and a half feet deep on a level,) treading a road for oxen and sleds to travel on, and the labor of myself and the men in getting the teams down from the mills, and the families moved up; suffice it to say that Bonaparte's retreat from Moscow was a mere nothing in comparison, save there was no deaths or freezing amongst us.

It was not until the 31st day of December that we got fully established at our mill, at the falls of Black River, and began our lumbering operations. We were one hundred and twenty miles from our principal winter supplies of provision, our cattle were half supplied with grain and forage to enable us to prosecute our winter's work to advantage; the men almost worn out with the incredible toil that we had just passed through, indeed they performed labors that are almost incredible to relate, and I felt in my heart to praise God that he had given me strength to take the lead, and go before the men in all their toil.

Too much cannot be said in praise of those faithful brethren. They really performed wonders. We were in the midst of a howling wilderness, and the aspect of our affairs to some might seem forbidding, but we were all buoyant with hope of better days, and resolved on accomplishing the work we had undertaken. We now being organized for a regular train of operations, we thought our labors and exposures might in a great degree be past; but it was not so, and with the best division of labor that we could possibly devise, it was all we could do to keep our families and cattle from perishing for want of food, from the fact of our winter's supplies being far distant, and the depth of snow on the mountains and vallies intervening, we had to draw on sleds, and carry by back loads the principal supplies for men and animals, beside our lumbering operations.

The foregoing was not all the difficulties we had to encounter. Several bands of the Winnebago Indians were scattered up and down Black River on their winter's hunt, and as is common, a number of traders and whiskey sellers were also in attendance, in order to buy or rather cheat the Indians out of their furs and peltry. Those fiends in human shape influenced the Indians to come in sufficient numbers (as they supposed) to our mill and make a demand of us for the pine trees we were sawing, two barrels of pork, with a proportion of flour; or, on our refusal, they would burn down our mill.—The lumbermen on the river had a hand in this matter, but they tried to excuse themselves clear.

When the Indians came to our mills they were drunk, or partly so, and very clamorous. I could not understand their language so as to know what they wanted, more than I conjectured by their signs; but prevailed in making them understand that I would go with them to a trading post, where there was an interpreter, and I would have a talk with them; and accordingly set off with them, unattended, as I did not wish to raise any excitement amongst our men.

On our arrival at the post, the Indians told me that we were cutting and sawing up the pine that was once theirs, and of right ought then to be; that their children were perishing with hunger, the snow so deep that they could not hunt, and the white men had told them that we ought to pay them, or they ought to burn our mills.

In my speech in reply, I told them that I did not fear them, or the white men either; that when they got ready to burn our mills, to come on and bring the white men with them; that I had not at any time sold them whiskey to make them drunk, causing them to lay in the snow and freeze to death, as had been the case several times the present winter; nor had I at any time cheated them out of their furs and peltry by giving them trifles in return, thereby depriving them of the means of buying food to feed their starving children; nor had I any hand in buying the Indians' lands; nor had I, as a lease, held up the bottle, or trifling presents as an inducement to sell; that they might receive annuities for the traders to squabble over, which of them should get the first chance to cheat the Indians out of them by smuggling whiskey to them, thereby disqualifying them from getting their living as their forefathers had done; and that the white man had done all this, and more too; that they had driven them from the bones and homes of their fathers, and that I did not sanction any of these wrongs done the Indians; that I had been, and always expected to be, their friend; that I had fed and warmed them, when they came to my house, and had sent food to their hungry children; and if for these things, they wanted to burn our mills, to come and burn them.

While I was speaking the tears rolled down the cheeks of several of their principal men, and they came up to me when I closed my remarks, and embraced me, telling me in broken english, good captain; brother, good captain.

I bought some flour and pork of the trader and gave them, telling them to take it home to their children. I returned to the mills the same day. No further difficulty occurred with the Indians, lumbermen or traders in the course of the winter and spring. Nothing but toil and hardship awaited us at every stage of our undertaking.

We had sent a man down about the first appearance of the melting of the snow and breaking up of the ice, to the place we had left our boat and stored our provisions, to take care of them.

On the 6th of April, I, with four of the young able bodied men, started down to bring up our boat and provisions, that we had left last fall, (or winter.)—

The ground was beginning to show itself on south exposures. We arrived at our boat on the morning of the third day. The man we had sent to take care of our boat had all safe, but had not been able to free the boat of the ice that had accumulated through the winter. We immediately set about it, and had all clear by night; but it was not until 11 o'clock on the 10th of April that the river was freed from ice so as to be at all practicable to work our boat. We loaded up and started, breaking the gorges of ice, making our way by the most tremendous exertions that men could make. Worn down and exhausted, we encamped at night fairly up in Lake, (a widening out of the river above its mouth.)

In like manner we prosecuted our daily task until the afternoon of the 19th day of April, when we arrived at our mills, worn out with the violent exertions we had made on our voyage. We however did not slacken our hands, until with the assistance of the men at the mills we unloaded the boat, and put our flour, pork, &c., into the storehouse.

I took this spring two rafts of lumber to Nauvoo, and obtained supplies to feed and clothe the men engaged in lumbering. I conceived it necessary to buy three or four yoke of oxen, as we had lost three head from the severity of the winter. Our mills daily turning out over twelve thousand feet of lumber, it necessarily took much team work. About the first of June I came up on a steamer to Galena, that being a better place to buy oxen than Nauvoo, and would save transportation that part of the way. I bought the oxen required, but could not get any boat to take them up under two weeks. I, upon this information, yoked up and chained my oxen together, lashed my trunk on the middle yoke, and forthwith set out for Prairie DuChien about 4 o'clock P. M., a distance of 75 miles, where I arrived on the afternoon of the third day.

I had yet a hundred and fifty miles to go on a right line, and on the traveled road two hundred. I was at a loss to determine on the route I would travel, whether to aim at a straight line never trod by the white man's foot, or to take the track frequented by those who had occasion to travel in this region. I however was but a few minutes in determining. I provide a supply of provisions, and started forthwith to reach the mills by the straight line, through the woods; went out four miles to the last house on my way, where I stayed all night.

I set out early, and without entering into detail in giving the incidents attendant on this lonesome journey, no company but my three yoke of oxen, and by perseverance arrived at the mills at noon on the sixth day from Prairie DuChien, to the surprise and apparent joy of all my friends present, to see a man all tattered and torn, though not forlorn, merging from the woods, driving three yoke of oxen. The brethren would hardly accredit me when I told them the route I came up, and all alone. Some would say, were you not afraid the wild beasts would eat you, having no gun to defend yourself? I told them I had a knife, that answered just as well.

In my next I will conclude my operations in lumbering in the Mississippi pineries.

As ever, most truly and sincerely,

GEO. MILLER.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 9.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, AUG. 23, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 76.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, invariably, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per line (12 lines) for three insertions, and every subsequent insertion. A discount made to those who advertise. Advertisements not ordered for any length of time will be continued till further notice and payment of bill.

The suspension of navigation in winter will be sent to mail subscribers once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Saint James, June 27, '55.

DEAR BROTHER:—In my epistle of yesterday I closed with an indefinite relation of a trip on foot, and driving three yoke of oxen from Galena, Ill., to the falls of Black River, in Wisconsin, June, 1843.

I got clear of a great clog in my business operations in the month of May, I believe, viz, Henry W. Miller, who carried with him all of his consequential dignity back to the vicinity of Nauvoo.

I received an additional supply of hands this summer, and we made lumber rapidly, paying our expenditures, besides liquidating part of the indebtedness that had accrued before I came up to this country. We sent to Nauvoo a large amount of hewed timber, and two hundred thousand feet of sawed lumber, suitable for the Temple and Nauvoo House, together with a large amount of shingles, and a raft of bay boards.

In the latter part of August I went down with two large rafts of prime lumber, 400,000 feet; on my arrival found that Lyman Wight had returned from his eastern mission, accomplished nothing that could be made available for the Nauvoo House, had lost a trunk containing many thousand dollars of Nauvoo House stock certificates, and had sold a large amount of stock for a canal boat and other property, that was never received in Nauvoo, nor could in any way be made available.—Lyman had become wholly disqualified for business of any kind, in consequence of his indulgence in a habit that he was occasionally addicted to, his face and body very much bloated or swollen.

The prophet advised a temporary suspension of the work on the Nauvoo House, and for all of the committee of the Nauvoo House to direct all their efforts unitedly to the work on the Temple. Joseph and Hyrum conferred with me privately in regard to Lyman, and it was agreed upon that we would persuade him to gather up a company of young men and families and go with me to the pines. Lyman readily agreed to enter into the arrangement, and forthwith raised quite a crowd ready for the undertaking, a number of widows and children among them, that we really supposed would be a great incumbrance to our establishment, but Lyman persisted in taking them, as they had to be cared for and fed, and I was the proper person to do it; and furthermore that they would earn their living by cooking, washing and mending for the men, and making their clothes, &c.

Notwithstanding the difficulty of supplying the destitute at the increased expense of doing it in the pines, we thought it best to indulge Lyman in the matter, that we might the more readily get him from temptation, where he could not indulge in the habit he had contracted.

I procured the steamer Maid of Iowa (which now belonged to the church) to take the company and their effects up to the mouth of Black River, together with a stock of provision I had laid in for supplying the lumbermen. We all got to the mills in the month of August.

We had houses to build for the comfort and convenience of the families, and having great facilities for building (and Joseph wishing to make those mills a permanent establishment) it was thought best to make them permanent, good houses. I procured a drove of cattle, and had them taken up by the young men. They consisted of oxen, milch cows and young cattle. We cleared and broke up land to put in the ensuing fall fifty acres of wheat. We had procured and brought up seed for the purpose. In fine we pushed forward our work with great energy and dispatch in all things we had undertaken to do, that we had even succeeded beyond our most sanguine expectations, so that in the course of the summer and early part of the fall we had filled all bills for the lumber and shingles for both Temple and Nauvoo House and forwarded it on, so that we felt easy on this score.

But when I took down the last rafts in the fall season, upon my arrival at Nauvoo, I found a great deal of the lumber that we had (the two last seasons of toil and sacrifice) made for the Temple and Nauvoo House had to my great mortification, been used for other purposes than those intended.—The Temple Committee said that the workmen must needs have houses, and they had to pay their men. But the truth of the case was, that the committee had become house builders; that they were not alone content to have fresh eggs to set themselves, but they wanted eggs to set all their numerous brood of chickens, and that it was really convenient to use the material provided for the Nauvoo House, (as its operations were temporarily suspended,) as in like manner the Temple materials also, as we had in common such productive mills in the pines.

I remonstrated at this course of procedure, but Joseph told me to be content, and that he would see by and by that all should be made right, saying it was most likely his persecutors would let him alone since his final discharge by Judge Pope, and he would in future have more leisure.

I gathered up a large supply of provisions to make up the deficit that might be to feed the hundred and fifty persons we then had in the pines, and shipped on the steamer Gen. Brooks, then on her last trip to Saint Peters. The water was very low this fall, and the boat lay so long from time to time on sand bars, that when she got to Prairie DuChien the master concluded to go no further up, as the water was low and the season far advanced, and abating something on the price of my freight put it off and turned back.

I stored my supplies with Mr. Dousman, the principal of the fur company's house at that place.—This was now the early part of November. On the next day in the morning we made up a company that were going up to the pines, who agreed to go with me through the near way, the road I had taken with the oxen a year ago last summer. The company consisted of eight persons. One gave out the first day, and turned back.

I found no walkers among them. None of them had perhaps ever been without food an entire day. Two of the men however were brethren, viz, Pierce Hawley, of Black River, and Moses Smith, of Nauvoo, who were going up to make shingles. The other five were all gentiles.

I took what provision I thought sufficient to last me through, and requested the others to do likewise. They asked me how long I was going through with the oxen. I told them six days. They said they could go up in little over half that time. I told them that it was then summer, and they would find out that when I walked I did not stand still, and they had better take six days provision, as it was then snowing, and we might have a deep snow before we got up to the mills. They said there were three guns in the company, and they could kill what they could eat.

We traveled hard all day, the snow falling rapidly, and very wet and heavy. Four of us went about thirty miles, and camped before night to await the coming up of the other three. They did not however get up to camp, as we had expected. The snow was near a foot deep. Hawley, Grover and a man I have forgotten the name of, and myself came thus far, and the other three came up about ten o'clock, A. M., of the next day, foot sore and tired. They declared that we must have walked fifty miles.

After resting a short time we started, and came about two miles further than I had made the first day with my oxen from the house four miles this side Prairie DuChien, where we camped for the night. We had frequent snow storms this day. Some of the men said we must be pretty near half way to Black River. At these remarks I began to apprehend trouble, and told them that they had better turn back; that the distance we had come was only what I had made in a day and a piece travel. At this three or more replied that they believed I was lost, and did not know where I was going. I replied pretty sharply, at which they begged my pardon, and said they were all joking, and hoped I would take no offence.

This day we made a late start, on account of the men being foot sore. We came on our way about twelve miles, and some of the men so tired that they said that they could go no further. We therefore took up camp for the night. This night finished up all our provisions. The morning of the fourth day we set off early, our gun men to hunting, the other four following me. We camped early, that our hunters might have time to get up. They came, but had no meat. All or most of them quite snappish and fretful.

On the morning of the fifth day we set out on our journey very early. Our hunters set out to bring into camp a good supply of meat, and the others go on with me to make a trail and take up camp as on the day before. But night again brought all up without food. It was indeed laughable to hear the occasional complaints, followed by a period of silence, and see the bitter faces of all hands.—This kind of starvation being nothing new to me, I did not mind it.

On the morning of the sixth day we all set out together, traveled hard all day, and took up camp for the night, having made the best progress that we had any day since we left Prairie DuChien. We decreed this night to slay a dog that had followed us from Prairie DuChien, and make a supper of him. We halved him, and roasted him before the fire. I tasted the dog, it is true, but my prejudices were such that I could not eat, (not so now.) One old man, whose name I did not hear, as we all called him old gentleman, could not be prevailed on to taste the dog. All hands seemed to be cheerful and happy whilst feasting on the dog, and by the morning light he was wholly demolished.

We set off this morning of the 7th, intending to make near our mills, as we were in plain view of a mountain that was situate three miles south-east of our place, which I pointed out to the men from an eminence soon after our starting. The snow was quite soft this morning, and we moved on finely a few miles, and came to where three bear tracks crossed at right angles the route we were going.—It was soon agreed upon that I and one of the men (a gentile) were to pursue the bear, and the other five were to go on towards the mills, and leave us to come up after night.

I pointed out the mountain for them to steer for, and put out in chase after the bear. We several times got near them, but could not get a shot, on account of the thick under brush. We abandoned the chase about three o'clock, P. M., and made our way for the mills. After going about ten miles we encountered an Indian, who was going in the same direction we had left. He was on horseback. I inquired of him if he had seen anything of our men. He said he had. I told him that I had pointed out the mountain south-east of the mills that they were to steer for. He said that they were lost; that they did not see him; that at a certain hill he pointed out to us our men had turned off to another mountain, twenty miles below, that looked just like that at or near the mills.

My hunter companion wanted to go on toward the mills, and leave the damned fools, as he was pleased to call them, to go to hell, for he was so tired that he was not going to trail after them. I told him then he could go towards the mills, and I would follow the lost men. No, he'd be damned if he would do that, for he did not believe that I was right about the mills. I told him to go to the Indian, and get him to take him to the mills; that he was frequently there, and was an acquaintance of mine.

By the end of this disputation we came upon the men's trail that had turned down to the other mountain, and he followed with me on the trail of the men. We did not go far until dark overtook us, and in some places had difficulty in keeping their tracks or trail. About nine o'clock at night my hunter companion told me not to walk so fast, that he could not stand it. I slackened my pace, and all went on well for a while. He again called to me, saying, he'd be God damned if he didn't shoot me if I continued to walk so fast. I turned to him and clubbed my gun, and placed myself in a position to strike, telling him that I was almost minded to make a finish of him. He humbly begged my pardon, and would be more patient in future, and to have pity on him, for he was almost perishing with fatigue and hunger.

I told him to take courage, I would take care of him, and that we were near a camp, for I smelled pine burning. After a half hour's walk, we came to a place where the fire was yet burning. Here we called aloud, and were answered near by. We proceeded, and soon came to an Indian lodge, where we found all our company eating venison. When I got into the lodge the old Indian told me that the men had come out of the way; that they could have gone to the falls as soon as to his lodge, and that he would send two of his boys in the morning to Mr. Nichols' mill with us, to show us a near way through the mountain pass.

He said it was about twelve miles, and in five days he would come up to the falls to get his gun lock mended, and to be certain to have my smith at home. He also told me that he had killed a very fat buck that day, and he was having some choice parts boiled for me, and as I had eaten nothing for four days, that I must fill my belly first by drinking broth before I partook of the meat. He said the man that came with me and those that came in before were fools; that they all run headlong to eating venison as the Indian dogs did to eating blood and guts when he killed and butchered a deer.

He lighted his pipe and smoked, and then handed to me. The men all had a hearty laugh at the Indian's remarks about their eating like his dogs. It was however not long until the broth was served up, and I filled accordingly, and after another round of smoking a large wooden bowl of choice fat venison was served up, and he told me to eat occasionally through the night, for at day break his boys would start. He laid down a skin for me to sleep on. All by this time were snoring finely, but the old Indian and myself.

At day break the ensuing morning we started, got to Nichols', and got a dinner cooked for all hands, Indians and all. Nichols remonstrated at eating with the Indians, as it would make them too saucy. I told him that if those Indians did not sit at his table that I would not. He told me in return that he was owing me flour, pork, &c., and I would be eating on my own provisions, as his had not yet arrived. After eating I gave the Indians some pork and flour.

None of my company would agree to go any further, except Hawley. Whilst I was preparing to set out for home, our boat came down, going to meet me, supposing I was waiting for them at the mouth of Black River. I told them it was at Prairie DuChien that our stuff was stored. They accordingly set off, intending to travel all night, and I for the mills, distant fifteen miles, in company with Pierce Hawley. We arrived at home in the early part of the night, to the joy of all the brethren. Hawley was so used up that he worked very little more all winter. In ten days our boat returned with one load of our supplies. I had however in the interim finished my house and shoe shop, and was ready at the coming of the supplies to have the shoeing of the men go on, as they were much in want.

All branches of business in our line went on with astonishing dispatch, and a very great amount of lumber was made. The Indian agent for this region had forbidden the cutting of timber above the falls of Black River. All the good pine being above, you may readily conceive the clamor raised among all the lumbermen of this country. About this time we received a visit from the Indian chief Oshkosh, and his interpreter. His band were camped twelve miles up the river. We made a feast for him, and after eating explained the principles of our religion to him. His interpreter being an educated Indian, said he was disposed in his mind to join us, but said many of their people were Roman Catholics, and it would take a long time to change their religion.

The chief said he believed we were right, for many things we had told him were backed up by Indian tradition; but for him, the principal chief, to act on his belief would avail nothing; that at some future period it would be best to call a council of all his chiefs, (he could not then as they were on their winter's hunt,) and deliberately consider the whole matter, and act upon it in national council, and in that case their change of religion would be national and permanent, and that he had no doubt in bringing it about.

In regard to our cutting timber, he said it was all his, and that the agent and United States had no business to interfere in the matter; that he had come to attend to his timber himself, and if he could not stop cutting of saw logs he would then call on the government, through their agent, to put a stop to it.

He told us that we should have the exclusive privilege of cutting timber, and all he would ask was to feed his people in their passing by. But however he would advise my going over to the Wisconsin with him, and he would procure me a written permit from the agent, in order to silence the lumbermen. I took with me Cyrus Daniels, (one of the brethren,) and forthwith started with him for the Wisconsin River, a distance of sixty miles.

We walked on snow shoes, as the snow was near three feet deep. On our arrival at the agency, the agent refused giving the permit, whereupon very sharp words ensued between the chief and agent. Finally he (the agent) said we might make our own bargain. The chief told him that he had not asked what he might do. The agent said he dare not give a permit. The United States would not allow it. But we might proceed according to the arrangements with the chief, and he would not interfere in the matter.

The agent privately proposed a partnership in our establishment. I told him I could not do it without consulting my friends. He then said we would let the matter rest until the next fall. He would then come over to our place, and we would take the matter into further consideration. On parting with my Indian friends I received the warmest assurances of their lasting friendship, and it was not until I should agree to go to their lodges and relate to them in detail the persecutions of our people by the States of Ohio and Missouri, that they would consent to my leaving them. Upon hearing which the Indians shed tears, (not common for an Indian,) saying we had been treated almost as badly as the Indians.

On my return home brother Daniels got badly frost bitten. On my arrival I found things progressing as usual. About this time a band of northern Chippewa Indians were on a hunt above us on the river. Their chief came down on a trading expedition to a trader's shanty below us. They sold him whiskey and made him nearly drunk, and some dispute taking place between him and the trader, he took a large bar and beat the chief, and left him lying in the snow for dead. The residue of his company fled precipitately, and coming to our place told us what had happened. I took some of our men with me and went to the trader's, and told him if any more whiskey was sold to Indians I would demolish his shanty and its contents, and if the chief died I would make it a bad job for him.

We took the chief into our houses and bound up his wounds, and toward the latter part of the night of this day he left our place for his lodge. In about two weeks he came to our place with part of his band and interpreter. He had the U. S. flag, carried by one of his braves, saying to us in his speech that the snow was so deep that they could not hunt, and that their children were starving, and (producing a purse of money) said that whenever that flag (pointing to it) was produced to the white man, as he was told when he received it, that it should be an order to him for provisions.

We said in reply that the U. S. was no friend of ours; that they had robbed us, and permitted us to be plundered by the white man; and further, if we let them have food it would not be for the love we had for the U. S., but for that we had toward the abused and oppressed Indians; to put up his money, that we would give him some flour and an ox to take to his camp, and feed their children. They received the flour and ox and started, blessing us by returning many thanks and lasting friendship, stating that we were not like other white men.

Towards the opening of spring, having made an abundance of lumber for the Nauvoo House and Temple, we held a council in regard to future operations. The result of our deliberations was that a memorial should be sent to Joseph and the authorities in Nauvoo expressive of our views, and I was delegated to be the bearer. A few days after I set out on the ice for Prairie Duchien, at which place I took the stage coach for Helena, and upon my arrival at Natvoo presented the documents to Joseph Smith and Hyrum Smith, whom I found together in consultation. And after a hasty perusal, Joseph said to me: Brother Miller, I perceive the spirit of God is in the pinneries as well as here, and we will call together some of our wise men and proceed to set up the kingdom of God by organizing some of its officers. And from day to day he called some of the brethren about him, organizing them as princes in the kingdom of God, until the number of fifty-three were thus called.

In this council it was agreed upon that we would run Joseph Smith for President of the United States, which we would certainly do, and also Sidney Higdon for Vice President; and in case they were elected we would at once establish dominion in the U. S., and in view of a failure we would send a minister to the then Republic of Texas to make a treaty with the Cabinet of Texas for all that country north of a west line from the falls of the Colorado River to the Nueces; thence down the same to the Gulf of Mexico, and along the same to the Rio Grand, and up the same to the U. S. territory, and get them to acknowledge us as a nation; and on the part of the church we would help them defend themselves against Mexico, standing as a gage between the belligerent powers. And if successful in this matter we would have dominion in spite of the United States, and we would send the Black River lumber company to take possession of the newly acquired territory. Lucien Woodworth was chosen minister to Texas, and I was to return to the pinneries to bring down Lyman Wight, and leave matters there that the work could go on without my presence, and be back by the time Woodworth might return from Texas. We severally started the same day, Woodworth for Texas, and I for the pinneries.

Most truly as ever,
GEORGE MILLER.

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, AUG. 23, 1855.

ROAD TO THE UPPER COUNTRY.

There has been for many years, a most intense anxiety in the country about the Straits and Grand Traverse Bay for a road from the southern and settled counties to the small settlements in this region. And numerous efforts have been made to procure an appropriation by either Congress or the State Legislature for the construction of such a thoroughfare.

In the appropriation of the 500,000 acres of internal improvement lands, granted to the State, this road ought to have been provided for, and doubtless would, had the Representative from Mackinac properly attended to the interests of his District. Mackinac, however, could not afford it. Such a road would not reach Mackinac. At its termination on the Straits, a rival town must inevitably grow up, which would rapidly absorb all the business heretofore done at Mackinac, and so far outgrow its utmost prospects, as to leave Mackinac a desolation. For these reasons, the Representatives of Mackinac have invariably sacrificed the interests of all other parts of the District for the village alone; preferring that the country should remain a wilderness, rather than any other village should grow up.

In 1850, when the Constitutional Convention was in session, the Hon. Lucius Lyon again called the attention of the public to the importance of a road, at least as far as Grand Traverse Bay, and awakened so much interest that had the measure been properly presented by the Representatives of the upper country, at the next Legislative session it must have been carried. But unfortunately the Mackinac member refused to bring it forward, and it was given over as a hopeless undertaking by those who were really interested in it.

In 1853, Mr. Strang was Representative in the Legislature of all the country from the Straits to the north line of Kent Co., under a new apportionment, by which this vast wilderness was separated from Mackinac District, and improperly attached to Newaygo. Congress had, a few years before, granted to the State some six million acres of land, under the designation of swamp lands, and at an early day Mr. Strang introduced a bill providing for the appropriation of a portion of those lands along the line of the proposed road for its construction, and obtained favorable reports from both the Committees on Public Lands and on Internal Improvements. This bill, after long discussion, passed the House by a strong vote.

Unfortunately it was reached in the Senate the last day of the session, just as a veto came in from Gov. McClelland of a bill appropriating an indefinite quantity of swamp lands in Saginaw Co., for the benefit of a Plank Road Company, and the impression being general that the Gov. would veto any bill appropriating those lands for roads, this was laid over, and thus defeated. This was most unfortunate, as the bill had been laid before the Gov. previous to its passage in the House, and those most interested in its success had no fears of its safety in his hands.

Thus the measure was postponed for the time being. But the favorable report of two Committees having the matter in charge, the large amount of interest manifested in the matter, and the firm support given it from the lower part of the State by such men as the Hon. E. Ransom, of Kalamazoo; the Hon. J. G. Sutherland, of Saginaw, and the Hon. Wm. A. Burt, of Macomb, placed the measure in so favorable a condition that success seemed to be secured. Its friends felt sure that another session of the Legislature would not pass without seeing this important work provided for. How this hope was disappointed, we proceed to show.

Very early in the last session of the Legislature Mr. Strang introduced this measure, and in conjunction with it the further measure of a road from the Straits to Saut Ste Marie, and Mr. Ashmun, of Midland, introduced that of a road from Saginaw to Grand Traverse.

These measures went through the usual process previous to the third reading, and though they encountered serious opposition, passed all the intermediate forms by decisive majorities, and everything indicated success.

After they had advanced far enough to make their success nearly certain, Mr. Wendell, of Mackinac, introduced a rival project, which divided the supporters of these measures. His project was to make a single road from the Straits to Lansing, through the central and unsettled portion of the State, instead of two roads, one from the Muskegon and the other from Saginaw, which would have accommodated all the new settlements, and opened the best country to immediate occupation.

The introduction of Mr. Wendell's rival project was the immediate cause of several days delay, while the short session of forty days was rapidly drawing to a close. In the meantime other measures were passing which could only be carried by the votes of the four up country members. Could these road bills have been brought on first, numerous votes would have been secured from those who depended on the favor of the up country members to carry their own measures. Their own measures being secured, they became indifferent, and endangered the measure, even could the division over two rival projects have been healed.

So far Mr. Wendell seemed to regard the measure perfectly secure, and anxious only to get to himself the credit of it, by securing the adoption of a route different in its southern termination, from that proposed by Mr. Strang. Looking on the road as certain, he was only casting about for the credit of securing it.

When warned of the danger of pressing a rival measure, and periling the support which Messrs. Strang and Ashmun had got pledged to their bills, he treated the warning with contempt.

A few days waked him to the danger. Mr. Wendell had assumed to himself the right to speak for all the country from Manistee to Saut Ste Marie. And the people of Grand Traverse, who have probably interest in the road than that of any other county, by sending a "tobby" who consulted in all matters, and spent his time constantly in slandering Mr. Strang, had authorized his assuming to represent them.

Mr. Dixon, who went down from Grand Traverse, actually gave his support to Wendell's project of a road fifty miles east of there through a country without inhabitant, rather than Mr. Strang's project of a road directly through their settlement.

Of course this sacrifice of Grand Traverse interests was not willingly made. It grew out of the necessity of showing that Mr. Strang did not faithfully represent that part of his District, to maintain which Dixon sacrificed the interests of the people of Grand Traverse in several instances.

Thursday or Friday before the adjournment, Mr. Wendell moved a special Committee, to whom was referred all these road bills, consisting of himself, Mr. Divine, of Montcalm, and Mr. Pettit, of Clinton, who, as might have been expected, held all the bills till within an hour of the final adjournment of the House, when Mr. Wendell did himself the distinguished honor of reporting in favor of his own route, as one of great national consequence, in consequence of the imminent danger of war with Great Britain; in which case if the enemy should get exclusive possession of Lake Huron, this road would be necessary to keep up communication with the important military post at Mackinac. (We suppose transportation on Lake Michigan would be too slow or too expensive.) Laughable and incredible as this report was, Mr. Wendell actually read it to the House, and it has become a record for the benefit of future generations.

And there not being time or inclination to carry the matter any further, the whole subject was indefinitely postponed. Thus the most important measure of the session for the upper country, a measure which under the most favorable circumstances could have been carried only with great labor, after being secured was sacrificed in Mr. Wendell's vanity to secure the personal credit of it.

Except that Mr. Wendell had already foreseen the decay and final desolation of Mackinac, and purchased the very ground where this road would touch the Straits, we should believe his object was its defeat. As it was,

d by
the castsecunger and which had he con-to the as-to from his ering his own ually ell's east with-
Mr. recte of was grew ving ful-Disixon
the sev-fore ndell
to hese self,
and as held our
the did onor own onal of war rich ex-Hussation post ungan en-edi-en-use,
for ons.
or ter ect
as-per anon-ing
Mr.
the ad nd
nd he his
as,

his vanity alone prevented his making a fortune out of the labors of the man he was most anxious to injure. Had he but let the matter alone, 200,000 acres of lands would have been appropriated for the construction of a road from the Muskegon River to the Straits of Michilimackinac, and 60,000 acres for the construction of a road from the Straits to Saut Ste Marie—being about 1,000 acres to the mile—and a similar appropriation for a road from Saginaw to Grand Traverse.

It was amusing to hear opposition to this road as a Mormon measure. The Mormons keep their communication by wagon and have no interest in the road. But it would facilitate the settlement of a large portion of the State by other people, who would be liable to crowd them, and attempt to dispossess them, as has been done heretofore.

Mr. Strang, in pressing the measure, acted as the Representative of the whole District. Could he have lowered himself to selfishness, he would never have introduced the measure. As it is, those who needed defeated it, and it is doubtful whether they can ever again bring it forward under circumstances as auspicious.

AT IT AGAIN.

The Northern Islander, the organ of the Mormons on Beaver Island, in its issue of July 26, has a page devoted to the Pontiac Gazette, in reply to an article of ours entitled "Where some horses went." It denies the assertions of our articles. We give the substance of the denials.

1. Eleven horses were not shipped on any propeller at the dock at China. No such or similar shipment was ever made there.
2. No horses shipped at China were ever landed at Beaver Island.
3. No propeller or steamboat ever left eleven horses or above six horses at Beaver Island.
4. It is not true that Mr. Oudworth could find no horses on the Island.

But the denial speak for itself. Upon further inquiry we learn we were mistaken; that not eleven horses were shipped at China, but seven were shipped at Buffalo, and eleven at other ports, a part of which number some two or three were shipped at China.

The Islander speaks well for the honor which reigns among the Mormons on the Island. It says no locks are necessary to keep property safe from thieves and burglars. Of this we have no doubt. But it gives a fling at the "Christian city of Pontiac" because the citizens have been alarmed for the safety of their property. The Christian city of Pontiac! A pretty good joke, Mr. Islander. We are of opinion that there were at St. James so many liquor selling shops, so many loafers, so many gamblers, so many who do not profess any kind of religion or morality, as are found at Pontiac, Mormon property and Mormon quiet would not be so secure as they now are. For we speak it to the moral credit of the "reign of King Strang" that liquor selling and liquor drinking are not among the practices of Mormons. And we doubt not that among themselves, there cannot be found in the State of Michigan a more quiet, industrious community than that on Beaver Island. But we insist these facts prove nothing positively to the credit of these men before God. We do not believe that a band of thieves and robbers, if isolated from the world, forming a community for a common purpose, would steal from each other.

Another article in the Islander is in answer to ours in which we say the Mormons are living in violation of the sacred law of the State. The Islander wishes us to say which law of the State we consider as "the sacred law?" Plainly we assert that all laws are sacred laws, in our opinion, and among these the law against Polygamy. If the Islander will assert as truth, that the Mormons of Beaver Island, or any of them, are not living in violation of this law, either in their creed or practices, we will openly confess that we have imbibed erroneous opinions of them.

Again; if the Islander is hard run for subjects for long winded editorials, and will hint the same to us, publicly or privately, we will promise to give it an abundant supply through the columns of the Gazette. It seems to take a "special liking" to our paper as affording food for discussion. Perhaps this is well; may be it will bring the "Saints" of Beaver Island into a better understanding with their fellow-citizens of the State—the Gentiles of the lower and upper Peninsula.—Pontiac Gazette.

The Pontiac Gazette began this controversy by denouncing the Mormons as outlaws and deperadoes—as disturbers of the peace and good order of the State—despisers of the law, and corrupters of the public morals, and recommended driving them from the State by force and arms.

In pursuing the controversy it has not only accused us generally of a large catalogue of crimes, but specifically of stealing a lot (probably eleven) horses and carrying them off and successfully hiding them.

And, lo! it was misinformed about the horses; and for the rest the Gazette has "no doubt" that property is safe here in the Mormon dominion without the security of locks; "speaks it to the moral credit of the reign of King Strang that liquor selling and liquor drinking are not among the practices of the Mormons;" gives as a reason why public morals are better and property and person more secure in the Mormon city of Saint James than the Christian city of Pontiac, that here all the people are Mormons, whereas Pontiac has the ordinary infusion of liquor shops, loafers and gamblers, as well as persons who, though raised in the Christian religion, do not profess any faith; and, finally, "does not doubt that—there cannot be found in the State of Michigan a more quiet and industrious community than that on Beaver Island."

And such a community the Gazette wished to treat as "foreigners and enemies;" to war out of the State, to replace it, not with a Christian city like Pontiac, with its groggeries, loafers and gamblers, its burglars and thieves, but to make it another Mackinac, where these things make the light instead of the dark shading of the picture, where they are the ground color instead of the occasional blot and stain.

And the Gazette raised an outcry against the State and federal authorities for not interfering in the premises, at least so far as to punish the Mormons for polygamy, though they have no power in the premises. And in neither of these things has it receded from its original position, though it has receded from all but one of its accusations.

Because the Mormons believe that God was not blinded in the dark ages, and that prophets did not lie in his name when they declared the law of polygamy to be his law; because they simply believe the Bible to be a true revelation of his will, as Christians profess to; though they will not "be disobedient to magistrates" in order to take wives under this law, a Christian man, editing a Know-Nothing paper, joins hands with a set of aliens, who have escaped Ireland for their crimes, and aggregating with outlaws from all the nations of Europe as well as the American States, have debauched, intoxicated, plundered and murdered Indians till whole bands are exterminated, to treat us as foreigners and enemies.

To do what? To substitute for our peace, order, industry, faithfulness to the laws, and unfeigned religious faith; drunkenness, gambling, rapine, polygamy, polyandry, all manner of fornication, adultery and incest.

To bring here what those men have in their own settlements; not merely common prostitution, such as this Christian editor can see at home, but frequent exchanges of husbands and wives; the prostitution of wives in the intoxicated husband's sight; rapes committed jointly and in succession by a half dozen men upon the same victim; to allow men to daily and yearly commit incest with their own daughters and their grand daughters, born of Indian women. This is what our enemies in this country have done; not once or twice, but ten thousand times; not in dark and unfrequented places, but publicly, shamelessly, in the light of the sun.

We can not only give the names and circumstantially state the cases, but we have the proofs. Yes, we can carry the proof to the extent of showing a man among our persecutors, elected to a responsible office, who was living as publicly as any man lives with his wife, with two women, one of whom was his daughter by an Indian woman, the other her daughter by him, being at the same time the daughter and grand daughter of the man with whom she cohabited as husband, and who subsequently gave birth to a dead child; which was child, grand child and great grand child to the same father.

And it is with such men that Christian men give their voice to mob us off the earth, that they may fill our place and possess our lands. It may be fun to them.—They may see in it only the occasion of a "long winded editorial." It came near being death to us.—God alone can tell what it may be.

THE EMPIRE OF THE GREAT TURTLE.

Hon. J. J. Strang has shown us a letter from the Hon. Jas. Guthrie, Secretary of the Treasury, saying that commissions have been reissued to Alden and Charles Hale, as Keeper and Assistant Keeper of the Light at Skillagalee Rock. We presume that His Majesty, J. A. T. Wendell, will now have to give in, and acknowledge the Secretary of the Treasury his superior.—Still he holds on to the little end of his plank. Having returned the original commissions, he now refuses to notify the appointees that duplicate commissions have been received.

So far we believe he has shirked the disgrace of his delinquencies on Mr. Toll, his predecessor. But more than one person will be surprised if a knowledge of his share in the matter does not bring a communication that the Treasury Department has no further occasion for his service as Collector at Mackinac. Whether there is any sense of justice left or not, politicians are destined soon to learn that Mackinac is not the upper country.

Gov. Reeder, of Kansas, has been removed. Pretence, speculation in half-breed lands.—Cause, opposition to the Missouri invasion and conquest. There is a general outcry against this act, even in Democratic papers at the north. Dawson, of Pa., was offered the appointment as his successor, but declined.—Wilson Shannon, of Ohio, received and accepted the appointment.

At Louisville, Ky., at the August election there was a Know-Nothing or Native American riot, in which some twenty persons were "punished with death," for the crime of being born the other side of the Atlantic. This was to be expected, after the numerous cases of confiscation of goods and capital punishment for believing a different religion, or having a different color.

The people of Utah propose to haul grain in wagons from San Bernardino, Cal., 800 miles. The grasshopper devastation is extending to California, and also eastward of the Rocky Mountains.

Col. Steptoe is in California.—So it is definitely settled that he does not take the Governorship of Utah. The probability is that Brigham Young will finally get it. He now acts as Governor, under the hold over rule.

The Missouri invaders have full control of the Legislature of Kansas. Among other laws, they are passing one allowing non-residents to vote on payment of $1.00, and another requiring an oath of allegiance of emigrants from certain free States.

Two cases have recently occurred in Wisconsin where a murderer has been executed by the mob. In the case of Mayberry, at Janesville, he had been convicted, but by law could only be punished with imprisonment for life. DeBerrond, in Washington county, was only indicted.

Crime is everywhere rife.—All respect for the sanctions of the law are being lost. We have noticed in this No. numerous evidences that in the best governed parts of the country the people prefer mob justice to legal justice. Unless a speedy reform is sought, the end will be a radical change in the forms of government.

In California unconcealed street murders amount to some two hundred a year, and executions by the mob to about the same. In Kansas the most peaceable are prepared to set the law at defiance.

We learn from the Jackson Citizen that petty thefts and malicious destruction of fruit trees are committed nightly at that place.

The Pontiac Gazette contains an advertisement, signed by the names of many of the most respectable residents of that place, virtually offering a reward for the murder of any of the numerous burglars prowling about there.

It appears by the Kalamazoo papers that house breaking occurs in that place almost nightly.

THE INDIAN TREATY.

The consequence of the late action of the United States towards the Indians of Michigan are of so great importance to the future welfare of the State, that we deem it proper to lay the main features of the treaty just negotiated in this city before our readers. The object of the government is to locate these Indians upon permanent homes, in such manner as will best prepare them to enjoy the wise and humane provisions of our wise constitution for their citizenship. When we reflect that they number quite seven thousand souls, scattered through the Lower and part of the Upper Peninsula; that they are divided into small bands, under the direction of separate Chiefs, and are in various stages of civilization, we perceive how difficult and delicate a task the agent of the government had to perform. The principal matters of the treaty are as follows.

1. A permanent home, or farm, to consist of 80 acres for each head of a family, or 40 acres for each single person 21 years of age, of 60 acres to each family of two or more orphan children.

These lands are all to be located by the individuals, each selecting his own piece, within certain tracts chosen by the Indians, and reserved from sale by the United States for the purpose, during the next five years. The person locating is to reside upon his farm, and is to receive a certificate of sale from government in usual form, save that the patent shall not issue upon it before the expiration of five years. During this ten years the President may, upon the recommendation of the Indian Agent, grant the patent to any who are manifestly capable of managing their property with prudence, while, on the other hand, such as at the expiration of ten years are not so capable shall wait still longer for their patent.

At the expiration the first five years, and until the end of ten years from the ratification of the treaty, the Indians shall have the exclusive right to enter and pay for lands within the tracts reserved from sale, the object of this provision being to enable those who can to acquire lands in addition to those given them by the treaty. During the ten years, the holders of these certificates cannot sell, contract to sell, or in any manner dispose of their land.

We remark that the tracts to be reserved, in which the selection of farms is to be made, were in all cases designated by the Indians themselves, no further effort being made to influence them than to point out manifest disadvantages, if any existed, in the country they chose, and to urge upon them the necessity (which all will acknowledge) of congregating, in as large numbers as possible. (The localities designated are as follows: viz:—

At Ne-aw-me-con, on Lake Superior; Whiskey's Bay, or U-le-qu-a-me-naw, Sugar Island, and near Sailors' Encampment, on Ste Marie River; the Chequamegon, back of the Island of Mackinac; the Beaver Islands, in Lake Michigan; Emmet and Isabella counties in the Lower Peninsula. At all these points sufficient numbers will locate for educational, religious, and municipal purposes. At some of these points the Indians already have flourishing settlements, where they own large tracts of land, and have made great advance in civilization.

2. In addition to the lands, the government gives to them $500,000 and upwards, of which sum $200,000 was due to them for reservations under the treaty of Washington of 1836; $30,000 for principal and interest of reserved annuity under that treaty; $30,000 as the value of certain permanent annuities; and about $200,000 for improvements upon Indian lands located under that treaty. By the treaty of 1836, the Indians bound themselves to remove to the west of the Mississippi River, in consideration of which the United States was to furnish them one year's subsistence, and to outfit, besides paying the expenses of their removal. They have never been removed, and the Commissioners, taking into consideration the fact that their removal would have cost the government over $1,000,000, and that the expense thereof must have been regarded as part of the price of their land, gave them, upon equal grounds, enough more to make up the total given above. The manner in which this sum is to be expended is as follows:—$75,000 in five equal annual instalments, for building materials, and other materials necessary to locate upon the lands granted to them by the treaty; about $10,000 for the support of four blacksmith shops ten years; a large amount for the support of schools ten years; and the residue to be paid in instalments of $10,000 per annum, with interest on total amount unpaid for ten years; which leaves at the expiration of that time, a large sum to be disposed of for any purpose of utility the Indians may designate.

3. At the end of ten years the tribal organization shall cease.

These are the essential particulars of the treaty, and, in view of the deep interest our State has in the welfare of the Indians, we cannot refrain from expressing our appreciation of the liberality of its provisions.—Free Press.

F. JOHNSON & CO.

Have purchased and are continuing to purchase, for cash, a full assortment of fresh goods, by which they are enabled to sell at BUFFALO and DETROIT Prices.

DRY GOODS.
Calicoes, of various patterns.
Mons de Lains and Balloes.
Laws, Shawls, &c.
A new supply of Bonnets, of handsome finish.

Book and Barred Muslins.
Groceries and Fishing Tackle, and various other stores.
Stoves of the most approved pattern and material, for sale.

CITY STORE, SAINT JAMES.

ONE DOOR NORTH OF THE DOCK, WASHINGTON.
J. M. WATT has just opened a large assortment of Dry Goods, Groceries, Crockery, Tin ware, Hardware, Cutlery, Iron, Nails, Railroad, Glass, Ready Made Clothing, Boots and Shoes, also a full supply of Fishermen's Tackle. Thankful for past patronage, I hope to merit a liberal share in the future, by selling cheaper than the cheapest for ready cash not refused.
He has also on hand a small assortment of Clocks, Watches, Jewelry, &c.
Saint James, June 19th, 1856.

I AM GROWING OLD.

BY JOHN G. BAXE.

My days pass pleasantly away,
My nights are blessed with sweetest sleep;
I feel no symptoms of decay,
I have no cause to moan or weep:
My fees are impotent and shy,
My friends are neither false nor cold,
And yet, of late, I often sigh—
I am growing old!

My growing talk of olden times,
My growing thirst for early news,
My growing apathy of rhymes,
My growing love for easy shoes,
My growing fear of taking cold,
All tell me in the plainest voice,
I am growing old!

I'm growing fonder of my staff,
I'm growing dimmer in my eyes,
I'm growing fainter in my laugh,
I'm growing deeper in my sighs,
I'm growing careless of my dress—
I'm growing frugal of my gold,
I'm growing wise, I'm growing—yes—
I'm growing old!

I see it in my changing taste,
I see it in my changing hair,
I see it in my growing waist,
I see it in my growing hair.
A thousand hints proclaim the truth,
As plain as truth was ever told,
That, even in my vaunted youth,
I'm growing old!

Ah, me my very laurels breathe
The tale in my reluctant ears;
And every boon the hours bequeath
But makes me debtor to the years!
Even Flattery's honeyed words declare
The secret she would fain withhold,
And tells me in "How young you are!"
I'm growing old!

Thanks for the years, whose rapid flight
My sombre muse so sadly sings;
Thanks for the gleams of golden light
That tint the darkness of their wings!
The light that beams from out the sky,
Those heavenly mansions to unfold,
Where all are blessed, and none may sigh,
"I'm growing old!"

From Putnam's Monthly.

THE MORMONS.

SHALL UTAH BE ADMITTED INTO THE UNION.

It seems to be generally expected that, at no very distinct period, the Mormons will apply to Congress, to be admitted as an integral part into our Union—as a State of this Federacy of ours. We form the only Confederation that has ever existed with a coherent territory, a country, and that makes at the same time the admission of new members a part of its fundamental policy. The Hanseatic League was a league of scattered communities, whose union, if we may say so, was only on the seas, and in the foreign factories.—We are, moreover, the only instance of a confederacy which leaves self-government to its components, and which, nevertheless, has a general government that goes far beyond a common league. The relation which a State thus bears to the whole, is peculiar and complicated—a relation which must not be lightly treated. It produces problems that cannot be solved by a political formula of a few words, offered by the demagogue or the pettifogging politician, as panaceas are advertised, fit to cure all ills from scrofula and consumption, to melancholy and a fretful temper.

The Mormons will knock at our gate, as it is frequently and not inaptly called in the newspapers. Will they find written over it: positively no admittance, or will they meet with their peculiar advocates, and, after some wrangling in Congress, which invariably grows more partisan-like the longer it lasts, become one of our sister States?

SCENE: The Gate of the Capital, at Washington—Inside and Outside of the Gate.

The Mormons at the Gate.—Bang, bang, bang!

Speaker of the House from within.—Who is there? Who makes this noise?

Mormons.—We are Latter Day Saints, sir—Mormons, if you please.

Speaker, as before.—And what of that? Why such a noise?

Mormons.—We wish to be admitted; indeed, we want to be; we insist upon it; indeed, the Lord demands it.

Speaker, always through the key-hole.—And what sort of people are you? What is your religion, since you speak of the Lord?

Several voices from within.—No religion, no religion here! We have nothing to do with religion here.

Leader of the Mormon Delegation.—Sir, you have no right whatever to care a straw for religion. Religion is all on our side. All we do and say, is religion, but you have nothing to do with it. Obey the Lord, and let us in. But as it is our mission always and everywhere to preach Joe Smith and Truth, we are willing to satisfy you. We do not only believe, like you, in a God who is good, but, more than that, we believe in a God that becomes better and better—not only in a perfect God, but one that becomes perfecter and perfecter, as he grows older—not only in a God that is a spirit, but one that has bodies, limbs and local habitation. Oh, yes! Oh, yes! Believe ye outsiders inside, and open the door. We are a wondrous people. We do not only believe all things, but we know all things, and, we know, not only that we shall be redeemed, but that we ourselves shall become Gods, with power and great glory, at least so far as the pantaloonery is concerned. The womankind—darling creatures—will follow us.

A voice through the key-hole, from within.—Can you not be a little in a hurry, and become Gods before the next Presidential election? You might help us, and it would make you very popular, gentlemen. You know, you say that the whole world will be at an end pretty soon, anyhow. Now, why won't you be quick about it?

Speaker.—Order! And how about your republicanism? You know, that the old parchment says that none but republics shall be admitted as members of the confederacy.

Mormons.—We beg your pardon, sir; no such thing. The Constitution—which was inspired: everything is inspired—says that the United States shall guarantee to each State a republican government; but if a State has no republican government, they can't guarantee it. That is clear. Besides, sir, we are a republic, and we are not. The Lord rules his saints through Brigham, and Brigham has been appointed by the Lord, so we are not; and you need not trouble yourself about that guaranteeing business. And we are a republic, because every year, Brigham, appointed by the Lord, asks the Mormons whether that appointment suits them. Have you ever heard the like of such republicanism? Did we not tell you that all of us are going to be Gods? Equality for ever! We are a "theo-democracy," sir. Only think! Brigham is inspired every day and every hour, what to say and what to write, and what to do, and our newspaper contains the revelations as clearly as those shoulder-blades gave the inspirations of Mahomet. Numa, and all that sort of men were inspired but once, and then their inspiration was at a dead halt. That was monarchical; but we have inspiration as long as a railway; running on at full speed, sometimes backing a little to be sure; but what of that? Do you want more?

Voices from within.—Let them in! Let them in!

Speaker.—Order! I don't exactly want more. Indeed, Messrs. Saints, it seems a little too much already. And pray, how is it with some elements of civilization, such as property and marriage? Some people tell rather ugly stories about you.

Mormon.—Have at you again, sir. You call marriage an element of civilization, do you?—Why, sir, we swim in this element. You call the family the basis of all political society.—We make families as plenty as chicken-coops. Didn't Mr. Ferris tell you that the saints build family houses like barracks—box to box—a new wife, a new coop? We do not only acknowledge the family and marriage as you do, who stop with such a heathen as Theseus, that was defied by his godless people for having established wedlock between one man and one woman; but we are a progressive and expansive people. Bless the Anabaptists! We make the family as wide as the lawyer's conscience. It is a lovely state, for it is full of love. Yet, sir, we do not only give wives to all men and Gods, but as many as they choose, and why should we not? Shall the liars, the Mahometans, have all the good things to themselves? Your Mr. Noyes, of Oneida county, says: Though a man love apples, may he not relish a peach too? We take peaches, apples, and all. And then, as to property, why, sir, we are—indeed—we—why, you know, sir, we are a holy mixture of socialism, and hierarchy, and individualism, and theocracy, and democracy, and all manner of things. Mixed governments, you know are the best; we have, in fact, the government of angels, we know we have; and "we know that we know it."

Speaker.—Very well, gentlemen, be pleased to be seated—outside there—somewhere. We shall take the matter into consideration. In the meantime, you need not thump again so furiously against our door. We shall let you know when we shall have come to a conclusion.

Speaker retires; the Saints curse.

(To be continued.)

TIRED OF THEIR FRIENDS.

According to all accounts the Turks are growing tired of their French and English friends.—They find their embraces more fond and warm than is comfortable. The Turks are fully convinced,—if we may rely upon the statement of a Paris letter we publish in another column,—that they never again will be masters of Constantinople. They decidedly would prefer, says the same authority, the Russians as rulers, and it is predicted that in the course of a year they will be found on the side of the Russians, and that the Allies will be forced to entrench themselves in Constantinople. It is further stated that the French, who keep a large force at the point, have commenced the erection of buildings and works which will require several years to finish!

We hope no one on this side of the Atlantic seriously supposes that the Allies have undertaken this war for the preservation of the integrity of Turkey. They have undertaken it, rather, to absorb Turkey. The Emperor Nicholas was entirely right, that the Turkish Emperor was a sick man who must shortly die, and whose effects must be administered upon. He proposed a fair division of these effects, asking for himself sufficient of the estate to give him an outlet to the ocean. England was ready for a division, but, as usual, wanted the lion's share.—

Whether she will get it in the end, remains to be seen. At the present moment the Emperor Napoleon, who is an expert player, has just as good a hand as England—and the age.—Free Press.

PUNCTUATION PUZZLE.

The following paragraph, extracted from the Portland Transcript, is a capital illustration of the importance of punctuation. There are two ways of pointing it, one of which makes the individual in question a monster of wickedness, while the other converts him into a model christian. Let our readers exercise their ingenuity on the problem, and see whether they can discover its two fold solution:

He is an old experienced man in vice and wickedness he is never found opposing the works of iniquity he takes delight in the downfall of the neighborhood he never rejoices in the prosperity of any of his fellow creatures he is always ready to assist in destroying the peace of society he takes no pleasure in serving the Lord he is uncommonly diligent in sowing discord among his friends and acquaintances he takes no pride in laboring to promote the cause of christianity he has not been negligent in endeavoring to stigmatize all public teachers he makes no exertions to subdue his evil passions he strives hard to build up satan's kingdom he lends no aid to the support of the gospel among the heathen he contributes largely to the evil adversary he pays no attention to good advice he gives great heed to the devil he will never go to heaven he must go where he will receive the just recompense of reward.

ADVICE TO THE NEWLY MARRIED.

Zschokke, in one of his tales, gives the following advice to a bride:

"In thy first solitary hour after the ceremony, take the bridegroom and demand a solemn vow of him and give him a vow in return. Promise one another secretly never, not in jest, to wrangle with each other; never to bandy words or indulge in the least ill humor. Never, I say, never. Wrangling and putting on an air of ill humor merely to tease, becomes earnest in practice. Mark that.—Next, promise each other sincerely and solemnly never to have a secret from each other, under whatever pretext, with whatever excuse it might be.—You must continually and every moment see clearly into each other's bosom. Even when one of you has committed a fault wait not an instant, but confess it freely, let it cost tears; but confess it. And as you keep nothing secret from each other, so on the contrary preserve the privacies of your house, marriage state and heart from father, mother, sister, brother, aunt and the world. You two, with God's help, build your own quiet world; every third or fourth one whom you draw into it with you will form a party, and stand between you two. That should never be. Promise this to each other. Renew the vow at each temptation. You will find your account in it. Your souls will grow as it were together, and at last will become as one. Ah! if many a young pair had on their wedding day known this secret, how many marriages were happier than, alas! they are."

THE FEMALE MIND.

The influence of the female mind over the strong mind of a man is greater, perhaps, than many are willing to acknowledge. Its operations are various, and some men struggle fearfully to disengage themselves from it. But this we believe, that more or less all men have felt its power; and those perhaps have experienced it to the greatest extent who would have it supposed they despised it most. A woman loses many of her charms, and consequently much of her power in the opinion of many when she ranges herself on the side of that which is wrong; while it is impossible to estimate the influence if exercised with tenderness and modesty. The ruin produced by a bad woman may be sudden and violent, and compared to the bursting of a volcano, the overflow of the ocean; the influence of virtuous women are like a gentle dew and morning showers, which descend silently and softly, and are known only by their effects in the smiling aspect of the valleys and the weight of autumnal branches.

People who expect to get to heaven by dropping a shilling in the contribution-box on Sunday, and shave a poor fellow out of ten times that sum on Monday to make up for it, are about as likely to have a seat up in paradise as an ox-express is to beat the sun lightning.

A Pernicious Delusion.

Millerism, we believe, has pretty much died out, though we occasionally hear of a day being fixed for the blowing of Gabriel's horn, and of the congregation of parties of the elect, clad in ascension robes, ready to "go up" at the first sound of the archangel's bugle. The Lord has so often broken his promise to appear in the midst of these, his chosen people, that we should think they would lose faith in the Lord altogether, and turn to the worship of some other god. Many of them doubtless have, while others don't know when they worship, or what they do, for they are inmates of the mad house.

Another delusion has succeeded Millerism, which seems to us fraught with more widespread pernicious consequences than the miserable deception of the speedy destruction of the world—more pernicious, because more plausible, more absorbing to the non-profound mind, more difficult to fathom, and better calculated to deceive. We mean spiritualism.—There is no knowing the extent of this delusion—the extent of the infidelity it has produced, of the misery it has occasioned, of the insanity and idiocy attributable to it. We only hear of occasional cases of its dire effects, but we know the mischief it has done, and is still doing, is almost incalculable. One or two late instances of this mischief are related by exchange papers. In Boston, the other day, a young lady, formerly a teacher in one of the public schools, went mad through belief in the doctrine. The N. Y. Journal of Commerce states the subjoined facts:

"And another instance has just come to our knowledge. It is that of a highly intelligent and amiable lady, who, one year ago, was living in Boston, in comparative ease and luxury, surrounded by all the endearments of domestic bliss. But suddenly a change came over her husband. He became infatuated with the company of a circle of 'spiritualists,' and gradually neglected his wife and children.—His evenings were no longer spent at his own domestic hearthstone. At last, wife was forsaken, children were neglected, home was deserted. The infatuated husband said that he had had a 'vision,' wherein it was revealed to him that he must forsake his wife and children, and become the 'spiritual husband' of a certain 'medium,' with whom he was intimately acquainted. And this he did—forsaking the true partner of his heart—the woman he had solemnly covenanted to watch over and protect, 'until death them should part.' The deserted wife was thus left to her own exertions for means of supporting herself and her three children. She is now residing in a neighboring city, where she manages to earn a livelihood by dressmaking; while her husband, she says, is living in elegant luxury at a fashionable hotel, with his 'spiritual wife.'"

We might add other instances of the workings of this delusion, equally deplorable and revolting with the foregoing. And yet, in the face of facts like these, "spiritualism" has devotees, even in this city, among professing christians; and many a household gathers "circles," within its precincts, for purposes of amusement, possibly, but without estimating the injury that may be done by such amusement—without knowing how many of those present may fall victims to the seductive charm of the phenomena.—Free Press.

NORTHERN ISLANDER.

VOL. V.—NO. 10.

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND, LAKE MICHIGAN, THURSDAY, SEP. 6, 1855.

WHOLE NO. 77.

THE NORTHERN ISLANDER

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY,
at St. James, Beaver Island,
Lake Michigan, by
COOPER & CHIDESTER.

TERMS:—$2.00 per annum, payable, in advance.

All letters relating to the affairs of the publication, whether on business or otherwise, should be addressed to COOPER & CHIDESTER, and postage paid.

Advertisements will be inserted at $1.00 per square (12 lines) for three insertions, and 50 cts. for every subsequent insertion. A liberal discount made to those who advertise largely. Advertisements not ordered for any particular time will be continued till further orders and payment of bill.

During the suspension of navigation in winter the Islander will be sent to mail subscribers but once a month, and in making up their accounts they will be allowed forty numbers for a year's subscription, whether so many are issued within the year or not.

From Putnam's Monthly.

THE MORMONS.

SHALL UTAH BE ADMITTED INTO THE UNION?

(Continued.)

And we will take the matter into consideration, as gravely and as briefly as we can.

Suppose then, the people of Utah district, that is the Mormons, having increased to that number which of late has usually been considered sufficient to form a State, come before Congress, with a constitution of their own peculiar polity, and ask to be admitted into the Union, ought they to be admitted? We say, with a Constitution of their own peculiar polity, embodying the chief features of their present political-religious organization, as we know it and as the Mormons proclaim it, and consider it necessary and divine. If they give up their organization, and everything that binds them together as a Mormon society, and do it thoroughly and sincerely, no discussion whether they ought to be admitted is necessary in this place.

We naturally turn, first of all, to our Constitution, to see what it permits or enjoins, regarding the admission of new States.

The first paragraph of section 3, article IV., runs thus:

"New States may be admitted by the Congress into the Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State; nor any other State be formed by the jurisdiction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned, as well as of Congress."

This passage is absolutely all and everything positive that the great instrument contains regarding the subject of admission—a subject on which our confederacy so materially differs from the federal States that have existed or are still in existence.

The passage consists of two parts: the one, containing the first eleven words, gives to Congress the right of admitting States; the other limiting this right in some essential points. We have to do with the first part only.

A simpler, plainer sentence never was written. It confers a right, and in doing so it uses the subjunctive. Congress may admit new States. It imposes no duty, except, as a matter of course, those implied duties, which every right and privilege imposes upon us, namely, to use and exercise it fairly, judiciously, and as upright men, impartially and candidly weighing the interests and claims of all parties concerned. It imposes the duty upon Congress. Congress is an assemblage of legislators in a high sphere, and the very right that is granted imposes the solemn duty of handling it in a statesmanlike manner, considering the welfare of ourselves, of the applicants, and of our country at large, having an honest eye to the spirit in which the same right may have been exercised on former occasions, and to the claims which may have fairly sprung up accordingly, seeking at the same time to obtain ample information from the Constitution itself, and from the state of things which existed when the Constitution was adopted, or, which amounts nearly to the same thing, endeavoring to find the meaning of its provisions from the sense which the framers must be supposed to have attached to the words they used.

We repeat once more, the Constitution says that Congress may admit States. The framers were not unacquainted with the word shall. They have used it many times in the pact which they drew up for the country. They were not unskillful in prescribing limitations. The Constitution has throughout a strongly limitary character, and, in one respect, it may be said to possess a peculiarly limitary character, inasmuch as it prescribes that Congress shall have no powers except those which are expressly granted in the instrument itself. In the case which occupies us, however, the Constitution is simply of a permissive character. It says: For fear that you may think that we grant no power of admitting new States, if we do not mention it, we here declare that you may do so. And here it stops. It does not add: If such or such number of people, apply under certain and fixed circumstances, you must do it. The Constitution prevents the United States from being a closed confederacy; it infuses the principle of expansiveness; it prevents the United States, in this respect, from being considered like the other federal republics that existed at the time of their birth, and in which the existing number of States or provinces was fundamental and final. Our Constitution is an abstemious document.

If Congress must decide whether a State is to be admitted or not, it must be decided by votes; and what considerations ought to guide each member of that body in deciding with mainly directness of purpose and principle, waving invidious secondary motives, what vote he ought to cast on so grave a question? The Constitution appeals to him for his vote, but he is not allowed arbitrarily, whimsically or selfishly, to decide the case "in his conscience," as little as the jurymen is, though his conscience also is appealed to. Man has never the right to act arbitrarily, whimsically or selfishly, and certainly not when he acts for his country.

We are well aware that there are persons, who entertain strange notions regarding the right of their voting whichever way they please, so soon as a vote by ballot is required. The ballot, they say, appeals by its very character to their conscience, and by conscience they mean, in fact, perfect arbitrariness. We have heard of a case which if it were as it was reported would serve as an illustration of what we mean. We suppose that it was erroneously given to us, and we prefer, therefore, to use it for our purpose as a mere supposition. Suppose, then, that there is a college, chartered and rechartered several times, and in each of its charters it is distinctly stated that no religious test whatsoever shall be applied in the appointment of professors or the admission of students. A chair of one of the natural sciences is to be filled. Among the candidates for this chair is an individual, readily allowed on all hands to be of unblemished character and pre-eminently qualified by his acquirements and reputation, as well as by his skill in teaching, to fill it with honor, yet the majority of the trustees, being of a religious persuasion, say the trustees did not vote conscientiously, because, although appealed to for their ballot, into which no person has any right to inquire, the express command of the charter demand that they should use no religious test, and they were not, in good faith and strict duty, permitted to do that by secret ballot, which they could not openly avow, or justify.

It is equally plain that, on the other hand, a man has no right to determine his vote by any motive he chooses, provided it be not in so many words prohibited. Woe to the man who has no better support or excuse for his actions than the mere absence of direct prohibition—in politics, in morals, in religion. Such a man is exemplified by the bibbing parson in Percegrine Pickle, who prefers drinking strong whiskey to wine, because the Bible nowhere prohibits the drinking of punch; or, if a historical instance be preferred, by the Danish baron Von Vreeck, with whom a friend expostulated on the outrage that he had allowed his daughter actually to marry the king, the undivorced queen still living; whereupon the baron answered that he could find no passage in the Bible that prohibits a Danish king from having two lawful wives.

A member of Congress, required to vote on the admission of a new State into the Union, ought to ask himself these three questions:

Have the United States, by uniform action, and the course of their history, entered into an implied compact, required by good faith fairly to be carried out, that in due time a certain number of settlers, within a certain territory, be admitted?

Does the Constitution directly, or interpreted—as all sound interpretation must be—by common sense and good faith, demand or prohibit anything regarding admission into the Union?

Are there any considerations which demand of me to withhold my vote for admission, on the ground that by the admission, a foreign and disturbing element would be infused into that great and large State-system for which I upon oath, am here to legislate?

The question of admission is one that relates to the Constitution, to good faith, to statesmanship and like all acts of man—to sound morality in general.

The first of these questions can be easily answered. Ever since the passing of the famous ordinance of Congress, of the 13th of July 1787—a law passed by the very founders of this government, and which, in the fifth clause, stipulates that whenever any of the said States (States contemplated to arise out of the territory to which this ordinance applies) shall contain 60,000 free inhabitants, such a State shall (and may before) be admitted on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent Constitution and State government, provided that it shall be republican, &c.—ever since, we say, it has been held that if sixty thousand free inhabitants settled on a convenient territory, ask for admission, it ought not in fairness to be withheld. In many cases the population of the new State did not amount to that number. The Americans have set out in their history, and they set out to this day, in their policy, from the truth that this continent, vast, fertile, and beautiful, was made to be inhabited by men, who, with all the arts of civilization, would make it the support of as many free beings as can here find the reward of their lawful exertions. They adopted as a fundamental idea, that the first comers had no right to slam the door behind them; but that those who should come later had a fair claim to aid in settling this extensive land. They acted on the idea that the establishment of the government did not arrest the state of things, but that the Americans themselves would become an emigrating and settling race within the territory, and lastly, they set out with the noble idea that the States, forming the great pact, did not thereby constitute themselves into a closed society, to the settlers of a new territory should be "subjects." Our State system was declared at once an "open" one. It is a feature in our Constitution, as great and wise, as the provisions that says: Let all the rivers be free, and all they carry shall pass. We have uniformly acted upon these principles, and can never, in fairness, refuse a State admission, simply because we are asked for our vote, and do not choose to vote Aye. No one of us has arbitrary authority, for the very reason that all of us are free.

We pass to the second and third questions. And first, what does the Constitution enjoin or prohibit, that bears upon the question of admission, directly or indirectly? It enjoins, directly, that the States of the Union must have republican governments. It prohibits, indirectly, a voter on the question of admission, to be guided by religious preferences. As to the first, we have the 4th section of Article IV., which says:

"The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican Form of Government, and shall protect each of them against Invasion, and on Application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic Violence."

Concerning the second, we find, as the first words of the Additional Articles:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

We find, moreover, the following words, closing Article VI. of the Constitution:

"No religious Test shall ever be required as a Qualification to any officer or public Trust under the United States."

These are the only passages in which the words religion and religious occur in the whole Constitution and Amendments.

It will be admitted that the fourth section of Article IV., contains a rule applicable to him that votes on admission, although it speaks of States "in this Union," only. The question is, whether the applying "State shall be in this Union" or not. It would be sheer loss of time, were we to dwell on this subject. What we have to dwell upon, however, is that the provision uses the word shall, not may; that it guarantees a certain government to every State, and that this government must be republican.

The command expressed by the word shall, shows that the sequel is of paramount importance; and that which is held by the Constitution so important, is that a republican government be guaranteed to all States. Does this mean that the United States shall be ready to side with the republican party, should there ever be civil broils between republicans and monarchists in any State, if called upon to do so, but that the United States have no business with the form of State governments, monarchical, sacerdotal, or ecclesiastical, if the State chooses to have a king, or live under a government of priests, or crouch beneath a succession of mobs, en permanence? Or does it plainly mean that republics alone can be tolerated in, and, therefore, received into the Union?

We have already referred to the fact that all sound interpretations must be founded on common sense and good faith. The latter implies that we must take words as they are meant, not according to what skill or violence may possibly make them appear to mean; and, accordingly, we all know perfectly well, both that the framers of our Constitution meant to be republicans, and that they were sensible men. It would, however, betray less than even ordinary common sense, had the framers entertained the idea that a confederacy of permanency, vigor, and vitality, could be established with principalities, and republics, theocracies, and communisms. They, as all great institutions, had in view to create a living organism, not to stitch together a quilt, the more liked the more the rags contrast. The provision says that the United States shall protect republicanism in each State, because all are republics, and because it is essential that they are, and remain so. The mere tyro in our history knows this perfectly well. The Constitution omits mentioning that all components of the Union shall be republics, for the same reason that it does not say a word of the publicity of Congress. That which is not only admitted by all, but which forms the original mould of our thoughts, is never mentioned except by the analyzing philosopher.

The member of Congress then, who must vote on the admission of a State, must ask himself, if it becomes necessary. Has the applying State a republican form of government? And thus we ask, do the Mormons form a republic? This leads to another question: What is a republic? Dictionaries, which hardly ever give definitions, but merely strive to indicate the sense of the word, are of no use to us in this case, and in an inquiry, which, if successful, would afford authority for the lexicographer, but cannot take the lexical explanations as a standard. Above all, we are bound to take the word Republic in the sense in which it was usually taken at the time of the framing of our Constitution, and in which we know, or have good reason to believe, the framers to have taken it.

A State is not a republic, simply because its chief is non-hereditary. The Dalai-Lama is, if not elective, certainly selective and non-hereditary; but Thibet has never been considered a republic. Nor does the elective character of the chief magistrate stamp the State with republicanism. No man has ever called the States of the Church a republic, because the Pope proceeds by election from the conclave. Nor is a State a monarchy because the chief magistrate is hereditary, as the stadtholders of Holland were for a time. Napoleon went even so far as to have his first five-franc piece inscribed on the obverse, with the words: Napoleon, Emperor of the French, and on the reverse, with those of: French Republic. We suppose they will be called in future, Transi-Fives.

However difficult it may be to give a perfect definition of the term Republic, simply because it has been used in many different meanings, we will say, that by republic, a government understood by republic, a government of a popular cast, in which the legislature forms an organism through which public opinion shall pass into public will; that is, law; and in which the chief magistrate is limited, both in power, and in duration of office, which is filled, directly or indirectly, by the choice of the people. They meant, by Republic, a polity founded upon the broad principle that the first source and starting point of power is in the people. Never, even as colonists, have their political conviction been tinged with the fable Jus Divinum; for they were English by descent.

It is true, there existed a variety of republics when our institutions resolved on independence. There were especially before their eyes the Netherlands Republic, which had so decided an influence upon the framing and naming of our federalty; and the republic of Venice, which was in former times often admired by political observers, for the wisdom and great power wielded by so narrow a State. Our Constitution, however, shows with perfect plainness, that no Venetian government, no aristocracy was meant to be included within the term Republic, as used in that instrument, for it contains the injunction that "no title of nobility shall be granted by the United States," and, for fear that this might not be considered to banish nobility from the land, the Constitution provides that "no State shall grant any title of nobility."

Whoever will study the Constitution, the debates, the times when the Constitution was framed, the political culture of the framers, the history of the colonies, and of the term Republic itself, will find that by Republic our fundamental pact means a popular and institutional polity with a representative government, in which its great powers or functions are clearly divided and distinctly limited, and in which no power, office, or distinction is hereditary, or derived from any principle or region beyond or within the popular State itself.

According to this standard, the Mormon polity is so republic. The Mormons themselves call it a theocratic government, and a theocracy is not a republic, whatever words the Mormons may choose to jumble together, when occasionally they call their government a theocracy, which conveys about as distinct an idea as the imperial five-franc piece we mentioned. The Mormon government, is still less a republic than many other hierarchies have been, because the chief of that revolting system claims, and is considered by his subjects, to be daily and hourly inspired, by direct infusion of the Divine Spirit. We have been told that the present Emperor of Russia, when some person extolled his immense power in his presence, condescended to point to the heavens, saying: "There is one greater still." The Czar, we should think, considers himself pretty near to the heavenly quarters, but then he allows, and insists upon, that he is Czar; and what is his belief in himself, compared to Brigham, who publishes divine decrees in the "Day and Seasons," as Radway's Ready Relief is published in our papers. The most absolute chaf has never claimed any similar authority; no such authority even in Mohammed was acknowledged by any of his followers. Yet this man, with his running inspiration, is the head of a thoroughly organized government, over which he rules by this pretended inspiration. Where is the American that would dare to call such a state of things a republic? What, are there two orders of priests, the highest of which, it has been hinted, will be made hereditary, and to preserve the blood of which pure, it is proclaimed that soon it will be made lawful to marry sisters and brothers of the same father, though of different mothers? What are these orders but a nobility?

Let us not hear the objection that all this is "religious," with which, therefore, we have nothing to do. We shall presently show that we have a good deal to do with their "religion," but in this place we do not speak of their so-called religion. What we maintain is, that the form of government of the Mormons is a pretended theocratic government, and that, therefore, it can no more be admitted into the Union than the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg and his people, or the Pope, and his dominion could. The King of Sandwich Islands would, no doubt, be very willing to be received as a member of the Union, could he remain on the throne—a sort of Attalus to us—and there would not be half the objection against his reception that exists against the admission of the Mormons.

Nor could it be of any avail were the Mormons to establish a pro forma political government, and were to insist upon it, that the organization of the Latter Day Saints is an affair of the church, with which our government has no business. The law does not allow subterfuges, nor do we mean to allow our great political relations to rest on falsehood. It would resemble too much the dozen of soda bottles, pretending lawful traffic, in a little entry, which leads to a brothel in the rear.

This consideration would be sufficient to prevent any citizen, loyally adhering to the Constitution, from sanctioning the admission of the Mormons into our circle of States; but there are other and equally weighty reasons.

It has been shown on what two occasions the subject of religion is mentioned in our Constitution. It enjoins upon the United States never to make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and ordains that no religious test be ever required as a qualification for any public office. At the same time, it prescribes certain oaths that are to be taken, for which, however, solemn affirmation may be substituted—a substitute which had been adopted in England, with reference to Quakers, prior to the framing of our pact.

We shall not inquire whether the prohibition of "establishing" a church, which means acknowledging and supporting it as part and parcel of the State, and the command of allowing "free exercise of religion," as well as the prohibition of any religious test, whether these are sufficient to bind us in all cases of admitting a State, wholly to dismiss the question of religion—whether, in no case whatever, we ought to ask ourselves, can people with such or such a religious system, possibly form a wholesome part of our system; can the consideration of the commonest decorum be disregarded in admitting an ingredient with a revolting religion into the great organism?

Some vexing cases may be readily imagined. We must not forget that the Union, from being a neighboring State to Europe, has become a contiguous country to Asia, and our new and insipid relations to Asia might produce a large influx of Asiatic paganism, coupled with a distinct race, which, without any great stretch of our imagination, might be supposed to reach the point of application for admission, and it might, then, become necessary to ask the question: What did our forefathers exactly mean when they used the word religion in the Constitution? Where are the limits of the word, or are there none? Have we to understand it according to the usus loquendi, the meaning it had at the time, among these men who used it, and the sphere of action and thought in which they used it? The usus loquendi is one of the elements of all safe interpretation. Or ought we to take the term religion in its broadest sense, in which the philosophical writer uses it, for the aggregate of all relations which subsist, or which men imagine to subsist, between them and all that surrounds them on the one hand, and a superior, or many superior beings of influencing power on the other hand?

We waive this whole consideration. We grant that the member of Congress may dismiss the question of religion when a State calls upon him for admission, that he may grant that he need not occupy himself with religion as religion. He need not trouble himself in the case we contemplate, with the exact relation in which the Mormon, in his own conscience believes himself to stand to his bodily, perfectible, married Baddah God. So far as this goes, he may leave the Mormons, to use a favorite expression of their own, "severely alone." But the question does not end here.

Religion, as we have considered it so far, is a purely mental or physical matter. It is like the moral theory of ethical philosophers, who differ as to the moral sense. It is a very different matter when we come to morality and moral acts themselves, when we have to remember that all States and every compound of States are jural societies, and that the very idea of rights and justice is founded on the antecedent idea that man is an ethical being. Neither trees nor animals have rights, whatever obligations may be imposed upon us toward them as being the creatures of our own Creator. In looking, in this case, for the moral character of man, we do not go "behind the record;" on the contrary, we take political man in his constituent parts as we must take him, and as we must take all else if we wish to handle the given material wisely, rightly and righteously.

The first consideration that presents itself here is, that although we may have sound reasons for dismissing the subject of religion in certain spheres of reflection, this does by no means imply that, because a man chooses to call an act of his religious, therefore he can do it with impunity, or that it prevents us from taking cognizance of it. We enjoy religious liberty, and mean to perpetuate it for our children; but this liberty has never been understood to mean a license of doing anything, provided that it be called religious. Religious liberty means that no one shall be troubled about his faith—his inner man; but acts remain for ever subject to the law.

When the English took possession of the East Indies, they permitted as a political government, the millions of Hindoo gods to be worshipped. They continue to rule the country on that principle, but they have put an end, without inconsistency, to the suttees, although the Brahmin asserts, and no doubt in the fullest good faith, that he firmly believes his religion recommends the self-immolation of the widow on the funeral pile of her husband, as a work most acceptable in the sight of Brahma. When the East India government had acquired sufficient strength, it caught the Thugs, and told them that they must be hanged for their regularly taught and systematically executed murder. It was of no use for the Thugs to assert, what they too, no doubt, faithfully believed to be true, that their gore-delighted goddess Kali commanded it, and rejoiced when they throttled their fellow creatures—that it was their religious avocation. Infanticide was largely practiced towards female infants in Guzerat. That, too, was a "religious" procedure. Every custom becomes "religious" with early nations and with uneducated people. But the English did not hesitate on that account to put a stop to the murder.

Frederick the Great distinguished between pretended religion and lawfulness, in his own impressive and sarcastic manner. A soldier had been sentenced to be shot for having robbed a costly ring from the finger of a Virgin Mary, in a Catholic church. The king, however, read with surprise in the minutes of the trial, that the soldier, himself a Catholic, had stoutly maintained the Virgin had made him a present of the ring. Frederick inquired of a high prelate of Silesia, where the crime had been committed, whether this was possible. After many fruitless attempts to avoid a direct answer, the prelate obliged to confess that similar miracles had taken place, and might, therefore, recur. The king at once wrote under his sentence, that the soldier should have the benefit of doubt, but that in future, every soldier or civilian should be prohibited, under penalty of death, to accept any presents from the Virgin, or any saint, male or female.

There is not a crime of vice, however mean or frightful, in the long catalogue of sin and shame, that has not at some time or other formed an avowed element of religious systems. Cheating, theft, murder, and refined cruelty have been parts of religion. Prostitution and drunkenness have had their proclaimed share in worship. Children have been fattened like calves to be eaten, specially dressed by elaborate cookery, in honor of the gods. Hosts of men have been slaughtered by priests and temple servants, religiously to honor the corpse of a king, and to magnify the glory of a departed despot. Hundreds of women have been thrown over precipices, because the gods demanded thus to honor the presence of an ambassador. This has been: this is still, and this will be again. Grieve as we may, it is but too true, not only that "everything happens," but also that everything happens over again. And is all this crime—politely to be suffered because the perpetrator cloaks his misdeeds with the ragged mantle of his fiendish religion? Fantastic squeamishness is no element of statesmanship. There is nothing more calamitous in rules than political conceits. If the worship of Astarte, with all its naked harlotry, were received, should we countenance it? Do not charge us with unnecessarily traveling beyond the pale of actuality. There is, unfortunately, directness enough in all we say, for the nearest purpose we have in view. Suppose the blessed time of burning heretics should return, and one of your communities should make it lawful, would you after such a precedent as we have seen in your bosom? Let us speak out like men, and have the truth in a bulk at once. The cunning king! Qui nescit dissimulare nescit regnare, must be reversed into the republican, Who cannot face the truth cannot rule.

To speak of all the immoralities and obscenities sanctioned by the Mormon Law, would be impossible here. It would be a loathsome task, and besides, it would be necessary to quote their chapter and verse for each statement of ours, because without it, happily, many readers would not believe us. This, however, would obviously lead us beyond reasonable limits. We shall then restrict ourselves to their acknowledged polygamy. They avow it; they boast of it; they challenge the world on this ground; they do not only sanction it by their law, but they proclaim it as an essential part of their whole polity and religious system; they carry it to their celestial sphere; they revel in it, and not only has it already born the poisonous fruits which it always produces, but that peculiar element of vulgarity and knavery which has passed from the characteristic guile and cheating jugglery of the founder into all Mormonism, has also shown itself, even at this early period, in the "divine institution," as the Mormons actually call their polygamy, to such an extent that Eastern polygamy appears like a state of refinement compared to this brutality.* Yet, Mormon polygamy is a "religious institution." Be it so. Let us not touch their religion. It defiles. Polygamy may be their religion, and so far we have as little to do with it as the law would have to do with a man, who like Madan, should write a book in defence of a plurality of wives. But the polygamy of the Mormons is no book speculation; it is an act, a fact, and the legislator has to do and deal with acts and facts.

Monogamy is sanctioned by our religion, indeed, as everything pure and holy is, but monogamy goes beyond our religion. It is "a law written in the heart" of our race. The Greeks, the Romans—whose history is rich with noble mothers, wives, and matrons—and the Germans, were monogamists before St. Paul denounced the gods of Greece, at Athens, or Boniface applied the axe to the oak trees in the sacred groves of Germany. Monogamy does not only go with the western Caucasian race, the Europeans and their descendants, beyond Christianity, it goes beyond Common Law. It is one of the primordial elements out of which all law proceeds, or which the law steps in to recognize and to protect. Wedlock, that is, the being locked of one man in wedding to one woman, stands in this respect on a level with property.† Property antedates law, as values, and with them a currency, or circulating medium long precede money. Wedlock, or monogamic marriage, is one of the "categories" of our social thoughts and conceptions, and, therefore, of our social existence. It is one of the elementary distinctions—historical and actual—between European and Asiatic humanity. It is one of the frames of our thoughts, and moulds of our feelings; it is a psychological condition of our jural consciousness, of our liberty, of our literature, of our aspirations, of our religious convictions, and of our domestic being and family relation; the foundation of all that is called polity. It is one of the pre-existing conditions of our existence as civilized white men, as much so as our being moral entities is a pre-existing condition of the idea of law, or of the possibility of a revelation. Strike it out, and you destroy our very being; and when we say our, we mean our race—a race which has its great and broad destiny, a solemn aim in the great career of civilization, with which no one of us has any right to trifle.

* We could almost ask the Mormons: Why not improve upon the Asiatic polygamy? Nothing so snug as a choice super carre, and why not have marriages carres? The sinful register of human outrages and wicked insanities, makes mention of this abhorrent thing as having often among the sad realities. We were obliged to dwell on it in another place, but did it for decency's sake, in Law. Polygamy must make wives pretty rare for some poor fellows in Utah. Why, then, do not the Mormons publish a revelation d'occasion, as they have done so often, which should permit polyandry? That, too, exists in some parts of the world, and, since the followers of Smith have, on several occasions used the mere absence of prohibition in the Bible, as a positive permission, they may use the argument that polyandry is, we believe, prohibited in direct terms nowhere in that book. It would be so Mormonian, in logic as well as in morals!

All this is disgusting in the last degree; but what of that? Mormonism from its very beginning, has been encrusted with vulgarity, jugglery, license and muddy materialism. That our propositions are loathsome, cannot be urged as a fair objection to them—at least not by the Mormons. Mormonism is one of those subjects in history, which, like the Reign of Terror, the vice and crime of Louis the Fifteenth and his court, or the periods of stalking insanity in imperial Rome, make the beholder bend down with averted face and exclaim—"I, too, belong to this race!" The mischief which large crimes leave upon a whole race, is as great in its downward direction, as the instance of noble individuals and nations are in their elevating effects. Those make us stagger and almost despair; they throw marking back. It is a fearful thing for the best as for the worst, for single men and for communities, to become familiarized with grossness and wickedness, and yet, there stands the unchanging, primary condition of all reform and progress! Know the truth; act, and neither wince nor dabble.

† The attention of the philosopher cannot help being arrested by the fact, that at all times property and marriage have stood or fallen together. Wherever fanatics, Protestants, Catholics, and even Mahometans, have attacked the one, they have attacked the other. In Europe, Asia, and America, in ancient times, and in modern, from the Spartan communist to the German Anabaptist, from the Anabaptist to the French communist, and American Oneida men. The reader will find this subject touched upon by Lieber, in his essays on Labor and Property.

There have been a few exceptions to the pervading monogamic spirit of our western Caucasian race. The Papal See is reported to have permitted bigamy in one or two cases, when a man had married a second wife, erroneously believing that the first was dead.—The aberration of Luther regarding the Landgrave of Hesse is well known. Though he erred, he still erred from a desire to save a fellow being, under peculiar circumstances, from the sin of adultery. The most remarkable fact however, in the connection seems to us, that Napoleon, according to his own dictation, had seriously occupied himself with the introduction of lawful bigamy in the West Indies. In the first volume of the Memoires pour Servir a l'Histoire de la France, by Count Montolm, we find a passage which seems to us of an interest, sufficient to warrant us in extracting it at length:

"The question of liberty of the blacks, is very complicated and very difficult. In Africa and in Asia it has been solved, but it has been done by polygamy. The whites and the blacks form parts of the same family. The chief of the family [how naturally Napoleon here fails at once into the Asiatic view, in speaking of the chief, not of the father of the family!] having white, black and colored wives, the white and mulatto children are brothers, are brought up in the same cradle, have the same name, and sit at the same table. Would it then be impossible to authorize polygamy in our Islands, restricting the number of wives to two, a white and a black one! The First Consul had some exchange of ideas on this subject with some theologians, in order to prepare this great measure. The patriarchs had several wives. In the first centuries of Christianity, the church tolerated a species of concubinage, the effect of which allowed several women (or wives, the original is femmes) to one man. The Pope, the council, have the authority and the means to authorize a similar institution, since its object would be civilization, the harmony of society, and not to spread the lust of the flesh; the effect of these marriages would be limited to the colonies: proper measures would be taken, so that they should not carry disorder into the present state of our society."

A volume might be written on this wild passage, which, nevertheless, is thoroughly Napoleonic, yet, on the other hand, self-contradictory throughout. A pity, that it will not serve the Mormons; for, although favoring bigamy, it founds this "institution" on amalgamation, and the Mormons consider the poor blacks a cursed race, proving the curse by their sallow skin.

In spite of these exceptions it is, nevertheless, true that monogamy, together with the endeavor to establish political liberty, the abolition of castes, and a spirit of criticism and freedom in inquiry, opposed to mere tradition, as well as creative freedom in the arts and letters, constitute the main distinctions between Asiatic and European mankind. We know that this does not apply to Russia, but Russia is a mere hybrid between Asia and Europe, a historical intruder, whose destiny is the same with that of Turkey—of being broken up.

We return to our subject. We maintain that in this light, the Mormon polygamy is a subject of the weightiest importance to be considered by him, whose duty it is to decide whether we shall give his assistance to install so foreign an element into our system, or lend his aid in keeping it at a distance; for, decide he must, since his Constitution demands a Yes or No of him, and does not say, "So soon as asked to admit a State you shall vote Yes." If that had been the intention of the framers, they would have made the whole question a matter of judicial record, as our law makes naturalization, but admitting a State into an organization of States is a subject somewhat graver than merely naturalizing an individual.

Yet, it has been asked: Have we not already sanctioned their polity, by allowing them to carry it out in our territory? We do not believe that the Emperor of Russia is answerable for every villainy committed by the Bashkeers. There is one act, indeed, which has appeared like an acknowledgment on our part—we mean the appointment of Brigham Young as governor of Utah, by President Fillmore. This is a single act of a single branch of our government. Every one can err, and this was an error; but errors ought to be retracted. At any rate, the member of Congress who will be obliged to vote on the admission, must decide the matter in his own conscience, according to the Constitution, good faith, and duty. The decision is his own affair, upon his own responsibility. He must vote as trustee for his country. The wisest farmer may not always be able to prevent degrading irregularity in his outhouses, but he would sink below all hope of raising again to a fair level in the opinion of his neighbors, were he to introduce the corrupt one into the dwelling house as his wedded wife.

Our task has been to answer the question whether the Mormons ought to be admitted into the Union. We have answered some of the main points as well as we are able to do it, and here we take leave of the subject, at least for the present.

We are aware that the perusal of this paper will call up in the mind of many a reflecting reader, a point, which, so far as we know, has never been discussed, and well it is that it has not. If we lay so much stress upon the necessity of keeping the Mormons out of the Union, as we have done, because they would be a sloughing member of the body, what is to be done, if a State fairly admitted, and forming an integral part of our system, should become as foul and fostering as they now are? Mr. Calhoun, it seems to us, must have found it easy to answer this question; for upon the ground of a federal contract, a State has the right to secede from the Union, because the contract, according to the conviction of the Union, has been violated. It is upon this ground that the views of Mr. Calhoun have ever appeared to us dangerous to the very States whose especial champion he was considered.

We, whose views on our State-system lie between the two poles marked by Mr. Calhoun and Mr. Webster, do not find it so easy to answer the question. Let us suppose that a State were to turn a sort of former Algiers; or suppose a State were to adopt French communism in the present Proudhon style—no God, no government, no property, no wives, not even polygamy, but with cynicism, in the literal sense of the word—a doggerly proclaimed universal; suppose a State should become so filled with Chinese, that the whites were absorbed; or suppose a State should become bona fide Africanized; or let us imagine that a territory has formed itself with the consent of Congress into a State, thus being, of course, sovereign, and then applies for admission into the Union. Congress votes No, and the State declines removing the difficulties that may have been in the way. What becomes of the State? An independent empire in the midst of us!

We might suppose a number of cases of this kind, which do not belong to the politics, but rather to the hyper-politics of a country, and can as little be brought within the sphere of rule and regular action, as the subject of revolution. Blackstone, when he touches upon the question, what is to be done when the crown breaks the British contract? says that the law does not contemplate the case, and that history furnishes the example of James II. being sent off for having done so. So we would say, there is no rule without exception, and there is no institution, which in the combination of certain circumstances, can help dealing with subjects that must be decided, but for which its own distinct law and character does not furnish the regular means. The knot must be loosed; untie it, if feasible; if not, use Alexander's way. Modern English judges never answer speculative cases; they have invariably replied, When the case comes up, I shall decide it after hearing the law and the facts. Suppositions, as we have made them, would have been in their proper place when the Constitution was formed, if even then, for it has proved a great blessing to our country, that the framers were far-seeing and practical men, who neither threw away the past, merely that they might contrive something new, nor lost themselves in speculative subtleties, or a desire to play with political omniscience, regulating beforehand, all possible combinations. It is an error into which, strange enough, those are now continually falling that arrogate themselves the name of "men of progress."

Once more—the question we proposed to ourselves was: Ought the Mormons to be admitted? And we answer NO.

NORTHERN ISLANDER,

SAINT JAMES, BEAVER ISLAND,

THURSDAY, SEPT. 6, 1855.

We complete in this No. the republication of an article from "Putnam's Monthly," of March last, on "the Mormons," discussing mainly the question, "shall Utah be admitted into the Union?"

In its style this article would hardly be reputable in a country newspaper, but the standing assumed by, and in some degree accorded to, this magazine of fashionable literature, will perhaps atone for such vulgarity.

The first part of the article, republished in our last, is at best a very low dialogue, falsifying the faith and practices of the Mormons, in bad language, for the purpose of ridiculing their claim to BE TREATED WITH JUSTICE.

But that part of the work which appears in this No. is an attempt to give a reason why Utah should not be admitted into the Union.—We propose to review the reason.

The Constitution of the United States contemplated the admission of new members to be carved out of the territory within the national boundary, but not of foreign states, or territory derived from them. The articles of confederation, which preceded the constitution, had a direct provision for the admission of foreign states. The silence of the constitution on that subject shows that the framers did not contemplate such an act. But they have nowhere prohibited it. One of the essentials of sovereignty, according to universal usage, is the right to acquire territory. And as the American constitution nowhere provides for anything beyond a mere temporary government, except by coequal states, all our statesmen have held that territory once acquired, comes under the same rule as that originally included in the national domain.

This rule has prevailed from the earliest acquisition, that of Louisiana, by the fathers of the constitution, until the present time, over territories more than three times as extensive as the old thirteen, and never has there been one departure from it.

So uniform a practice, for a period of more than a half century, under which nine States, Maine, Vermont, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Kentucky and Tennessee, have been admitted from the original territory, two, Alabama and Mississippi, from territory part original and part acquired, and six, Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa and California, from exclusively acquired territory, ought to so effectually establish the rule that it could not be disturbed; especially to make a distinction against a particular and comparatively impotent people, on religious grounds.

We shall not go over the argument that "may" does not mean "shall," but shall content ourselves by simply asserting that in law language may does mean shall in a great variety of cases, and for the correctness of this rule we appeal to all respectable lawyers.

In this particular case the positive provision is, that new States may be admitted. There is a further limitation of this provision that in certain cases they shall not be admitted, except on certain conditions.

In these limitations is one which fixes beyond question that the word may is imperative in all but the excepted cases. It is that where a new State is formed by the junction of two or more States or parts of States, such new States shall only be admitted on the consent of all the States concerned, and of Congress. If it requires the special consent of Congress in one of the excepted cases, this fixes the rule of interpretation that in the non-excepted cases admission is a right, and not a grace.

It is on this ground that Representatives from free States have time and again voted the admission of new slave States. Had they not regarded admission as a right guaranteed by the constitution to the new States, without reference to any question of their domestic institutions, more than one of the new slave States would have been rejected. We repeat we will not enter into a criticism of the word may. It is enough that the framers of the constitution understood its legal import, and so used it. The constitution being a legal instrument, its language should be construed by the rules of legal interpretation.

Without going through the intermediate portions of the argument we come down to the position that the Congress shall guaranty to each State a republican form of government, and the assumption thereupon that Utah will not adopt a republican form of government.

This assumption or prophecy lays at the bottom of the whole argument. Concede that Utah may, spite of all prognostics, adopt a republican constitution, and the whole fabric falls to the ground.

But Putnam captiously suggests that Utah may adopt in form a republican constitution, such action must be believed insincere.

It will readily occur to any one that if Congress may assume that a new State, with a republican constitution, applying for admission, is not really republican, on account of the religious faith or social influence of some or all its inhabitants, a pretence will never be wanting to refuse such admission.

All will also perceive that the effect of such a rule is to condemn untried whoever the public prejudice may accuse. The rule overthrows all the safeguards of public and private rights, wherever legislative action can reach them, and makes pique and prejudice the rule.

We shall agree with Putnam, and so, we doubt not, will all others, that the intention of the framers of the constitution was to exclude from the confederacy principalities, theocracies, &c., for this intention is expressed in the obligation imposed on Congress to guaranty to each State a republican form of government.

But it is equally clear that the framers of the constitution were not abstractionists, and did not intend that every State should be the beau ideal of a republic, which any man of a lively imagination might conjure up as his image of perfection.

They acted with the consciousness of human infirmities and the diversities of opinion common among men, and had in their eyes the constitutions of the thirteen original States, which they represented, as the pattern of what a republican form of government consisted in.

According to their idea of just and right government, that only was righteous which allowed the equality of all men before the law, and liberty as an inalienable personal right. (See Declaration of Independence.)

But they did not require such beau ideal republics as American States. In nearly all the States the elective franchise was limited to those who possessed a specific quantity or value of real estate. In every one a valuable estate was a precedent qualification for the higher offices. Thus the right to elect officers, by whom all were to be governed, and especially the right to be elected, was limited to the rich.

Out of this grew the further consequence that but a very small portion of the people were represented in the Legislature, which levied all taxes in defiance of the rule laid down in the declaration of independence, that representation and taxation are inseparable.

But there is another class of un-republican features in the institutions of the "old thirteen," so exactly like what Putnam alleges against the Mormons, that we prefer to rely on that to show that his objections would not have been valid in the convention which framed the constitution.

In treating these objections we shall pass by all that is said about the pretended power "in the State" of the Mormon elders, because whatever influence they like all other priests may exercise over the people, such influences are everywhere among all people found on the face of society, and nowhere constitute any part of legal government.

There are certain allegations of the immoral tendency of the Mormon institution, on which Putnam relies to justify excluding Mormons from the common right of citizens, that of forming a State government when the population of the territory of Utah is sufficient. Of these polygamy is the main. We propose to show that this objection, if good at all, was equally good against six of the "old thirteen," and fifteen of the thirty-one States of the Union.

Slavery existed in those six—exists in those fifteen States, as a permanent and controlling institution—exercising as much influence on the character and conduct and political condition of those States as any form of religious faith possibly can.

Now we are not about to admit, as a matter of fact, that there is any parallel between the institution of polygamy and that of slavery. We have shown over and over again that all the allegations of the immoral tendency of polygamy are false, and as often as the question has been raised have shown historically and by actual comparison that chastity much more prevails in polygamic than monogamic countries.

Not wishing to go over that ground again without some new occasion, we, for the argument, waive Putnam's falsehood, and undertake to show that if polygamy is just as bad as he makes it, slavery involves not only all its evils, but the sum of all other evils, and that they who will admit slave States into the Union, and refuse admission to Utah on the score of polygamy, are consummate hypocrites, who are willing to go with the multitude to do wrong, and would worship the many Gods they ascribed to Mormonism, if it was a little more popular.

The law of slavery does not require any test of character or qualification whatever on the part of the master, who by the law has absolute power over as many human beings as he happens to inherit, or has the disposition and ability to beg, buy or steal.

Such a republican sovereign may, without violating any law, establish among his slaves either polygamy, polyandry, indiscriminate prostitution or incest. He may prostitute his female slaves, or keep them as concubines, and turn them off at his pleasure. He may take the wives of his slaves from them, either for his own use or to give to other slaves, or to sell, and may match slave mothers to their own sons, and slave fathers to their own daughters, and in so doing he violates no law.

It is not the abuse of the institution of slavery that does these things. It is the legal use of it.

Slavery itself is the sum of all abuses. And those masters who, in the slave States, do all these things, use the power which the laws give them, within bounds.

We submit to Putnam that this is a wide departure from those "republican axioms" that the "just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed," and "that all men are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights, among which are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," and that so far as it goes it is the essence of autocracy, and has not a shadow of republicanism about it.

We submit to him that in the wildest freak of his purrulent imagination he has not clothed the Mormon hierarchy at Utah with as dangerous as wicked or as un-republican a power as this. And this power of the slave owner is given by the laws and guaranteed by the constitutions of the States, both original and new, where slavery exists. The fathers of the constitution and the founders of the republic have adjudged that fifteen States, with such institutions, have republican forms of government, within the meaning of the constitution, and were entitled to admission. How shall they on these grounds refuse it to Utah on reasons not by many times as strong?

It is true that in Utah a man may have a number of wives, provided he can get the consent of "the wives," their parents, his present wife and his superior in the church. And, for the argument, we will allow that morally such polygamy is no better than so much unlicensed fornication. Still the law puts a limit to it, and a restraint upon it.

In the slave States there is no such limit or restraint. The master not only need not get the consent of his pastor, his wife, or her parents, nor his intended victim. He wants only the money and the wicked disposition, and he can put as many beauties in his seraglio as he pleases. If the expense becomes too burdensome he can eke out the year by occasionally selling a son, and if he tires of the sable, he can replace them with their off-spring, his daughters, a shade lighter, and no law can reach him.

So far has this thing gone that more than a half century since a sister of Thos. Jefferson said, "there were no wives in the south. They were only mistresses of seraglios, and that the portions of southern daughters consisted of a certain number of their half-brothers and sisters, their uncles and aunts, and nephews and nieces."

The master's power is not limited to taking to his own use all the earnings. "Slaves shall be deemed, sold, taken, reputed and adjudged in law to be chattels, personal in the hands of their owners, &c., TO ALL INTENTS, CONSTRUCTIONS AND PURPOSES WHATSOEVER." (S. Carolina Civil Code, Art. 55.)

Judge Ruffin, of North Carolina, in pronouncing a solemn judicial decision, which is now acknowledged as sound law in all the slave State, says, a slave "is one doomed in his person and in his posterity, to live without knowledge and without the capacity to make anything his own." "The power of the master must be absolute, to make the submission of the slave perfect." "This discipline belongs to the state of slavery. It is inherent in the relation of master and slave." "We cannot allow the right of the master to be brought into discussion in the courts of justice. The slave, to remain a slave, must be made sensible that there is no appeal from his master."

We appeal to the most prejudiced, with all their bitterness against Mormonism, whether they have heard or imagined anything in that institution one tithe as abhorrent or anti-republican, even in its abuses, as this institution of slavery in its legal use. Yet legal slavery is good enough republicanism to come into the Union with, but this Mormonism must be shut out.

We have a word more for Putnam next week.

The Feast of First Fruits, Agricultural Fair, Cattle Show and Green Corn Dance, came off here the 31st August and the 1st and 2d September, and was a decidedly good time.

The morning of the 31st a continual procession was marching up the single avenue to the Park with victims for sacrifice. At the same time and for several hours afterwards men, women and children were going loaded with offerings of first fruits. Almost the entire population of the Island assembled, to enjoy the festivities of the day.

Immediately the cattle were put in pens prepared for the occasion, and agricultural productions placed on platforms for exhibition.

The exhibition of cattle was not numerous, but they were very choice. Yet there are as good cattle which were not on exhibition as any we saw in the pens.

The show of horses was the best we ever saw. Out of seven spans exhibited in harness, there was not one indifferent horse. A few very fine mules were also on exhibition.

Of agricultural productions, any one who witnessed the exhibition will be satisfied that this is a very superior agricultural region. The public tables were loaded with luxuries, such as the poor sit down to no where else, and the rich seldom.

Payments for the Islander.
R. T. Nichols, $2.00 to No. 113. S. S. Thornton, $1.00 to 94. Wm. Spear, $1.00 to 85. Chauncey Loomis, 50cts to 65. Elias Dowling, $1.00 to 69. Amos Hazard, $1.00 to 96. H. G. Hall, $3.00 to 95. Isaac Y. Morris, $2.00 to 115. Joel Westbrook, 50cts to 86.

STATE TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.
Office of Sup't Public Instruction, }
LANING, AUGUST 7, 1855 }

Applications in accordance with the provisions of law having been received at this Office from the following places, and their vicinities, and the same being regarded by this Department as eligible, the undersigned would hereby announce that a series of State Teachers' Institutes, to commence on the evening of the days named below, and to continue in session ten working days, severally, will be held as follows, v. z.:

At Detroit, beginning August 27th; at Rome, beginning September 10th; at Fair, beginning September 24th; at Grand Rapids, beginning October 1st; at Niles, beginning October 15th; at Coldwater, beginning October 22d.

UTILITY OF TEACHERS' INSTITUTES.
Teachers' Institutes have received the earnest approval of eminent Educators since their establishment in this country, nearly fifteen years ago. They constitute an efficient agency both in providing well trained teachers for the school room, and in cultivating an intelligent and active public sentiment in favor of Education. Wherever they have been properly conducted, the people have been awakened to a livelier interest in the education of their children, and a marked improvement in the character of the instruction given in our primary ry and higher schools, has been apparent.— "That this series of State Teachers' Institutes may be productive of great public benefit, it is earnestly requested that all good citizens will lend whatever aid or influence they can to insure a full attendance of the Teachers of the State. And all persons contemplating the charge of Schools the ensuing season, it is hoped will avail themselves with alacrity of the benefits here offered, and attend some one of the Institutes from the beginning to the close of the session.

